12,203. Not as regards yourself, Mr. Lovibond, and Messrs. Reed and Cook?—No, I remember the case of Sir John Shelley's election. I made out, and I suppose it is among the papers now, a precise statement of what I had done.

12,204. Then you had received no actual paid retainer?—I received no written retainer.

12,205. Have you received any retainer at these elections?—Never from any one.

12,206. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you point to anything showing that the legal gentlemen were the principals in these contests, and the candidates merely their tools?—I do not think it is strictly so. There is no doubt of this, that professional men took the most prominent part, but it is right that I should state that we were in the habit of consulting the heads of our party, and those meetings at which we consulted them usually took place at Mr. George Sully's office.

12,207. Is it not the fact that elections here differ from other boroughs in the fact that the lawyers on each side introduce their candidate and start him?—I do not know the practice of other boroughs, but certainly in this borough I must state that the lawyers have taken a very prominent part.

12,208. (Mr. Price.) Is there any instance of a candidate coming down here without communication from lawyers?—I do not know that there is.

12,209. (Mr. Anstey.) Does not that show that the lawyers were the principals, and the candidates, in point of fact, their tools?—With the exception of Mr. Vanderbyl coming, I know no case where the candidate was invited to come down without consultation first with the heads of the parties.

12,210. I will ask you, was not the initiative always taken by the lawyers?—No, that is not so.

12,211. (Mr. Price.) Do you know any instance in which the leaders of the party refused to accept the candidate nominated by the lawyers?—No, I do not.

12,212. Then in point of fact you first got it ready cut and dried, and they accepted whomever you proposed?—I know no case otherwise than that. We started the facts, and I know of no case of refusal.

12,213. Tell us, if you please, then, for whom did you take a more active part or the most active part preliminary to the last contest?—I was acting both for Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl. If you will allow me, I will make to you now, as far as I can, a distinct statement of the whole transaction, and then perhaps you will ask me any questions you please upon it afterwards.

12,214. Very well, we wish you to give us the history of any of these interviews at which the question was discussed as to the chance of success, either of one or other or both of the Liberal candidates, at these preliminary interviews?—I think if I took it up at this point it might be satisfactory. Some few days before the election, when the subject of the expenditure of money at this election was the subject of conversation between Mr. Lovibond and myself, and we had frequent conversations about it——

12,215. Let us have, if you please, when you first began with Mr. Lovibond to consult about what was to be done at the last election?—It was during the period of the canvass. I cannot fix the exact date.

12,216. The canvass, we are told, was by mutual agreement with the candidate's agent on the other side postponed till the last week in October. Now previous to that armistice had you had any conversation with Mr. Lovibond or Messrs. Reed and Cook as to the mode in which the election was to be conducted if there were a contest?—No, I do not recollect any conversation prior to that date, but I do very distinctly remember this, that a few days or about a week before the election had actually taken place Mr. Lovibond and I had a conversation together, and at that conversation this, arrangement was come to. He stated that he believed that the expenses that would be necessary, the money that would be required to be provided, would be 3,000*l.*, and he proposed, on Mr. Kinglake's part, I understood him on Mr. Kinglake's part, to say that the money was all ready and provided, and he said, "Now I am prepared on Mr. Kinglake's "part, and I shall look to you to make every necessary "arrangement with Mr. Vanderbyl." In consequence of that I, in conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl, asked him this in a casual manner, but in a manner which no doubt he understood.

12,217. (Mr. Anstey.) On the same day?—I will not say, but shortly after. At all events I asked him at the "Globe;" he was at that time ill, and that fixes the date. Mr. Vanderbyl was ill several days at the "Globe." I said, "Mr. Vanderbyl, have you any "friend coming down here to assist you in this elec-"tion?" He said, "I have, and he will be down here "next Friday," and when Friday came, that was the Friday before the election, I called at the "Globe" and was there introduced to Mr. Fennelly.

12,218. By whom?—By Mr. Vanderbyl, theywere in the room together. It was just after breakfast.

12,219. Was that the friend he expected?—That was the friend, as I understood, he expected. We had some merely ordinary conversation about the canvass, and then I said to Mr. Fennelly, "Are you going to "walk out in the town," and he said, "I am." And then I said, "Perhaps by-and-by you will call at my "office," and he said he would, and he did call at my office, as I believe, about three o'clock in the afternoon of that Friday. In the mean time I had reported this to Mr. Lovibond. It was arranged, in talking over this matter with Mr. Fennelly, we should not use the name of the candidates for Bridgwater, nor mention the name Bridgwater, but discuss it under the terminology as if it applied to the borough of Taunton, and when Mr. Fennelly was shown into my office I opened the conversation with him as if it was with reference to the Taunton election, but I gave him by some means to understand, and he undoubtedly did perfectly well, that I was talking to him about the Bridgwater election and not the Taunton election, and then I conveyed to him this message. I said, "I am commissioned to tell you, "and I have now taken some time to consider how this "election is to be conducted, and I am to tell you, in the "opinion of the professional men conducting this elec- "tion," and I wish to say parenthetically that Messrs. Reed and Cook had not been consulted at that time about it to my knowledge——

12,220. (Mr. Price.) Then, interrupting you, all the resolutions come to had been resolutions between you and Mr. Lovibond?—Between me and Mr. Lovibond. I said it was either our opinion or Mr. Lovibond's opinion, I am not certain which, but at all events I stated it as the opinion come to, that money would be spent by the other side, and if money was spent upon the other side the election would be lost unless money was spent on our side.

12,221. (Mr. Anstey.) You told this to Mr. Fennelly or Mr. Vanderbyl, which?—To Mr. Fennelly in my office.

12,222. Had this arrangement or understanding been come to between you and Mr. Lovibond at this day?—On that same day, or immediately before.

12,223. (Mr. Price.) You did not mention that?—Yes, I said after seeing Mr. Fennelly I saw Mr. Lovibond.

12,224. You had seen Mr. Lovibond before you had seen Mr. Fennelly?—I saw Mr. Fennelly the first thing in the morning, and then I told Mr. Lovibond I had an appointment with Mr. Fennelly, and arranged with him exactly what I was to say. Then I went on to say, which was part of the message or instructions I had received from Mr. Lovibond, that 3,000*l.* should be the sum that was to be provided, if money was wanted. Each candidate was to provide 1,500*l.*, but I was to add this suggestion only as a suggestion, that as Mr. Vanderbyl and his friends were city men, mixed up in business, and handling large sums of money, it might be more convenient for Mr. Vanderbyl or his friends to find the whole money in the first instance, and then that Mr. Kinglake's friends should recoup the money afterwards, or replace the money.

12,225. Did Mr. Lovibond know that you were going to make that as part of the proposal?—Undoubtedly. Then Mr. Fennelly heard me to the very end of everything I had to say without interrupting me or saying one word; then he replied to me in this way: he said, "Mr. Barham, the subject of spending "money at this election has been under the very "serious and anxious consideration of Mr. Vanderbyl "and his friends, and they have come to the distinct "determination that they will have nothing to do with "anything of the kind. It is not a question of money. "Mr. Vanderbyl is prepared, if need be, to spend 5,000*l.* "to expose any practices of this kind on the other "side, but he has felt, when he is sitting in the House "of Commons, that he is pointed at, that it is known "that he sits there as the result of bribery, and that "he is determined he will never sit there again under "those circumstances." To that my reply was this: "Mr. Fennelly, I am very glad to hear you make that "statement, and you may rest assured that not one "word shall escape my lips from this time to induce Mr. "Vanderbyl to spend one farthing; but as this is alto- "gether an unexpected aspect of affairs, it will be "necessary for me at once to communicate the circum- "stances to the gentlemen with whom I am acting. I "have to request you to be so kind as to wait here "until I can do so." I went immediately to Mr. Henry Lovibond's office, and there I found Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed, and I am not certain whether Mr. Cook was there or not, but I know Mr. Reed was there, and I immediately stated to them exactly what had passed. "I have seen Mr. Fennelly. He tells me "that no money will be spent; either that Mr. Van- "derbyl would spend no money, or that no money should "be spent." That caused a feeling of surprise, and on the part of Mr. Reed, I must say, I remember an angry feeling. Mr. Reed said he thought it was a disgraceful thing on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl; that it was only to be expected, after what had happened, that he would expend money, and if he had not intended to do so he ought to let us know before, that we might look out for another candidate, instead of driving up to the last moment; and he said, "This "must be altered; Mr. Fennelly must be seen, and "made to do it." And then Mr. Lovibond made the statement, and said, "Surely, Mr. Reed, you will not "go to a man and ask him to spend money?" I remember Mr. Lovibond making that statement. A good deal more conversation took place; I cannot exactly recal the whole of it. I remember one thing perfectly, distinctly: "Well," I said, "now is not it "very much better at once to make up our minds to "fight this election on pure principles? Let me go "up to Mr. James Trevor, the election agent on the "other side, and give him fair notice that we are not "going to spend any money, and that if any money "is spent, we will use our utmost efforts to expose it." That proposition was not approved of by those present. either by Mr. Lovibond or by Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook, I am not quite sure whether that gentleman was there or not.

12,226. (Mr. Anstey.) Did anybody approve of it?—Nobody approved of it, and my proposal fell to the ground.

12,227. (Mr. Price.) What was the objection to that proposal?—The objection was this, that it was worse to do that than not say anything at all, because the simple effect would be to make the other party a good deal more cautious.

12,228. As a matter of political electioneering tactics?—As a matter of electioneering tactics it would be bad tactics, even if they were not going to spend money; it would make the other party more cautious about what they were doing, and split our own party all to shivers. That was the double argument used, I said "I am only one, and you are two" or "three," I forget which. "You are in the majority, "and of course I must be bound, I cannot act in "direct opposition to your wishes." Then upon that they expressed an opinion. "One thing is very "plain, if this is so, there is nothing for it but for Mr. Vanderbyl to retire." Nothing was said about getting any other candidate.

12,229. I want you to explain that; why was it therefore said, "If this cannot be done Mr. Vanderbyl "must retire"?—Well, I think the impression, the idea, that Mr. Lovibond and I entertained, and I think so because of something which passed subsequently which I will tell you of, was this, if one of the Liberal candidates retired, one of the Conservative candidates would retire, that was the impression he entertained very strongly I know, because it came out afterwards.

12,230. And there would be a walk over?—There would be a walk over.

12,231. It was no use to try and secure two Liberal candidates if there was to be no money?—That was his feeling, because I had a very long discussion with him on Sunday morning afterwards, and know that that was his opinion.

12,232. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Vanderbyl would be the person who would have to retire because of the unequivocal decision at that time announced of his friend Mr. Finnelly not to bribe?—I think that was one reason. There were two reasons I think. Another was that he was a junior member, and there certainly was another reason alluded to, and another topic was brought up at that meeting, and that was the damaging circumstance that had come out with respect to his connexion with the Lundy Granite Company, that certainly was brought up in judgment against him at that time. Those were the different reasons weighing in different directions, and no doubt they had their effect.

12,233. (Mr. Price.) Was it at all stated at that meeting that Mr. Vanderbyl should be asked to retire, and that he might be let down easy; it might he put as a pretext instead of giving out that he would not spend money, that he was going because of the Lundy Granite Company ?—I do not believe that.

12,234. Was that discussed at all?—I do not remember that, but I do perfectly well remember the Lundy Granite Company was mentioned, and it was put forward as a matter of fact as the reason for his retiring.

12,235. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not it a fact that at that time, some days before that time, that question had been discussed among you, and a resolution come to for a deputation to proceed to Mr. Vanderbyl and say non obstante the Lundy Island Granite Company, and its shameful disclosures, you shall continue to be our candidate ?—Not so far as I know. I remember the deputation, and was a member of it, but it was the Saturday evening following.

12,236. (Mr. Price.) Go on with the history ?—When this was arrived at I was deputed to return to Mr. Fennelly, and communicate to him. I did so accordingly. His reply was, "Mr. Vanderbyl will "not retire. He says he has canvassed the borough, "and considers that he is the favourite in the borough. "He knows the feeling of the constituents as well as "the lawyers, and does not mean to retire, but means "to contest it." Then I said, "Mr. Fennelly, all I "shall do is to take back your message to the gentleman "at Mr. Lovibond's office." I did do so. They were not satisfied with my report, and I said, "Very well, "you had better see Mr. Fennelly yourselves." And thereupon Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed, whether Mr. Mr. Cook was there or not I do not remember, but I am quite certain about those two, Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed, came over with me, or presently afterwards came over, I am not sure which, whether I went first and prepared Mr. Fennelly for what he was to expect; but at all events they were over there, and a further discussion took place in which at one time the words waxed rather high. Mr. Fennelly was not pressed in direct terms to spend money, the pressure that was put upon him was that Mr. Vanderbyl should retire.

12,237. Tell us as near as you can what was said. You say no direct pressure was put upon him to spend money, but tell us what was said about spending money by him ?—I do not remember myself that anything was said about money, because that was taken to be a foregone conclusion. It was a foregone conclusion. Mr. Fennelly knew perfectly well that I had told Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed that no money would be spent. I do not remember anything whatever then being put about spending money beyond this, that it was stated unless money was spent, in case money was spent on the other side, there was no hope of winning the election, and as Mr. Vanderbyl had made up his mind not to spend money it was simply ruining the party for him to stay. That was the effect of the conversation.

12,238. (Mr. Price.) Was this at your office ?—At my office.

12,239. (Mr. Anstey.) At the same meeting ?—All these meetings going on, these consecutive meetings.

12,240. (Mr. Price.) Did you know Mr. Lovibond had been asked to come there by Messrs. Reed and Cook, to try and urge him to spend money ?—No, I did not; and I do not think that is true. I think he has made a mistake in stating that. I think it was Mr. Reed who did suggest coming over, and seeing Mr. Fennelly, and I think that is what is in Mr. Lovibond's mind; but it is not true that he came over to urge him, and to the best of my belief he was not urged, to spend money except inasmuch as the urging of Mr. Vanderbyl to retire was an indirect urging.

12,241. On this interview do you remember anything being said by anybody that Mr. Kinglake's party was ready with 1,500*l.*, or words to that effect; and a hope expressed that Mr. Vanderbyl was prepared with the same amount ?—Nothing except what I had stated in my original statement.

12,242. I am asking you ?—I do not remember that, I do not think it took place.

12,243. I am asking you whether at the office where Mr. Lovibond was presenti was stated then to Mr. Fennelly, Mr. Kinglake's party were ready with 1,500*l.* or whether it was only when you were privately with Mr. Fennelly ?—That was said when I was privately with Mr. Fennelly, and not said to the best of my belief when Mr. Lovibond was present. Nothing was said about money at all.

12,244. But you had said it ?—I had at the beginning of the meeting.

12,245. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand you to say you had had a conversation that day with Mr. Lovibond ?—I had settled those very terms.

12,246. (Mr. Price.) Now go on with your story ?—The result of this was simply an angry interview except this arrangement was come to either by Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook, I do not know which, stating "Well, but Mr. Fennelly you have "not seen"—they asked whether Mr. Fennelly had seen Mr. Vanderbyl since the request had been made that Mr. Vanderbyl should retire, and Mr. Fennelly said he had not. Then they said, "How do you know you "are actually representing Mr. Vanderbyl's wishes in "this matter. How do you know when Mr. Van-"derbyl finds he is requested to retire he will not "retire." "Well," Mr. Fennelly said, "I am perfectly "certain what his intentions are in the matter." They were not satisfied with it, but they insisted that Mr. Fennelly should see Mr. Vanderbyl, and then another meeting was appointed at 8 o'clock, I believe, that evening. At all events, in the evening after office hours.

12,247. At your office ?—Still again at my office; that meeting took place. Mr. Reed, Mr. Cook, Mr. Lovibond, and myself came, and Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl was shown into the next room. Another discussion took place at which Mr. Fennelly informed us all that he had seen Mr. Vanderbyl, who was in the next room, and that Mr. Vanderbyl was perfectly firm in his determination. After this had gone on some time I went into the room where Mr. Vanderbyl was, and I had some few minutes conversation with him, at which he told me he was firmly determined to stand by that course which he had adopted, namely, that he would spend no money illegally.

12,248. But would not retire ?—He would not retire. I remember perfectly well just at that time he was called in; someone came to call us in through the folding, the double doors between the two offices and as we went in I took him by the hand and said, "Now, whatever you do be firm, and adhere to the "resolution not to spend money." He went into the room, and there was a conversation in which he distinctly declined to retire, and said it was not a question of money. He repeated very much the same thing that had been said; and here terminated the meeting without any further resolution or determination being come to. That was all on the Friday. Then I may mention as well, but perhaps I had better not say anything about any other person but these, and not bring any other matter in.

12,249. You say you do not want to bring in any other person ?—I only thought whether I should interrupt the story; it is nothing more. The next day was Saturday, and during the next day, I think in the morning, I went to the "Globe," and had some conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl upon the subject of getting down detectives with a view to detect the bribery in case any should take place; but I told Mr. Vanderbyl also this: I said, "Now, sir, you know "what has taken place in this borough, and you know "I have been a party to it, and I could not feel my-"self right in taking any active steps to expose "bribery in this place on behalf of the Conservatives "without first giving them fair notice, and I do not "think I am justified in giving them that notice unless "I have the consent of those persons with whom I "have been acting." I do not remember at this moment anything particular occurring during that Saturday. The whole business of the election, so to say, was at sea, because there was Mr. Vanderbyl declining to spend any money, and nobody knew what at all to do in the matter. There the whole thing stood. In the evening there was a meeting at the town hall, and Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake both attended that meeting, and when the meeting was over Mr. Lovell Sealy touched my hand and said, "I want to see you at my house;" and I went to his house immediately after the meeting.

12,250. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the banker?—Mr. Lovell Sealy, the banker. I went to his house immediately after the meeting, and there I found several of the leaders of the Liberal party assembled. I recollect Mr. James Wood Sully, Mr. Wilton, and Mr. Lovibond were there, and several others I do not remember at this moment; and Mr. Lovell Sealy informed us that he had had put into his hand a letter by Mr. Fennelly, and this letter was a communication to Mr. Vanderbyl from the secretary or manager of the National Bank, enclosing a copy of a resolution which had been adopted by the board of that bank, and that resolution was couched in some such words as these: "That having "regard to the altercations that were existing between "Mr. Vanderbyl and Sir Joseph McKenna, and to "the appearance of those altercations in the public "prints, the board felt it their duty to request both of "them to retire from the board;" and Mr. Sealy stated that Mr. Vanderbyl had felt it his duty to place that letter in the hands of the party that they might take such steps in the matter as they thought right.

12,251. (Mr. Price.) Was this National Bank matter a different matter from the Lundy Island Granite matter?—As I understand it was. The National Bank matter was a case of altercation between Sir Joseph McKenna and Mr. Vanderbyl; I do not remember very distinctly at the present moment.

12,252. Were they directors of the bank?—Both.

12,253. (Mr. Anstey.) Would you recollect it if I read it to you?—I think I should.

12,254. "That the board should at once signify to "Mr. Vanderbyl and to Sir J. McKenna that it is "the united opinion of the directors present at this "meeting, that, pending the clearing up of the contra-"dictions and aspersions contained in the reported "proceedings above mentioned, in the interest of this "bank, Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Joseph McKenna "should vacate their seats at the board"?—That is undoubtedly it, and what would be substantially stated.

12,255. (Mr. Price.) That is what Mr. Sealy brought?—That is what Mr. Sealy brought, but I remember at that meeting I took up the cudgels for Mr. Vanderbyl. I ought to say that at the meeting just held, from which we came, the whole Liberal party had endorsed by acclamation his candidature for the borough.

12,256. When you say "all" you do not mean really all?—It was all the room, and that was a very large room, full of people; everybody present had expressed unanimously their opinion and approval of Kinglake and Vanderbyl as candidates, and I said, "that being "so, whatever we may individually think of the dis-"closures of the Lundy Granite Company, and though "many of us are shaken in our opinion by those dis-"closures, the question we have before us is whether "or not this resolution of the National Bank ought "to make us alter the determination which we have "previously arrived at to support Mr. Vanderbyl;" and I pointed out that all that was contained in that resolution simply appeared to be that there was a quarrel and contradiction between these two directors, that no opinion was expressed as to which was right and which was wrong, and that for aught we knew consequently Mr. Vanderbyl might be perfectly right, and Sir Joseph McKenna perfectly wrong. Whether I was right or wrong, that is what I contended, and that view was admitted by the persons there present, and a deputation was appointed to go down to Mr. Vanderbyl at the "Globe," which consisted of Mr. Lovell Sealy, Mr. James Wood Sully, Mr. Wilton, and myself, not Mr. Lovibond. We did go down and saw Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly there, and we did communicate to Mr. Vanderbyl the conclusion which had been arrived at. After that I went home. The next morning was Sunday morning; the very first thing I received a note from Mr. Lovibond asking me to see him at his house.

12,257. That was the Sunday before the nomination day?—The Sunday before the nomination day. I went, and he told me he had requested Messrs. Reed and Cook to call as well, or one of them, but neither of them had come, and then he said he had been giving this matter a great deal of serious consideration during the night, and he had come to the conclusion Mr. Vanderbyl must be induced to retire; that it was perfect madness the idea of going to fight this contest in this way, we should only be defeated, and be laughed at, and he had come to this conclusion.

12,258. (Mr. Anstey.) How do you mean, which way?—On purity principles; perfectly.

12,259. (Mr. Price.) Let us have it on the note that Mr. Lovibond said it would be useless to fight the contest on purity principles?—Yes, unquestionably. I do not say that he used those words, that he said, "on purity principles," but that was what was unquestionably intended and understood. Then he having expressed this opinion, this was his view, he said, "If "Mr. Vanderbyl retires my opinion is that they will "withdraw Mr. Gray, and then we shall have a walk "over." And I replied to that, "I do not see why "they should withdraw Mr. Gray unless we come to a "previous arrangement." He replied, "It would "never do to come to a previous arrangement. If we "were to attempt to make any arrangement with the "other party, we should be blown to atoms by our "own." I said, "Well, if there was no previous ar-"rangement, I do not see what advantage we shall get "by withdrawing Mr. Gray, because," I said, "the other "party will either spend money or they will not. If "they spend money they can as easily carry in two can-"didates as one, and if they do not, there is no reason "why we should not carry in two." I could not convince Mr. Lovibond of this, and he could not convince me, but I said at last, "You are an older electioneerer a "great deal than I. I must suppose, therefore, that "you must be right, and if you can convince the mem-"bers of the party to see the matter in that light, I "shall not offer any opposition." I should say what he wanted to do was to satisfy myself this was the right course, and then that there could be a meeting called of some of our principal supporters, and then that they should go to Mr. Vanderbyl, and use their influence to get him to retire. He thought if the influence of the main supporters of the Liberal party was brought to bear on Mr. Vanderbyl as well as the solicitors, it might have the effect of inducing him to retire.

12,260. Or did he think that Mr. Vanderbyl knew too much of the lawyers to care very much for their pressure?—I cannot say. I do not know what he thought, he did not say so. At all events this was plain, Mr. Vanderbyl had held the lawyers at arms length, and the only question was whether anything else should be tried. The discussion ended at that point, and I said, "I shall be in Bridgwater in the "course of the afternoon, and if you have any occasion "to see me," I told him where to find me, at my brother-in-law, Mr. Carslake's, and I should be there at three in the afternoon. At three in the afternoon I was at Mr. Carslake's, and had not been there long before some messenger came over and said, "Will you come over to Mr. Henry Nicholls'?"

12,261. (Mr. Anstey.) The draper?—Yes, the draper who lived in the square. I went there, and found assembled several persons. I remember perfectly well Mr. Francis James Thompson was there, Mr. James Wood Sully, Mr. Wilton, and Mr. Lovibond were there. I think Mr. Joseph Palmer was there. Mr. Henry Nicholls himself, of course, was there. I do not at this moment remember anybody else. Mr. Lovibond then made his statement. He said, "Now, "gentlemen, it is right that I should inform you that "this election is to be contested on purity principles, "and also I should inform you that from various indi-"cations that we have received we have no doubt that "it is intended that money will be spent on the other " side, and we have come to the conclusion under these " circumstances that we shall be fighting a hopeless " fight." I cannot repeat all he stated, but this was the effect, he proposed that Mr. Vanderbyl consequently should be requested to retire. Well, some discussion took place on that. I recollect one member who was present and who asked me very pointedly, " Are you sure any money is going to be spent on the " other side." I remember that perfectly well. Mr. Lovibond's reply was, " Of course we cannot be sure of " it, but there are many indications, and one of the " strongest indications is the fact of Mr. Gray being " here at all. He has not opened his mouth, but has " been a perfectly silent person. What is he brought " here for unless money is to be spent?" I remember myself there came a proposal which was entirely impracticable at the moment, I daresay wrong, but I wish to speak the truth, and will state exactly what passed. I said, "We have here a representative of the " firm of Brown and Co., Mr. Wilton, and Mr. James " Wood Sully, who has also a great many men in his " employ; in the course of the canvass which Mr. " Kinglake and myself have made, in my north ward " at all events, I have received a great number of direct " and unqualified promises of support from the voters " in the employ of those firms. Now," I said, " is " there any objection to this course if I furnish a list " of those names to Mr. Sully and Mr. Wilton, that " they should write and say, 'We are informed that " you have promised to support Kinglake and Van- " derbyl, we are going to poll ourselves early in the " morning, and it would be very satisfactory to us if " you would accompany us.'" However, that proposal, I wish to state the exact truth, was at once scouted by everybody present, and I recollect Mr. Wilton saying he would not do anything of the kind for the world, it would be immediately considered intimidation; but I remember making that proposal, and was responsible for it, nobody else. About this time, before any conclusion of any kind had been arrived at, I remember Mr. Francis Thompson was the first to leave, and then the next person that rose to leave was Mr. James Wood Sully, and at the same time that Mr. Sully rose to leave I rose to leave, stating I had an appointment, as was the fact, at Wembdon, where I live. I left and went to Wembdon, and did not return to Mr. Nicholls'.

ELEVENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

3 Sept. 1869.

12,262. (Mr. Price.) Before you left no conclusion had been arrived at by the parties?—No conclusion whatever. That was the Sunday. I came into the town the next morning, and as I was coming round the corner by the "Clarence," Mr. Cook was coming round by the Cornhill, and I think I noticed in Mr. Cook's manner a rather more lively sort of movement than there had been on Saturday. He walked with me from the corner of the "Clarence" as far as the corner of Mr. John Trevor's house in the square, and he said, " Since last night there has been " a change. I was with Mr. Fennelly."

12,263. (Mr. Price.) This would be Monday morning?—This would be Monday morning. " I was with " Mr. Fennelly till late last night, and he has gone to " London."

12,264. About what time would that be?—On the morning of the nomination day about 9 or 10 o'clock, the ordinary time I came to my office. Just as he had arrived at that point I remember Mr. John Trevor came up in the opposite direction. That broke up our interview. Mr. Cook went back to his office, he had come a little beyond, and I went on. That day the nomination took place, nothing further, as far as I was concerned, or heard, or knew of whatever, transpired on that day.

12,265. (Mr. Anstey.) This was the first intimation, these words of Mr. Cook at 9 or 10 on Monday morning, " A great change has taken place since last night. " I have been at Mr. Fennelly's till late last night, " he has gone up to London." Was that the first intimation you had that Mr. Fennelly had made up his mind, or that Mr. Vanderbyl had made up his mind, to renounce purity, and bribe?—There was one slight indication, not intimation, but I had a slight indication, and it was this: as I was coming through the Pig Cross I saw Mr. Allan and Mr. Bulpin walking through the town very briskly. Now I formed a certain conclusion from that.

12,266. (Mr. Price.) You have brought us now to the night of the nomination or the morning of the poll?—There was nothing more that day.

Adjourned till to-morrow at nine o'clock.

TWELFTH DAY.

Saturday, 4th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. LOMAS recalled.

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. Lomas.

4 Sept. 1869.

12,267. (Mr. Anstey.) In continuation of your examination yesterday I have to ask you one question: by whose persuasion was it that you determined to absent yourself from London, and avoid the service of the subpœna?—Mr. Fennelly's.

12,268. Mr. Fennelly himself?—Yes.

12,269. Was anybody present when that advice was given?—No.

12,270. Had you any conversation about it, either before or after or at the time, with Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Redfern, either before then, then, or at any time after?—Only some slight conversation previous to going abroad with Mr. Redfern.

12,271. What did he say to you?—He merely said I was going away, that was all.

12,272. Did he say anything about the time you were to come back, or when he expected you back?—I knew it would not be until after.

12,273. Did he say anything?—I do not think he did.

12,274. He made no objection to your going away and staying away?—No.

12,275. When you came back was any objection made to what you had done by any of the partners?—I received a formal letter in Paris stating I was to return.

12,276. Not blaming you for what you had done?—Stating I was to return.

12,277. Did it blame you for what you had done, for going away?—No.

12,278. Have you that letter?—No.

12,279. Where is it?—I destroyed all communications.

12,280. When?—That letter I destroyed about a week after I received it.

12,281. Have you destroyed any papers relating to these matters or any of these matters since the time the commission of inquiry was appointed?—No, none whatever. I destroyed them prior to that.

12,282. Who wrote that letter to you; in whose handwriting was it?—Mr. Redfern's.

12,283. Signed by himself or in the name of the firm?—Fennelly, Redfern, & Co.

12,284. And it was in his own handwriting?—Yes.

12,285. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you tell us at all what Mr. Fennelley had said to you about going away, did he tell you he was going away; you met him in Brussels?—Yes.

12,286. Did he tell you that both of you must get out of the way?—That was after my leaving, I met him in Brussels.

12,287. Yes, that was to refresh your memory; but did he tell you in the first instance, when you first went away, that it was best for you both to keep out of the way?—He said I was going away, and Mr. Fennelly went away at the same time.

12,288. Did he tell you why he was going away? What conversation had you about keeping out of the way in consequence of these proceedings?—I understood we were going away on account of these proceedings.

12,289. But what did he say? Did he tell you where he was going to?—I understood where he was going.

12,290. Where?—Rome.

12,291. Did he tell you where you were to go?—No, he said I was to go where I liked.

12,292. Did you communicate with the firm?—I had no communication with the firm whatever.

12,293. How were they able to write to you and tell you suddenly that you were to return?—Through the medium of the ledger clerk, Mr. Walter.

12,294. You told him as a matter of friendship, and not as a business matter?—During my tour through France I engaged in butter transactions, and the shippers communicated with Messrs. Redfern, Fennelly, & Co. direct.

12,295. (Mr. Price.) You do not mean to represent that your trip abroad was sufficiently communicated to Messrs. Redfern & Co. by them to account for your being sent, if there were not other causes?—I think that is a question; it so happened to be remunerative.

12,296. Do you mean that there was a large amount of business done in consequence of your trip abroad?—Yes.

12,297. In importing butter from France?—In importing butter from France; the commission on it.

12,298. (Mr. Anstey.) But that was an accident. You would have gone whether that accident had happened or not?—Yes.

12,299. The object which Mr. Fennelly stated to you as the object of your going away was to avoid the service of process that would compel you to appear at the election trial?—Yes.

12,300. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there much business done in importing butter from France?—A very large one; it is enormous; 18,000 packages a week.

12,301. And what is a package?—Half a cwt.

Mr. R. A. Steele.

Mr. Robert Ambrose Steele recalled.

(The witness.) In giving my evidence yesterday, I said I could not find the brief of the election trial in 1866. Since giving my evidence I have made a further search and have found that brief.

12,302. (Mr. Anstey.) Among Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's papers?—Among Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's papers, entrusted to me by the mayor, and also yesterday afternoon I searched a great number of Mr. Lovibond's papers in the charge of Mr. Carslake, the town clerk, but there I found nothing that I considered of any importance.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

Mr. John Hawkey Bingham Carslake sworn.

12,302*a*. You are town clerk, as we know. Will you explain how the papers alluded to by our clerk came into your possession?—I was in partnership with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond from the end of the year 1843 to 1854. We dissolved partnership in 1854. These papers remained with Mr. Lovibond until his death. On his death his clerk handed them over to me as the surviving partner, and they have remained in my office from that time until, in fact, the present time, and it occurred to me that possibly there might be some papers there, and I suggested to Mr. Purcell your secretary that they should be searched.

12,303. (Mr. Anstey.) Those are the only papers you have relating to this election?—The firm's papers, the partnership papers.

12,304. (Mr. Price.) You would not have the private papers?—No, not one.

12,305. Those are the only partnership papers referring to the election?—Yes, just so.

12,306. (Mr. Anstey.) And you have handed them over?—To your secretary.

12,307. I am not going to examine you at length now, but can you tell us, if not, perhaps you will be able to collect enough information to enable you to tell us hereafter anything about the elections of 1834–5, 1837, 1839, and 1841?—In 1841 there was an election and in 1839. I may state that I only came to reside here in 1845, and I know nothing of any matter anterior to that. Subsequent to that Mr. Lovibond acted, and I was in partnership with him during two elections.

12,308. But if you could give the Commissioners information as to any person who could tell us that if we asked them I should be personally obliged, particularly with reference to the great Bridgwater petition, as it is called, in 1837 and 1838, about which some questions have been asked?—That is before my time, but I will try what I can do.

12,309. The witnesses hitherto examined have ignored it?—I will see what I can get.

Mr. Lomas.

Mr. Lomas recalled.

(The witness.) In the newspaper this morning I noticed that it said after leaving Mr. Redfern's house that time, Mr. Vanderbyl went with us in a cab to the station.

12,310. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said you were not sure about that?—Yes, but it says Mr. Vanderbyl. I am not even sure of Mr. Redfern's going, so that it is quite a mistake.

12,311. Mr. Vanderbyl was here at the time?—Yes, I was not even sure that Mr. Redfern went.

12,312. (Mr. Price.) But it was Mr. Redfern, if anybody?—Yes.

Mr. William Edward Redfern sworn.

12,313. (Mr. Price.) You are a partner in the house of Fennelly, Redfern, & Co. ?—Yes.

12,314. Mr. Vanderbyl representing the "Co." ?—Yes.

12,315. Do you remember the last election receiving any telegram from Mr. Fennelly who was down here ?—Yes.

12,316. You remember Mr. Fennelly coming down to the election ?—Yes.

12,317. And Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Yes.

12,318. How long before the election do you remember Mr. Vanderbyl coming down ?—He was living there.

12,319. How long before the election had you seen Mr. Vanderbyl ?—I cannot recollect.

12,320. How short a time, rather, before he left, before the election came on ?—I think about 10 days.

12,321. In London ?—Yes.

12,322. About that time did you have any conversation with him, or was any arrangement made about money matters ?—With Mr. Vanderbyl ?

12,323. Yes ?—None.

12,324. You had no conversation with him at all about supplying money ?—None whatever.

12,325. Had you before Mr. Fennelly came down made any arrangement with him ?—No.

12,326. Was anything said by Mr. Fennelly before he left town that he might want money, and he would telegraph ?—I do not recollect it.

12,327. Surely when you received a telegram you would be rather surprised then ?—Well, he sent me a letter.

12,328. He sent you a letter before the telegram ?—Yes.

12,329. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was that ?—The same morning, as far as I can recollect.

12,330. The same morning as the telegram came ?—Yes.

12,331. Which came first ?—The letter came first, I think ; I am not positive ; they were almost both together.

12,332. (Mr. Price.) Are you quite sure that no arrangement was made between you and Mr. Vanderbyl that if he telegraphed you were to be prepared with money ?—Oh no ; they both came nearly together.

12,333. And you never had any conversation previous to the last election with either Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Fennelly about money matters ?—No.

12,334. Or about electioneering matters at all ?—No.

12,335. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you that letter ?—No, I am afraid it is destroyed. At least it is so long ago that I do not know what has become of it.

12,336. Give us to the best of your power its contents.

12,337. (Mr. Anstey.) First, when did you destroy that letter ?—It must have been at the time. I usually burn all my letters that are of no use to me. I cannot be certain about it, but he told me for one thing "bales" would mean hundreds, and soon after then the telegraph came.

12,338. That was to let you know the key to the cypher ?—Yes. He said a great pressure had been brought to bear upon him, and that if I got a telegram to that effect I should send as many hundreds as the number of bales mentioned in the telegram.

12,339. But that bales should mean—— ?—Hundreds.

12,340. A hundred pounds ?—Yes.

12,341. That was the first intimation, was it, that money would be required from the firm ?—Yes.

12,342. Did you then draw a cheque and go to the bank with your clerk, Mr. Lomas ?—Yes.

12,343. And got the cash ?—And got the cash that was packed in a bag, and he took it with him.

12,344. Did Mr. Fennelly say what the pressure upon Mr. Vanderbyl was ?—Well, I understood it was by the lawyers.

12,345. You understood it. It must have been from something in the letter then ?—Yes, I think he used those words, by the lawyers.

12,346. (Mr. Anstey.) By the lawyers ; for what purpose, did he say in the letter ?—I do not know whether it was said in words, but it was clear enough for me to understand.

12,347. What was it ?—To spend money.

12,348. And to be spent in what ?—I suppose in bribery.

12,349. From the tenor of the letter you suppose the pressure that had been used was to obtain money to be spent in bribery ?—Yes.

12,350. (Mr. Price.) Was that all that you did with regard to the last election ?—That was all I had to do with it.

12,351. There was a balance came back to you, was there ?—Yes, it all came back except about 240*l.* or 250*l.*

12,352. Mr. Vanderbyl had been elected in 1866. Had he ever said anything to you between the election of 1866 and his coming down to contest the borough in 1868, when you saw him about 10 days before, about his determination not to spend money again at any election in Bridgwater ?—He said he would not spend it.

12,353. When ?—A great many times.

12,354. You knew he had spent money at the previous election of 1866 ?—Yes.

12,355. And he several times said he did not intend to spend money again ?—Yes, he always said so when he spoke of it.

12,356. He never spoke of it without expressing that determination ?—He never spoke of it without expressing that determination.

12,357. (Mr. Anstey.) When he said he would not spend money, do you mean in bribery ?—He never told me so, but I inferred it.

12,358. From what he said you inferred it ?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Or did you infer it from the largeness of the amount.

12,359. (Mr. Anstey.) And from what he said ?—Well, he never said——

12,360. Did not he say he meant never to do that again ?—No, he did not say he would not do it again ; he did not refer to the old elections when speaking of the new.

12,361. (Mr. Price.) He said he would not spend money ?—He said he would not spend money.

12,362. (Mr. Coleridge.) During the progress of this election in 1866, that was Mr. Vanderbyl's first election, do you know what money he drew out to bring down here ?—No, I had nothing to do with him then.

12,363. Were you not in partnership in 1866 ?—No, I have only been there a year.

12,364. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were the partners then ?—Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly.

12,365. And what was Mr. Brogden ?—I know nothing about him.

12,366. And there is another firm, is there not, of which we know nothing, of which Mr. Brogden is a partner ?—No ; Mr. Brogden has nothing to do with Alexander and Co.

12,367. But there may be another partnership in which Mr. Brogden is a partner or not ?—Such a thing is unknown to me.

12,368. (Mr. Coleridge.) The firm of Redfern, Alexander, and Co. are bill brokers ?—No, Australian merchants.

12,369. Is not there a company in which Mr. Alexander, a Quaker, is a partner ?—That is Alexander, Cunliffe, and Co.

12,370. (Mr. Price.) Not the same firm ?—No.

12,371. Is Mr. Redfern a partner in Alexander and Co. ?—Yes.

12,372. And they are Australian merchants ?—Yes.

12,373. (Mr. Coleridge.) You knew perfectly well

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. W. E. Redfern.

4 Sept. 1869.

when you drew that cheque, and sent the money down, what it was for?—Well, I had a very good idea.

12,374. You could not doubt it was for bribery?—No.

12,375. (Mr. Price.) You had a consultation, we are told, at your private residence?—No consultation exactly.

12,376. You went upstairs and left Mr. Lomas downstairs?—Mr. Fennelly went upstairs to dress.

12,377. Was anything said about it between you and Mr. Fennelly?—He said that great pressure had been brought to bear.

12,378. Great pressure by whom?—By the lawyers.

12,379. Did he mention the names?—No, he did not mention the names.

12,380. (Mr. Anstey.) Great pressure had been brought to bear by the lawyers; finish the sentence?—Great pressure to spend money, and that he had made up his mind not to do it. He feared he might be obliged.

12,381. Did he say that he had made up his mind, or Mr. Vanderbyl?—He said he then.

12,382. That is he, Mr. Fennelly?—Yes.

12,383. As if he were arranging the money matters?—Yes.

12,384. What else, "Although I am determined "not to spend any money, I have had great pressure "put upon me by the lawyers?"—Yes, he did not say then he would spend it, but simply that great pressure was brought upon him.

12,385. And that he was to be prepared?—And that he was to be prepared.

12,386. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you been down here before, or at the time of the election?—I was down here about 10 days, a good time before. I think about September.

12,387. Was Mr. Vanderbyl canvassing then?—No, I do not think so.

12,388. (Mr. Price.) Did you see any of the lawyers when you were down here about the election?—No, none; I had nothing whatever to do with it.

12,389. Is there anything which you can inform us about respecting the last election, beyond what you have told us?—No, I did not know anything about it, and did not want to know anything about it.

12,390. (Mr. Anstey.) About the escape of Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Lomas to the continent, had you anything to do with that?—Nothing whatever.

12,391. Mr. Lomas has stated to-day that you spoke to him and alluded to his going away, and therefore you had so much to do with it?—Well, I merely gave him the message.

12,392. (Mr. Price.) Who from?—Mr. Fennelly.

12,393. (Mr. Anstey.) And what was that message?—That he should leave London.

12,394. For what purpose?—He did not say what for.

12,395. To go where?—To go abroad, to go away.

12,396. And how long was he to stay?—It was not mentioned.

12,397. Was it not mentioned that he was to wait until he got further orders to return?—I do not recollect that, but I do not think so. I think there was nothing said about it at the time he left.

12,398. Did you write to him after his departure?—Yes.

12,399. Did you inform him of the visit of Mr. Trevor or his agents to your counting-house, and the conversation with your accountant, Mr. Walters?—I do not recollect.

12,400. Mr. Lomas says he got a letter informing him of the fact that an inquiry had been made after him by the solicitor in asupport of the petition in order to serve him with a subpœna, and that they had declined to furnish the address. Was not that fact communicated by you in one of your letters to Mr. Lomas?—No, I think Mr. Walters wrote that.

12,401. But the fact is so, that this conversation took place between some one on the part of the solicitor for the petition and your accountant?—I believe so.

12,402. Were you present at that?—No, I was not; I was out.

12,403. What time did Mr. Fennelly return from the continent?—I think it was four days before the conclusion of the trial of the petition.

12,404. Did he remain in London?—Yes, he was in London.

12,405. In disguise?—No.

12,406. Did he keep within doors?—That I do not know. I do not think he did.

12,407. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he come to the office?—No, he did not come to the office.

12,408. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you any conversation with Mr. Fennelly before he left for the continent, about his departure?—Yes.

12,409. And about Mr. Lomas' departure?—Yes.

12,410. Did you give the order or instructions to Mr. Fennelly to go away, and to tell Lomas to go away?—I did not give him any instructions.

12,411. Did you give the advice?—No, he sent for me to tell me he was going.

12,412. Mr. Fennelly did?—Yes.

12,413. And then you saw him?—Yes.

12,414. Did he tell you what purpose he was going for?—No.

12,415. Do you mean to say he was not going away to avoid service of process?—He told me it was better for him to get away; he did not say why.

12,416. But you understood it perfectly well?—Yes.

12,417. Did he tell you as to Lomas also?—Yes, he said it was better they should both go.

12,418. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was not going away for his regular holiday?—No.

12,419. (Mr. Anstey.) It was not the time of year?—No.

12,420. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were Mr. Lomas' expenses debited to the firm or to Mr. Fennelly privately?—To himself, I think.

12,421. He is not expected to pay them?—No.

12,422. Who is?—I do not think it has yet been settled; I shall not, certainly.

12,423. You as a member of the firm will not consent to pay his expenses as part of the expenses of the firm?—No.

12,424. (Mr. Price.) He has told us that he did a good deal of business on which you have had the profit; how about that. If that was done you are going to take the benefit without taking the risk. He had an eye to business while he was there?—Yes, he did business.

12,425. (Mr. Anstey.) But to a sufficiently remunerative extent to justify the expenditure upon him?—I should think not, but I cannot be certain.

12,426. Were you averse personally to his going away on business grounds, and to Mr. Fennelly going away at that time?—Well, I was not averse to it.

12,427. You did not approve of it?—I would rather that they did not go of course.

12,428. (Mr. Coleridge.) It threw more work on you and the clerks?—Of course.

12,429. Did you tell Mr. Fennelly then?—No, I made no remark at all.

12,430. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you draw all the cheques that were found in the course of business?—There was only one.

12,431. More than one surely, there were the expenses of these absconding witnesses?—Yes, of course.

12,432. How many cheques did you draw for them?—I cannot remember exactly, but I should think not more than four or five.

12,433. In favour of Mr. Vanderbyl?—No. I should think all payable to "selves," and in the firm's name, not my name at all.

12,434. Did the proceeds go between Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Lomas, or to Mr. Lomas only?—I do not recollect.

12,435. How much money did you draw altogether for these expenses, you personally in the name of the firm ?—I think there were some cheques payable to Mr. Lomas himself, now I recollect. I think he took them away with him.

12,436. Taking the whole, those that were and those that were not so payable, for about how much did you draw in all to pay these expenses ?—I should think it was 300*l.*

12,438. Is it your usual habit to draw cheques for the firm ?—Yes.

12,439. In the name of the firm ?—Yes.

12,440. Are you the only person who draws cheques? —No.

12,441. Who besides ?—Mr. Fennelly.

12,442. (Mr. Coleridge.) And Mr. Vanderbyl ?—He can, but he does not.

12,443. (Mr. Anstey.) I am speaking of the habit, not the power ?—Yes, the habit.

12,444. Is it with you?—Yes, since I have been there.

12,445. And Mr. Fennelly ?—Yes.

12,446. Why did not Mr. Fennelly draw them this time ?—He never came to the office after that.

12,447. Never returned from the time he went to Bridgwater ?—Yes, for a short time he returned, but he did not return after he had found out that it would be better for him to go away.

12,448. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose it was after he heard of the petition, which must be presented within 21 days after the return to the Crown Office ?

12,449. (Mr. Anstey.) But he found it advisable to stay away, and he did, and did not return to the counting-house, and then he communicated with you and you saw him at his own house ?—I do not understand the question.

12,450. You say he did not come to the counting-house after he found it was desirable to go away. Where did you see him then during that interview ?—I saw him at Mr. Vanderbyl's house.

12,451. Where is that ?—Porchester Terrace.

12,452. Was Mr. Vanderbyl at home ?—He was.

12,453. Was he present ?—No.

12,454. What was he doing at Mr. Vanderbyl's house ?—I do not recollect.

12,455. Was he staying there ?—That night certainly.

12,456. He slept there ?—Yes.

12,457. And went away next day ?—Yes.

12,458. (Mr. Coleridge.) His own house was at Porchester Terrace, too, was not it ?—No, mine.

12,459. Where does Mr. Fennelly live ?—Epsom, in Surrey.

12,460. But when in town attending to business where does he live ?—He comes up every day to business ; he goes backwards and forwards.

12,461. He did not go to his own house after he heard that he had better stay away ?—Yes, he did ; he went down the next morning ; he stayed at Mr. Vanderbyl's that night, and went there the next day.

12,462. When did he leave his house ?—That afternoon, I think.

12,463. For the continent ?—Yes.

12,464. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you any conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl at any time about the absence of these two persons, or either of them ?—No, I had no regular conversation.

12,465. I do not care whether it was regular or irregular ; what was the conversation ; what did Mr. Vanderbyl say to you about it ?—Of course we knew they were away.

12,466. What did he say ?—I do not recollect what he said.

12,467. Did he say anything which showed he knew they were away ?—Of course.

12,468. And why they were away ?—No, he did not say why, but he must have known they were away of course.

12,469. Why must he have known ?—They are his partners, and a man must know whether his partners are away.

12,470. You have told me that already. I ask did he say anything which gave you to understand wherefore they were away ?—No.

12,471. Or for what purpose they were away ?—No.

12,472. When you said he must have known why they were away, why must he have known why they were away ?—For the same reason that I know, I suppose.

12,473. What was that ?—Why, I guessed it.

12,474. But you were told it ?—No, he did not tell us that.

12,475. Did he tell you that it was advisable as the election petition was about to be presented that he should go away ?—Well, I did not ask him why.

12,476. You have already said, or Mr. Lomas said, that Mr. Fennelly told you the state of affairs was such that it was thought advisable they should go away ?—Yes.

12,477. Did Mr. Vanderbyl say anything about that ?—No, we had very little conversation about it.

12,478. Then why do you know he must have known for what purpose they absented themselves ?—I think he must have known.

12,479. Why do you think so ?—Because he must have guessed it.

12,480. But why ?—Because it was unusual for them to be away.

12,481. And there was no other reason for their being away than the one you have suggested ?—No. I may say that Mr. Fennelly was at home some part of the time when I was away. After he went away he came back, and then went away again.

12,482. (Mr. Coleridge.) But how long did he stay when he came back ?—I do not exactly recollect.

12,483. Was it before or after the trial of the petition ? —Before the trial of the petition.

12,484. Did he show himself in the regular way in business ?—Yes.

12,485. (Mr. Price.) And then went away again ? —Yes.

12,486. (Mr. Anstey.) How many hours did he stay away ?—He stayed some days.

12,487. (Mr. Price.) Then he went away before the inquiry was heard ?—Yes.

12,488. And stayed away until after it was over ? —No ; he came back before it was over.

12,489. (Mr. Anstey.) Only four days ?—Yes ; four days.

12,490. (Mr. Price.) Did he go away again after it was over ?—No.

12,491. Never went away again ?—No.

12,492. (Mr. Anstey.) He did not come to the counting-house during those four days, I understand ? —No.

Mr. Eustace Barham recalled.

12,493. (Mr. Price.) You had brought us up to the morning of the election when we left off yesterday ?—Yes ; and you will remember, perhaps, my making a statement yesterday. I said there were one or two collateral matters which I would not mention then, because it would interfere with the thread of my narrative. I propose now, if you will allow me, to take up those two or three other points this morning before going on with the main story.

(Mr. Price.) Yes ; that will be convenient.

(Mr. Anstey.) You told us that the conversation was carried on under a sort of disguise, Taunton being used for Bridgwater.

12,494. It was agreed between you and someone, who was that someone ?—Myself and Mr. Lovibond.

12,495. And Mr. Kinglake ?—No.

12,496. Or any other attorney ?—No ; no one else at all.

12,497. When you were discussing as to what was to be done about this election it was to be talked of as Taunton, and not Bridgwater ?—Yes, exactly.

12,498. And what name did you substitute, if any,

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

4 Sept. 1869.

for those of Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—The Liberal candidates for Taunton, Mr. James and Mr. Berkeley, Mr. Berkeley was put in the position of Mr. Kinglake as being the senior member, and Mr. James meant Mr. Vanderbyl.

(Mr. Price.) Had you arranged that by way of writing or verbally.

12,499. (Mr. Anstey.) And what names were to represent in that conversation Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray ?—Those of the two Conservative members of Taunton.

12,500. In what order ?—I forget that, but at all events that was the substance.

12,501. The two Conservative candidates at that time for Taunton ?—Yes.

12,502. Mr. Serjeant Cox and another ?—There was another, I believe, but at all events they stood for the Conservative. The Conservatives for Taunton used for the Conservatives here, and the Liberals for Taunton used for the Liberals here.

12,503. (Mr. Price.) If any question is put to you about a conversation in regard to Bridgwater election of course you will understand as meaning really relating to the election, even although the conversation may have been verbally and formally with reference to Taunton ?—Yes, quite so.

Then I was just going to say, taking up some of these minor points, that there was one subject on which you have asked questions, though not to me, and that is with reference to negotiations or machinations of the members on either side, Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl, with the view to supplanting each other, and I should like to state all that I know on that subject. And the first thing that I know is what Mr. Lovibond told me one day, that he had received a very extraordinary application from Mr. Vanderbyl. I should think this was about two months before the election. Mr. Vanderbyl came down rather unexpectedly to Bridgwater, and I do not think I saw him, but Mr. Lovibond told me that he had received an application from Mr. Vanderbyl in which Mr. Vanderbyl asked him if he would undertake to be his sole agent, and no one else ; whether, in point of fact, he would take the agency of Mr. Vanderbyl only, and throw Mr. Kinglake overboard. And Mr. Lovibond further told me that he had at once replied to Mr. Vanderbyl that Mr. Vanderbyl must have had a very imperfect idea of him, Mr. Lovibond, to think that he could entertain such a proposal for one moment. This is what Mr. Lovibond repeated to me, and he told me that he had told Mr. Vanderbyl, in the first place, it was perfectly out of his idea to do anything of the kind, quite contrary to his principles to do so ; and secondly, if he did do anything of the kind he should not thereby benefit Mr. Vanderbyl in the smallest degree, because any influence he might possess in the place was certainly due to such confidence as the Liberal party might repose in him ; and if he were to take up such a position as that, any confidence which the Liberal party might repose in him would be blown to atoms. That was stated to me at the time, and as far as I knew until after the election petition had been presented was the only step of that kind on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl. After the election petition had been presented something else came to our knowledge, which I will mention to you presently.

Then, sir, on the part of Mr Kinglake, the only thing that I know in which Mr. Kinglake to a certain extent in my opinion derogated from perfect good faith between himself and his colleague, Mr. Vanderbyl, was this—that shortly before the election Mr. Lovibond informed me, for I had no direct communication with Mr. Kinglake upon it, that he had been in conversation with Mr. Kinglake, who had told him that under the advice of Mr. Serjeant Kinglake he thought that as the senior member in the approaching election, it ought to be understood that if only one of the Liberals was returned, he, Mr. Kinglake, should be that man. He said that his uncle or his cousin the serjeant told him such had been the practice at Rochester, and that he thought it ought to be the case here.

12,504. (Mr. Anstey.) When was this conversation ?—Well, sir, this was I should think just about the early part of the canvass, but I will not be certain about that.

12,505. In October ?—Yes, for a fortnight or three weeks before the election, to the best of my recollection.

Well, then, Mr. Lovibond told me that he at once combated and warmly combated any such proposition, and I entirely concurred with him, and the matter was also mentioned to Mr. Lovell Sealy, who took exactly the same view of it. We held then that Mr. Vanderbyl had as perfect a right to represent Bridgwater as Mr. Kinglake had. He had not come here under Mr. Kinglake's introduction, he had come here and stood on his own introduction to the electors, and not under Mr. Kinglake's wing at all ; therefore we did not see any right on the part of Mr. Kinglake to claim any priority over Mr. Vanderbyl. A good many interviews took place about that. Mr. Kinglake could not remove one idea for some time from his mind, and I think Mr. Sealy saw him about it, and put it to him very strongly. I am not aware of any other respect in which Mr. Kinglake derogated in any sense from perfect fealty towards Mr. Vanderbyl.

12,506. (Mr. Price.) Which was the first thing in point of time, the suggestion from Mr. Kinglake that he as senior member ought to have the preference, or the suggestion of Mr. Vanderbyl to Mr. Lovibond, that Mr. Lovibond was to act solely for him ?—Mr. Vanderbyl's was very much the first in point of fact.

12,507. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Lovibond tell you that Mr. Vanderbyl's desire to supplant Mr. Kinglake had been communicated in any shape or form by Mr. Vanderbyl, or anybody on his behalf, to the opposite side ?—I cannot recollect. I tried to remember whether anything of that sort was said, and I have a little difficulty upon it, because I heard something of it afterwards.

12,508. Supposing that it appears by a paper which has been prepared at Mr. Trevor's office with great care, that it was communicated some months before to the opposite side, and that a coalition was distinctly promised, what would you say to that ?—Then I should be prepared to say very likely it was so, but I had forgotten it.

Then the only circumstance with respect to this negotiation that came to my knowledge was in this way, that subsequent to the presentation of the petition, when a meeting took place between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed and others, of which you have heard, with a view to trying to arrange the petition, whether immediately before or after the presentation of the petition I am not sure, but just at that time ; I was not present at that meeting, but when Mr. Lovibond returned he told me that Mr. Westropp had begun the conversation by blurting out a fact of which he was previously altogether ignorant, namely, that there had been negotiations going on by Mr. Vanderbyl immediately preceding the election through Messrs. Hennett and Spinks with Mr. Westropp for the purpose of a coalition, that Mr. Westropp had blurted this out at the very beginning of this interview, under the evident impression that Mr. Lovibond knew all about it before ; but Mr. Lovibond had not known anything about it before, and he came and told me of this circumstance.

12,509. (Mr. Price.) When was that ?—At the meeting which took place either immediately before the petition was presented or just afterwards, the meeting which took place in London.

12,510. When they met at the coffee house ?—I think very likely.

12,511. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Messrs. Reed and Cook know of this ?—One of them must have known, because I said they were present also at the same meeting. I was not present at that meeting. This is only what Mr. Lovibond reported to me.

12,512. (Mr. Anstey.) You yourself had not then been present at any of the meetings in London ?—No.

12,513. This was a meeting held before the first of the meetings at which you were present?—Before the first meeting at which I was present.

12,514. (Mr. Price.) Then Mr. Westropp had been in communication with Mr. Lovibond before you came up to town about the matter?—Yes, there had been one or two interviews and meetings, and the whole negotiation at one time had been supposed to be completed, and then it had all broken down.

12,515. With Messrs. Reed and Cook and Mr. Lovibond?—And Mr. Trevor, and I do not know who else.

12,516. Mr. Vanderbyl?—That I cannot say. I do not know. That is one point I thought I would mention. Then there was another point with respect to the conduct of the election, so far as my preparations for the election in my part of the borough were concerned. You have heard of course the evidence that the borough was divided into three parts. That was the division that was originally made at the registration for the purpose of convenience, and when the time of election came the same division was adopted. I had never, as you will find when I come to give further evidence as to previous elections previously personally taken the direct conduct of the election for the whole or any part of the borough, and I was entirely at a loss as to the method in which I should proceed, and I asked Mr. Lovibond what to do. He said, "You will "find no difficulty about that, you had better speak to "Mr. Bulpin, he is the best man in this part of the "borough, and you had better speak to him." That is Charles Bulpin. Upon that I went to endeavour to find Charles Bulpin, but it so happened that Charles Bulpin, who is a traveller in the employ of Brown & Co., was away on a journey, and would not return until, I think they first said on Thursday, but ultimately it happened that he did not return until the Friday before the election, the very day upon which the interview took place with Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelley of which I have told you. I wish to state at once that when I originally contemplated employing Mr. Bulpin I fully expected at that time that money would be spent, and I fully contemplated employing him if need had been for a corrupt purpose. I do not wish to avoid that statement for a moment. It would have been so if a change had not taken place; but it so chanced that before I was able to see Mr. Bulpin, from the delay in his return, this interview with Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl, and all of which I have told you, had taken place, and in consequence when I did see him the whole position of the case had altered. I am not sure whether or not this was the very first time I had spoken to Bulpin, though I knew him very well by sight, and I knew him well when I saw him in his parlour, and sat down there, and said, "Now, Mr. Bulpin, this is the "first time we have come in contact on electioneering "business, although I know very well you have been "employed and have acted in these matters before; "and this being the very first occasion I have de-"termined I will not enter upon this matter with you "under any false pretences. It is very possible you "may suppose by my coming here that I have come "here to make arrangements with you about spending "money; but I must tell you at once that you may "know how to guide yourself, and take your own "course as to how you shall act, that no money will be "spent by one of the candidates," and I think I mentioned Mr. Vanderbyl's name as altogether declining to spend any money; "therefore this will be a "pure election, and it will be for you to make up your "mind whether under those circumstances you will "take any trouble, or have anything to do with it or "not." His reply was, "Sir, I shall be just as well "pleased," and in fact he said, "better pleased to fight "this as a pure election than as one in which money "is spent;" and then I remember also this passed. An allusion was made either by myself or Mr. Bulpin, I forget which, to the circumstance of Mr. Vanderbyl's election, and to the dispute between him and Mr. Allan and the others about those payments of 25*l.*, and the statement of Mr. Bulpin made to me at that time was this: he said, "We had no promise or expectation "of the money before the election, but on the evening "after the election when we were victorious Mr. "Allan said, 'There will be 25*l.* for each of you.' "Now, sir," he said, "I never wanted the money, "and I had not expected the money, but I did think "it rather hard after this money had been promised to "me that I should not get it." That I remember perfectly well passing on that subject. Then I made this appointment with him. This was on the Friday I handed him over a list of voters of my ward which had been prepared for me by Mr. Dyment, who is in the employ, I think, of Messrs. Thompson and Collins, cheese factors. He had made out and handed over to me a list in a little book, and I think the book is with my papers at this moment in your possession. Dyment had made out a book in which he put the ordinary marks, "for," "against," "doubtful for," and "doubtful against," in the ordinary way that these things are indicated. And I handed Mr. Bulpin this book, and appointed to meet him, that he should come round to my house at 4 o'clock on the Sunday afternoon following, and that would give him all the Saturday and Sunday morning to make such arrangements as he required. Well, by error of memory, I afterwards supposed that was 6 o'clock, and it was the 6 o'clock appointment that I left the meeting at Mr. Nicholls's house to keep, and when I got to my house I found that Mr. Bulpin had kept his appointment at 4 o'clock, and had appointed to come again at 8. He came again at 8, and he said he had been through the list. I told him just the same as I did before, which I had every reason at that moment to believe, that there was no change whatever, that the matter would be fought as a pure election; and with the exception of seeing him as I before stated go up that morning through the Pig Cross with Mr. Allan, I have never seen Mr. Bulpin since until I saw him in this court during these proceedings, nor had I any conversation with him on the subject.

Then there was another point with respect to travelling expenses in the early part of the canvass. I was misled by a little book published by Cox and Grady on elections, which is most scandalously indexed. I beg to state you can find nothing in it. I was misled as to the legality of election expenses, and made a note of a passage which had reference to payment of expenses of a candidate at an election, and I was under the impression that it alluded to borough elections, and under that impression I went to call on a certain Mrs. Watts, a widow living in Little Chandos Street. I found that she had two sons who were voters, and they were on the naval reserve at Bristol, and I asked her to write to her two sons and inquire of them whether, if they were sent for and their expenses paid, they would come down and vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl. She told me they were both Liberals, and afterwards told me that she had written, and that they would come down. Then subsequently to that I gave some directions to a Mr. Bounsall to get out a list of the different captains who were voters who were absent at sea, with a view of getting them home. This appeared a usual thing in previous elections, and it had been at previous elections a legal thing; but after making this discovery about the legality of these proceedings I at once went and saw Mr. Bounsall.

12,517. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he the dissenting minister?—No.

12,518. Is he any relation to the dissenting minister who signed the petition of 80?—I do not know, but he is at present a clerk in the employ of Messrs. Brown and Co., and I told Mr. Bounsall that I found that the payment of any such expenses would be illegal, and that I for one could have nothing to do with that. Mr. Bounsall said under those circumstances we could have nothing to do with it, and I reported the matter to Mr. Henry Lovibond. "Well," Mr. Lovibond said, "the only thing to do is to send a 5*l.* note under an envelope." He said, "Will you do it?" I said, "No, I will not." He said, "Well, you ought to do something in this matter." "Well," I said, "I shall not do it," and about two days afterwards I received from Mr. Bounsall——

12,519. Did you understand Mr. Lovibond to mean, when he said you ought to do something in this matter, merely the matter of those travelling expenses? —Well, I think he thought I was rather shirking my share of the responsibility.

12,520. Then he said you ought to do something; that was with regard to spending money for the election expenses?—Precisely. I think the next day or the day after I received a short note from Mr. Bounsall enclosing a 5*l.* note. He said, "This has been "received by me in an envelope without any letter. "There is evidently some mistake." I took that 5*l.* note, feeling sure after what had passed that it was Mr. Lovibond who had sent it to Mr. Bounsall, and handed it over.

12,521. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did he say?—That I do not remember, but he took the 5*l.* note.

12,522. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the envelope in Mr. Lovibond's handwriting?—That I do not remember, but I feel quite certain from what passed that it was Mr. Lovibond who had sent the 5*l.* note.

12,523. Mr. Lovibond did not deny it?—No, not at all. He took the note, and I do not think there is any doubt about that, and I do not think Mr. Lovibond would deny it for a moment. Then I do not remember at this moment anything else prior to the morning of the nomination to which it is necessary for me to draw your attention. I live about a mile in the country from Bridgwater, and on the morning of the nomination I came into Bridgwater.

12,524. (Mr. Price.) Before you leave that I should like to call your attention for a single moment to one of these meetings that you held just close upon the nomination, at which you were present and Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Fennelly?—Yes.

12,525. At your office, was not it?—That was at my office certainly.

12,526. I wish you just to try and recollect whether or not it is true that at that meeting Mr. Lovibond was the principal spokesman?—Well, I think he was, he usually was. He was rather the leader of our party, and was usually the spokesman.

12,527. (Mr. Anstey.) When the subject of the means of getting money, and the propriety of spending money, and the necessity for Mr. Vanderbyl so spending, he was the spokesman, or the principal spokesman?—I do not, as I have said before, recollect any conversation at which Mr. Fennelly was present and Mr. Lovibond was present.

12,528. I am speaking of Mr. Lovibond. When Mr. Lovibond was endeavouring to induce you either to drop Mr. Vanderbyl or let money be spent, was he on those occasions the principal spokesman?—Do you refer to the interview at which Mr. Fennelly was present?

12,529. (Mr. Price.) Yes?—There was no conversation. Mr. Lovibond never in any words when I was present, or when Mr. Fennelly was present, urged or advised the expenditure of money. That he certainly did not do. The only manner in which that could be construed was the pressure upon Mr. Vanderbyl to retire. There never was any proposal of that sort.

12,531. Was a hint given to him that you did not want him there, or was a hint given to Mr. Fennelly that you did not want Mr. Vanderbyl there, and if wanted he was to go into the next room, and he then retired?—That is just about it. He came with Mr. Fennelly, and was asked to walk into the next room, and hearing part of the conversation I went into the room where Mr. Vanderbyl was, and therefore possibly something passed between Mr. Reed and Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Fennelly which I did not hear.

12,532. Did you hear anything by Mr. Lovibond about the election was sure to be lost, and an expression of surprise by Mr. Fennelly at the statement, and that was the part in which Mr. Lovibond was the principal spokesman?—I am quite sure he expressed his opinion that was the principal reason why it was due to his party that Mr. Vanderbyl should retire.

12,533. Did Mr. Fennelly say he was prepared to spend 5,000*l.* if there was a petition?—Yes; I have no doubt he said that, and it was the very first thing he said, the very first statement, and I have no doubt he said it over and over again.

12,534. (Mr. Price.) Did he say he had been made a fool of?—Well, I do not remember that.

12,535. I am wrong. Was it Mr. Reed who said, that you, the attorneys, were made fools of by Mr. Vanderbyl's determination not to spend money?—Mr. Reed certainly did say it.

12,536. Did Mr. Fennelly say that he was prepared, or that Mr. Vanderbyl was prepared, to pay what his friends thought necessary?—Not in my presence. If that was stated—I cannot imagine that it could have been stated, because it would have been altogether inconsistent with all the rest of the conversation, but if it was stated it must have been when I was out of the room.

12,537. We may sum it up in this way; was it that if the money was not spent the lawyers would not support him?—No, I do not remember that. They pressed him all they could, but I do not remember that.

12,538. (Mr. Anstey.) Does it amount to this, that if Mr. Vanderbyl, standing on purity principles, were to persist in going to the poll the election would be lost?—Well, that was exactly what was stated.

12,539. Then is not that indirectly, but equivalently or exactly, the same thing as that which was asked you just now by the learned Chief Commissioner?—No, I do not think it is.

12,540. Observe the term, "standing on purity principles," which I introduced into my former question? —Quite so.

12,541. Then I will put it in the contrary way. Was there anything said as to what would happen, if the two candidates did not stand on purity principles? —Then that it would secure the election.

12,542. That was said?—Yes.

12,543. Was that said by Mr. Lovibond?—That was the inference.

12,544. When Mr. Fennelly was present?—I cannot say that those were the precise words, but it was what underlaid the whole conversation.

12,545. Was Mr. Fennelly led to understand that the certainty of defeat was Mr. Vanderbyl's going to the poll on purity principles?—Unquestionably.

12,546. Then it was clearly to be inferred from all that took place, that if he was prepared to go to the poll, but not on purity principles, then what would happen?—Then the election would be a success.

12,547. Then was the expression from which that inference was deducible used by Mr. Lovibond or by you?—Not by me, because I took no part in the conversation; I had previously expressed my opinion, and I was opposed to it.

12,548. The words were used by Mr. Lovibond?— They were spoken by Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed. The difference between the two was, that Mr. Lovibond was more cautious in what he said than Mr. Reed.

12,549. The pressure therefore to retire would be contingent upon Mr. Vanderbyl's continuing to profess to stand upon purity principles?—Not a doubt of it.

12,550. And that was clearly understood by Mr. Fennelly?—I do not think he could have failed to understand it.

12,551. And could Mr. Vanderbyl have failed to understand it?—Well, I should think Mr. Vanderbyl must have been perfectly aware of it.

12,552. And would not that account for the marvellous change which had taken place in the night of the Lord's day in Mr. Vanderbyl's mind, as reported to you; by Mr. Cook or Mr. Reed the next morning?—What was reported by Mr. Cook to me was as to what was done by Mr. Fennelly. One can form one's own conclusion as to the position between Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl; it was what passed between him and Mr. Fennelly, Mr. Vanderbyl's name was not mentioned then. Of course it is a conclusion you are as well able to draw as I am about that.

12,553. (Mr. Price.) Does that conclude everything up to the election morning?—Yes; everything up to the election morning. Then I came in on the election morning and I recorded my vote; and at first, as far as my ward was concerned, the Liberals were in the majority. We polled pretty quickly the respectable part of the constituency, and my particular ward, the north ward, is that part in which I may venture to say the most respectable part of the voters reside. There is a larger majority of respectable voters there than in the other wards.

12,554. Where is the north ward, where we are now sitting?—Yes. My district begins with the bridge, running all the way.

12,555. The square?—Including the whole of the square, both sides of the High Street, Cornhill, and then through on the side of West Street, North Gate, Providence Place, and all this side where we are sitting. In that side of the town there are a good many respectable inhabitants residing, and they came early to the poll. They recorded their votes and we were in a majority in our ward, and I think at first we were in a majority altogether, but I think that very soon changed.

12,556. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time did that change?—I think the Conservatives got ahead from somewhere about 9 to half-past 9 o'clock; then that brings me to another incident. Mr. Bussell, in giving his evidence stated that he met Mr. Lovibond and myself, and that a certain conversation passed. Now that was an inaccuracy of Mr. Bussell's, I am satisfied it was nothing more; I was not present when that conversation passed, but Mr. Lovidond did tell me on the very same morning the very same circumstance, namely, that he had seen Robert Bussell, the other brother, who is the bailiff in the county court, and that Robert Bussell had told him that at a late hour on the previous night the fact had come out that no money was to be spent, and that they had all gone off, that is, the Conservative party had gone off to their homes in dudgeon, and the whole idea of fighting the election was given up by the Conservatives.

12,557. (Mr. Price.) By the Conservative side?—By the Conservatives. That Mr. Lovibond certainly told me he had received as an intimation.

12,558. What time in the morning?—That was quite early, after the opening of the poll, between 8 and 9.

12,559. That would account for your thinking that you were in a majority all over the borough at that time?—Yes. At that time I think the Conservatives were doing nothing at all scarcely. Then, from what I understood after that, or just about that time, a meeting took place at the "Clarence Hotel," at which Mr. Westropp addressed the electors. I had all kinds of reports brought to me by different persons as to what took place.

12,560. Did he address them at a meeting, do you mean?—At a meeting.

12,561. Not in the street?—No, in a large public room at the "Clarence Hotel," and I received all kinds of reports.

12,562. What time was this?—I should suppose somewhere shortly after 8 o'clock. Well, I received all kinds of reports. Persons came to me and said that Mr. Westropp had said to them there, "Surely "you would not have me go to prison! You must go "and vote like men this morning, and you must trust "to what comes afterwards." But I confess I did not believe the statement brought to me. I did not believe that Mr. Westropp or any other man would stand up at a public meeting and make such an incautious statement as that; and I did not take them down because I really did not credit the statements. After that I stayed over at my committee room in the Mansion House, and an exceedingly dull day it was. Occasionally I went out. The voters were standing about in the streets. I am bound to say it was more like a market day, with men instead of beasts, than anything else, and there they were standing about in the streets, as obviously waiting——

12,563. (Mr. Coleridge.) Waiting to be bought?—Waiting for something, as plainly as anything I ever saw, and I stayed there in my room.

12,564. (Mr. Price.) Let me interrupt you there. Do you suppose that if no money had been spent at that time, that the poll would have closed without the constituency being half polled?—I cannot say. Whether there was a sort of rush at the end when they thought there was nothing going I cannot tell. I am not sufficiently experienced in electioneering to say as to that. I went down to Mr. Lovibond's room, and I found that his room was just in the same state of inaction; a boy sitting opposite a sheet of paper pinned down to the table, a poll list, and there was little else doing.

12,565. And no returns coming in?—Yes. The returns came into my place, and what I carefully noted was this, that the Conservatives were polling a number of men, who, from information I had received, were not men who would poll without money or promises. They had not at that time got away any of our men.

12,566. They had got what are called the "balance" men?—No. You see the "balance" men divide themselves very much into two classes, one set of men who belonged to the Conservatives, and vote for them; and the other set of men who belong to the Liberals, and who vote for them. They were getting their doubtful bribable men polled then, and from what I have been told since these things have been discussed, they were not men who would vote without money. I noticed that, and I also noticed that they had got some three or four men, who were marked by Mr. Dyment, and who are down in my list, who voted for them, and who I had expected would vote for us. You will see by the poll sheets, if you will kindly take the pains to look at them, that there was, at the end of the day, a remarkable concurrence between the anticipation which I had been led to form and the result which actually took place. You will see it is all tabulated by a red cross against everybody who was expected to vote for us; and I think you will see that the result was very similar to that which I was led to expect.

12,567. As to those who would vote for you?—As to those who would poll for us. I think if I had it before me (referring to the poll sheet) I could easily explain it to you.

12,568. You had better explain it from that, it may make it more intelligible?—Yes.

12,569. Does that apply to the new constituency as well as the old?—Yes, it applied to the whole body.

12,570. When you had formed these calculations about the necessity of spending money, there was a new constituency to be considered, a very large limit indeed?—Yes.

12,571. Had you come to the conclusion that notwithstanding this infusion of working men, of what are called the "working classes," still the question of money was the important thing?—I think it is right to say, that personally I did not make any calculation at all, I left that to Mr. Lovibond, whom I considered as my chief with respect to the election.

12,572. But was that taken into account, that the increase of the constituency would make very little difference as to whether there was money spent?—Yes, that was what was supposed. Then I remember that somewhere about 12, from 12 to half-past 12 in the day, I walked down, for the first time I believe in the day, and found myself at the "Globe," and got down into the committee room there, Messrs. Reed and Cook's committee room, and there I found that all the life of the election was concentrated. That room presented quite a different appearance to Mr. Lovibond's or mine. Ours were perfectly empty. There were a great many people there; it was more like a hive of bees just on the point of swarming; I cannot compare it to anything else. There were a number of people in a great deal of excitement and making a considerable noise; the Liberal supporters.

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

12,573. Who was acting the part of queen bee?—I will tell you who was acting the part of queen bee directly. The first thing that attracted my attention when I got into the room, and attracted my attention so strongly that I am not able to tell who else was in the room, was this, that I saw Mr. Lovibond at one end of the room and Mr. Reed at the other. Mr. Lovibond was standing with a small notebook in his hand, and two or three men were opposite to him giving him some information, which he was taking shortly down in pencil. Mr. Reed, on the other hand, was standing with his arms closed, looking the image of despair and desperation. That was the thing that I noticed. He was looking exceedingly pale, exceedingly harassed and depressed. That is what I saw, and I formed certain conclusions. I drew this inference, that the persons who were giving Mr. Lovibond this information were persons who were telling him where the different voters were stowed away, or where the different voters were available, in case the resolution should be arrived at to spend money. That is the conclusion I arrived at; and what I did was this, I sat down by the side of the table, and, I thought quietly with myself for one or two minutes, and I said to myself, "Now, so far as this election is "concerned, up to this moment I am free. Shall I "mix myself up with this matter or not"? And I then and there came to the conclusion that I would not, and I walked straight out; and from out of the room I walked to my office, and there I sat down. I must mention that since these proceedings have been opened I have had a communication made to me, and that communication was made to me last Sunday evening, and by Mr. Charles Robert Bate.

12,574. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is the old Mr. Bate's son?—That is the old Mr. Bate's son. And he said that he thought it might relieve my mind to know that he saw me in Castle Street, immediately after he had taken leave of Mr. Kinglake; that he said to me, "Why, Barham, how is it you have deserted your post"? and I said, "Come with me into the office and I will tell you all about it." He went with me into the office. That I then told him that I had taken a very active part in the two elections of 1866, and I was determined I would have nothing to do with this. That is what Mr. Charles Robert Bate communicated to me, and it is right that I should say I have not the slightest recollection of anything of the kind. It has passed completely from my mind; and if you find from my evidence that there are other things I ought to recollect, or have forgotten to mention, I shall be very glad if you will remind me of them.

12,575. (Mr. Price.) When you were down at the "Globe," and saw this picture you have put before us of Mr. Reed in despair, and so on, what made you come to the conclusion that you would have nothing to do with it, what had transpired then?—The thing was this, I had not up to that moment, and I think you will agree that my statement is true, that I had not implicated myself in the matter.

12,576. What did you see going on there which led you to come to the conclusion not to be mixed up with it?—I saw Mr. Lovibond taking down the list of voters, and that was a preparatory step to paying money.

12,577. You did not tell us that?—Pardon me, I did.

12,578. I did not hear you, then, I suppose. You heard no talk of money, I suppose?—No.

12,579. You heard nothing at all of money?—Not a word. I do not remember that any single word passed in my presence. When I was in the room, there was such a noise I could not hear anything.

12,580. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you the poll sheet before you?—Yes. Now, these red crosses were red crosses put before the names, and were to indicate those persons who were expected to vote on our side; and if you compare these crosses with the actual votes, as recorded here in pencil, you will see, if you think it worth while to take the pains to do so, that there was a wonderful correspondence betwen the red crosses and those who did vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It is more important to tell us who did not vote, and who got away to the other side.

12,581. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand you to say that these red crosses represent the bribable voters?—Only those who were expected to vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

12,582. Then we do not want to know it?—That was the distinction.

12,583. (Mr. Price.) Was that calculation made before the election?—That was the calculation made before the election.

12,584. But it professes to be a calculation both of bribable and unbribable voters?—Quite so.

12,585. Did the calculation founded upon that show that you could have had a majority without having had recourse to bribery, if there were a great number of unbribable votes? How was that?—There were a great many unbribable votes, and we should have had a majority, in my opinion; at all events, as far as my ward is concerned, most certainly we should, putting aside the question of bribery.

12,586. It was a question of bribery on the other side?—Yes. That is a statement which would be correct under either of these two conditions: it would be correct under the condition that there would be no bribery on either side, and it would be correct under the condition that the bribery on the one side neutralized the other.

12,587. What was the proportion of bribable to unbribable voters?—I do not know; I furnished a return to Mr. Lovibond.

12,588. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are there any split votes?—Very few indeed. If my clerk could have access to the papers and returns which were furnished to Mr. Lovibond before the election I could give you the proportion. I considered Mr. Lovibond was the chief man concerning the election, and to him I furnished a return of the candidates in my ward.

12,589. I happened to alight upon the H's, and there you were singularly unfortunate, because I see you have put down one after the other, and they all voted against you?—Yes.

12,590. (Mr. Anstey.) You stayed at home at your office?—Yes. One thing I very soon found, and that was, that I was quite incapable of doing any ordinary office work for the day, and I determined that I would go home, and I left the office for the purpose, and just as I was a very few yards from the door I was called into a lady's house just at the corner of the square, a Mrs. Sully, mother of Mr. Sully, the mayor, and she asked me what I thought of the election, and I said, "It is all over, the election is gone." I stayed there a few minutes, and I had so completely given up the election that my attention was centred on the Bristol election. I then left Mrs. Sully's house, and I started to go home, and on my way home I had to pass my own committee room, and I went into my committee room, and I found just the same state of things going on as before, and no change going on in the state of the poll. While I was there Mr. Lovibond came up the stairs, and I said, "Mr. Lovibond, "what does this mean? It's all over;" and he said, "Entirely over;" and I wish to state that my firm conviction is, that when he said that it was precisely what he did mean at that time. I am firmly convinced it was so. He must be a most consummate actor if he did not mean what he said at the moment, for he certainly did look the very picture of dejection and misery. I said, "I shall not stay here," and I immediately went home to Wembdon, where I live, and after I had had some luncheon I went out for a drive into the country. On my returning to Wembdon I met a boy on horseback with the Liberal colours in his hat, and that immediately attracted my attention, because my experience has been that in a Bridgwater election that as soon as one side has lost you soon cease to see the colours of the losing side. They generally put them into their pockets and conceal them. They all vanish. On seeing this boy I stopped him, and said, "How is the election going on in Bridgwater?" And he said, "Wull, zur, when I left they were a'most even." That astonished me, and I drove home as fast as I could; and when I got nearly home I met a Mr. Widdicomb, who is a gentleman farmer near me, and whom I knew to be a Conservative, and I asked him how the election was going on. I said, "How is the election going?" and he said, "When I left it was just a toss-up between the two." I lost no time in getting up to the town, and reached the hustings about 10 minutes to 4. I got on to the hustings, and the first question I asked was, "How has all this been brought about?" It was not easy to get an intelligible answer from anyone.

12,591. (Mr. Price.) Had you much doubt?—No, I had not much doubt.

12,592. (Mr. Anstey.) You could not get an intelligible answer?—I could not; but the answer I got from some people there was, that the brickyard men having waited about all the morning, until they considered they were being humbugged, and finding that there was no money going, had at last gone up and voted in a body for the Liberals.

12,593. That was said by people standing about there?—Yes. The next thing I heard was that Mr. Kinglake had gone away. That was the first time I had heard it. Shortly afterwards the mayor and town clerk came up and read the return, and there was a tremendous noise, and hurrahing, and so on, and I remember Mr. Vanderbyl's carriage came to the side door, the side of the rails, and I was pitched neck and crop into the carriage; and the next thing I said was, "Mr. Vanderbyl I congratulate you on your return, "but you have no right to thank me, for I ran away;" and he said, "I cannot understand how a man could desert his post to-day." When we got down opposite to the "Globe" Hotel, I saw one thing which left no doubt on my mind as to what caused the election to be won.

12,594. (Mr. Price.) What was that?—It was my friend, Mr. Reed, looking out of one of the upper windows of the "Globe" Hotel, as white as a sheet, and that left no doubt on my mind.

12,595. Why should he turn white? I should have thought he would have been flushed with triumph?—No, not a bit of it. He was awfully frightened at what he had done.

12,596. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand, or infer from what you say, that both Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook took part in the matter, but that Mr. Reed was the principal actor?—I saw at once that Mr. Reed had been the principal actor in bringing about the successful termination of the election. Mr. Cook was in the carriage with me, and he was more in a state of excitement than frightened.

12,597. Mr. Cook did not appear to be terrified?—No; he did not seem so much terrified.

12,598. Had you seen Mr. Reed from time to time all that day?—I had not seen Mr. Reed all that day before, except when I saw him in the corner of the room looking dejected.

12,599. You saw him when you went into the "Globe?"—Yes.

12,600. Every time?—I only went on one occasion.

12,601. And that was the only occasion on which you saw him in the corner?—That was the only occasion I saw him in the corner.

12,602. And from what you say of Mr. Reed and the rest, you thought there was good cause for this pallor?—I did. I arrived at that conclusion then and there.

12,603. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Reed a new hand at this sort of thing?—I can only say, in the other election in which I was concerned, which I shall tell you about by-and-by, Mr. Reed took an active part in it. I do not know what part he took, but he did take a part.

12,604. (Mr. Price.) You say that brought you to the conclusion as to what had been done. Supposing Mr. Reed had said, "We have done all we can, where the devil is Lovibond?" Would that have brought you to the same conclusion?—If I had heard such words as those used I should have considered this was the state of things, that the one was to provide money for the other, and that Mr. Reed had spent his money, and wanted Mr. Lovibond to give him some more.

12,605. (Mr. Anstey.) What happened then?—There was nothing more passed that evening. There was nothing but uproar in the town, and shortly after I returned to Wembdon.

12,606. Did you see anything more of Mr. Vanderbyl that evening?—No, I do not think I did.

12,607. Did he make a speech to the people?—Well, he did stand up in the carriage and make a short speech, but it was nothing but the ordinary thing.

12,608. Go on?—That concludes it.

12,609. You have not told us anything about Mr. Kinglake. Did you see Mr. Kinglake either the next day or the same night?—No. Mr. Kinglake was not there the same night. I think Mr. Kinglake came down some time the next day.

12,610. Did you see him as soon as he returned?—That I do not remember, but I remember seeing him.

12,611. Had you any conversation with him about your doubts and fears?—No, I had not.

12,612. I do not ask you then, but ever at any time?—No, never. I never stated nor mentioned to him anything of what I told you at all.

12,613. Nothing about your doubts or fears?—No.

12,614. You have preserved silence on the subject?—I have told him this: when it got to the hearing of the petition, I went one evening into his room, and I remember then having a conversation with him and discussing his position; and in discussing his position a certain theory was the basis of our discussion, a certain theory as to what had taken place.

12,615. What is the theory; what do you mean you had told him?—Well, sir, I had told him this, that I thought there could be no doubt that money had been spent at the late election, and that Messrs. Reed and Cook for certain were implicated in it.

12,616. Did you tell him about Mr. Lovibond?—At that time I did not believe that Mr. Lovibond had been a direct party to the spending of money. My belief with respect to Mr. Lovibond, from what had fallen from him, was, not that he had himself been directly a party to the spending of money, but that he knew enough as to what Reed and Cook had done as to make him equally liable to be put in the box.

12,617. Did you tell him that if Mr. Lovibond had not been a direct party to the spending of the money, he had been a direct party in the obtaining it?—No.

12,618. (Mr. Price.) Did you talk over with Mr. Kinglake as to what would be the result of the election inquiry?—We were very much alarmed about the result of the election inquiry.

12,619. But did you talk it over with him sufficiently to convey to Mr. Kinglake's mind that there would be a great deal of evidence of bribery on his part, or on the part of his friends?—No, I did not know that. If you will allow me to tell you what passed you will see exactly the position of things.

12,620. Very well, do so?—Mr. Kinglake had in his mind a particular idea, and it was upon that idea that the discussion took place.

12,621. What was the idea?—He had this main idea in his mind, that because he had gone away from Bridgwater before these illegal proceedings commenced, that therefore he had, in fact, withdrawn from his different agents their authority, and therefore, that he was not responsible for anything that afterwards took place.

12,622. But he should have resigned altogether?—Just so. At all events I am stating to you what Mr. Kinglake's feeling was.

12,623. (Mr. Anstey.) He told you that he was not answerable for their acts with respect to these illegal proceedings, he having gone away from Bridgwater before they commenced?—Exactly.

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

4 Sept. 1869.

12,624. And that therefore the acts they had performed at that time were their own acts?—Undoubtedly.

12,625. How had he got at that time to know of the fact of bribery having taken place?—He had got at that fact in many ways.

12,626. After the election?—Yes.

12,627. (Mr. Coleridge.) And before the petition?—I cannot tell that.

12,628. Was the conversation you are speaking of before the petition?—No. This was on the very night that Mr. James came down.

12,629. (Mr. Price.) Before the election inquiry?—No. This was on the very night that Mr. James came down.

12,630. Was it before the trial, before Mr. Justice Blackburn commenced?—No, the very day of it.

12,631. Was it, at all events, before the evidence was gone into before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—It was after counsel had made the opening speech.

12,632. Mr. Kinglake swore upon his oath, before the learned judge, that everything or nearly everything connected with bribery had come upon him by surprise. Is that so or not?—I knew that Mr. Kinglake at that time was perfectly well aware that there had been a great deal of illegal practices at that election.

12,633. (Mr. Anstey.) Why cannot you say "bribery" at once?—Well, I will say "bribery."

12,634. Do not mince matters, but call things by their right names?—I meant to include in the term "illegal practices," everything. Mr. Kinglake was strongly impressed with this notion. I told him I thought there was nothing in the world in it, because I said, "In the first place, no notice was given even "(to put it on the lowest ground) that you had left "the town. If you had issued an address before you "left the town that you would have nothing to do with "it, then you could have withdrawn yourself from "your agents; but that was not done, and I tell you, "as your agent, although I have not done anything to "compromise you, you cannot now do so."

12,635. (Mr. Price.) As a matter of curiosity had not Mr. Kinglake a legal education?—Certainly.

12,636. Was he called to the bar?—Certainly.

12,637. And went circuit?—And went circuit. At all events, Mr. Kinglake was so strongly impressed with this idea, that he insisted upon my going to Mr. James, his counsel, to lay this argument before him, and I did so, and Mr. James "pooh-pooh'd" it, and he said, "The fact is I have been altogether misled." He said "I came down here believing I was engaged "in a fighting case, and prepared to fight it, and I "find nothing but acts of insanity committed."

12,638. Mr. James said so?—Yes; and I went back and reported it to Mr. Kinglake; and he still felt so strongly on the matter of his opinion, that he actually proposed to take the case out of Mr. James's hands.

12,639. (Mr. Anstey.) I will just ask you this question. It is anticipating what you will have to come to by-and-by, but it has reference to this: that being so, how came it about that Mr. Serjeant Parry in opening the case that very same day had stated, notwithstanding the allegation in the petition, that there was no intention in any way personally to impeach the sitting members, for which he was complimented, of course, by Mr. Serjeant Sargood, for having "shown his usual candour." On whose representation was Mr. Serjeant Parry induced to make that considerable admission in opening the case against Mr. Kinglake, who, according to you, knew all about it?—That, sir, I do not know. I was no party to it in any shape or form. You must get that information from some other person.

12,640. Are you aware that Mr. James, being persuaded that it was not what is called a "fighting" case, had from the outset predisposed matters, so that when the proper moment came the two sitting members would be able to retire from the defence of the seat, and would be complimented in the usual way for knowing nothing about it?—No, I do not know it; and if Mr. James knew it when he said to me what he did he simply told me what was absolutely false.

12,641. What did he tell you?—That he had been brought down here in the belief that there was a fighting case, according to the statement in his brief.

12,642. How is that inconsistent with what I am stating? You say Mr. James stated that he had been brought down here, believing that he was engaged in a fighting case, but that he had discovered he had a losing case to deal with; and I ask you whether he had not from the outset arranged matters so as to make the defeat as easy as possible?—There is a good deal you are not aware of. Mr. James did not come to Bridgwater till Mr. Serjeant Parry had made his opening speech.

12,643. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who drew Mr. James's brief?—Mr. Lovibond, I believe.

12,644. And you are aware, however it was arranged, and however it came about, that it was upon this evidence of Mr. Kinglake, which has been repeatedly read, and which I shall not refer to again, that Mr. Justice Blackburn was induced to say, in giving judgment, "As both members have been called "to deny that there was such a thing, I need not "say that I have great pleasure in certifying that "there was no corrupt practice proved to have been "committed by or with the knowledge or consent of "any candidate at such election." Now, if you had given or Mr. Lovibond had given any evidence, I do not say of what passed in confidence, for my opinion is that confidence there was none, as you were all parties to it, but if you had given evidence before Mr. Justice Blackburn such as that which you have given before us here to-day, is there the slightest doubt that that passage, at least, would not have appeared in his judgment?—Well, sir——(the witness hesitated.)

12,645. In other words, was not his judgment brought about by a deception practised on the court?—Well, sir, I submit that is a question on which you can form your own opinion as perfectly well as I can, and you will spare me the pain of answering it.

12,646. Very well, you would rather not answer it?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) That is quite sufficient.

12,647. (Mr. Price.) Now proceed?—Would you wish now to pursue this thing down to the end? You would wish to know, I presume, what part I took in compromising this?

12,648. Yes?—Well, my first interference in the matter was some little way on. There had been negotiations between Mr. Trevor and Mr. Lovibond, of which I was aware, but in which I did not take any active part, and they had broken down; and Mr. Lovibond asked me to consider whether or not I could suggest any course to be taken, and I read the Act of Parliament through very carefully, and it appeared to me that the most available course to get rid of the petition (for I may at once state that I was anxious to see the petition got rid of) was to turn this matter into a special case. It so happened (and it was within my knowledge, because I had attended to the registration,) that there were a very considerable number of voters who were on the register in my district, or in my department, with respect to whom it was very doubtful as to whether they ought to be on the register or not.

12,649. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you thought that by turning it into a special case, there would be no power for a judge to certify for corrupt practices?—It was this. There was a question as to whether there were a certain number of voters or not on the register, who had no right to be there, and it was thought there might be some chance of knocking them off as bad votes, and so reduce the majority of Mr. Vanderbyl below that of Mr. Westropp, and that the result of that case would be that Mr. Westropp would take Mr. Vanderbyl's place.

12,650. And Mr. Kinglake would save his seat?—And Mr. Kinglake would save his seat.

12,651. (Mr. Price.) You would have stated a special case which would have been argued before the judges?—Oh, yes. We intended it to be argued before the judge in the regular form.

12,652. In the Court of Common Pleas?—In the Court of Common Pleas. There was a very grave question. I will tell you what it was, and that very shortly, and then you will see how matters stood. In consequence of the alteration of the boundaries of the borough, when the "Representation of the People Act passed in 1867" there was a certain suburb called Providence Place, which was in the parish of Wembdon, which was then outside the borough, but a portion of the parish of Wembdon was inside the borough. When the October rate (which was the qualifying rate) came to be made, the overseers of Wembdon came to Mr. Carslake to ask him to advise them whether or not, in carrying out the provisions of the new Act with respect to the compound householders, they ought to apply the provisions of that Act to the whole of the parish of Wembdon, not only the small portion which was then inside the borough, but the larger portion which was outside; or whether they were only to apply it to such portion as was inside the borough. Mr. Carslake, after looking at the Act of Parliament, came to the conclusion that they ought to apply it only to such part as was inside the borough, and they accordingly did, and they left the whole of Providence Place, in which there are only a number of small houses, and where a great number of people were compound householders, as before. But when it came to Christmas, or a little after Christmas, the rate was about to be made in January, or somewhere about that time, the overseers received a direction from the Poor Law Board that they were to apply the clause to the whole of the parish, and that Mr. Carslake's opinion was wrong; and accordingly, in the rate which they then made, they rated directly all those people, and those people then neglected to pay that rate. Then there came the Boundaries Act.

12,653. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there not a case taken to the Common Pleas from this very place?—No.

12,654. In which Mr. Trevor was respondent?—No, not upon this point. I do not know whether I am going into what is irrelevant.

12,655. (Mr. Price.) No. I understand you are wishing to show us that there was a fair chance on the special case of reducing Mr. Vanderbyl's majority over Mr. Westropp, by knocking off bad votes?—I am. At the same time I do not wish to say it was really a bonâ fide transaction. It was a thing we wished to take advantage of, in order to stay the petition.

12,656. Rather than have an inquiry?—Yes, and we should not have taken any pains to get any votes struck off on the other side. I thought we should get a presentable case to present to the judge which would pass muster. I presented this view to Mr. Lovibond, and it met with his approval, and I proposed to him that we should go over and see Mr. James Trevor, at Stowey, on the subject. However, ultimately it was agreed I should go over alone, and I drove over that same afternoon to Stowey, and saw Mr. Trevor, and I found he was just about to proceed to London; in fact, I think it was from information I received that he was going up to London that I went to him on that day. I told him what had taken place between myself and Mr. Lovibond, and he said, "I "cannot agree to this without consulting with coun- "sel as to what is right and proper in the matter;" and he said, "I am going to London, and I will take "the opportunity of seeing Mr. Westropp, and will "lay it before counsel," and it was arranged that if he thought anything could be done, that he should telegraph for us. It was not understood that if he telegraphed for us that it was because he expected us up, but whether he thought there was anything in the case which would possibly bear further discussion. Well, under those circumstances Mr. Trevor went to London, and ultimately Mr. Lovibond and I went up to London, and we met Mr. Trevor at the Tavistock Hotel, and then we found that Mr. Trevor was not prepared to go into the thing. He said he had been to Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Westropp was altogether averse to it, and, as far as I am aware, nothing at all came of it. Then I think the next occasion on which I had anything to do at all with attempting to effect a compromise or come to an arrangement was with Mr. Lilly. Mr. Lilly had some business with me in my office.

12,657. Who is Mr. Lilly?—He is an auctioneer and land agent in this town, on the Conservative side, and a man who has taken rather a prominent part——

12,658. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you come to that I will ask you this question. When you went up to London with Mr. Lovibond to see Mr. Trevor on that subject, did Mr. Lovibond communicate to you the impression on his mind that if there was an inquiry a great deal of bribery would be discovered to have taken place?—No.

12,659. You went up to London about this point of law?—Yes.

12,660. Mr. Lovibond went with you, or met you, in London?—Yes.

12,661. Did he tell you that he was afraid that if they did not consent to your proposal of turning it into a special case on the point of law, that an inquiry would take place and disclose a great many corrupt practices?—I think he pretty well knew that I knew it.

12,662. Did he say so?—No, but I think he pretty well knew that I knew it.

12,663. Was the object of turning it into a special case to prevent the inquiry into corrupt practices?—Undoubtedly. I said so just now.

12,664. I thought you said it was not a real bonâ fide thing?—I said there was a real bonâ fide point of law, but the thing was done corruptly.

12,665. (Mr. Coleridge.) When had you the details of the bribery at the last election?—I never had the details. The first time I had the details was what was proved at the petition; and, as to this part about Mr. Lomas, and so on, I never heard about it till I heard it here.

12,666. (Mr. Anstey.) But you heard of Mr. Lovibond's having brought his part of the bribery fund weeks before the election?—I never heard it until after the petition had been heard.

12,667. You have told us that during the canvass, and long before the election, that he had told you he had made arrangements by which each candidate was to contribute half?—Yes. I never heard the details.

12,668. But you heard so much of the details as are important, that it was to be 1,500*l.*?—Oh, yes.

12,669. And that it was to come from the Kinglakes'?—Oh yes. He did not say it was to come from the Kinglakes; but I knew that, I presumed the 1,500*l.* was to be provided by the Kinglakes. I did not know of this transaction with Prior's bank, and all that.

12,670. What was the date of this conversation with Mr. Lilly?—I cannot fix that exactly. I have unfortunately no note of it.

12,671. Where was it, in London?—No, in my own office. He was in my own office about a matter of business; and after the business upon which he called had been finished, in some way or other the subject of the election petition cropped up; and he expressed and I expressed, or both of us expressed, a feeling of regret that it should go on. It was a thing very much to be regretted for the town; and I suggested to him whether or not, as far as I remember, he might not be likely to have more influence with Mr. Westropp if he were to go up, as being outside the list of professional gentlemen—the lawyers—whether he might not have more influence with Mr. Westropp in arranging the matter than the solicitors themselves; and he afterwards called upon me.

12,672. (Mr. Price.) Still to carry out this notion?—I think it was, as far as I remember.

12,673. The notion of the special case?—But I am not so clear as I could wish I should be about that, but I rather think it was still the idea of carrying out the special case; and he afterwards called upon me again about it, and he said he had had a meeting of several of his friends of the Conservative party, and they all felt disposed to come to some arrangement; and the result of that was that Mr. Lilly did go to London, and there was some meeting, but I was not present. There was another meeting in London, at which Mr. Lilly was present, but, so far as I understood the matter, still with no more actual practical result than before.

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

12,674. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, but Mr. Trevor's recollection is clear. If he stated it in writing that the very first interview with Mr. Lovibond in London was sought by Mr. Lovibond for the purpose of proposing, not a special case or anything of that sort, but a compromise on the footing of yielding up one seat—what then?—Oh, I have not the slightest doubt it was so. The suggestion of the special case was a subsequent thing, and the presentation of a special case appeared to me to present advantages to the Conservative side which the giving up of the seat would not; because if my plan had been adopted Mr. Westropp would have taken his seat without any difficulty; whereas if one of the seats was vacated there was no answering for what the constituency of Bridgwater might do.

12,675. He might have claimed it upon a scrutiny?—But then a scrutiny in the ordinary mode of proceeding would not have been come to until after the whole question of bribery had been gone into. Therefore if one could have got to the same result as a scrutiny by means of a special case that would have been avoided.

12,676. What was the meeting in London which you attended, where the compromise was proposed or discussed?—The meeting that I attended in London was specially with respect to this special case.

12,677. You never attended any meeting in London at which it was proposed to give up a seat?—I do not remember that. I wish to say this ——

12,678. Were you not present at a meeting at the Tavistock Hotel?—The meeting I attended in London was specially with respect to this special case. I will not undertake to say that when that failed there might not have been a conversation about giving up one of the seats, because that was a thing that had been discussed before.

12,679. But were the conversations which you heard and were party to respecting that?—You see, I have heard so much beforehand about it, that I cannot distinctly recollect whether I heard it on that occasion; but if any person said so I should not be prepared to deny it.

12,680. You heard what has been said by Mr. Lovibond, I think, about the conversation which took place at the Tavistock Hotel in the month of January, a few days before the trial of the petition came on here?—Yes. What question do you found upon that?

12,681. You were present at that meeting?—I was present at one meeting, and I will try to tell you what the date of that meeting was. I think I may have some note to give it me.

12,682. It was the meeting at which Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Westropp were present?—No, I was not present at that meeting.

12,683. Were you present at any meeting at which either Mr. Kinglake, or Mr. Vanderbyl, or both, were present?—Never.

12,684. (Mr. Anstey.) That is all.

(Witness.) Then, sir, the last attempt that I remember making at all upon the subject was on the very evening after the judge was here. After the opening speech of counsel at Mr. Lovibond's request we had a conversation together, and we arranged it should be done. I was just as much a party to it as he was himself. I do not mean to put the blame upon him. I was told that Mr. James Trevor was over at Mr. Brice's house in Friarn Street. I went over and called upon Mr. James Trevor, and what I recollect (as far as I recollect) saying to him was about this. I said to him, "I don't come over here authorized to "make any proposal at all; but is there any course "which you can suggest in this matter with a view to "save the exposure with which the borough and our "friends and all of us are threatened." And he said, "I really don't see that there is." And there, there was an end of that.

12,685. Had Mr. Lovibond by that time communicated to you that there was a meeting at which Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake were present, and the arrangement that you spoke of come to?—Yes, I recollect his communicating to me that meeting, because I recollect it was at that meeting that Mr. Westropp had blurted out the fact of his negotiations with Mr. Vanderbyl, and therefore I know he mentioned that.

12,686. I wanted to bring you to that date when Mr. Lovibond informed you what Mr. Kinglake had said at that meeting?—No, I do not remember that.

12,687. Nor what was the result of that meeting?—Well, I cannot distinctly remember it now. I have no doubt he told me of it, but at this moment, in consequence of there having been so many of these negotiations, I am very sorry to say that I do not remember it as clearly as I could wish.

12,687*a*. Do you remember him telling you that Mr. Westropp had, to use his expression, "run wild," that is to say, broken the agreement that was come to at that meeting?—I do not remember.

12,688. Did you hear that Mr. Westropp had done so, because he might not have done so; but do you remember Mr. Lovibond telling you that Mr. Westropp had broken the engagement, or not kept the engagement?—Yes; I remember Mr. Lovibond considered the engagement had been broken, because he wrote me a letter after one of the meetings telling me the thing was arranged.

12,689. On what terms?—He did not say the terms. He merely said the matters were arranged.

12,690. Was that before the judge came down here for the trial of the petition?—Oh, yes.

12,691. How long before?—I think I can give you that date very nearly.

12,692. That is what I want?—I think I can give you that date very nearly, because it so happened——

12,693. (Mr. Price.) Was there any report taken, does anybody know, of Serjeant Parry's opening speech?

(A copy of the Bridgwater Mercury, containing a report of the speech in question, was furnished to Mr. Price.)

(Witness.) I think I shall be able to give you the date in a few minutes. I think I have the means of fixing it. I know how I think I can fix it. It was in this way, that just after I received this intelligence from Mr. Lovibond I went down into Devonshire. I had to go down into Devonshire, and I returned from Devonshire on a Sunday evening. I returned by the night mail, which arrives here at 11 o'clock, and when I got to the station I found the station all in an uproar—a great number of Conservatives all in a great state of excitement, shouting out, "No surrender," and three or four of them got into the train and went to London.

12,694. (Mr. Anstey.) That was because the Conservatives objected to this compromise?—This compromise had oozed out. The Conservatives would not have it, and there was a very great fuss. It was, I believe, because these parties went up prepared with another petition to present if Mr. Westropp would not do it. That brings it to my mind.

(Mr. Anstey.) I will give you the date of the presentation of the petition in a moment.

12,695. (Mr. Coleridge) Can not you fix the Sunday you returned from Devonshire by your diary?—I have sent for the diary. Unfortunately that diary is not here.

(Mr. Anstey.) Here is the date of the presentation of the petition. It is dated the 8th of December.

(Witness.) Yes.

12,696. Well, then, was it a few days before that?—I should think that must have been so. It was just upon the very point of the presentation of the petition of the 8th of December.

12,697. Before the mayor, as returning officer, published his receipt of the petition here?—Well, I feel very sure that that must have been so. The time I had that letter from Mr. Lovibond, announcing that the thing had been arranged, was before the presentation of the petition.

12,698. Was there any other meeting after that meeting on the subject of a compromise, or was that a final meeting?—Oh, there were several meetings after that.

12,699. I am asking about what Mr. Lovibond said, that there was one final meeting at which Mr. Westropp made the engagement which he broke. That was the meeting held or supposed to have been held at the Tavistock Hotel, at which Mr. Kinglake was present. Mr. Kinglake was not present at the previous meetings, but he was present at that?—That I cannot say. I can only say this, that I am perfectly well satisfied that the report made to me by Mr. Lovibond, that the thing had been arranged, was before the petition had been presented.

12,700. I do not mean that. We are speaking about two different meetings. I wish you would confine yourself to the one that I am talking about. Did you just before the trial of the petition, not the presentation of the petition, but just before the trial, understand from Mr. Lovibond that Mr. Westropp had laid himself open to an imputation of weakness or bad faith in retiring from an agreement which he had come to for the compromise of the petition?—Not then.

12,700*a*. Did he tell you anything, or did he ever write to you to say, "I am not going to meet them any more, for all negotiations are broken of?"—No, I do not remember anything of the kind.

12,701. You do not remember anything being said about a final meeting, a last meeting?—I do not remember Mr. Lovibond ever writing to me about it, except this one letter.

12,702. Do you remember Mr. Lovibond either speaking or writing to you about the fact of a final meeting taking place, at which it was agreed that this should be compromised, and then Mr. Westropp being bound by that?—No.

12,703. That is all you know about a compromise?—That, I believe, is all I know about a compromise.

12,704. Did you see Mr. Kinglake again after the night that he wanted to get rid of Mr. James, and spoke of that absurd notion, that is, about a departure like death revoking a mandate?—Yes, I did. Upon the last day of the hearing, just before the hearing came to an end, there was an adjournment at lunch time, and it was after lunch that counsel rose and made that announcement. A short time before lunch Mr. Kinglake called me out of court, and we walked together, and he took me down to his lodgings, and he said to me, "You "appear to me to be the only person on our side "of the question who is in the possession of his "faculties."

12,705. (Mr. Price.) Including Mr. James?—No, he did not mean that. Of course he meant all us professional men, and he said, "Is there no means of "stopping this?" "Well," I said, "my impression, sir, "is this, that your counsel and Mr. Vanderbyl's counsel "are now only looking out for the right moment at "which they can throw up the sponge," or "fall down," I forget which expression I used, "and I think therefore we must leave that to their discretion," and then we came back into court again.

12,706. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that before he was examined upon oath?—That was before he was examined upon oath.

12,707. Did he tell you at any period at that trial, or say anything during any period of that trial, which gave you the least reason to suppose that he was taken by surprise by the statements of the witnesses?—Yes. I think he was surprised at some things, and I think he expressed his surprise.

12,708. Specify those?—I think, for one thing, he was very much surprised about Allan.

12,709. In what way?—I do not think before that he had the slightest idea that Allan was mixed up in these things.

12,710. That is all?—That was one thing. I think that surprised him very much. I do not remember at this moment anything else, but I think I do distinctly remember about that.

12,711. Before he gave his evidence, did he say anything to you which led you to infer that he meant to have it believed by anybody that he was surprised to hear that corrupt practices had taken place at the election for Bridgwater?—No, he did not.

12,712. Did you hear him make the extraordinary statement to that effect in his evidence, when he was called for the purpose of mollifying the mind of the judge, and inducing the judge not to find him personally guilty?—Yes, I did.

12,713. Let me know what impression; knowing what you knew; remembering what you remembered, what impression that statement made then upon your mind?—You have kindly excused my answering such a question once before to-day. I am in your hands. I will answer it if you wish, but I hope you will excuse it.

12,714. If you tell me it made a painful impression, that is all I wish?—It did make a painful impression.

12,715. And the same as to Vanderbyl?—The same as to Vanderbyl.

12,716. (Mr. Price.) Was Dr. Kinglake here in the town on the day of the polling?—I believe he was, but I did not see him.

12,717. Was he living here? No.

12,718. Did he leave?—He went away, but by a different train. Dr. Kinglake has two residences, I think, one in Taunton and another house on the Quantock Hill; and during some part of Mr. Kinglake's stay, the earlier period before the election, Mr. Kinglake was staying with his brother upon the hill.

12,719. He was?—Yes.

12,720. At what distance from this?—Some six or seven miles.

12,721. Before the election?—Some time before the election.

12,722. And during the election?—That was at the time, if I remember rightly, when that question was going on as to his having the priority in the return.

12,723. (Mr. Anstey.) What I want particularly to know is this: during the important week that preceded the election, and when Dr. Kinglake made that agreement for providing a fund with Mr. Lovibond, where were Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Kinglake the member residing?—Mr. Kinglake was certainly here, because I was canvassing with him every day. I took a great deal of the canvassing with him, and he was certainly here; but where Dr. Kinglake was I do not know.

12,724. (Mr. Price.) Did you see him, however, in the town about that time?—No. I think I saw him here one day when we were canvassing. Yes, I certainly did.

12,725. (Mr. Anstey.) Where was Dr. Kinglake residing, and where was Mr. Kinglake the member residing, on the nomination day?—On the nomination day, I take it, Mr. Kinglake was at Mr. Allan's residence, as you have had it already in evidence.

12,726. Where was Dr. Kinglake?—I do not know. He might have driven in from the hill, or come by train from Taunton.

12,727. Did you see him at all that day?—No, I did not see him.

12,728. Did you see him in Bridgwater on the polling day?—No.

12,729. When had you last seen Dr. Kinglake in Bridgwater before the return of Mr. Kinglake for that borough?—I think the very first day, the first or second day, of our canvass.

12,730. When did you see Dr. Kinglake again, if ever, after the return of Mr. Kinglake for that borough?—When the election petition was in course of being heard here.

12,731. You had not seen him on the polling day after the return?—No.

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

4 Sept. 1869.

12,732. (Mr. Price.) Well now, Mr. Barham, as far as you recollect, is that all the information you can give to us with regard to what you know of the last election, 1868 ?—I think there is one other circumstance that came to my knowledge that I should mention in order that I may exhaust everything that I know. It was asserted after the election, and while we were preparing or considering what course we should take about the petition, it was asserted that undue pressure or influence had been used with respect to one voter.

12,733. (Mr. Anstey.) Two voters ?—One, as far as I remember. A Mr. Tilly, who lives a little way above this hall, a hairdresser; and it was reported to us that he had been prevented from voting by being told by someone that if he did so he would be turned out of his house by his landlord.

12,734. Yes; who was that ?—That landlord was Mr. Joseph Richard Smith. I went and saw Mr. Tilly with a view of investigating the matter; but Mr. Tilly declined to tell me the name of the person who had made the communication to him. He did not wish to get himself into any trouble about it, and he said that this communication did not come direct from Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, but it came from someone who was a friend of Mr. Joseph Richard Smith, and who I, he thought, would be likely to know, and I acted upon the hint. I believe you will find that Mr. Tilly abstained from voting at that election.

12,735. Who was the friend of Mr. Joseph Richard Smith ?—That is just what I could not find out, and what you must find out now.

12,736. Do I understand that Mr. Tilly promised to abstain from voting ?—I do not remember that he promised me personally.

12,737. But he was a member of the Liberal party ?—He told me he was a Liberal; and he said the reason he did not vote was that he was afraid if he did he should be turned out of his house.

12,738. Did you hear any cases of that kind on your side, of undue influence ?—There was another case in which a man was turned out of his employ. A sailor was turned out of his employ very shortly after the election, and he was a man who was in one of Mr. James Wood Sully's vessels, and he was dismissed. He had voted for the Conservatives, and the allegation that was made was that he had been dismissed on account of having voted for the Conservatives, and he took out a summons against the master of the vessel. The precise object of that summons I now forget. The magistrate's clerk could give you the information.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Was it back wages, or anything of that kind ?

(Witness.) I appeared and defended the captain. There were two summonses about it. The first summons was dismissed because there was a legal objection to the maintenance of the claim. It was a claim for wages. Oh, I remember now. The first summons was a claim for wages—a claim for wages for the man having been dismissed without notice; but it was clearly proved that, according to the practice of the port of Bridgwater, there was nothing to prevent a master of a vessel from dismissing a man without notice, and therefore that the master of the vessel who was before the magistrates, whatever his motive might be, had not infringed the law. Then there was another summons taken out against the master of the vessel for not having furnished the seaman with an account of his wages, as required by the Merchant Shipping Act, within a certain time after arriving in port. It is not the practice to apply that part of the Act of Parliament in this port, because the voyages made are so very short and so frequent; but there had been a distinct breach of the provision of the Act, and on the part of the master of the vessel I advised him to plead guilty, and he was fined.

12,739. Who was the master ?—I do not remember. By looking at the papers in my office I could tell you.

12,740. What month was this ?—Very soon after the election. The Conservative paper, the "Standard," in commenting upon it, headed the notice concerning the case with the words, "A conviction at last."

12,741. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that before the election trial ?—Yes.

12,742. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who attended as attorney for the complainant ?—Mr. Boyle.

12,743. (Mr. Anstey.) Of the firm of —— ?—Mr. Boyle, of the firm of Smith & Boyle.

12,744. Do you know any other case of the kind ?—No, no other case occurs to me at this moment.

12,745. Do you know anything of two cases which I asked a witness about, namely, Mr. Elsbury, the gardener of the poor law union, being influenced by the intimidation exercised over him by the lawyer, Mr. Reed ?—I think there was some evidence given about that on the petition.

12,746. I do not think there was ?—Was there none ?

12,747. I do not think so. I will see, but I do not think there was ?—I certainly have heard of that somewhere, now you mention it. I certainly have heard of it, but I cannot tell you where I heard of it. I heard that some such statement was made.

12,748. You have no knowledge of it yourself ?—Not the slightest.

12,749. Do you know anything of another case of alleged intimidation and undue influence exercised by Mr. Reed—the very same Mr. Reed—over a person who was a petitioner in the election, I think, of 1865, upon whose petition the trial of that election proceeded ? I mean Mr. Richard Axford, the surgeon ?—Well, I never heard what that was, but I did hear that there was some charge about undue influence with respect to Dr. Axford, and it was referred to in the opening speech of counsel, and abandoned, as I understood; but I never heard and I do not know now what the particulars were. I know that Dr. Axford was exceedingly angry about it.

12,750. Can you give the names of any persons who can give information on the subject ?—There is Dr. Axford himself, and I think that Dr. Axford was exceedingly angry with Mr. William Brice about it.

12,751. Did not Mr. Axford vote at this election for Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—I thought he split his vote.

12,752. Then for one of them ?—Yes, I believe he voted for Mr. Vanderbyl. He was a Conservative before.

12,753. Not only a Conservative, but an active Conservative who had been a petitioner, though an unsuccessful one, against the return of Mr. Kinglake in 1865 ?—That I did not know.

12,754. Are you aware that after the election of 1865 there was a petition, a cross petition ?—Yes.

12,755. You are not aware that the cross petition against Kinglake's return was headed by Richard Axford, surgeon ?—No, I did not know it till now.

12,756. Can you give any other cases of undue influence ?—No.

12,757. At this last election ?—No, I do not remember any.

12,758. As to treating—did treating prevail to the extent described by some of the witnesses ?—The evidence about the treating came upon me a good deal by surprise. I did not myself know it at all. I live a mile out of the town.

12,759. (Mr. Price.) It was opened as the case by Serjeant Parry as of a very gross kind, in which the voters for days before the election were got together, and some of them were kept under supervision for days, bottled up for days; and on the day of the polling there were great numbers of them supplied with drink, as much as they could possibly stow away, with a man at the door to keep out the wolves in sheep's clothing, as he described it; and in that state they were there bribed or paid the money. Did you hear anything of that before ?—Not one word of it before it was stated then.

12,760. (Mr. Anstey.) I think you said it did not prevail to the extent described by witnesses here before us ?—I was going to explain. The only thing I saw at all of it was that on the morning of the polling—on the polling day—as I walked into the town I saw opposite the "Masons' Arms," Pig Cross, a considerable number of men going in and out of that house, and of course it was not unnatural to conclude that those men would not be standing about there for some time without having something to drink.

12,761. You do not mean to contradict witnesses who have deposed to the organization of a wholesale treating ?—Not in the least, because I have no knowledge about it.

12,762. Do you know anything of one Dudderidge who has been alleged to have distributed a quantity of drink and a sovereign a head on the day of the election ?—I heard that evidence on the petition, and that he is foreman in a brick ground, but beyond that I have no knowledge whatever.

12,763. Lastly, do you know anything of malpractices laid to the charge of Mr. Lovibond's own son, George Lovibond, at the last election, direct personal bribery ?—What I knew about that is this. On the very evening, immediately after the close of the poll, as Mr. Lovibond and myself, and Mr. George Lovibond, the son, were walking up the street that leads to his office we met Mr. Major. Mr. Major called Mr. Lovibond aside and said something to him. Immediately upon Mr. Lovibond rejoining me he then said to his son, "George, they make a "charge against you personally. You have not had "anything to do with this, have you ?" or some words to that effect. "You have had nothing to do with any money ?" and George Lovibond replied, "Certainly not, nothing of the kind." That is all that I know about that.

(Mr. Price.) Now we will go to the election of 1866, the second one.

(Witness.) Will you allow me, in coming to those elections, if it is not inconvenient to you, to take up the 1865 election first. As those three elections, the election of 1865 and the two elections of 1866, are so close together, I think I should be able to present the matter more intelligibly if you allow me to take up the 1865 election. I am in your hands.

12,764–5. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was 1865 your first election here ?—The first election in which I took any part.

12,766. (Mr. Price.) Who is Stephen Colin Jones ; do you know him ?—Yes, I do know him as a person I have seen about the place, and I think he was mixed up with the Shepherds.

12,767. (Mr. Anstey.) He has been described by the witnesses called before us as a bribery agent ?—I do not know.

(Mr. Price.) Serjeant Parry says in his opening, "Many of the voters were assembled in these houses "two or three days before the nomination and polling "days, presided over by agents for the respondents." Of course I suppose that to mean the lawyers. "And "in one or two instances they were kept there "throughout the entire night. In one particular "instance he should be able to show that a prominent "supporter of the respondents was present at one "place early in the morning of the polling day, and "actually ordered refreshments for these people. "Those refreshments consisted not simply of beer. "They began with beer and culminated in ginger "brandy."

(Witness.) I can state something about that last part. As to the first part I cannot.

(Mr. Price.) Wait a minute. I had better read the rest of it. "Those refreshments consisted not "simply of beer. They began with beer and culmi-"nated in ginger brandy handed round in jugs—a "class of liquor only known to that class of voters in "election times."

(Witness.) All that I can say about that is that I was perfectly ignorant, but I do remember this circumstance. I am very glad that you have called my attention to it. On the morning of the polling day I recollect somebody saying, "There is Mr. "William Hurman has been up to the 'Masons' "Arms,' and he has been rowing and blowing up the "voters for not going to the poll ; and the result is "that they are going off to the Conservatives." That is what I heard about that, and then I afterwards heard that that interference on the part of Mr. William Hurman was converted into a charge against him of having ordered——

12,768. (Mr. Price.) Ginger brandy ?—Yes ; and that was the first thing I heard about it, and I heard it in the morning of the day of the poll.

12,769. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, then, you are going to 1865 and 1866 ?—Yes.

12,770. Do I understand you to say that the elections of 1865 and 1866, three elections, are so closely connected together in your theory, in your system, that you wish to take them together ?—That is so, for the reason that you will see, because you will see the first election, and then the petition led immediately into the other.

12,771. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you nothing to do with the election of 1859 ?—No. I had a vote in 1859, and I recorded my vote for Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake.

12,772. Then were not you an agent or a canvasser, or anything ?—Not in any shape or form ; so little that in point of fact I remember that Mr. Kinglake and Colonel Tynte did not even pay me the compliment of calling upon me. I did not know Mr. Kinglake or Colonel Tynte either until shortly before the election of 1865.

12,773. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose that these elections, those of 1865 and 1866, are not only chronologically but historically connected in your mind in such a way that you cannot separate them ?—Yes, they are in that way connected together. With reference to the election of 1865, the first entry that I find in my book—for I should tell you that I have got in these books, my diaries, entries, short memoranda, of the greater part of the different interviews and transactions that I have had, a great number of them ; and from them I have been able to refresh my memory, and on the paper that I hold in my hand is a short copy of those entries. The books are in court for the inspection of the court. The first entry I have is : "Two hours with Mr. Roberts. Journey to Bristol to see Mr. Michael Castle." That brings back to my mind that at that time Mr. Benjamin Lovibond sent to me, and he asked me to help him in the election that was coming on. That was on the 22d of June 1865 ; and it so happened that I had been mixed up and connected to a certain extent with the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, and I knew Mr. Michael Castle very well, because he was the deputy chairman of the line, and he was a partner of one of my brothers when I was in Bristol ; and it was in consequence of that that I was to go and see Mr. Michael Castle, and represent to him that the influence of Mr. Brydges, who was the manager of the carriage works, and who was a strong Conservative, was so brought to bear as to make all the carriage-shed men vote on the Conservative side.

12,774. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many of those men are there ?—Well, I do not think that at that time under the old constituency there were more than about six or eight voters, but I was very ignorant about that. There are many persons that can give you better information about that. I do not think there was more than six or eight votes, but then it was a smaller constituency. I did go to Bristol, however, and I saw Mr. Michael Castle, and he promised that he would bring the matter before the board ; and the result of his bringing the matter before the board was the issuing of the notice of which that is a copy.

12,775. (Mr. Price.) Go on, Mr. Barham. You had one of these sent to you?—Yes, in a letter, as I find amongst my papers, in a letter from Mr. Benjamin Lovibond himself to me, because I was at that time staying at Lyme Regis, and he sent it down to me to show me the result of what I had done.

12,776. Exeter to Lyme is it?—The Exeter and Lyme canvasses.

12,777. (Mr. Anstey.) You said these were notices that there was to be no undue influence used?—Yes. It was not worth a great deal, but it was thought it might be worth something. Then there is a reference in that letter to the Exeter and Lyme canvasses. What was meant by that was this: there was a Mr. Mole at Exeter who had been resident in Bridgwater, who had left Bridgwater and gone down to Exeter. He was connected with the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company. He was the sole agent of the Bristol and Exeter Railway Company, the goods agent. I had known him while he was in Bridgwater. He had been a client of ours while he was here, and Mr. Lovibond asked me to go to Lyme by way of Exeter, and see him on the way. I did so, and he told me that he was under some obligation or pressure to vote on the side of the Conservatives. He told me that he was a Liberal, but that he was under some pressure, and I wrote, and perhaps it will be best to read a copy of the letter that I wrote to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond at the time, giving the result of my interview with Mr. Mole:—

" Dear sir, 7th July 1865.

" I saw Mr. Mole at Exeter to-day, and found " he had promised to split if not to plump in favour " of Westropp. I also found that he is to some " extent in Brice's hands, as he holds a bill of sale, " Mole's furniture, for 60*l.* Mole said that this money " is to be repaid by instalments, but that he had " nothing in writing to show that payment was not " to be pressed for at once. He told me that he had " paid up the instalments regularly, and was going to " make a payment of one of them to-morrow. He " admitted he was a Liberal in his politics, and I " pressed upon him strongly the disgrace of voting " contrary to his convictions. He seemed impressed " with this, but evidently had the fear of Mr. Brice " before his eyes. I told him that I did not believe " Mr. Brice would go from his word, and that so " long as he paid up the instalments regularly he " would be safe; and I added that if I found he was " being treated tyrannically for voting in accordance " with his convictions, I would see that he was pro- " perly protected. He promised to write me by " to-night's post, adding, 'Of course you will pay my " 'expenses in coming up to vote,' which I said " should be done. Let me know if you approve what " I have said and done."

12,778. (Mr. Price.) That was the Exeter?—That was the Exeter. As to the Lyme canvass, it was merely this. It was Dr. King, who was a medical man, who was in very poor health, and the only question was whether I should induce him to undertake the fatigue of the journey. Then I had this letter from Mr. Lovibond. The first letter is merely acknowledging the receipt on the 8th of July. This is from Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, by his clerk, Robert Fletcher: "I beg to thank you for your letter of " yesterday, to which you shall have my answer to- " morrow. I should like to hear what the doctor is " going to do as soon as you can let me know. Our " canvass is nearly completed, except as to a few which " spring up every day." Then I had this further letter from Mr. Lovibond, on the 9th July, signed by Benjamin Lovibond himself: " Dear sir, I quite " approve of what you have done in the course of " the canvass, and hope to receive a letter in the " morning that the party will be here on Wednesday " next early. I hope you will use every effort to " bring down the doctor to plump 'Shelley,' which " I think he will be inclined to do when he learns " that a Mr. Edwards, formerly of Lyme, is to be " started by the Tories as a second candidate to- " morrow." (I think Dr. King never would vote for Mr. Kinglake, for some reason or other.) " He was " here last night, and had a consultation with West- " ropp, Smith, and others, at the 'Clarence.' The " Tories intend to give him a public entry into the " town from the railway to-morrow. Every effort " must be made to secure the election of the Liberal " candidates."

Shortly after that it appears that I wrote a letter to Mr. Mole from Lyme, and which, being written from Lyme, I appear not to have kept a copy of, about going up to vote at the election, and I got this letter in reply:

" Exeter Station,

" Dear sir, July 11th, 1865.

" I duly received your letter this morning, " and from the same presumed that you did not " receive my telegram of Monday, wherein I in- " formed you that I was reluctantly obliged to with- " draw my letter of Saturday" (so it appears that there has been some letter that is gone, or mislaid; I have not got it) " as I was requested to redeem my promise " made some months since, and which if I vote I ought " to do. I shall be excessively sorry to lose your good " opinion, but I hope under the circumstances you " will not be pleased to think less of

" Yours respectfully,

" W. Mole."

12,779. (Mr. Price.) That was Mole?—That was William Mole. Then, as to Mr. Roberts, there is an entry about my canvassing Mr. Roberts.

12,780. Do you know anything more about Mr. Brice, about the bill of sale?—No, I never heard anything more of it. I did not believe then, and I do not believe now, that Mr. Brice would have used it in any such way.

12,781. (Mr. Anstey.) What about Mr. Roberts?—Mr. Roberts was a carriage builder in this place, and he was a very strong teetotaller; and whether it was the Maine law at that time, or the permissive bill, I do not remember which, but he and another certain number of voters in this place were very strong upon that, so strong, indeed, that they wanted to make it a condition that they would not support a candidate unless he agreed to go for the permissive bill.

(Witness.) Mr. Roberts was a client of mine, and I went down and had a long discussion with him about it. I made a memorandum about that at the time.

(Mr. Anstey.) We don't want to hear of your innocent practices, Mr. Barham. If you tell us all you did which you ought to have done we shall never get to an end.

(Witness.) I have nothing to be ashamed of in 1865. I have done some things of that sort, I am aware; but in 1865 I did nothing that I am ashamed of. There was a charge made against me by William Heal, but that charge was altogether unfounded, and, indeed, when he came to state his evidence the utmost it amounted to, so far as I was concerned, was that I was present when a promise was made. I denied that at the time, and I distinctly say the same now.

12,782. (Mr. Coleridge) Then under whose auspices did you first fall from that state of purity?—I will come to that. I do not wonder that you ask the question.

12,783. (Mr. Anstey.) Then that statement of Heal was false?—Yes, distinctly false. Mr. Lovibond declined to make any promise at all.

12,784. But in your presence?—Yes; not only did he not make any promise in my presence, but he positively declined to do so.

12,785. I will read to you what you said. The interview, you say, took place as Heal alleged, namely, in the office, and he complained that he had not had the 40*l.* which had been standing over for several elections as bribe money?—That is true.

12,786. Then you are asked about it. What you say is this: "He said he had been very badly treated "by the Liberal party, and he alleged two causes of "complaint; one was with respect to a sum of 40*l.* "which he said had been promised to him by a Mr. "Foster." Then you go on to describe who Mr. Foster was. Then there is another cause of complaint which you also mention. Then you say, "I "thought he did not seem quite so firm at the second "interview in his resolution as to the 40*l.*, and then "I said to him, 'Will you see Mr. Lovibond, who I "'am satisfied knows nothing about the 40*l.*, and "'have an assurance from him.' He said he was "ready to see Mr. Lovibond at once." And then the meeting took place between you and Heal and Benjamin Lovibond, in which Heal referred to the sum of 40*l.* That you distinctly remember you say. Then it ended by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond saying this, "This is no time for any promise; the only "question we have to ask you is, do you intend to "desert your old party, or are you going to vote for "Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley?" That is a true statement of what took place?—That is.

12,787. Then, "Mr. Heal hesitated, and wanted to "know whether he should be employed about the "election; and Mr. Lovibond said he really could "not say;" and it was after this, you say, that he saw Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake. He was introduced to them, and you think he promised them. Is that a true statement of what occurred with regard to the 40*l.*, as far as you are aware?—As far as I am aware.

12,788. And you see that though Mr. Benjamin Lovibond did not actually promise him 40*l.*, he used these remarkable words, "This is no time for any "promise; the only question we have to ask you is: "do you intend to desert your old party, or are you "going to vote for Mr. Kinglake and Sir John "Shelley?"—The thing was then fresh in my memory, and I stated then exactly what I believed to be true. Whatever inferences are to be drawn from it of course must be drawn.

12,789. Only one other question I want to ask you with regard to that same occasion. You were examined on the same day with the late Mr. Bate, the 24th of April. You were in this order—Robert Bate, Henry Lovibond, and yourself.

(Witness.) Before you ask the question let me tell you something at once which will prevent you troubling yourself. I was not in the court, and did not hear what took place.

12,790. Of course you were not present when Mr. Bate was examined, but do you remember on that day any arrangement being come to amongst yourselves, or anything being said by Henry Lovibond or by Mr. Bate, as to the expediency of severing Henry Lovibond from Benjamin Lovibond in the opinion of the committee?—No, I was not professionally concerned at all in the conduct of the petition, and was not admitted into the conference, and I never heard any one word upon the subject. I was merely there as a witness. I was not in their confidence.

12,791. You do not know the fact that Mr. Bate, who must have known the truth of the case, was put forward to say that not only there was no professional connexion between Benjamin Lovibond and Henry Lovibond in the matter of that election, but they were not even related together?—I did not know that until now. I was not engaged in the case.

12,792. I will give you the question. Here it is in the evidence of Mr. Robert Bate. No. 5843 is the question. After showing that Mr. Henry Lovibond was the real representative and introducer of Mr. Kinglake, and that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had nothing at all to do with Mr. Kinglake, never been his agent, never acted for him in any way, he goes on to answer thus, in answer to question 5843, put to him by Mr. Powell: "I understand that that gentleman is not "a relation of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond?—Not that "I am aware of."—I believe he is not, or the relationship is so distant, at least, that it is not known. It is a common name in this part of the country. I have frequently asked whether there was any relationship between Benjamin Lovibond and Henry Lovibond, and I have been always told that there was not, or at all events it was so distant that they did not know it.

12,793. Do you think it a very remarkable thing that they should try to separate Henry Lovibond from Benjamin Lovibond, when you know from what you yourself have seen, and what you have heard from other witnesses, that both of them were active in that election of 1865 for Mr. Kinglake?—I think it is a remarkable thing.

12,794. Why did they sever them?—I do not know at all.

12,795. Was it not to cover by the severance the respective corrupt practices of the two from disclosure?—I can only say, in reply to that, that you are very much better able to form an opinion than I am.

12,796. I am only speaking of your recollection?—I have no recollection at all about it. You are now putting a thing to me that is all new.

12,797. There was no business connexion or family connexion between them that you know?—Mr. Henry Lovibond served his articles to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond. He had been an articled clerk, but I am not aware that there was any relation.

12,798. I understand you to say that you know that both Benjamin Lovibond and Henry Lovibond were active in that election for Mr. Kinglake?—I know they were active in that election, and I also perfectly well know that both Kinglake and Shelley canvassed together, so far as I know.

12,799. And that both Benjamin Lovibond and Henry Lovibond were acting for both?—I know they were meeting constantly in the same committee room, and there was only one place for meeting, which was Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's own office.

12,800. And did not Benjamin Lovibond, though an invalid, though a cripple, actually accompany Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley on horseback, on their canvass?—I have no doubt that was so.

12,801. You cannot explain in any way how it happened that so respectable a man as Mr. Robert Bate was put forward on this occasion, to endeavour to persuade the committee of the House of Commons that these two had not been acting on the same side for the same candidate at that election?—No, I cannot, because I was not behind the scenes in any way, and I do not know why that was.

12,802. (Mr. Price.) They had no business relations except regarding the election? There was no partnership?—No. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had been in partnership, he was not then, but he had been in partnership with Mr. Carslake, and he never had any partner after that. Well, that contest of 1865, as you are aware, led to the election petition, and the election petition to the unseating of Mr. Westropp; and then the next question was what was to be done, and on that point there was some divergence of opinion, I believe, in the town; but at all events I find this as the first entry after the 28th of April: "On the 28th "April returned from London. Mr. A. W. Kinglake "retains his seat." That ends the petition. I do not apprehend you want to know from me anything about that. Then I find on the 30th: "Attending Mr. "George Bryant Sully and Mr. Thomas Sully, and "conference. With them to Mr. Lovell Sealy, and "thence to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's. Preparing "requisition." And there in that entry you have a suggestion of the history of the preparation of the requisition to propose to Sir John Shelley to stand again. And, speaking from memory upon that, the position was this : Mr. Bagehot to the best of my belief was at that time spoken of as a possible candidate.

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

4 Sept. 1869.

12,803. (Mr. Coleridge.) He resides in this neighbourhood, does he not?—He does not reside in this neighbourhood, but his family belongs to this neighbourhood. He is a Somersetshire man, but I think he always lives in London. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond and these gentlemen whose names I have mentioned here were very strongly of opinion that no candidate ought to be thought of until Sir John Shelley had had a requisition to stand, and had the fullest opportunity of standing if he wished to do so ; and the consequence was the drawing up of this requisition, which I believe was drawn up at Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's house at Dunware. We went there for that purpose.

12,804. (Mr. Anstey.) You, remembering those circumstances, will be able to tell me this : was not Sir John Shelley a new man at that time to Bridgwater, selected solely because of his wealth or reputed wealth ?—Well, no, sir ; I do not know that, because, for reasons stated, I was a novice in the election of 1865 altogether, and I did not know the facts. I know that we were very much pleased and delighted with Sir John Shelley when he came.

12,805. I am not saying whether he was rich or not, but he had a reputation of wealth ?—He had a reputation of great wealth ; that is certain.

12,806. Was not it a fact that Mr. Travers Smith recommended to the great patron of the borough, that is, Benjamin Lovibond, five persons to stand, amongst whom the selection was to be made by the Liberals ; some of them of very different politics from the others, but all agreeing in this, that all were reputed to be rich ?—No, I do not know.

12,807. (Reading.) "Sir John Villiers Shelley, a rich "baronet, advanced Liberal, &c., Sir Frederick Halli- "day, late Governor of Bengal, very moderate, rich, "and good candidate." There you see two persons who would vote against one another if elected, but equally acceptable to the Lovibonds. "Walter Bage- "hot, an able man; a good candidate. Lord Milton, "eldest son of Earl Fitzwilliam. Intelligent young "candidate, but not experienced. Highest social "and family position." Now, listen to this, if you please : "All the above are men of wealth and posi- "tion who would do credit to almost any constitu- "ency." Now, having regard to the fact that they are all of different politics from one another, is it not clear that in selecting the candidates at that election for 1865, Mr. Lovibond, and, perhaps, the rest of you —the rest of them—were solely influenced by the reputation of wealth ?—Well, it certainly does look as if wealth had a good deal to do with it. I only remember myself the two names of Lord Milton and Mr. Bagehot. I do not remember any of the other names at all; but I do remember Lord Milton's name being mentioned, and I fancy there was some communication with it.

12,808. Then, in answer to this letter, I see that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond on the 20th June writes to Mr. Travers Smith to say that of this lot Sir John Shelley is the person selected. Putting these two letters together, have you any doubt whatever that Sir John Shelley's announcement of his intention not to expend his supposed wealth in bribing the voters of Bridgwater came with considerable surprise upon Mr. Benjamin Lovibond and his associates, considering what I have just read to you ?—Well, I should think it is very likely that it might ; but I had at that time no knowledge whatever of it, and I am only forming an opinion in the same way you are. One thing I should mention about that election of 1865 is this, that if Sir John Shelley exacted, as I have heard stated here, a pledge from Mr. Benjamin Lovibond that no money should be spent, and that if Mr. Lovibond kept his pledge he also kept his secret, for certainly, I never heard of any such pledge. So far as I am concerned I never heard of any such pledge.

12,809. You never heard that that pledge had been given to Sir John Shelley by Mr. Lovibond as a man of honour that he would not spend any money ?—He may have given him that pledge, but he must have kept it secret. My impression is that you will find that up to the very night of the polling at the election of 1865—I was absent from home at the time—but, from what I have heard since, I believe you will find that up to the night of the polling there was a full expectation that money was going to be spent on the Liberal side.

12,810. In justice to you, I suppose you mean that until Sir John Shelley stated that in his examination before the committee of 1866, which was printed in the blue book of that year, you never heard it ?—I will not say that. It is very likely I may have heard it before that, because there was some discussion about it.

12,811. You must have heard it ?—I heard it the other day.

12,812. Oh yes, it has been in the blue book since 1866 ?—Yes, but you must not suppose I read all that blue book.

12,813. Do you mean to say that before we heard it at this inquiry you never heard of that pledge of honour that Benjamin Lovibond gave to Sir John Shelley ?—I think I had ; but what I want to tell you is this, that I had not heard of it, and I do not think many people in Bridgwater had heard of it on the night before the poll.

12,814. I think it is highly probable you did not ; and that is why I want you to go on with your statement, and not tell us of your virtuous acts, because we will take them for granted, but all your other acts in connexion with that election.

12,815. (Mr. Price.) You were about to give us the history of 1866 ?—I was. There was a question as to who should be a candidate, and it was agreed that Sir John Shelley should have the first chance.

12,816. (Mr. Anstey.) I was waiting for you to have done your statements on the particular case in order to ask you a general question. Going back to 1865, tell me if you say the impression was here that money was going to be spent ?—Well, I certainly did hear something, and I think after the election petition had been disposed of, and some time after that, but I have been told that up to the very night of the petition before the polling the Liberal party in Bridgwater were under the impression that money was going to be spent, and they only made the discovery that no money was going to be spent late that night before the polling at Mr. Lovibond's house.

12,817. How came the discovery about ?—By being told there was no money.

12,818. Who told you ?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond himself, I believe.

12,819. No money by either candidate ?—That is what it came to, that there was to be no money spent.

12,820. Were you present when that communication was made ?—I was not.

12,821. What effect had it in your judgment on the poll the next day ?—The next day the Conservatives had it all their own way.

12,822. And you attributed it to that ?—I attributed it to the cause of not spending money.

12,823. To effect his return; we know that Mr. Westropp was unseated ?—Yes.

12,824. It did not prevent the return of Mr. Kinglake ?—No.

12,825. I will ask your judgment about Mr. Kinglake's election, was not that in effect by corrupt practices ?—There was only one Conservative candidate, so that it was necessary that one Liberal candidate must be returned.

12,826. You also know there was a cross petition against that one candidate's return ?—Yes.

12,827. And therefore please to answer my question if you can, was the return of that candidate against which the petition was presented really effected by corrupt practices in your judgment?—I do not know that at all.

12,828. You do not know for some unexplained reason the cross petition was very faintly urged by those promoting it upon the attention of the committee after Mr. Westropp had been declared unseated?—No, I did not know that, and I do not think it was.

12,829. You were up at the trial?—Yes.

12,830. You were not present professionally?—No.

12,831. But you are able, no doubt, to say whether a single witness was called to prove that extensive organization of treating, that universal opening of public-houses for debauchery and drunkenness, which have been spoken to by some witnesses who have been examined before this Commission?—Yes, I think there was. I am speaking from memory, but I think you will find there was an attempted case made of treating at the "Bake Road Inn."

12,832. Do you say there was gross treating?—I say what I understand to be an answer to the learned Commissioner's question, whether any evidence or not was adduced of it?

12,833. No; I asked you whether there was any extensive organization?—Of treating?

12,834. No; extensive organization?—No, I do not know it.

12,835. If there was not, why was there not?—That I really cannot say.

12,836. Was not it done for the purpose which you proposed should be the case on a subsequent occasion, namely, to keep these matters as much as possible out of view, and as one candidate was unseated for corrupt practices, it was better not to run the risk of a general inquiry into the borough, by reason of the other candidate being unseated also for corrupt practices?—I do not think it was, and I will give you another reason why I do not think it was, because there was at that time an exceedingly angry feeling by the professional men on the two sides, particularly Mr. Richard Smith and Mr. Henry Lovibond. I do not think there was any compromise or understanding of the sort.

12,837. I can only say then that you have not read through this blue book, unfortunately I have twice?—The suggestion is perfectly new to me at all events. I certainly never dreamt of it at the time.

12,838. But you have heard what the witnesses have said of the extensiveness of the organization of treating?—Yes, I have.

12,839. If no evidence whatever was given of that—not of isolated acts of treating, but of the organization and extensiveness, if I may use the word, of it, how can you account for it?—Only by supposing their case was badly got up, and they were very much occupied in preparing their own defence.

12,840. Who represented them?—I think Mr. Richard Smith was struck down with paralysis in the very middle of it. He was conducting principally the case, and shortly before the petition came on for hearing he was seized with paralysis.

12,841. That accounts for it. That is the man against whom an action for penalties had been brought and the penalties recovered in 1838?—Yes, the thing broke down, and the whole matter devolved upon his son, a very young man indeed. There were other solicitors, but I think the main portion of the preparation of the defence devolved upon Mr. Smith the younger.

12,842. I am speaking of the cross petition, not the defence?—And the cross petition.

12,843. (Mr. Price.) I suppose the cross petition against Mr. Kinglake was in the hands of Conservative solicitors?—Precisely the same.

12,844. (Mr. Anstey.) Did the same solicitor manage the defence of the one who had the conduct of the other?—Yes, I think so. I have no doubt of it. There were two or three solicitors engaged in it, Mr. Trevor, Mr. Ruddock, and Mr. Auber, but I think the son took the most active part in getting up the case, as I understood at the time, after the death of his father.

12,845. But you are quite sure the person who conducted the cross petition was paralyzed by illness in the course of it, and that it fell into the hands of his son, a young man, who probably mismanaged it?—That is my belief, speaking at this moment from memory.

12,846. That is a reason at once?—Yes.

12,847. Do you know or did you ever hear of any debts contracted for colours, draperies, and that sort of thing, which no sane man would think of incurring unless for votes, on the part of the Liberals?—Yes, not until some time after. I had something to do with them, and know something of the payment of them.

12,848. It is an almost unaccountable thing that Sir John Shelley, who is not resident in the borough, should want 37*l.* odd worth of draperies from Mr. Hurman, who happened coincidentally to have a vote. Do you know how that debt became a bad debt? It stood over that contested election without payment, stood over another without payment, and then finally devolved upon the shoulders of Mr. Vanderbyl at the next contested election in 1866?—I do not think the whole of it, speaking from my memory of it.

12,849. You have heard the evidence as well I have, and it was stated that 37*l.* odd was paid at the election of 1866, in which Mr. Vanderbyl was concerned and, paid out of his money? All that is admitted, or it is rather stated and not yet contradicted, though it probably will be, that it was made a condition of that, that it should be so paid before the draper Harman, the claimant of the bad debt, would vote again. Can you throw any light upon that?—That upon any condition I can hardly throw any light upon, but I think it will be found, if these accounts can be produced, that Mr. Vanderbyl did not pay the whole of Mr. Harman's bill, but that a portion of that bill was paid by Mr. Kinglake.

12,850. Let it be only one farthing?—I have no doubt of this, that Mr. Vanderbyl did pay after his election a proportion of several of these old bills which stood over from Sir John Shelley.

12,851. And Mr. Kinglake another portion?—And Mr. Kinglake another portion.

12,852. This was one of them?—It is very likely that this was one of them. I will tell you exactly what occurred about that.

12,853. Have you the smallest doubt in your own mind that that debt would not have been paid if Mr. Vanderbyl had not been elected, and Mr. Kinglake had not been the sitting member?—I have no doubt whatever they would not have been paid. It is quite certain.

12,854. Can you in your mind define any distinction between that and a bribe corruptly and directly administered or offered to Hurman for his vote?—Of course no other distinction except this, that it was for goods sold, although it may have been on a questionable and doubtful chance of getting a payment.

12,855. Not sold to Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

12,856. Mr. Vanderbyl therefore was not interested in the goods?—No.

12,857. And when Mr. Vanderbyl became connected with it it was a bad debt, and all that Mr. Vanderbyl did was to pay off a bad debt without consideration claimed against another person to whom he was neither kith nor kin?—Yes.

12,858. Then he is asked to pay that money just at the time he is asking for the vote of the person applying for payment, and the payment is made, and the vote is given; is there any difference in a moral or a legal point of view, because you are both a moral man and a lawyer, I hope; is there any difference in such a case as that, and the more vulgar form of bribery in which money is said to be advanced, "I give you this for your vote"?—I have only to make the same request that I did before, the whole thing is in your knowledge, but it is only a conclusion of mine. You are asking what it is a painful thing to answer, but if you do I must.

12,859. Are all those bad debts, or whatever their origin was, whether for goods supplied or not supplied, but viewed as bad debts, and afterwards paid off, were they all paid off with a view to the success of the subsequent election ?—Undoubtedly.

TWELFTH DAY

Mr. E. Barham.

12,860. (Mr. Price.) You said you had to tell us something about that. I do not know whether there was anything more about the recovery of those debts ?—Well, I think it was just this: when, after the election of Mr. Vanderbyl, Mr. Lovibond went into these accounts, these old debts became the subject of consideration, and I do not know whether you have or Mr. Lovibond has any accounts still left on the subject, for I have no account, but I rather think these debts were dealt with in this way—I am speaking from memory. First of all, certain accounts which had stood over from Mr. Kinglake's and Sir John Shelley's contest. There were then the accounts of Mr. Bagehot's election, there were then the accounts of Mr. Vanderbyl's election, and I think those were tabulated; that Mr. Kinglake was charged with one half of the cost of the account of his election and Sir John Shelley's election, that Mr. Bagehot was charged only with those accounts which had distinct reference to his election, that Mr. Vanderbyl was charged with those accounts which had reference to his election, and that then also his attention was drawn to the other moiety of Sir John Shelley which would have been Sir John Shelley's account, and the case was laid before me, and he was left to take what course he thought right about the matter. I am speaking from memory. My impression is the whole amount of those were not paid, but I am not sure of that, but that some kind of composition or arrangement was arrived at, and something less than that second moiety was paid.

12,861. (Mr. Price.) Was Mr. Vanderbyl informed at that time that the payment of those debts had been enforced or made a condition precedent to any man voting for him ?—No, I do not think that.

12,862. Because that is the question, for he becomes a personal briber at once himself if he was informed of that, and personally implicated in it. If it was kept from him and was asked as a charity it would be a different matter ?—I feel very sure that that was not so.

12,863. He must be a very charitable man to go and pay Sir John Shelley's debts ?—No, it was not in charity it was paid. I do not imagine that for a moment. It was that kind of gratitude which looks to future benefits.

12,864. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was diplomacy ?—It was in fact to keep everything smooth and pleasant.

12,865. Diplomacy ?—It was diplomacy, with a view to future election. That is what I understood at the time, and I did not at all understand at the time that these men had made it a condition. It might be true, but I did not so understand it.

12,866. (Mr. Anstey.) But supposing that I came to you and ask you for a vote, and you say to me, "I "have a bill of costs which has been standing over for "three elections and not paid yet," and I say to you, "I will pay you your bill of costs," and supposing you say, without referring to what I have said, "I shall "be very happy to vote for you," do you mean to say it is not as much a bargain as if the conversation had been less broken and interrupted ?—Well, I think so.

12,867. What is the difference between that and Mr. Hurman's case ?—I was only saying I did not know that myself. It may have taken place and be true, but was not a thing known to me.

12,868. (Mr. Price.) Tell us whether it had been the practice on former occasions for men to stand outwards who had unpaid accounts, when they had a rich candidate down here, to say they would not vote at all unless they got their bills paid ?—You must ask some other person, because you see from the evidence which I have given I have no previous knowledge. Then Sir John Shelley declined to stand. I cannot remember whether we had any personal interview with Sir John Shelley in London or not.

12,869. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember why he declined to stand ?—No, that I do not remember at all why it was he declined to stand. I cannot remember the cause why, but I do remember a very considerable effort was bonâ fide used to get him to stand, but he would not. He declined, but what the reason was I do not remember. Then we put ourselves into communication with Mr. Bagehot, and I recollect myself going to London with Mr. Reed and Mr. Lovibond, and having an interview with Mr. Bagehot, at which he consented to stand.

12,870. Was anything said at that interview with Mr. Bagehot about money being required to be spent ?—No, I remember very particularly nothing was said. It was a thing that was remarked afterwards that he did not inquire what the expenses would be.

12,871. He made no inquiry as to that ?—Mr. Bagehot made no inquiry about the expenses, there was a very short time allowed with him.

12,872. Had you any introduction to him, or had any of you known him before, or was it through Mr. Travers Smith that you got the introduction ?—I certainly did not know him before, although I knew some of the family.

12,873–4. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Travers Smith present at this interview ?—No, this interview took place at Mr. Bagehot's residence, or his wife's family residence. I rather think that was on the 14th of May 1866 that we saw Mr. Bagehot in London and returned from London, and Mr. Bagehot came down. The election I see was nearly a month afterwards, but I then remember that there were many consultations between Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed and myself, not Mr. Cook, as to how this election was to be conducted and how the money was to be spent.

12,875. You were going to tell us how you first fell ?—I will give you it exactly, that will introduce the subject of this memorial about which the learned Commissioners asked so many questions, and I have this entry about that.

12,876. (Mr. Anstey.) The petition you mean, not the memorial ?—Yes, the petition of 80. I find this entry in my diary: "Meeting Mr. Sully in the "morning, drawing up petition, Mr. John Lovell "Sealy, Mr. Cook, and myself."

12,877. That is Mr. Cook the lawyer ?—Yes, Mr. Cook the lawyer. We were the three persons who drew up the petition.

12,878. Then in fact Mr. Sealy was a promoter of that petition ?—Unquestionably.

12,879. Because he said he was not the other day ?—Unquestionably he was, because it is on my book, and I think the thing arose in this fashion: after the report of the election committee, notwithstanding the existence of corrupt practices, the chairman, Mr. Baxter, did not make the ordinary motion to the house. It was for him according to the etiquette of the house, as I understood, to make a motion for a commission, and he did not do so, and Sir Harry Verney gave notice of motion for a commission for Bridgwater without any consultation with anybody in Bridgwater at all.

12,880. Who gave that notice ?—Sir Harry Verney.

12,881. (Mr. Anstey.) No; Colonel Taylor for the writ, and Sir Harry Verney gave notice of motion to suspend the writ ?—That is exactly what I meant, I thought it was for a commission, but that is what I am referring to.

12,882. And he also gave notice for a commission ?—I thought so; and upon that Mr. George Sully, who felt strongly about this matter, saw Sir Harry Verney, as he had informed me, and as I understood at the time, in London, and asked him whether anything could be done at Bridgwater with a view to assist Sir Harry in the motion he had before the house, and Sir Harry Verney suggested the preparation of a petition, and it was in consequence of the suggestion of Sir Harry Verney that Mr. Sully accompanied by Mr. Collins called together a meeting, and at that meeting Mr. John Lovell Sealy, Mr. Cook, and myself were deputed to prepare or requested to prepare this memorial, and I was one of the persons who prepared this memorial; and I must say at once that the last clause, which suggests that when one candidate was unseated the other should take his seat, I was the father of, because I remember perfectly well suggesting it and I am responsible for that. Well, that was prepared, and it was signed numerously, as you see, and signed by myself.

12,883. Did you sign it cordially adhering to every statement in it, and the prayer?—What I did was this: you see the petition alleges that we are informed and did believe at the time it was so, because I derived my information at that point from Mr. Fletcher, Mr. Lovibond's clerk, and others who had been actively engaged in conducting the petition against Mr. Westropp, and who furnished the information and instructions upon which the statements there were made. I had no direct personal knowledge of the truth of those statements.

12,884. Did they inform you that there were no less than 180 alleged cases of bribery which might have been proved against Mr. Westropp on that occasion, if the chairman of the committee had not risen after only seven of that number had been established?—They certainly did, or I should not have put it in that petition.

12,885. Are you aware that the subject was brought in the form of a question put to Mr. Baxter in the House of Commons, and the Speaker decided that it could not be put, and that that was the reason why the motion was made for the suspension of the writ?

12,886. That being so, I ask you again, was your motive a bonâ fide one according to the tenor of the petition, or was it what has been suggested by Mr. Sealy or one or two other witnesses as regards themselves, merely a party manœuvre intended to prevent Mr. Westropp coming in that time?—I can speak for myself, and I was prepared to go the whole length of any part of that petition.

12,887. Then you were the only person yet examined, amongst those who signed the petition, who seems to have signed it with an honest purpose?—I can safely say that I was prepared to go to the length of every part of it. I can only express my earnest regret to this moment that the prayer of that petition was not granted. Well, that petition was disregarded by the house.

12,888. (Mr. Price.) The committee reported at that time, did not they, that extensive practices had prevailed?—Yes, they did.

12,889. Do you know whether any negotiation took place after that report of the committee came out, any negotiation with the members on the Liberal side of the house to take care that no commission should be issued?—No, I do not know that.

12,890. Because it seems a marvellous thing, when a committee reports corrupt practices have extensively prevailed, that no action should be taken on it in the house?—I am inclined to think that there was at that time, if the truth could be known, a difference of opinion among the Liberal party in Bridgwater on the subject. There are a certain number of electors who were sincerely desirous of having the prayer carried out.

12,891. And a commission?—Yes.

12,892. Not merely the delay of the writ, but the issuing of a commission?—Both one and the other.

12,893. Of course the writ was sure to be delayed if the commission was issued?—Yes, and I should think probably others who did not so wish.

12,894. You do not know whether any negotiation took place with anybody in authority in London, any member of parliament of influence with the Liberal party who were in a majority of the house to take care that no inquiry should be made?—No, because I was just on the other side, because that is just the thing that would have been kept at that time from me.

12,895. How were you on the other side?—I mean, not having at that time been mixed up in corrupt practices, these persons came to me with their account.

12,896. Your hands at that time were clean?—My hands at that time were clean, and if any negotiations of that sort did go on they would have been just kept from my knowledge.

12,897. (Mr. Anstey.) I can give you the dates. The notice of motion for the issue of the writ being given, the petition is presented on the 7th of May. Upon that the question as to the issue of the writ is adjourned until that petition shall be considered according to the terms of a motion to that effect, which notice is given by Sir Harry Verney, and on the 31st of May all those matters come on together. Colonel Taylor moves on behalf of the Conservative party that the writ do issue, and Sir Harry Verney moves, by way of amendment to the motion, that no writ do issue for the borough of Bridgwater until after inquiry. That is to be found in the Commons Journal, chapter 121, folio 385 B, and that amendment was rejected by a majority consisting of Conservatives and Liberals. None but some Liberals, who appeared from the report in Hansard to have been very angry at the manœuvre, having voted in the minority?—Yes.

12,898. Being so refreshed, have you any doubt that that was the result of a corrupt compromise between the members of parliament on the subject?—Well, I have no other means of knowing than this, but this is new to me, and my opinion is of no value on a point of that sort compared with yours. I see that the date at which I drew up the requisition was the 5th of May, just two days before it was presented. Well, I was for one, I remember, very much annoyed and chagrined at the action of the house in the matter, and I certainly did think, and it was pressed on me at the time—I had several discussions with Mr. Henry Lovibond at the time, for the conclusion was not arrived at, I did not go with perfectly clean hands into the bribery, in five minutes—it was done after a great deal of discussion and argument, before I fell from one position into the other.

12,899. (Mr. Price.) That part of the prayer praying for a commission of inquiry, was that put in on your suggestion or advice, or Mr. Lovibond's advice, or Mr. Sealy's advice?—I rather think that Mr. Sealy was informed by Sir Harry Verney; that was the impression on my mind, that it was necessary for that to be in in order to support the thing.

12,900. In order to support the motion for the suspension of the writ it was necessary to pray for a commission of inquiry?—That was the impression on my mind, and I recollect for one that I was ready, and said, "Very well, I am ready."

12,901. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose what Sir Harry Verney told you was, that the house would no entertain a motion for the suspension of the writ, unless the person making it pledges himself to take steps towards issuing an inquiry?—No doubt that is it; that confirms the impression I had on my mind.

12,902. It is the practice of the house?—It is the practice of the house.

12,903. Was it in consequence of the failure and miscarriage of those attempts of yours that you took the course you subsequently did?—That was partly it. I had many transactions with Mr. Lovibond as to the possibility of conducting the election on pure principles. What he pointed out to me was, he said, "Our party "has just now incurred heavy expenses in fighting "this long petition, and it is impossible to hope or "expect that they will incur the expense of fighting "another petition; their funds have been heavily "drawn upon, the Liberal Party, by 500*l.* or 600*l.* "after the petition, and that is a considerable sum "for persons to take out of their pockets for Liberal "purposes;" and then he pointed out that the consequences would inevitably be that the Conservatives would walk over the course with the greatest possible ease in the world, and it was by arguments of that kind, coupled with the irritation which existed in my own mind, that I was induced to consent to the course.

12,904. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you fix the date as nearly as you can, as to a month or so, of the change of your purpose?—It must have been necessarily within a very short time, because we were only a very short time in doing it. Action was immediately required.

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

4 Sept. 1869.

12,905. In June ?—Because you see the 5th May 1866 was the drawing up of the requisition, and the 7th May was the presentation of the petition. On the 14th we saw Mr. Bagehot in London, so it was one of those things which one had to make up one's mind about, in which one acted under irritation, and in which I did act in the way I told you.

12,906. (Mr. Price.) Then I understand that Mr. Lovibond represented to you that the expenses which had been incurred by the Liberal party petitioning against Mr. Westropp was a reason why you should have recourse to corrupt practices at any future election ?—It was this: it made it perfectly hopeless for us to attempt to get through the petition, in the event of the Conservatives having recourse to corrupt practices.

12,907. Then it was to be a case of diamond cut diamond in the way of bribery ?—Exactly; our funds were exhausted. We had just exhausted our troops, and the battle had been so expensive that it was equivalent to a defeat.

12,908. (Mr. Anstey.) Now tell me about that petition which you succeeded in. I cannot find among the papers which the chief clerk of this Commission has discovered, the brief which was prepared for and held by the counsel for Mr. Kinglake in defending his suit. I only found the copy of the brief that related to the petition against Mr. Westropp. Can you tell me what will explain that, whether it is a fact that the petitioners for Mr. Westropp were not represented by the same parliamentary agent or the same attorney who represented Mr. Kinglake in defending the cross petition ?—I take it it is this, that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was acting and prepared a brief on the part of the petitioner, and that Mr. Henry Lovibond conducted the defence for Mr. Kinglake.

12,909. Therefore the brief for Mr. Kinglake will be in Mr. Henry Lovibond's hands ?—Yes.

12,910. And the other was Mr. Benjamin Lovibond ?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond.

12,911. (Mr. Price.) Then Mr. Kinglake appeared, of course, on his own petition by counsel ?—Yes.

12,912. And did he at that meeting, or not, by the same counsel who had appeared for the petition against Mr. Westropp ?—I believe it was not. Mr. Kinglake paid the expense of his own defence.

12,913. And that was prepared at Mr. Henry Lovibond's office ?—That I believe was prepared at Mr. Henry Lovibond's office. Then I come to the arrangements between the lawyers. In the course of these discussions Mr. Lovibond and my own feeling of irritation had overcome my scruples, and I was prepared to go in for illegal expenditure.

12,914. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who persuaded you to do that ?—The only person with whom I had any conversation on the subject was Mr. Henry Lovibond.

12,915. Then he persuaded you to sanction this ?—He pointed out to me ——

12,916. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he persuade you ?—He pointed out to me it was the way to win the election, and that I presume would amount to persuation.

12,917. (Mr. Price.) He argued with you on the matter and you yielded ?—Yes, I did. That is the truth unquestionably, and I recollect the meeting held in Mr. Lovibond's office at which were present Mr. Henry Lovibond, Mr. Reed, and myself, and the point of conversation was, how the funds were to be divided for bribery in case it was necessary to have recourse to it. Mr. Lovibond and myself had had some previous conversation upon the matter, and in fact we were in actual conversation upon it when Mr. Reed came in, and I should state at once to explain this—there has been something said about unfriendly feeling between Mr. Reed and Mr. Lovibond and myself. When we went to London to see Mr. Bagehot the position of things was this: with reference to our position with regard to each other, I was then on more friendly terms with Mr. Reed and more inclined to hold with him than with Lovibond.

12,918. Why ?—There were two or three reasons. I had known Mr. Reed a great number of years, he is more my own age, and there had been a circumstance which had occurred with regard to Mr. Lovibond in which, not very long before, he had made a very violent attack on Mr. Carslake, and I was not on particular friendly terms.

12,919. Nothing to do with politics ?—Nothing to do with politics at all; simply as a matter of feeling; and I remember at the interview with Mr. Bagehot I was rather at first inclined to side with Mr. Reed, and Mr. Reed was jealous of Mr. Lovibond. He thought that Mr. Lovibond had got Mr. Kinglake into his own hands as his representative, and was going to engross Mr. Bagehot, and he thought it was unfair.

12,920. (Mr. Coleridge.) But it appears there was nothing to be made out of it, when the like was to be done gratis ?—But in the course of the meeting which took place it became very plain to me, and that is, that whether I liked Mr. Lovibond or did not like him, or whether I liked him better than Mr. Reed or not, he was the very much more able man of the two for any purposes of electioneering. I formed that opinion rightly or wrongly, and I came to the conclusion that Mr. Reed was not a person able to carry on electioneering matters.

12,921. (Mr. Price.) On the footing of bribery do you mean ?—I mean on the general footing of address in meeting persons of rank, members of parliament, and general prudence and discretion in his method of acting; and I saw plainly enough, if the party were to be kept together and the interests of the party consulted, and I was to take any part in it, I was to make up my mind to look to Mr. Henry Lovibond as the chief among the solicitors, and I did do so. In consequence of that I sided over from being more with Mr. Reed than Mr. Lovibond. I necessarily came to take a part more with Mr. Lovibond than Mr. Reed, because I agreed with his conclusions and the arguments he brought forward with regard to the various things that had to be done.

12,922. (Mr. Price.) Had Mr. Reed then at any time expressed his disinclination to engage in corrupt practices ?—No, I do not think he had. On this particular occasion Mr. Lovibond and myself were engaged in considering how the thing should be done. We were planning that one or both of us should go to London to make the necessary arrangements when Mr. Reed came in. We came to what we were talking about, and what was under consideration, and we said, "The question is, who shall go to London?" We were certainly both of us planning to suggest that Mr. Lovibond should go to London, but Mr. Reed jumped into the chasm, he volunteered at once, and said, "I will go and do it," and the consequence was, there was nothing in the world but to say, "Go," and he went. He went to London and stayed some days, and came back exactly as wise as he went away. He saw, he told us, Mr. Travers Smith, and Mr. Travers Smith said he would have nothing to do with any such arrangement.

12,923. (Mr. Price.) With what ?—He came up at once and asked where the money was to come from to fight the election. Mr. Travers Smith at a subsequent interview said to us, "Who is Mr. Reed who came "from Bridgwater? Is he a madman? He came up "to me and talked to me about sending down 3,000*l.* "to Bridgwater as if it were a bale of goods."

12,924. (Mr. Price.) Money is called by the word "bales" here?—Yes, I believe that is just exactly what was said. Mr. Reed therefore failed, and we had cast about for some other means of providing the money, and the time had run very short, and in point of fact, I think it had come up to the nomination before anything was determined or any arrangement made at all.

12,925. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had not Mr. Bagehot been asked about what he would provide ?—Not a farthing; not a single word was said to him on the subject, not by me, and I am sure not by anybody. On the day of the nomination Mr. Lovibond proposed to me that we should provide. He said, "I have seen Mr. Bate; I have seen Mr. Reed." I did not see either of those two gentlemen, but Mr. Lovibond told me that he had seen old Mr. Bate and Mr. Reed, and that they had each of them agreed to join with him and me if I would join in a joint guarantee to raise a thousand to meet the expenses of the election.

12,926. Who was this arrangement with?—This is what Mr. Lovibond told me. I had no communication with Mr. Bate or Mr. Reed, but he told me he had seen them, and they had each consented to join in a guarantee sum, that it should be 250*l.* each, to raise, if need be, as far as a thousand pounds, to contest this election, and I consented; and he suggested to me that I should get Mr. Ford, Captain Ford as he is called now, he was Mr. then, manager of the Western Bank, as time was short, to go at once to Bristol and bring back 500*l.* in gold. I went and saw Mr. Ford, and gave him my cheque for 500*l.* He went to Bristol and brought back the money to my house in the evening at Wembdon. In the meantime it had been arranged by Mr. Lovibond that Andrew Allan should come up to my house about the time that Mr. Ford might be expected to be there, and receive the money, and I was to hand it over to Andrew Allan. Mr. Ford was in the house when Andrew Allan came. They did not see each other. Allan was shown into a room, and Mr. Ford went out of the window and Allan came in, and I handed him 500*l.* and he went off.

12,927. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Ford know the purposes for which you wanted this money?—Unquestionably.

12,928. (Mr. Anstey.) You mean the present manager of the bank?—The present manager of the Bank; there cannot be the slightest doubt that he knew what it was for. Well, the next morning the polling commenced, and our party went rapidly ahead, and about 9 o'clock I think we were supposed to have won the election. From 9 o'clock to half-past 9 it was supposed to have been won; everybody was hurrahing and saying it was all right, and at that time I saw Mr. Lovibond in the street. We walked along together, and he said, "You know I am getting nervous about it. I "do not think they are spending anything on their "side."

12,929. Mr. Henry Lovibond told you that?—Yes, Mr. Henry Lovibond. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had been struck down by paralysis as well as Mr. Richard Smith, and he was entirely out of all this.

12,930. (Mr. Price.) He had been struck down by illness and examined by the committee downstairs?—Yes, he was struck down in London, and was entirely unable to attend, and had nothing to do with it. He said, "I am getting nervous about this. I do not "think they are spending any money on the other "side. This is a trap;" and he told me he had stopped Allan, and told him not to spend any more money. The consequence of that was very quickly seen, before very long, that the Conservatives began to draw ahead, and we very soon found there was not a voter to be had or found. We then made another effort. I drew out another sum of 200*l.* from the bank; but so few voters were to be found that we could not spend the money. We were prepared to have spent money, but could not find anybody to take it.

12,931. The market was exhausted?—They had got them all quietly stowed away, and had the election in their hands. We were entirely out-generalled and beaten, no question about it. At the end of the day I had 100*l.* left in my pocket, and either that night or the next morning I paid it into the West of England Bank.

12,932. (Mr. Price.) How much altogether was spent? You have heard the evidence of Allan?—On the polling day, 600*l.* Now I remember this, in the evening about the close of the poll I saw Mr. Bagehot, and he said to me, "Mr. Barham, I am very "much afraid from some things I have seen and observed to-day that some corrupt practices have "been resorted to that ought not to have been re-"sorted to." I said, "Sir, I am sorry to tell you that such is the case."

12,933. (Mr. Anstey.) That is the case?—Yes; he said, "I am very, very sorry for it," and that is all that passed between Mr. Bagehot and myself on that occasion, and I think all that ever passed between us.

12,934. (Mr. Price.) Had anything been said by you ever to Mr. Bagehot when he came down to this town in the way of what money would be required to be spent?—Not one single syllable.

12,935. (Mr. Coleridge.) On the following day some more money was paid away to some voters who had voted without?—On the following day, I doubt if that was so.

12,936. A few days?—I think not.

12,937. (Mr. Anstey.) But subsequently?—Subsequently there was money; but the final settling up is a subject on which Mr. Lovibond will give you much better information.

12,938. (Mr. Price.) We are to understand, so far as the Liberal candidate was concerned in that contest in 1866, if it had not been for you lawyers not a farthing of money would have been spent by a candidate in bribery?—Well, I thought that was so. I thought that was our fault entirely; we not only spent the money, but we made a mess of it.

12,939. (Mr. Anstey.) Does that also apply to lawyers on the other side, qua Mr. Patton?—You must ask them.

12,940. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you get repaid that 600*l.*?—It was repaid by cheque from Messrs. Warry, Robins, and Burgess. Mr. Bagehot referred us to them as his solicitors, and we had an interview with them.

12,941. What did Mr. Bagehot say to you?—Merely tantamount to what I have said just now, "I "am afraid, Mr. Barham, from what I have seen "to-day——"

12,942. How did the name of Mr. Warry come up?—I cannot at this moment remember, but I think it is probable that he gave it to me at that meeting.

12,943. You cannot remember how the reference was given to you to Messrs. Warry and Robins?—No.

12,944. Are they bankers? — No, his private solicitors, at the corner of Lincoln's Inn Fields, and Mr. Robins was the member of the firm who attended to this matter.

12,945. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see any of the cheques that were drawn on that occasion with reference to that election?—One I certainly saw. I saw the two cheques that I drew myself against that.

12,946. Perhaps you can explain something. I see your name across very often in the cheque book in question; were these small accounts?—I think you will find those were regular public election accounts.

12,947. I want to know the meaning of this, there were several counterfoils in a book which begins with the 6th of September 1865, and which purports to be Mr. Kinglake's cheque book?—Well, I can explain that.

12,948. About the middle of it there is a sudden skip from the 6th September 1865, no cheques in the book drawn by Mr. Kinglake except the 6th September 1865, and only a few of them; and then there is a sudden skip to the 21st of August 1866, on which day a number of cheques are drawn as appears; and then against four of those counterfoils there is written in an entirely different ink—blue ink—the payees of the cheque, "W. Bagehot, Esq."?—Yes. I think I can explain that to you exactly. On the election of Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake I was their election agent, but when it came to the settlement of election accounts, instead of paying the money into my hands they each of them opened a separate account. Mr. Kinglake, if I recollect right, at the West of England Bank, and Sir John Shelley at Sealey's. Each of them paid into those two banks the amount of money which by previous examination of the accounts it appeared would be required to settle those accounts.

TWELFTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

4 Sept. 1869.

Then cheques were prepared, which were signed by Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley on those banks, and those accounts were paid in that way, and when Mr. Bagehot's election came the same cheque book, there being more cheques unexhausted in the bank, was used for Mr. Bagehot's election; but in that case Mr. Bagehot paid the money into my credit, and I drew the cheques. That is exactly how it is. Then in the case of Mr. Vanderbyl, when his election came I paid money first before I had it, and then Mr. Vanderbyl sent me the cheque, so that the three were different in that way.

12,949. There was a question you said you would answer by-and-by. My learned colleague, Mr. Coleridge, referred you to an analogous point, and I think I may as well put it now; was it at this election, or was it at a subsequent election, the election in which you first dabbled in corrupt practices?—Yes.

12,950. Was it then or subsequently that the practice of making presents of 100*l.* ahead to the lawyers on the Liberal side was first introduced?—Well, it was done with respect to this election of Mr. Bagehot's. I will tell you exactly, because I have the date. Curiously enough I received with respect to Mr. Bagehot's election the sum of 50*l.* I stated to Mr. Robins, and Mr. Lovibond stated the same, that, looking at the unfortunate result of Mr. Bagehot's election, we made no kind of charge, and we left the matter entirely in his hands. Mr. Robins said, "There is no reason why you should not receive some "remuneration, although the thing has turned out "unfortunately." Then when the accounts were settled he gave us each 50*l.*

12,951. Who did?—Mr. Robins. The money was paid by Mr. Robins, as I remember it, to Mr. Lovibond.

12,952. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Messrs. Reed and Cook get the same?—That I do not know, but I think it is highly probable. I have quite forgotten that. I do not know whether they did or not.

12,953. (Mr. Anstey.) On what occasion did you get the 100*l.* each?—I had more than that; Mr. Vanderbyl gave me the sum of 200*l.*

12,954. At his subsequent election?—Yes; but the difference was this, Mr. Vanderbyl paid me before Mr. Bagehot's, although Mr. Bagehot's election was first. I did not receive that 50*l.* until the month of February 1867.

Adjourned to Monday next at 12 o'clock.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.

HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. EUSTACE BARHAM recalled.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

6 Sept. 1869.

12,955. (Mr. Anstey.) I wish to ask you what was the reason for such a state of organized treating which has been established or which could be established by witnesses had they been called; there was so faint an attempt made to dispute Mr. Kinglake's seat, and you said you were under the impression that it was fairly disputed. You were only a witness on the occasion and not professionally concerned. Since I asked you the question I have gone through the brief, and I find first of all, as I stated, there were no proofs whatever produced on behalf of Mr. Kinglake, at least none sent to counsel with the brief; on the contrary, it is distinctly stated that they apprehend very little trouble, and therefore Mr. Bristow will only have to ask Mr. Kinglake some questions founded on the minutes of evidence taken in the case of Sir John Shelley. He also stated that he believed that the statement of Mr. Henry Lovibond, that is, though found on Mr. Benjamin Lovibond's paper, it is Mr. Henry Lovibond's brief; that Mr. Henry Lovibond is of opinion that the whole thing was a sham. Mr. Axford's petition was presented six days after the main petition against Mr. Westropp, and he believes there is no real intention to press the case against Mr. Kinglake. If there is, Mr. Kinglake's examination, he thinks, upon the minutes of evidence already taken will dispose of that. Finally, he instructs Mr. Bristow to apply that the petition may be dismissed as frivolous and vexatious, and with costs. Being told those things from the brief, I ask, are you still of opinion that there was a bonâ fide intention on the part of the petitioners against Mr. Kinglake's return to bring out against Mr. Kinglake that case of organized treating, I must add bribery also, which it now appears from the evidence of witnesses would have been fully established against him if the petition had been pressed?—Well, I still think there was no kind of arrangement between the parties. I think, and I thought then, that the petition against Mr. Kinglake was merely one presented with a view to some possible arrangement, but I never heard such an arrangement was come to or contemplated for a moment on the Liberal side.

12,956. (Mr. Price.) It is also stated here that Mr. Kinglake when he is examined will rely on the truth of the return made by you as agent for election expenses, as containing the whole costs of and incidental to the election. I presume we may take it for granted that that is untrue?—No, not that election. I believed, as far as I knew then and now, with the exception of the subsequent disclosures about Sir John Shelley's bill, it was perfectly plain.

12,957. Sir John Shelley's bills and going halves with Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

12,958. You were not a professional adviser on that occasion?—No.

12,959. I will ask you with reference to Mr. Henry Lovibond's instructions. I will read it to you: "The "truth is, the amount returned covers the whole "expenses of the election." Of course, informed subsequently by the disclosures which have been made up till now, I may take it for granted that that version of the instructions is incorrect?—That is clearly so. I was going to state that you requested me to make inquiries for that brief. I did inquire of Mr. Lovibond and was going to give you substantially the same information.

12,960. (Mr. Price.) I see an attempt was suggested to the counsel, that although the costs had not been very large, yet as a matter of principle by way of example, it was desired that counsel should ask to have the petition declared frivolous and vexatious. Was it so declared?—No. I recollect well what Mr. Baxter's reply was on that occasion. He said, "There is nothing frivolous about Bridgwater."

12,961. (Mr. Anstey.) That was the chairman of the committee, Mr. W. E. Baxter?—Yes, the chairman of the committee.

12,962. It is a remarkable fact that great dissatisfaction, as appears from that petition of 80 which you signed, was felt by those in whose interest the petition against Mr. Westropp's return was presented at the sudden closing of the inquiry by the committee after going through only seven out of 110, which you have declared to be provable, cases of bribery against Mr. Westropp and his agents. Taking that sudden withdrawal of counsel for the petitioners against Mr. Westropp into consideration with the faintness of the case made against Mr. Kinglake, do you mean to say that you are still of opinion that the connexion between those two facts is not the connexion of cause and effect?—No, I do not think it was, because I recollect the circumstances. I was in the gallery outside, but I remember the committee room being suddenly cleared when a certain number of cases had been gone into, and when the solicitors and counsel had been admitted again, the committee informed the parties that they found bribery sufficiently proved, and it was not necessary therefore to go into any further cases.

12,963. You are aware, are you not, that the question was asked on behalf of the discontented Liberals of Bridgwater, of the chairman, Mr. Baxter, in his place in the House of Commons, by Sir Harry Verney, why that inquiry was so suddenly concluded, and the Speaker determined that it was a question that could not be put to Mr. Baxter, he not being an official person?—Yes, I think that was so. I have no distinct remembrance of it.

12,964. Have you any information other than that given in public, which has reached your knowledge of the suspicious circumstances alluded to by Sir Harry Verney in that question, and that alluded to to-day in the questions put by me to you?—No, I have not heard of any explanation at all upon the subject. I was going to ask your permission, before going further into the thing, to slightly qualify the statements I made on Saturday in one or two cases in which I spoke rather too positively. First of all with respect to Mr. Reed being at the "Globe Hotel," immediately after the voting. I still believe it was Mr. Reed when I said I saw him looking pale and frightened.

12,965. (Mr. Price.) What you said was, it was Mr. Reed looking out of one of the upper windows of the "Globe Hotel" as white as a sheet?—Yes; still I believe it was Mr. Reed. However, it stands in this way, that I saw some one looking out of the window of the "Globe Hotel," whom I believe was pale and frightened, and it was from that that I formed that conclusion. Then, with respect to the solicitors engaged on Mr. Westropp's petition, in turning that over in my mind, I was excluded from the room almost all the time, but I distinctly remember Mr. Ruddock and Mr. Bealy Smith took an active part, but I am not sure of Mr. Trevor being there; I am not quite sure of his being in the committee room.

12,966. (Mr. Price.) You mean Mr. Trevor was not actively employed in the petition against Mr. Westropp?—My statement was that Mr. Trevor was the solicitor most actively engaged, and I believe I made a statement that the other solicitors were also. I cannot charge my memory as to seeing anybody actually there but Mr. Ruddock.

12,967. Mr. Ruddock is the only one you can positively speak to?—I can speak to Mr. Ruddock positively. Then there was a question you asked me, Whether or not, but from the action of Mr. Lovibond himself and the other solicitors at Mr. Bagehot's election, any money would have been spent in bribery? I said "Certainly not." I meant that reply to extend only to the side of the Liberals. The question was put as applying to the whole borough—that but for the action of the lawyers on that occasion there would be no money spent in the borough.

12,968. That was my question?—I think not; unquestionably not, without qualifying it as applying to the Liberal party.

12,969. Do you mean now to say the expenditure at that election was in any way induced by the expenditure by lawyers on the Liberal side?—No, I mean to say our action could not, of course, control anything on the Conservative side. The answer was given rather as regards the whole borough. There is one other thing only, and that is with reference to the deputation to Mr. Vanderbyl the evening before the election, after the meeting at Mr. Sealey's house. I am quite sure of Mr. Sully and Mr. Sealey, but I am not quite sure of Mr. Wilton, whom I stated was present.

12,970. You said Mr. Sully, Mr. Sealey, and Mr. Lovibond?—No, Mr. James Sully and Mr. Wilton and Mr. Sealey; not Mr. Lovibond.

12,971. "I went to his house immediately after the meeting"?—Yes, where Mr. Sealey touched me on the hand, and said he wanted to see me at his house.

12,972. "I went to his house immediately after the "meeting, and there I found several members of the "Liberal party, including Mr. James Wood Sully and "Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Wilton"?—I believe they were all, but I am now speaking of the deputation which proceeded from that meeting down to Mr. Vanderbyl, at the "Globe Hotel," and I stated Mr. Wilton went down, but I do not feel quite sure about that.

12,973. That is quite right "A deputation was appointed to wait on Mr. Vanderbyl," but not Mr. Lovibond?—That is it. I do not feel quite sure about Mr. Wilton.

(Mr. Anstey.) There was a question I purposely omitted to put to you at the time, because I did not wish to break the thread of your narrative, and we rose too suddenly on Saturday to permit me to put it. You recollect that important part of the meeting at which you went away, and Mr. Francis Thompson went away. Is Mr. Thompson one of the most respectable persons in Bridgwater?—Yes.

12,974. I believe he had been then long engaged in taking an active part for the Liberals?—He has always been a staunch Liberal.

12,975. I believe he was one of the 80 who signed the petition to the House of Commons?—I should think it is very likely.

12,976. Is it or is it not the fact that from the time of his going away at that moment, at which it became apparent that there was going to be, or it was likely there would be, corrupt practices at that election, is it not a fact that from that time to the present moment Mr. Thompson has publicly, and with the knowledge of the inhabitants of the borough, withdrawn himself from all co-operation with the Liberal party?—Well, it may be true, but I never heard of it till this moment. I do not recollect his taking any active part, but I do remember his stating that he had withdrawn.

12,977. (Mr. Price.) What is Mr. Thompson?—He is an ironmonger, who is one of the firm of Thompson Brothers, and he is also engaged in another business.

12,978. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember his making a declaration to this effect: I shall have nothing to do with a party which, after professing a desire for purity, has gone right into corrupt practices again, and brought so much disgrace on the Liberal party?—I do not remember hearing it, but from my knowledge of Mr. Thompson it is the likeliest thing in the world that he should say so.

12,979. Do you remember his making any declaration connecting the petition of 80 with the subsequent malpractices of some of those who signed it?—No, I do not remember. I do not recollect it.

12,980. You think it highly probable, however,

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

6 Sept. 1869.

from your knowledge of Mr. Thompson?—From my knowledge of Mr. Thompson and his character I should think it extremely likely that he made such a statement.

12,981. From that time to the moment of the election did you see him taking any part whatever beyond his giving his own vote?—None whatever; I do not remember seeing him.

12,982. (Mr. Price.) I think I saw a mistake in one of the newspaper reports. You said something about your having a present of 50*l.*, and then Mr. Vanderbyl presented you with 200*l.*?—Yes.

12,983. I think that is correct in the Bristol paper which I have before me, but one of the papers made out that you had more than that?—That is the sum.

12,984. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean at all events that Mr. Thompson's declining after that meeting to propose Mr. Vanderbyl as a candidate, it being previously expected that he would propose him——?—I know several persons declined to propose Mr. Vanderbyl that morning, and there was a great difficulty in finding a proposer and seconder. I know that perfectly well.

12,985. Was Mr. Thompson one of them?—That I cannot say. Mr. Vanderbyl had requested Mr. Hammill to propose him, and had relied on Mr. Hammill proposing him, and as he had taken the matter in his own hands, no arrangements had been made for finding a proposer and seconder on the morning of the nomination.

12,986. Was any reason given by those various persons for declining?—I do not know that any reason was given; they said that they would rather not.

12,987. (Mr. Price.) Was it, in point of fact, because Mr. Vanderbyl said he would not spend any money?—No, I do not think it was.

12,988. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it not the contrary?—No, certainly not in Mr. Thompson's case. In Mr. Thompson's case I think it was in consequence of the disclosures.

12,989. That was my question to you. There was a moment at which it became understood that Mr. Vanderbyl or his friends were no longer going to object to bribery; the question is, from the moment that was known and understood he and his friends were not going to object to bribery being practised in his interest, is it or is it not the fact that the various persons of whom you have spoken, Mr. Hammill and the rest who had been expected before to propose some one after the other declined to propose him?

12,990. On account of his no longer objecting to bribery?—I do not know.

12,991. From that moment when it was known or suspected that there was going to be bribery was not that it as to the post hoc; we will form our own opinion as to the propter hoc?—I cannot give you any reply, because it was not known in the town to what extent he was expected to go.

12,992. I will put it to you without reference to notoriety in the town, after the moment it became known to you and one or two more that in all probability there would be bribery on Mr. Vanderbyl's side to Mr. Vanderbyl's knowledge, or with the knowledge of his agents, was it not the fact that persons who before that were expected and had promised to propose and second him as a candidate for this borough did one and all, on being applied to, decline to do it?—I do not think anyone had proposed before.

12,993. Then who were expected?—Well, as far as expectation goes, we certainly thought that the leaders would——

12,994. Is it the fact that of those leaders as you call them, a number of persons, including one you have named, Mr. Hammill, did decline after you and one or two more became aware that Mr. Vanderbyl and his friends were going to bribe?—That is certainly the fact; whether there was any connexion between the two facts I do not know; it certainly was so, because I had this intelligence, as I told you, early in the morning on the nomination day, and it was not till after that that arrangements were directed to be made about the proposing and seconding.

12,995. (Mr. Price.) Why should there; was any hanging back as to getting a gentleman to propose Mr. Vanderbyl at all? You say no arrangement had been made by solicitors to nominate Mr. Vanderbyl?—I understood from Mr. Lovibond that Mr. Vanderbyl told him that he himself had written to Mr. Hammill, and the solicitors felt that that part of the arrangement had been taken out of their hands.

12,996. But are they the persons who arrange the minutiæ so far that they shall dictate who shall propose and second?—Certainly not; but my impression is that I myself saw that morning two or three persons to nominate Mr. Vanderbyl, and I am not quite sure that Mr. Thompson was not one.

12,997. (Mr. Coleridge.) However pure Mr. Thompson and Mr. Hammill's reason may have been, were not there several others who declined on the ground that by his refusal to find money he was endangering the position of the party?—Do you mean on that express ground?

12,998. Yes.—No, certainly not, I do not remember.

12,999. That it was bad diplomacy of Mr. Vanderbyl to stay in the field after declaring that he would spend no money, and they declined to propose him because they thought he was endangering Mr. Kinglake's seat?—No, I do not remember it. The persons who were applied to to nominate were not likely to be persons to do that.

13,000. (Mr. Price.) Whom did you apply to?—I think to two persons.

13,001. Who were they?—I would not be sure.

13,002. Did you ask Mr. James Wood Sully?—I think it is exceedingly likely, but I assure you I do not remember.

13,003. Do you remember whether he declined, or did he give any reason?—I think I asked him, and he certainly did decline, because he certainly did not do it.

13,004. You cannot give us another name?—No, my memory is not clear upon that point, but I remember making some applications on that subject, and very likely Mr. Sully was one.

13,005. Did it come to the nomination morning without anyone being arranged with to nominate Mr. Vanderbyl?—It did.

13,006. And who did it at last?—Mr. Hurman was fixed upon.

13,007. The gentleman who we have heard of?—The gentleman who we have heard of.

13,008. Who said he would not vote unless Sir John Shelley's bill was paid; he was one, and Mr. James Cook, junior, was fixed upon to second him.

13,009. Mr. Sully, the banker, proposed Mr. Kinglake?—I believe so.

13,010. And Mr. Winterbotham, the doctor, seconded it. The nomination of Mr. Vanderbyl by Mr. William Hurman was seconded by the same Mr. James Cook, junior, the attorney, of whom you have told us so much?—Yes, precisely.

13,011. Was not that the only candidate at that election who was either proposed or seconded by either one of the lawyers engaged in the contest?—I think that was so.

13,012. Have you any doubt now the names are brought to your recollection, or do you remember now that you had no doubt at that time, that the hesitation about proposing Mr. Vanderbyl, which you have alluded to, was caused by the disinclination of one at least if not more of the persons you have named to have any part even as proposer or seconder in an election which was going to be conducted on corrupt practices?—No, I am not sure of that at all, because I am not sure whether those persons were influenced by the bribery disclosures with respect to Mr. Vanderbyl, although they would vote for him; they did not like to take on themselves the responsibility of doing more.

13,013. I do not mean Mr. Thompson nor Mr. Hammill, but have you any doubt that Mr. Thompson or Mr. Hammill excepted some of those who objected to propose him; objected from the contrary ground, namely, that it was going to be a losing election, because, as they believed, there was going to be no bribery?—I do not think that was so.

13,014. Which are you most sure about, the reason which moved the pure and upright amongst those who objected, or the reason which moved those who were supposed to be not pure?—I believe the persons nominated to propose were likely to be influenced by pure motives.

13,015. And those who declined were more likely to be influenced in so doing by pure motives?—Yes; and I believe the pure motive was a dislike of the revelations made against Mr. Vanderbyl.

13,016. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean about the Lundy Granite Company?—Yes, I believe that influenced them, I am sure. It is what I thought at the time.

13,017. (Mr. Price.) But I suppose Mr. Thompson when he left the room had heard something said about bribery, had he not, at that meeting, and then got up and went away?—No, I do not think it was in consequence of that. What his precise reason for leaving the room was I cannot say, but what was said was simply that it was to be conducted as a pure election, and consequently Mr. Lovibond argued that it was no use for the candidates to stand.

13,018. Mr. Thompson heard at all events all that you heard at that meeting?—Yes, Mr. Thompson and I left almost at the same time.

13,019. But are we to understand that you did not approve of the appearance things had taken?—No, because there was no resolution. I left to keep an appointment at Wembdon.

13,020. For no other reason?—That is the precise reason why I left.

13,021. You were going on to 1866, Mr. Vanderbyl's single-handed election?—Yes.

13,022. You said you were not paid, but had a present afterwards, at Bagehot's election?—Yes.

13,023. When did you receive that present?—In the month of February in 1867; it was 50*l.*

13,024. You had 50*l.* from Mr. Bagehot for your services at the election of 1866?—Yes.

13,025. And what for your services in 1865, when Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl stood?—It was Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake. I made out an account then; that is with the accounts. I forget at this moment the precise sum.

13,026. But whatever it was you were paid it?—Whatever it was they went through it, Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, and I think they taxed something off it.

13,027. Who paid it eventually?—Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake, and it was carried into the published accounts.

13,028. Then your experience is not that which we have heard from Mr. Lovibond, that it is not the habit at this place for the solicitors to give their services gratuitously?

13,029. (Mr. Anstey.) With reference to that question which my learned colleague has asked you, is it not a fact that your name occurs in a list of 21, with respect to the election of 1865, alleged by the sitting member, Mr. Westropp, and by the petitioner, I suppose, against Mr. Kinglake, at all events by those who represented Mr. Westropp for the purpose of the scrutiny? I will give you the very words: "Alleged "to have been at the said election, that they have "received money or valuable consideration for having "voted at the said last election," and so on?—Yes, I think I was charged with five or six different offences, if I remember rightly.

13,030. (Mr. Coleridge.) It varied in pleading verbiage, I suppose?—Yes.

13,031. (Mr. Anstey.) You are also charged on the occasion with having been guilty of undue influence, and interfering with the one exercise of the franchise by means of bribes. Was anything of that sort proved against you?—Not the slightest; the only modicum of evidence brought against me was touching that interview with Mr. Heal, in Mr. Lovibond's office. There was no pretence for doing anything else.

13,032. (Mr. Anstey.) I am not asking you what was proved against you, but what was charged in the list of persons in the complaint handed in. Now, is there any connexion between any one of those statements and the question to which my learned colleague has just been examining you, namely, of your having received presents?—Well, I think the idea was this: I had charged in my bill for my travelling expenses for coming from Lyme Regis, where I was at the time, and I made a journey up the day before, at Mr. Lovibond's request, and then immediately after recording my vote I went back again in the morning.

13,033. Is that the only fact or incident?—That is all.

13,034. On which those charges of bribery could be founded?—I believe so at this distance of time, I believe on a technical point, or I thought that I ought not to have charged that expense.

13,035. I see from the cheque book that was used on that occasion entries of sums paid to the lawyers of equal amount?—Very probably.

13,036. Did you receive any present on that occasion?—None whatever; nothing but what you see published there.

13,037. About the undue influence, what was that about?—I was giving you on Saturday all that I had done with every voter, and the learned Commissioner stopped me, saying that I was not to give an account of my good deeds; but I can only say that I will give you, if you please, an account of every voter I was concerned with.

13,038. What was the pretext?—I cannot give you any other pretext, except I had seen Mr. Moule.

(Mr. Price.) I see by the report of the proceedings in the paper a paragraph stating that Mr. John Smith requests us to state that he did not, as reported, promise Mr. Westropp that he would not vote against him. I do not know how that may be on our notes, but he said here—the question here put to him was, when he wrote to Mr. Westropp, "No act of mine," I think were the words in his letter, "shall stay your progress." And he was asked whether he did not consider a vote against Mr. Westropp an act of his; and I see it is reported here, I do not know whether it is correct, that it was perfectly understood between him and Mr. Westropp that he was not to vote against him.

(Mr. Anstey.) No, that is incorrect; I recollect asking him. He said it was not understood, and he always meant to vote against Mr. Westropp.

(Mr. Price.) It is right that he and others should know that if they have any correction to make, the proper way is to come before us, and not to write to the newspapers to beg them to insert something which will be totally different from what was said. They can refer to the evidence which was given in the transcript of our notes, and see whether what they said has been misrepresented, and if so will have an opportunity of correcting it.

(Mr. Anstey.) Especially when the correction contains a suggestion of what is untrue, because, although he did not promise Mr. Westropp he would not vote against him, he has put his name to a letter in which he promised that no act of his shall be suffered to impede Mr. Westropp's chance of success.

(Mr. Price.) It does not at all improve our opinion of the credibility of Mr. John Smith's testimony which he tries to pick out things which are discreditable to him, by writing to the newspapers to get them to insert paragraphs contradicting them.

(The witness.) With reference to Mr. Vanderbyl's election, when it became by the appointment of Mr. Patten apparent that another election would take place, the first was that Mr. Bagehot should stand again, and, speaking from memory only, my impression is that a meeting took place to request him—we arrived at a resolution to request him—to stand again, and that request was in some way communicated to him, and by him declined, and then I find I have this letter——

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

13,039. (Mr. Price.) I should like very much, as we have never had any reason given, to know why Mr. Bagehot declined to come forward on that occasion?—I certainly can state that the reason is given in these letters communicated by Mr. Robins, and another reason was, as stated by himself at an interview, the expense of another contest so recently after one had occurred, and I find I have this letter from Mr. Lovibond, which was written to me in Wiltshire, where I was absent on business, dated 4th July 1866. Mr. Lovibond writes to me this:—

"Dear Barham,

"I have received a letter from Mr. Robins "this morning, who thinks it will be better to avoid a "contest so soon after the late defeat, and that our "friend will certainly be a candidate at the next "general election. This is a matter that requires our "most serious consideration and prompt determination. "I therefore propose meeting you in London at "Wood's Hotel on Friday evening, by the train that "arrives in town at 11 o'clock. I go to Newport in "the morning, and hope to join you on Sunday about "9 p.m.

"Yours faithfully,

"Henry Lovibond."

In consequence of that request I went direct to London, or to Wood's Hotel, I do not remember, but at all events we met there. We were in London some two or three days. I do not remember precisely the order of events, but my impression is the first person we saw was Mr. Kinglake, and with him we discussed the propriety of there being another contest. Whether that interview was then or shortly after the other interview with Mr. Bagehot I am not quite sure. We also certainly had another interview with Mr. Robins or one of his partners, and we also had an interview, I think, with Mr. Bagehot himself. I am quite certain, in fact, that we had an interview with Mr. Bagehot, because I remember one passage in which Mr. Bagehot was very desirous that there should be no contest then, but that the matter should remain quiet until the general election, which was then shortly expected, and he certainly did refer to the expenses of the recent contest as one reason which disinclined him to embark in the expense of another at so short a notice.

13,040. (Mr. Anstey.) The expense or the nature and object of the expense?—He said the "expense;" and I recollect Mr. Lovibond's reply well,—"Mr. "Bagehot, we shall be very glad indeed to have you "as a candidate, but if you will not stand our party "will not wait, and you must understand that we "shall have to look out for another candidate." I am not certain that those are the precise words, but I am quite certain that that was the effect of Mr. Lovibond's communication. Well, Mr. Bagehot still adhered to his determination not to stand, and then we thought it right to see if we could find any other person that would stand; and I remember that we called upon Mr. Travers Smith, and it was at that interview that Mr. Smith spoke about Mr. Reed in the manner I have stated to you on Saturday. I think that was almost the very first thing he stated to me when I came to see him.

13,041. (Mr. Price.) That Mr. Reed must be a madman?—Yes, I think that was about the first thing he said. Mr. Travers Smith at first threw cold water on the idea of our contesting the borough, and I think he said it was hardly usual to do so when a member merely came down for re-election on taking office. It was hardly considered the thing to do so, and he opposed the idea.

13,042. I think you must be wrong as to that being the date when Mr. Travers Smith said that Mr. Reed must be a madman, because I find on looking at your evidence you say that Mr. Smith said that "Mr. Reed "must be a madman, for he came and asked me to send "3,000*l.* down as if it were a bale of goods?"—Yes.

13,043. And then you go on to refer to something which has reference to Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—To Mr. Bagehot's election. You will find that is right.

13,044. That has reference to Mr. Vanderbyl's first election?—Yes. Mr. Reed went up to get the money for Mr. Vanderbyl's first election, and it was on the occasion of our seeing Mr. Travers Smith afterwards that he told us of Mr. Reed's coming up.

13,045. "He said he felt bound to follow Mr. "Lovibond, because he was a much abler man in "managing elections than Mr. Reed, who complained "that Mr. Lovibond had Mr. Kinglake in his own "hands, and wanted also to engross Mr. Vanderbyl?" —No, not Mr. Vanderbyl. That must be a misprint, or miswriting. He wanted to engross Mr. Bagehot. That was the object of our going to London.

13,046. Let us see how our note stands with regard to that, so as to get this clear. It was just towards the close of what you said on Saturday?—Yes; Mr. Reed had nothing whatever to do with Mr. Vanderbyl's coming down. It could not have been so. (The Chairman then referred to the transcript of the short-hand writer's notes.)

13,047. I cannot find it here in our note at all; so you had better proceed?—It is certainly so. I was describing our journey to London on the occasion of our going to see Mr. Bagehot.

13,048. (Mr. Coleridge.) Very well, go on?—Will you just recall to my recollection where I was last?

13,049. You were saying you wanted Mr. Bagehot to come down, and Mr. Bagehot would not do so?—Then we saw Mr. Travers Smith, and Mr. Travers Smith threw cold water on the thing; and Mr. Smith thought it would be better not to have a contest, as it was not the thing. Then I saw Mr. Kinglake on the subject; either we had seen him before, or that was the first time, I am not quite certain. Mr. Kinglake thought, looking at the circumstances of the case, that there might be a contest; and that opinion of Mr. Kinglake's was communicated to Mr. Travers Smith.

13,050. (Mr. Anstey.) By whom?—Well, either by ourselves, or by himself; certainly by us. Whether Mr. Kinglake also communicated it I am not sure, but certainly we did; and that altered Mr. Travers Smith's view, and he exerted himself to see whether he could find us a candidate, and I remember one or two persons being mentioned. I remember Mr. Pender being mentioned.

13,051. (Mr. Coleridge.) Fresh from Totnes?—The gentleman who was from Totnes.

13,052. (Mr. Anstey.) It was known who he was, I suppose?—Perfectly well.

13,053. And what he had done?—Perfectly well.

13,054. (Mr. Price.) Who mentioned him?—Well, I think he was suggested by Mr. Travers Smith; I think so. I think we were taking our instructions from him, and I remember we called at Mr. Pender's house, and we did not see Mr. Pender; but the impression that I have of Mr. Pender's reply conveyed to us through Mr. Travers Smith was this, that he had quite enough on his hands from the Totnes election without interfering with anything else.

(Mr. Coleridge.) What time in the year was this, Vanderbyl's election; at the end of July, was it not?

13,055. (Mr. Anstey.) It was June?—Yes.

13,056. That was the very time that Mr. Pender was summoned to attend before the commissioners at Totnes?—Very likely. The time I am speaking of is the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th July.

13,057. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you not aware that Mr. Pender was incapable of sitting as a member, and was not Mr. Travers Smith aware of that also?—That I cannot say.

13,058. Mr. Pender was reported to the House of Commons as being the only person guilty of bribery at Totnes?—I was not aware of that.

13,059. At all events it was so, and he was afterwards whitewashed of what the report had charged him with?—I do not know that I knew it at the time.

13,060. Was Mr. Brand or Mr. Glyn present at any of those interviews?—I do not recollect whether they were or not. I am not sure whether at one of the interviews I did not see Mr. Brand, and I think we also saw Mr Drake; but it was Mr. Travers Smith who had most to do with this.

13,061. When was it you say you saw Mr. Drake or Mr. Brand?—When I was in London on one occasion. I cannot recall the time.

13,062. Was it on the subject of procuring a candidate that you were up in London?—I have not the slightest doubt that it was.

13,063. Do you remember whether they referred Mr. Brand or Mr. Drake to you as a fitting member?—I do not remember.

13,064. At all events, the suggestion of Mr. Pender came from Mr. Travers Smith?—Yes.

13,065. (Mr. Anstey.) You called to see Mr. Pender but did not find him at home?—No.

13,066. You found he had gone to Totnes, and was undergoing examination?—Certainly he was not at home.

13,067. (Mr. Price.) Had Mr. Drake anything to do with the transaction?—I understood Mr. Drake had to do with the transaction as well as Mr. Travers Smith. The whole thing was new to me.

13,068. You understood that Mr. Drake and Mr. Smith had the management of the thing?—I did.

13,069. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was suggested besides Mr. Pender?—Then I remember Mr. Brogden was suggested, and Mr. Brogden came to Mr. Travers Smith's office in the city, and we waited while he had a long interview with Mr. Travers Smith; and the result of it was—— I think he did not actually decline, but he did not seem to be willing to go down. I do not think it was an actual refusal.

13,070. (Mr. Price.) Did you know of Mr. Brogden's connexion with Yarmouth?—Well, we knew that he had just been contesting Yarmouth against the two Conservatives, and that he was one of the unsuccessful candidates. Oh yes, we were aware of that.

13,071. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you knew that Mr. Brogden did not claim the seat?—I do not think I was aware of that, but I knew he had been contesting Yarmouth. Well, we were unable at that time to get any other name from Mr. Travers Smith with the exception of a Mr. Campbell, of Buscot Park, and in order to know what he would do it was necessary that we should go to Buscot Park.

13,072. Near Farringdon?—Yes. I think the character of Mr. Brogden's reply was such that we thought we would make another effort to get Mr. Brogden to stand. We thought there was a chance of his acceding to our request.

13,073. (Mr. Anstey.) What reply did he make?—I am only judging of that from what we did. I am only judging that that must be so from the course we took.

13,074. (Mr. Price.) That he wanted a little pressing?—Yes.

13,075. (Mr. Coleridge.) Up to that time had Mr. Brogden asked you what the expense would be?—I do not think we had had up to that time any personal interview with Mr. Brogden till Mr. Smith had seen him. I think he had an interview with Mr. Travers Smith while we were in the next room.

13,076. Had Mr. Travers Smith asked you what the expense would be?—No, I do not think he did.

13,077. Not at that time?—No.

13,078. Did you say anything about expenses at all?—Well, I do not think we did. We thought Mr. Smith was a man who knew so much about these things that it was not necessary to say anything to him about it.

13,079. You have said, in the previous month of June, only a month before, that you had spent so much money—you, the lawyers, the local people—that it was thought advisable to resort to a little bribery, because you were not in funds for presenting a petition?—Yes.

13,080. Now, surely, in the following month of July you would have been still more out of funds than you were in June. Do you mean to say nothing was said at any of these meetings between you and Mr. Smith, or between Mr. Smith and Mr. Lovibond, as to Mr. Brogden finding the money?—No; I firmly believe nothing of the kind was said. It was one of those things which would pass sub silentio.

13,081. (Mr. Price.) You say nothing passed about money; can you tell us any other candidate that was suggested, because the ones you have mentioned here are all of them tainted with bribery except Mr. Campbell?—I have told you of Mr. Pender, Mr. Brogden, and Mr. Campbell.

13,082. Was Mr. Campbell said to be a rich man?—He was said to be a rich man.

13,083. (Mr. Anstey.) Was anything said about money, about expenditure?—It was thought they were all wealthy men.

13,084. (Mr. Price.) Was it a sine quâ non with you and the other gentlemen who went up with you, that they must all be rich men?—They were all rich men.

13,085. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you told Mr. Travers Smith that they must be all rich men?—No.

13,086. Then how do you account for the fact that they brought forward Mr. Pender, who was tainted with bribery, Mr. Brogden, who was also tainted with bribery, and Mr. Vanderbyl, who was tainted with bribery, and Mr. Campbell, who was a rich man; they were all of one class; they were all rich men, and the three first were tainted with bribery; how do you account for their having been brought forward?—I do not know.

13,087. You think that Mr. Travers Smith acted on his own knowledge?—I think that Mr. Travers Smith acted on his own knowledge.

13,088. And it was not necessary to tell him?—No. We made an effort to see Mr. Brogden personally before leaving town, and I remember we went to his office at Westminster, not very far from the Houses of Parliament. We did not find him there, but we saw a clerk of his, a Mr. Salmon, and whether it was that an appointment was made, or whether it was that Mr Brogden was out of town, and was expected in the evening, this I remember distinctly, that the result was that Mr. Salmon, Mr. Lovibond, and myself, went about 11 o'clock at night out to Notting Hill.

13,089. Mr. Salmon was Mr. Pender's private secretary?—No, Mr. Brogden's private secretary. We three went together out to Mr. Brogden's private residence, which I think was somewhere out in Notting Hill direction, and when we arrived at his house we were told he was gone to bed. However, Mr. Salmon got upstairs, and explained to him shortly the nature of our business, and he had an interview with us in his drawing room in his dressing gown, and at that interview we pressed him very strongly to come down to Bridgwater, but he said he would like to do so very much indeed, but he did not like to give up the idea of representing Yarmouth; he thought he had a very good chance of representing Yarmouth at a future election, and therefore he could not give up that idea.

(Mr. Coleridge.) He was of a sanguine nature.

13,090. (Mr. Price.) He had made a good foundation at Yarmouth he thought?—A good foundation at Yarmouth. He did not say that, but he said he did not like to give up the idea of representing Yarmouth, and his friends were very sanguine about his return on a future occasion. That was the ground on which he declined.

13,091. Was any question put to him as to expense?—I do not think there was, because he declined, and it had not gone so far as that.

13,092. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he recommend Mr. Vanderbyl to you?—No. I have not got so far as that.

13,093. (Mr. Anstey.) Go on?—Failing that, by that time it had got to Saturday evening, the next day we went down—Mr. Lovibond and myself having, I believe, got the address from Mr. Travers Smith—we went down to Mr. Campbell, at Buscot Park; I think so. We stopped at the Farringdon Road station; it is not called the Farringdon Road station now, it is called by some other name, and we got out to Buscot Park.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

6 Sept. 1869.

13,094. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is called Moulsey, I think ?—It is called by some other name. However, we saw Mr. Campbell, and he asked us about our business; he asked about the expense, and I believe Mr. Lovibond told him he thought it would be about 1,500*l.* Well, he said he would consider of it. There was a good deal of conversation which I cannot at this distance of time recall.

13,095. Did not he ask you how that money was to be spent ?—I think he did, but I do not think he got any answer. Mr. Lovibond was not going to tell him in so many words that it was the cost of bribery, but I think Mr. Lovibond, told him "You are a man of the world, and know elections are always expensive," and he parried the question in that way; but I have no doubt there was enough said from which he could infer that bribery was meant, and I have no doubt he did infer it. He told us he would take it into consideration, and would write us, and we left and took the train, and got down to as far as Bath; and we stayed a little time at Bath, and had some dinner, for I do not think we had had anything to eat since the morning, and after that we got into a night train to go down to Bridgwater; and exactly as we stepped into a first-class carriage, somebody sleeping in the opposite corner—there was nobody else in the carriage—woke up, and who else should it be but Mr. Salmon, and he said, "Why you are the very persons I was coming down to see;" and he explained to us that as soon as we left London, either he or Mr. Brogden, I do not know which, had thought of Mr. Vanderbyl as a candidate for Bridgwater.

13,096. What did he say ?—He had brought Mr. Vanderbyl's address in case he should be accepted as a candidate; the draft of Mr. Vanderbyl's address to the constituents.

13,097. He told you that Mr. Brogden would not stand, but that Mr. Vanderbyl would ?—He told me that Mr. Brogden would not stand, but that Mr. Vanderbyl would.

13,098. (Mr. Price.) He gave you the draft of Mr. Vanderbyl's address ?—Yes.

13,099. Who is the Mr. Salmon you are speaking of ?—The Mr. Salmon I am speaking of is clerk to Mr. Brogden.

13,100. What is his christian name ?—I do not know.

13,101. Where does he live ?—I only knew him by seeing him at Mr. Brogden's office at Westminster.

13,102. Is he still in that employment ?—I do not know at all; I have not seen him for some time.

13,103. What is the nature of the business of Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Brogden ?—I do not think Mr. Vanderbyl is the partner of Mr. Brogden.

13,104. What is Mr. Brogden ?—I think Mr. Brogden is the owner of large collieries in South Wales.

13,105. And largely connected with ironworks—the Ulverton Ironworks ?—Yes, something like that.

13,106. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where is his office ?—Somewhere about those new streets in Westminster.

13,107. (Mr. Anstey.) Victoria Street ?—Somewhere about there.

13,108. He gave you a draft address ?—Yes.

13,109. And did you accept the address in the form in which it was drawn up ?—We made some little alterations in it.

13,110. While you were going on ?—Yes; and it was afterwards printed and published. We met the leaders of the Liberal party the day after, and told them what we had done.

13,111. Before you got down to Bridgwater, had you told Mr. Salmon Mr. Vanderbyl was to be the Liberal candidate ?—Yes. The next morning there was a meeting at Mr. George Sully's office, and we reported to him what we had been told about this Mr. Vanderbyl by Mr. Salmon.

13,112. Did Mr. Salmon tell you the figure he would go to ?—No, I do not think he told us the figure he would go to, but I think he suggested that he had plenty of money and was ready to spend it.

13,113. Was anything suggested on the way down as to what amount you thought would be wanted ?—No, I do not think it was mentioned.

13,114. But there was a conversation by which it was perfectly understood that there was a sum of money wanted ?—I do not affect a doubt about it, that that was implied in the conversation. Well, Mr. Vanderbyl's name was suggested at this meeting, and he was accepted as a candidate.

13,115. (Mr. Price.) Now at that meeting was anything said about money ?—No, not a word.

13,116. You kept that carefully from them ?—That was kept carefully from them.

13,117. Who was at that meeting ?—At this distance of time I should not like to say.

13,118. How many were there present ?—I should say perhaps about 10 or 12 persons, some such number as that; I cannot remember.

13,119. Was the mayor there ?—I think so.

13,120. Mr. Hammill ?—I cannot remember. I should only be telling you at guess work. I really do not remember.

13,121. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember anyone telling you at that meeting that Mr. Vanderbyl, being an evilly noted man at Yarmouth with regard to bribery and corrupt practices, was not a fit person to represent Bridgwater ?—I do not think it was so.

13,122. It was reported in the newspapers ?—No. Yarmouth is a long way from here. I think you will find that the inquiry was a long time after this, and I do not think we knew more then than this, that Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Brogden had unsuccessfully contested Yarmouth.

13,123. And had not claimed the seat ?—No, I do not think we knew anything about that.

13,124. (Mr. Coleridge.) And had unsuccessfully petitioned ?—Well, I think, speaking from memory, that you will find that the petition had not been decided at that time.

(Mr. Coleridge.) The petition was, but not the commission.

13,125. (Mr. Anstey.) There had been a full inquiry before a committee of the House of Commons, and the committee had reported that extensive corrupt practices had prevailed in the borough of Yarmouth ?—I am only speaking of my own impression, and my own feeling is that at that time I did not know it.

13,126. (Mr. Price.) Was there any inquiry as to where you had picked up Mr. Vanderbyl, and did any of these other gentlemen make any inquiry as to where you had heard of Mr. Vanderbyl, and who he was ?—No; we stated we had been in London, and got him as a candidate.

13,127. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell the meeting that he was a wealthy man ?—No.

13,128. And was ready to spend money ?—No, we certainly did not do that.

13,129. Is it not the fact that the readiness or unreadiness of candidates to spend money was always discussed quietly and snugly among the lawyers, and not brought under the notice of what may be called the pro formâ meetings of the town ?—That is what you may assume.

13,130. Now go on ?—Mr. Vanderbyl's address was printed and published, and I think he came down the very same evening.

13,131. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many days was that before the nomination ?—That is what I was just going to look for; that was two days before the nomination. Monday was the 9th; I think that was the day he came, and on the 11th I see was the nomination.

13,132. And the 12th the election ?—The 12th the election.

13,133. And then there was not much time to spare ?—Very little time to spare.

13,134. Who met Mr. Vanderbyl when he came down ?—Mr. Vanderbyl came down, and Brogden with him, and he was met by a large crowd of spectators, and a carriage was there waiting for him, and he drove up into the middle of the town; and I think it was at first arranged that he should address the constituents in the room in George Lane, but I think that was found not sufficiently large, and they went out in the Cornhill.

13,135. (Mr. Price.) What did he come here for? Was Mr. Brogden known to the Bridgwater people here?—No, we understood him to come down to make arrangements to spend Mr. Vanderbyl's money, as Mr. Vanderbyl's friend.

13,136. As his wet nurse?—That is what we understood at the time, and that is precisely what he did. I cannot say precisely the day or the hour, but a communication took place between Mr. Brogden and myself.

13,137. (Mr. Coleridge.) When would that be; the day before the nomination?—I cannot say; very likely.

13,138. It must have been the day before. It was all arranged on the day before the nomination?—Yes. What I did communicate to Mr. Brogden was this——

13,139. Who told you to communicate with Mr. Brogden?—That was arranged between Mr. Lovibond and myself.

13,140. (Mr. Anstey.) What did you tell him?—The effect, sir, was this, that personally I intended to have nothing to do with the illegal expenditure of money, but that if he wanted a person who knew the electors, he could go to Mr. Andrew Allan. The effect of it was to point out Mr. Andrew Allan as the person who would make the expenditure.

13,141. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you tell him the amount that would be likely to be wanted?—That certainly had been communicated to him, that it would be about 1,500*l.*; I do not know whether it was by Mr. Lovibond or myself. That is all I remember up to the evening of the nomination.

13,142. (Mr. Anstey.) What did he say to that suggestion of yours about going to Andrew Allan?—I understood that he assented to it.

13,143. (Mr. Coleridge.) How was the money to be got?—Well, that was left entirely to Mr. Brogden.

13,144. That was left to him?—That was left to him. How he got that 1,500*l.* I do not know.

13,145. (Mr. Anstey.) He quietly assented to it?—Yes. I then supposed I had nothing more to do with the matter, but the next morning, somewhere about 9 o'clock——

13,146. (Mr. Coleridge.) The nomination day, or the polling day?—No, on the morning of the polling day. I am speaking of the morning of the polling. The next morning, about 9 o'clock, I was applied to to get a cheque cashed, and that was a cheque for 100*l.*

13,147. Of whose?—Of Mr. Brogden's.

13,148. By whom?—Well, I think it was Mr. Brogden himself in the first instance, and my belief is that I went first of all to the West of England Bank.

13,149. That is Mr. Ford's?—That is my own bankers, but Mr. Ford was out of town that day, and therefore, this is my belief, and not my positive statement, you are taking down, finding that could not be done, and not finding Mr. Ford, Mr. Lovibond then told me to go to Mr. Prior in the square, and get it cashed through Mr. Prior.

13,150. (Mr. Anstey.) Through Mr. Sealy's bank?—Through Mr. Sealy's bank. He told me to go to Mr. Prior, and I went to Mr. Prior, and Mr. Prior said, "I cannot cash it yet, as the bank is not open, "and Mr. Sealy will object to anything of this "kind."

13,151. What o'clock was this?—Between 9 and 10. However, I left the cheque with Mr. Prior, and requested him, as soon as he could get the cheque cashed, to send the money over to me at the committee room in George Lane; and then I think that I got into the West of England Bank before that was open. That is the impression that is left on my mind. I must mention that there is a double entrance to the West of England Bank. There is one entrance in front, in the Cornhill, and then there is a passage out through the bank and through the manager's residence, which leads right into the committee rooms in George Lane, a private entrance, and my impression is this, that I found Mr. Reynolds, who was the clerk or the cashier of the bank, acting in Mr. Ford's absence, and I obtained from him cash for another cheque before the bank actually opened, and that I took the money through the private entrance to the committee room in George Lane.

13,152. (Mr. Coleridge.) To whom did you give it?—As I got it and as it was wanted I gave it to Mr. Allan.

13,153. (Mr. Anstey.) How much did you get?—I got it in different sums.

13,154. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got first 100*l.* you have told us?—The first was a cheque for 100*l.*, and then when young Mr. Prior came over with that cheque——

13,155. (Mr. Anstey.) You have not told us of that. I ask you, how much do you suppose you got on this occasion from the West of England Bank?—On the first occasion?

13,156. On this occasion you speak of?—I cannot recall it.

13,157. You had better tell us it in your own way?—What I did with the West of England Bank was this: they let me have the money on a memorandum of my own, and in the course of the day I saw Mr. Brogden, and I told him how much I had taken out of the West of England, and he then gave me a cheque for the amount, which I gave to the West of England Bank.

13,158. Now go back to what you were saying about that cheque you had left with Mr. Prior?—By-and-by young Mr. Prior came over with the cheque of 100*l.*, and I think it was then that I gave him the cheque of 300*l.*, and asked him to get that cashed, which he did.

13,159. Both those cheques were Mr. Brogden's cheques on the Manchester Bank?—Both those cheques were Mr. Brogden's cheques on the Manchester Bank. In the course of the day I occasionally went into Mr. Allan's house, and he said he wanted more money, and as it was wanted I had it from the West of England Bank, until it came up to the sum altogether of 1,500*l.*, and I made up two accounts for Mr. Brogden, and on the first he gave me a cheque for 700*l.*, and the next time he gave me a cheque for 800*l.*

13,160. Was the young Mr. Prior who brought those two cheques over to you, the 100*l.* and the 300*l.*, the same Mr. Prior who gave the money to Mr. Lovibond on the last election?—Yes.

13,161. (Mr. Coleridge.) You got money from two different banks?—Yes.

13,164. (Mr. Anstey.) You got the money from the West of England on a memorandum of your own?—They let me have the money in small sums, on just a little note; 200*l.* or 300*l.* from time to time, as it might be wanted.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Ford here?

(Mr. Ford stood up.)

(Mr. Anstey.) Have you got this memorandum?

(Mr. Ford.) I had it at the time.

(Mr. Anstey.) Have you the memorandum in your bank now?

(Mr. Ford.) Not that I am aware of; I dare say they were torn up at the time.

13,165. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say Mr. Brogden gave you these cheques for 700*l.* and 800*l.* to repay the West of England Bank what you had had from it?—Yes.

13,166. Did he give you a cheque to satisfy Sealy's bank?—No. My position with Sealy's bank was quite different to what it was with the West of England Bank. I did not have the money from Sealy's in the same way. I should tell you, first of all, how I got it. I think it was all gold from Sealy's bank, and I think I had some gold also from the West of England Bank, but they were afraid of parting with all their gold, in case the opposite party should come in and ask them to cash a cheque, so as to test them. I remember something of that kind, and I remember I took a number of notes, not the West of England notes, but a number of Stuckey's notes, which is a Somersetshire bank.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

13,167. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say "they" were afraid; who were afraid? Do you mean Mr. Sealy? —No. The West of England Bank.

13,168. Then who was afraid of parting with all the gold?—I mean Mr. Reynolds, the cashier.

13,169. (Mr. Price.) You did not want it to appear what you were doing by drawing out too many sovereign from one bank that day?—I think that must be so. I think Mr. Reynolds was afraid of parting with all his gold.

13,170. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is Mr. Reynolds still alive, and is here?—He is still alive, but he is not here. (Mr. Ford.) He is at Newport.

13,171. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand you to say that you sent for small sums to the West of England Bank from time to time, and they let you have the money from time to time on your own memorandums, because you were a customer?—Yes.

13,172. And you had no such claim on Mr. Sealy? —No.

13,173. How came you to get the second cheque cashed?—I believe when young Mr. Prior came over I asked him to cash the cheque.

13,174. And you did not like to ask him for any more?—I did not like to ask him for any more. At the end of the day I had 200*l.* in notes left in my possession, and I told Mr. Brogden of this, and I said, "Now sir, shall I hand these notes to you, "or shall I keep them? there are sure to be further "claims brought in;" and he said, "You had better "keep them." I took them home and locked them up, and kept them some few days; and then, a meeting taking place some few days afterwards at Mr. Lovibond's office about the accounts, I brought in the money and handed it to Mr. Lovibond.

13,175. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Brogden express any surprise when you were asking him for these very large cheques, and also when you told him after the election, that there were outstanding claims, or might be, and you proposed to keep this 200*l.*?—I said, "What are your instructions? Do you mean to fight and "win, or do you mean to lose this election?" and he said, "Go in and win, be the cost what it may be;" and so the conversation ended in that way.

13,176. Of course, after that, he expressed no surprise at any accounts you brought in?—None whatever.

13,177. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had carte blanche? —I had carte blanche. I have already given my evidence about Mr. Symmons on that day, and then, in addition to that, I must state that Mr. Bussell, in his evidence, alluded to his having seen some person in authority near Mr. Allan's, in George Lane, and having spoken to him about Buttle. I believe, sir, I was the person. At all events, I know somebody came to me, and made a statement precisely similar to that which Mr. Bussell has sworn to; and I therefore did authorize the payment of the 40*l.* We had made up the lists of the unpolled voters, and I believe the securing of Buttle was the securing of the election. I think it turned upon that one vote; and it was reported to me a quarter of an hour afterwards that when Buttle presented himself at the polling booth, somebody exclaimed, I think it was Mr. Brice, "Then it's all over, there's an end of the election," or something of that sort; and then I found that the Conservatives had turned every man out of the "Clarence."

13,178. (Mr. Anstey.) Those who were bottled?— Those who were bottled. That is my impression.

13,179. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Redfern down at the election?—I do not remember.

13,180. Or Mr. Lomas?—I do not remember.

13,181. Or Mr. Salmon?—I do not know; I believe he was, but I am not sure.

13,182. (Mr. Price.) Why did Mr. Brice say it was all over when Mr. Buttle presented himself at the polling booth?—We had a certain number of voters who held back, who were quite above taking a bribe, and who were exceedingly annoyed at having lost the previous election, and they thought they would try to keep back a reserve guard, so as to make us lawyers do all we could in getting voters by means of bribes. They had understood it was through the lawyers that on the previous election they had lost, and they thought that by keeping back a number of voters it would make the lawyers do all they could.

13,183. I want to know how it was that the moment Buttle appeared on the scene at the polling booth the thing was considered to be all over?—They had a certain number of men bottled up at the "Clarence," and we had a certain number of voters still unpolled, which they knew, and although there was a considerable number on each side still unpolled, one single vote was enough to turn the balance.

13,184. Mr. Vanderbyl won by a great number?— You will see the reason of that. After the men were turned out of the "Clarence," they went straight down into the town, and some of them voted on our side, and some of the Conservatives when they were turned out did not vote at all.

13,185. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand you to say that the voters on your side thought you had not spent the money judiciously, and had not bought the voters you ought to have bought; but when they saw this Buttle being polled, then they thought you had begun to bribe judiciously?—I am not talking of that. I am talking of a Conservative on the other side saying it was all over.

13,186. You answer too quickly. Do not answer the questions before they are put. You say there were a certain number of voters on your side who would not take bribes themselves, and who thought you ought to bribe others who were bribable, and they were keeping back some voters in order to keep you on your guard, in order to compel you to bribe other persons?—Yes.

13,187. I want to know whether when they saw this man Buttle they knew then that you were acting all right?—No, I do not mean to say that.

(Mr. Price.) How was it Buttle turned the whole thing? You say the moment Buttle was seen, then Mr. Brice was seized with a panic, and said it was all over. Why did he think that?

13,188. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the state of the poll when Buttle voted?—We were ahead; not very much ahead. What we were looking at was, not the precise state of the poll, but the number of unpolled voters.

13,189. (Mr. Anstey.) Very well, Buttle was only one unpolled voter?—Yes.

13,190. And there were many others?—Yes.

13,191. And there were a great many bottled up at the "Clarence"?—Yes.

13,192. (Mr. Price.) What the learned Commissioner asked you is, why did that one unpolled voter's appearance on the scene, there being many others also unpolled, cause Mr. Brice to say that the thing was over?—I will put a hypothetical case to explain what I mean. Supposing the Conservatives had 12 unpolled voters bottled at the "Clarence," and supposing we also had 12 unpolled voters, then one single vote outside those two twelves will turn the election; and my opinion at that time was that Buttle was the one.

13,193. Do you mean to say they had polled up as close as that at that time?—My opinion was that it would run up as close as that.

13,194. You say they shortly afterwards turned the unpolled voters out of the "Clarence"?—Yes.

13,195. Do you mean they turned them out in despair?—Yes.

13,196. You had not heard that they did not want to poll them?—No.

13,197. I understood you to say that there were a certain number of unbribable men on your side who were holding back, not the men who were "bottled," or the 12 men on the other side, but who were waiting till you had exhausted all your resources in getting the bribable men up. They would out-balance the 12 bribable men at the "Clarence"?—I am only stating a hypothetical number.

13,198. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Buttle the last of the men you polled of your own bribable men?—Buttle was scarcely one side or the other.

13,199. Was he the last of the balance men?—I thought he was the last available man.

13,200. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said that after you had polled Buttle you had polled all, or nearly all, of the men that were turned out of the "Clarence"?—Yes, but they were not available till they were turned out of the "Clarence."

13,201. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know how many were polled after they were turned out of the "Clarence"?—I do not know.

13,202. Do you know how many were turned out of the "Clarence"?—I do not know. I knew them at the time, but I do not know them now.

13,203. I understood you to say that when you had polled Buttle you had polled the last of the bribable men who were not "bottled up" at the Clarence"?—I think so; nearly so.

13,204. Then, that being all you had to bribe, there were a certain number whom you knew would poll without being bribed?—Exactly.

13,205. And any extra men who would be wanted to swell the majority you knew would have to be turned out of the "Clarence," and would have to be bribed?—Exactly.

13,206. (Mr. Anstey.) The majority was a large one. If you polled 12 men, that only makes in your favour 24; if you polled 24, that only makes 48. How do you make it so large an actual majority as you had on that occasion?—The actual majority was 36.

13,207. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many were polled out of the constituency; tell us what the constituency was, and how many were polled?—I do not know what the constituency was, but it was polled up from every class. The total of the constituency was 679.

13,208. And how many were polled?—Mr. Vanderbyl polled, according to one entry I have got, 311, and according to another, 312; and Mr. Patton, according to one entry, 275, and according to another, 276. Then, of course there were many voters who were absent.

13,209. That is 586 out of how many?—Out of 679.

13,210. So that there were very nearly 100 left unpolled?—Yes; but if you inquire into that, you will find many were dead, many at sea, and many absent, and many who were known would not poll at all.

13,211. You say besides those there were others turned out of the "Clarence" who would not poll at all?—Yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) Do you know anything else of what took place upon that day?

13,212. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have got to the 200*l.* you gave to Mr. Lovibond at the meeting two or three days after the election?—Yes. I do not remember anything else that day; but after that the Conservatives were exceedingly angry at the result of the election, and threatened a petition, and talked about the election in very loud language.

13,213. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear Mr. Patton's speech on his bidding farewell?—No.

13,214, Do you remember, on his bidding farewell, his speaking of his intention to present a petition?—I think I did hear of that. I do not think there was anything took place on our side until the 1st of August; that is the first entry in my diary, and I find that on that day I was engaged with Mr. Lovibond two and a half hours in going through accounts, and I remember that was the day we met Allan, when he presented his accounts, and we went through them; I believe that was the day.

13,215. If Mr. Patton or the Conservatives had presented a petition, were you prepared with a counter case of bribery and corrupt practices against them at that election?—Very likely we were not prepared for it at that time, but no doubt it would have been got up if they had claimed the seat. There was no doubt they had been guilty of corrupt practices.

13,216. You knew that at that time?—We were perfectly well aware of it.

13,217. You knew of the "bottling" at that time?—Yes.

13,218. And probably the drenching with drink?—Yes.

13,219. But certainly the bottling of 12 voters up at the "Clarence" at that time?—Yes.

13,220. And I ask you, if you knew of that at the time, would you have been prepared to file a counter petition, supposing they claimed the seat?—If they had claimed the seat, we certainly should have done so.

13,221. Then are we to understand that the reason of the Conservatives not carrying out the promise or threat of presenting a petition against your member, Mr. Vanderbyl, was that they knew it would be fruitless, in consequence of bribery on their part?—I never doubted it for a moment.

13,222. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that all the money you know of as having been expended, 1,900*l.* by Mr. Brogden?—1,900*l.* by Mr. Brogden, and then another 1,400*l.* Mr. Allan has spoken to. Mr. Allan has told you that he had 1,400*l.* from Mr. Brogden the night before the election, which was brought to him in a bag and handed over to him.

13,223. As Mr. Allan dealt with it all, he dealt with, as he told us, nearly 4,000*l.*?—Yes.

13,224. Then when were you paid for your part in this election? You told us that Mr. Vanderbyl gave you 200*l.* at that election?—Yes, that was for the costs at that very election, and that he gave me on the 6th October. Mr. Vanderbyl paid me 200*l.*

13,225. In fact, you got paid by him for that election before you were paid by Mr. Bagehot for the former one?—Just so.

13,226. (Mr. Price.) How far does your knowledge of these matters tally with the asseveration of Mr. Allan and Mr. Bussell, that the men who do all this part of the work get nothing in the way of remuneration? You get your 200*l.*, or your 50*l.*, and so forth; how does your knowledge tally with their asseveration that they never get a farthing?—I only know this, that unless they stick to some portion of the money they do not get anything.

13,227. Unless they stick to some portion of the money?—Yes.

13,228. But do you know that they do stick to some of it, because it is the opinion in this borough that some of the money that is given for the voters does not get to the voters?—My two experiences were very short.

13,229. But they were very considerable?—They were.

13,230. On a large scale?

13,231. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Allan give you any list of how he had spent that money?—He did.

13,232. Where is it?—That was the list we had in Mr. Lovibond's office. I have no other.

13,233. That is the one which has been handed to us?—Yes.

13,234. (Mr. Anstey.) Pursuing the question which was put to you by the learned Chief Commissioner, and your answer to it, bearing in mind that you, the lawyers, the patrons of the borough, were always remunerated, and sometimes largely remunerated, in the way you have described, and that the inferior agents were not nominally employed on the promise of remuneration, I ask you, was it not the fact that there was a perfect understanding amongst you, the lawyers, and the candidates, that if from the expenditure there was an unappropriated balance remaining in the hands of those persons, Allan, Bussell, and others, it was not to be handed back to you and returned to the candidates, but that they might keep it if they liked, and no questions would be asked?—No, I do not think there was that understanding.

13,235. Why do you not think so?—Because I remember a discussion with Allan at the very time, as to whether Mr. White had fully accounted for the money entrusted to him.

13,236. Was not the discussion, not about the balance after the fair expenditure of money, but the interception of a certain sum of money on its way to a voter? Was not the question as to whether White had not been guilty of fraud in having appropriated money to his own use which was entrusted to him to give to another person?—Yes.

13,237. The question is not asked you with reference to a fradulent sticking to money intended for other people; but supposing there was an honest application of the money in bribery, if you can understand such a word as "honest" being used in connexion with bribery, I use it very much in the same way that we speak of honesty among thieves; but supposing a certain sum of money is handed over to a bribing agent, and he is told, "With this money bribe all the bribable voters you can come across," and he goes and bribes them all, and accounts, as I said before, honestly for every sum he has expended, and shows in his account that he had polled the men; but when you come to look at it you find that there is also shown on the same document an unappropriated balance, say 150*l.* or 160*l.*, which he does not claim to have expended, and which he charges himself with the possession of, but which he has not paid over; is it not certain that the person who has done this service and is not to be remunerated aliunde, is not to be remunerated by you, that nothing more would be said about it if he kept the money in his hands, and he would not be interfered with?—He certainly would not be interfered with.

13,238. Would there be the disposition to ask for it?—But certainly, according to the practice which was then prevailing, it would be expected that he should hand it over.

13,239. What remuneration would these men get?—None at all. I remember perfectly well talking with Mr. Lovibond upon that.

13,240. What did you say to him?—I said it was very wrong not to pay them anything at all. I said, "It would be better to pay them money, and amply."

13,241. What did he say to that?—He said it was an encouragement to them to become rogues. He said, "You may depend upon it that if you pay them "they will keep some of the other money as well." I remember the very point being discussed.

13,242. (Mr. Price.) Then was it thought likely that Mr. Bussell, I take him as a representative man, Allan was the first man, but he is in a somewhat inferior position—I am not speaking at all in a derogatory manner of Mr. Bussell—but supposing Mr. Bussell is a representative man, and a man who is to go and do all this dirty work at every election, and is to be reported to the House of Commons and to be put in peril of being prosecuted, is it understood that he is to do it for mere love of the cause, whilst you gentlemen are getting 200*l.* apiece for doing much the same thing?—That is precisely the state of things.

(Mr. Price.) Then I think that speaks in favour of Mr. Bussell.

13,243. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not it strike you as being an extraordinary state of things?—It did, and I spoke about it.

13,244. And considering Allan and Bussell were not patrons of the borough, and you gentlemen professed to be so?—It did strike me, and I remember I spoke about it at the time.

13,245. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know what the other lawyers got on Mr. Vanderbyl's election? What did Mr. Lovibond get?—I believe he got exactly the same as I did.

13,246. The same?—Precisely.

13,247. What did Messrs. Reed and Cook get?—I am not quite sure; I think they had 100*l.* only.

13,248. And what did Mr. Haviland get?—I do not remember.

13,249. Did not Mr. Haviland make some claim?—I think Mr. Haviland's claim was made, and paid on the account being carried in.

13,250. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you any reason to believe that on either of those two elections (I put these questions to Mr. Bussell and Mr. Allan), they not having to be remunerated by you, that any portion of the money stuck to their fingers?—I have not. At the time when I found that Mr. Allan had not accounted for a portion of the money, I thought he had given it away but was not able to recollect to whom.

13,251. (Mr. Price.) He said, "Mr. White has not "accounted for a sum I have given him;" and then what was your belief as to that sum?—My belief is, when we went into the accounts that that was the first point. I looked most closely into all of it. I said, "Now Mr. Allan, you have had a sum of money "from Mr. Brogden, and you have also had a sum of "money from me; now what have you done with it?" And my impression is that Mr. Allan handed in a list accounting for the whole of that money to within about 100*l.*

13,252. (Mr. Anstey.) The 100*l.* is explained by the other evidence we have had about that?—No. I mean, Allan taking credit for all the different sums which he said he had handed to White and to all those other persons, there is still 100*l.* unaccounted for.

13,253. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is still up to the present moment, 100*l.* unaccounted for?—Yes.

13,254. (Mr. Anstey.) Then what did you mean just now by saying you did not believe there was any portion of the money which had stuck to Allan's fingers?—Because I believed, from the way of stating the account, and in the hurry and confusion, that he might have overlooked some two or three payments; and I believed his statement strongly.

13,255. Was it known to all these people acting under you that you were receiving rewards or presents, or was that a secret between the candidates and yourselves?—We certainly never told them so, that is quite certain.

13,256. If they had known it, do you suppose they would have been so patient under what they would consider a most invidious distinction?—I do not know. It appeared to me to be an unfair distinction, and I told them so.

13,257. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it arranged that you should receive 200*l.* for that election?—It was a thing arrived at after the election?

13,258. Did any conversation occur between you and Mr. Brogden, or Mr. Brogden and Mr. Lovibond, or anybody, as to how you were to be remunerated before the election?—No.

13,259. I want to know how it came about?—I think it was somehow in this fashion. Mr. Vanderbyl came down some time after the election, just at the end of August; he came down to the races, and when he came down he sat down and went into these accounts with us.

13,260. Mr. Vanderbyl himself?—Mr. Vanderbyl himself; and my impression is that it must have been then that a conversation took place between us on the subject of our remuneration.

13,261. Did you bring that up, or did he?—At this distance of time I cannot recollect.

13,262. Was Mr. Brogden with him?—No.

13,263. Did he see an account of all the sums that Mr. Brogden had spent? Was all that brought into account?—I think so. I believe he was fully aware of it.

13,264. (Mr. Anstey.) And the names of the persons who paid it away, that is to say, Allan and Bussell, and so on?—No, I do not think he had that. I think he had a statement——

13,265. Then how did you or Mr. Lovibond, or whoever it was who stated the account, show that the sums paid, 100*l.* or 200*l.*, to A. or B., or whoever they might be, had really been expended, if you did not give the names?—It may or may not have been done; I do not accurately remember.

13,266. Do you remember sums being specified as having been paid to persons specified by name for specified purposes?—I do not recollect that. I remember remuneration was offered by him, but the extent of it I do not know.

13,267. There was no concealment?—No.

13,268. (Mr. Coleridge.) How was it first of all arranged that you and Mr. Lovibond were to have, 200*l.* apiece, or is that what he offered?—I do not know whether it was one way or the other; but I do think there was some difference between us. Whether there was any sum mentioned I do not know, but I am under the impression there was some difference between us, because I remember this, that it was suggested by us, to the best of my memory, that he should mention the matter to Mr. Kinglake, and whatever Mr. Kinglake thought would be the fair thing, we should be perfectly satisfied.

13,269. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you claimed more than 200*l.* apiece?—No, I do not remember that.

13,270. He did not offer you more than you asked?—No, I think he offered us less.

13,271. (Mr. Price.) If you were not at all ashamed of the transaction, why did you not allow these payments to the legal agents to appear in the published accounts? Because in all elections which I have known anything of, the fee to the lawyers is put down, 50*l.* or 100*l.*, whatever it may be, openly and boldly, so that everybody may know that he gets that fee. My knowledge of elections is, that the fees to the legal agents are put down, and form sometimes a very large item in the election expenses. I want to know, if you were not ashamed of this transaction, why was not put down, "Fee to Mr. Barham, 200*l.*," "Fee to Mr. Lovibond, 200 guineas," and so on?—I can only reply to that, that at that time I was under the guidance of Mr. Lovibond. It had not been his practice before; and the same course of proceeding which he had pursued before with respect to Mr. Kinglake he pursued on this occasion.

13,272. Would it have made dissatisfaction in the town if Mr. Bussell and Mr. Allan had seen that you had 200*l.* each?—I cannot say, but my own recollection is that it had been the practice before with Mr. Lovibond, and as it was before so it was then.

13,273. Do you know at all whether the people of Bridgwater were given to understand, I do not say by you, because you say it was a practice which had grown up before you began, before you were initiated into these mysteries, but were the people of Bridgwater given to understand in any way, indirectly or directly, that the laywers gave their services gratuitously?—No, I do not recollect that. I do not recollect anything being said about it one way or the other.

13,274. I think it was given in evidence to us by either Mr. Bussell or Mr. Allan, or somebody, that the impression was that the lawyers gave their services gratuitously?—I am certain of one thing, that I personally have never stated it. What other persons have said I do not know.

13,275. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say he offered you less, and you wanted 200*l.*, and it was to be left to Mr. Kinglake, or was left to Mr. Kinglake?—Even that I am not quite sure of, but I believe it was.

13,276. How long after going through these accounts was it before you got the money?—The accounts were gone into just at the end of August.

13,277. During the races you say?—Yes, just at the end of August; and we got the money on the 6th of October; and on the 4th——

13,278. Wait a bit. How did you get it?—Mr. Vanderbyl came into my office and gave me the money in Bank of England notes.

13,279. Do you know whether he did the same with regard to Mr. Lovibond?—I have no doubt he did the same with Mr. Lovibond, and then went to Messrs. Reed and Cook and did the same.

13,280. What other lawyer was paid on your side?—There would be no other lawyer except Mr. Haviland, and I think his account was carried in and published. I had a cheque for 100*l.* for Reed and Cook, and they declined to receive the money, and they declined to have their account carried in and published.

13,281. Did Mr. Vanderbyl suggest that he ought to give something to Allan who had done all this work?—To me, no.

13,282. Did you suggest it to him?—No, I do not know that I did. I suggested it to Mr. Lovibond, and finding it did not meet with approval there, I did not take any independent action.

13,283. (Mr. Anstey.) Was anything said to Mr. Vanderbyl about the remuneration to Bussell and Allan, or about allowing them to keep the money they had got?—No, I do not think anything of the sort was said.

13,284. (Mr. Price.) You had not, or any of the other lawyers, been placed in the awkward predicament of Mr. Smith, of having lost money by the elections?—Oh, no.

13,285. (Mr. Anstey.) I really do not understand now what you mean to suggest. You have stated that these things were kept secret, kept private, to yourselves and the candidates, and yet you state that the object was not that which has been suggested, that of preventing Bussell and Allan, and the electors generally, from supposing that the attorneys did not conduct their own contests, the contests of their own candidates, gratuitously. What other reason can you suggest for the privacy and secrecy, if it was not that?—I do not think I have stated that.

13,286. The Chief Commissioner asked you distinctly this question, whether the electors here were not given to understand, not saying by you in particular, but by the lawyers generally, or by some of them, that these contests between the lawyers' candidates on the one side and the lawyers' candidate on the other were, at least on the Liberal side, conducted gratuitously as far as you are concerned; and you said certainly you had not heard that they were so given to understand?—Yes.

13,287. Therefore I wanted to know wherefore all this secrecy about your remuneration?

13,288. (Mr. Price.) Why should not Mr. Lovibond have it published. Why this secresy unless there had been a desire to impress the people of Bridgwater with an idea that it was all done for nothing?—I think it is exceedingly likely that was the object; but all that I stated was that it might have been the original object, but we were acting in pursuance of a preconceived plan.

13,289. (Mr. Anstey.) At the former elections where you (I am speaking of yourself personally, as well as the other lawyers) received gratuities or presents, was the same secresy observed there?—No, not while I was outside. It was published then.

13,290. While you were outside the conspiracy was it done?—There were only these two. I had never had to do with any others.

13,291. I say at any election or elections. It does not matter one pin whether one hundred or one, but I am speaking of your previous experience; when you received remuneration before, no matter whether Bagehot's or not, was the same secresy observed there?—My first was Mr. Vanderbyl's. I had no experience before.

13,292. Was that all you received for your expenses, your travelling expenses to and from London? Were your travelling expenses separate, or was everything cleared by that?—Everything was cleared by that.

13,293. Why did you receive a larger sum from Vanderbyl's election than you were going to receive from Bagehot's?—In the first place, Mr. Bagehot was unsuccessful, which made a very great difference.

13,294. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does it make a very great difference also what money is spent? Is there

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

6 Sept. 1869.

a sort of per-centage on the money spent? If 5,000*l.* is spent do you require more than if only 500*l.* is spent?—No. My own feeling about the matter was this: in the first place I had been asked to do and had done what I never intended to do, namely, to mix myself up directly with the expenditure and procuring of all this money; and in the next place Mr. Vanderbyl had succeeded.

13,295. Had you anything to do with paying bills at this election which had been contracted for at Sir John Shelley's?—I had this much to do with it; that I attended more than once at Mr. Lovibond's office on occasions on which these bills were under consideration, and I assisted him in making out an account; a sort of statement for the division and appropriation of those bills.

13,296. Is that another sum of money over and above all you told us had been spent?—Unquestionably.

13,297. How much does that come to?—I cannot tell you now.

13,298. Cannot you tell us what the whole would cost Vanderbyl at the last election?—I do not know. I think it is probable that I knew it at the time, but I do not remember it now.

13,299. Was it 6,000*l.*?—No.

13,300. You have given us up to nearly 5,000*l.* now?—No, not so much.

13,301. We have the lawyers, 500*l.*; published expenses 200*l.*, that is 700*l.*; 4,000*l.* in bribery, that is 4,700*l.*; and then these bills. What do these bills amount to?—That I cannot tell at this distance of time.

13,302. Is it over 5,000*l.*, the whole cost?—If it comes up to 4,700*l.* independently of these bills, I should say it was over 5,000*l.* I should say, merely from a rough guess, there was 300*l.* or 400*l.* more.

13,303. That would be a little over 5,000*l.*?—Yes, it may be so, or it may be less; I cannot say.

13,304. Did you tell Mr. Vanderbyl that you had received nothing at Mr. Bagehot's election?—No.

13,305. How was it that he had not paid you?—Merely that there were certain accounts open, and Mr. Robins was some time in closing up the accounts.

13,306. Who fixed the sum you would receive at Mr. Bagehot's election?—Mr. Robins himself. We said, "We will leave it entirely to you. If you think we should be paid nothing we will be paid nothing." He said, "There is no reason for that."

13,307. Tell us approximately what was the whole cost of Bagehot's election?—My belief is that the whole cost is about 1,500*l.*

13,308. Including lawyers and everything?—Including everything. That is my belief. That is merely founded upon conclusions somehow resting in my mind as a matter of memory.

13,309. (Mr. Anstey.) Has your attention in the course of this inquiry been called to the fact of the practices of one person taking an active part in bribery on one side being, for some reason or other, kept very secret from some other person of equal degree taking an equally active part on that same side; as, for instance, you may have seen or heard, as we heard from Mr. Bussell, that he never heard during the whole time that he was bribing, and was entrusted with large sums of money for that purpose, he never heard of Mr. Allan being at the same entrusted with large sums for like purposes in a different part of the town; and the same he stated with regard to Garratt. Well, now I want to know, may it not be that although you, on the part of your protegé and nominee Mr. Bagehot, may only know of 1,500*l.*, it is quite possible that his other patrons, Messrs. Reed and Cook or Mr. Henry Lovibond, or both, may know of another sum which, added to the 1,500*l.* would make it a great deal more?—It is possible, but I do not think it is probable.

13,310. Wherefore is the concealment practised qua Allan in the case of Bussell and qua Bussell in the case of Allan, and not qua Barham in the case of Lovibond and qua Lovibond in the case of Barham?—You are referring to the concealment at the last election?

13,311. Yes; the concealment of the sums of money spent. You have also told us that one banker is employed as bribe agent (for it amounts to that) to the extent of 400*l.*, whilst another banker contemporaneously, or, worse still, a banker's managing clerk, is employed to the extent of 1,500*l.*, each banker being ignorant of what the other banker is doing; one being the left hand and the other the right hand. Why was not the same concealment practised in the case of the attorneys amongst themselves, with the same view, that of concealing the true state of the transaction?—I do not know why it was not practised. I do not think that there was any such case.

13,312. You have already stated that there was not the best of feeling at one election, at least, and in fact we have it in evidence that at previous elections there was also a bad feeling between one firm of attorneys and another firm of attorneys in the same interest. Assuming that coldness to exist amongst the various patrons of the same candidate, might it not well happen that there were different sums spent by different firms in the name of that candidate?—Oh, yes; as I said just now it might happen, but I do not think it did happen.

13,313. (Mr. Price.) We have it in proof before us, that some persons have expressed their astonishment in hearing that Mr. Kinglake spent a sum of 1,100*l.* at one election through the hands of a person whom he employed. That has been expressed great astonishment at. You did not have anything to do with elections at that time, therefore you cannot concur in the astonishment; but if that were so, that 1,100*l.* once was spent by Mr. Kinglake, and the ordinary legal agents not knowing it, would not that rather lead you to the conclusion that the whole expenditure of the candidate is never known by one man of you all, but that it is spread about amongst the different attorneys?—I do not think you have yet heard that Mr. Lovibond did not know of that expenditure.

13,314. (Mr. Anstey.) Take the cases that actually occurred. Supposing you had not conferred with Mr. Lovibond and formed a coalition, as it were, of bribery funds, enabled him, I mean, to form a coalition of bribery funds between his own and that which Messrs. Reed and Cook were going to raise, who would have known, which of the attorneys would have known, anything of Dr. Kinglake's having actually raised 1,500*l.* some time before the election; and how, contrariwise, would anyone in Mr. Kinglake's interest have known anything about Vanderbyl sending up to the provision merchants in London and receiving a large sum of gold. May not it have been, also, only the combination that took place at the last moment, as it were, between the two firms of attorneys that allowed each firm to know what the other firm was doing in the way of bribery?—Yes, it is quite possible that Messrs. Reed and Cook might have made such arrangements.

13,315. And you remember that important declaration stated to have been made by Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook: "We are doing all; where the devil is Lovibond"?—Yes, that was on the day of the polling, you know.

13,316. Did you hear that?—I heard that in evidence here.

13,317. You did not hear it said? It was not in your presence?—No.

13,318. I mention it as an illustration of my meaning; and therefore you see it is quite possible that 1,500*l.* may not have represented the sum total of poor Mr. Bagehot's contest which did not conduce to his election?—I do not think there was anybody else spending money on that occasion.

13,319. But however it is quite possible there was. Now, have you done with the second election, Vanderbyl's first election?—As to Vanderbyl's first election, I do not remember anything else with respect to that election, excepting this, that toward the very end of the election, somewhere about 3 o'clock, I was on the Cornhill, and some man, whose name I did not know at the time, came up and said that he was a voter; and I said at once, "I know nothing about those things," because I did not wish it to be known that I had anything to do with those matters. I said, "It is no use "to talk to me about any subject of that kind;" and I sent him about his business. I do not remember anything else on that day.

13,320. Nor of anything that took place afterwards in reference to the election?—No. I think I have stated already about the accounts.

(Mr. Anstey.) Yes.

13,321. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us, Mr. Barham?—I do not know anything else that I have to tell you at all. I have endeavoured to give you all the information in my power.

13,322. I want to know if you can tell me who was Sir John Shelley's London solicitor?—That I do not know.

13,323. A gentleman of the name of Ford?—I really cannot say.

13,324. His name was well known at one time. You did not know enough about Sir John Shelley's affairs?—No, I did not know enough about the things.

13,325. (Mr. Anstey.) There is one question I want to ask you, Mr. Barham, by-the-by. You have used, and we have used throughout your examination the word "bribery," and the term "payment of money," giving of money in bribes. I presume, as a man of common sense who knows the law, that you perfectly understood our questions, and that you wish your answers to be understood as referring equally to monies promised, asked, or stipulated for; agreed for or promised, whether the promise was kept or not?—Quite so. Oh yes. I have told you I am not aware I ever made any promise at all.

13,326. (Mr. Price.) Well, Mr. Barham, if there is nothing else that strikes you at present we will not detain you further now. You have given us the history of 1868?—Oh yes.

13,327. We had that first. Well, if anything strikes us in your examination, which has been a very long one, or rather your statement has been a very long one, of course you will be in attendance here if there should be anything we wish to examine you about. At present we appreciate the fulness with which you have spoken, and are rather glad to find at the end of our inquiries that you have disclosed, as you apparently have desired to do, all that you know about the transactions of the elections; and anything, of course, that may occur in the course of this inquiry which might tend to show at all that you have not disclosed the whole, you shall have a full opportunity of explaining to us and setting right.

H. C. Bussell recalled.

13,328. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to refer you to a question I put to you formerly, and you were not able to answer me; why it was you were not examined as a witness before the election committee of 1866 appointed to try the election petition of 1865. You said you went up to London, and you were not examined; if you had been examined you would have made a clean breast about the treating which was then organized, and of which you spoke. Looking through the papers that have subsequently been placed in our hands, I find that you were summoned as a witness to prove no less than ten distinct cases of bribery alleged against Mr. Westropp; and your evidence would certainly, if uncontradicted, have gone far to prove them. Now, am I to understand that you were not called to give evidence simply because if you had been called you would have been cross-examined as to the treating, and so jeopardize the seat of Mr. Kinglake?—I do not think that was the cause of my not being called. I was subpœnaed to be there, but they never gave me a retaining fee, and I did not go up on their side—the Conservatives. I went up on our own side.

13,329. I am asking you about your own side. You went up to London to prove ten cases of bribery at the scrutiny, if there had been a scrutiny, against Mr. Westropp?—I do not recollect the number. There were some.

13,330. And you were not called, though you could have given direct evidence of those important cases. You know that?—Yes.

13,331. Well, I wanted to know the reason. Was not the reason of your not being called as a witness, although they had gone to the expense of taking you up to London, that which I have suggested, namely, that your name also appeared in the list of charges of treating which had been handed in by Westropp's side against Kinglake?—I do not know; I wanted to be examined, and the counsel refused to do it.

13,332. (Mr. Price.) Was any reason ever given to you why you were not examined?—No; the only reason that I had was, it was better to let the matter remain as it was than for me to go into the box; that is all that I can recollect. I felt rather indignant at the time that I was not examined.

13,333. Who said that to you?—I cannot recollect who it was.

13,334. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you told that Westropp's lawyer had handed in four or five names of publicans at whose houses treating was said to have been organized for Mr. Kinglake's benefit, and your name was one of them?—Oh, there is no doubt about that; no doubt at all.

Mr. Eustace Barham recalled.

13,335. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Barham, there is one question I want to ask you. Do you know Mr. Salmon very well, Mr. Brogden's clerk?—If I saw him again, do you mean?

13,336. Yes?—Well, I think I should if I met him under circumstances ——

13,337. Had you much talk with him during the election, or before it, or at any time? You came in the train with him from Bath?—I had, of course, talk with him all the way down in the railway carriage.

13,338. Did you gather from him whether he had ever been a clerk in the employ of Mr. Pender?—No.

13,339. You do not know whether he is the same Salmon that carried the money down to Pender at Totnes?—No.

13,340. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Barham, I was going to say to you, in fairness to you, that we thought it proper the other day to express our strong disapprobation of persons speaking to the witnesses after they left the witness box, who might or might not take an opportunity themselves of stating what they knew about the election, and you were one mentioned. I think it is due to you now to say that if you wish to make any representation to us, now is the time for you to do it. You made a private representation to us which we declined to hear at the time?—It was merely this, that as the information I gave to Allan was a fact which was beyond all question, which was existing in the bank books, I thought I was merely assisting the Commission by giving that information. I quite acknowledge that I should have given it to the secretary, but it did not occur to me at the time.

(Mr. Bussell.) I wanted you to ask Mr. Barham, while he was in the witness box, this question, Whether there was anything in my conduct which gave cause for suspicion that I kept any money that was handed over to me?

(Mr. Coleridge.) I will ask Mr. Barham the question.

13,341. Was there anything whatever in the conduct of Mr. Bussell or Mr. Allan that led you to suppose that they were paid in some way or other?—Not the slightest as far as Mr. Bussell was concerned.

13,342. Was there as far as Allan was concerned?

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

6 Sept. 1869.

—As far as Allan was concerned, I believe he had given a perfectly true account.

13,343. Was there anything which led you to suppose that, although he was not paid by you, he took care to pay himself?—No, I think not.

13,344. You rested your statement upon Mr. Lovibond, who said, "If you pay them here they will pay "themselves afterwards, and therefore we shall pay "them twice"?—Certainly.

13,345. That was the information you received from Mr. Lovibond, who was an older hand than yourself?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) I thought Mr. Lovibond's expression was, "If we allow them something they will always expect it."

(Mr. Anstey.) No; "they would take it themselves as well."

(Witness.) That was Mr. Lovibond's idea.

Mr. G. B. Sully.

Mr. G. B. SULLY recalled.

(Witness.) This would be the time for me to make a communication to the Commission of which I have already informed your secretary four or five days ago.

(Mr. Price.) Yes.

(Witness.) I have, then, in my hands papers which I think will throw some definite light upon the course which I, in common with some other members of the Liberal party, took in prosecuting the petition against the return of Mr. Westropp; and I hoped to have placed before the Commissioners the motives which actuated some of us. The first paper which I put in is a document which was signed by some individuals connected with the party subscribing or agreeing to subscribe a fund for the purpose; and this document is headed in the following way: "We, the under-"signed electors of Bridgwater, whose names appear "in the schedule hereunder written, being satisfied "that the return of Mr. Henry Westropp as one of "the representatives for the borough of Bridgwater "was procured by open and profligate bribery, do "hereby agree with each other and pledge ourselves "to raise the necessary funds for prosecuting a peti-"tion against the return of Mr. Westropp, and also a "petition to the House of Commons to institute an "inquiry into the bribery by which the return of Mr. "Westropp was obtained, and that such funds for the "purposes aforesaid shall be raised in shares of one "pound for every one hundred pounds which may be "expended, and so in proportion for any fraction of "one hundred pounds; and in case more than 100 "shares are taken the subscriptions be pro ratâ. It "is also agreed that a committee of five or more per-"sons and a treasurer and secretary shall be appointed "at a general meeting of subscribers to the said fund; "that no money shall be paid by the treasurer with-"out an order from a majority of the committee, and "then only by cheque signed by two of the committee "men and countersigned by the secretary. That we, "the undersigned solicitors, electors of Bridgwater, "anxious to promote the object of the said subscribers, "do hereby agree to prosecute the proceedings gra-"tuitously and without receiving any professional fees "from the said fund for our services, except costs and "expenses actually paid with the consent of the said "committee and secretary. Dated Bridgwater, the "14th July 1865."

13,346. (Mr. Coleridge.) And who is that signed by?—I will put in the document, and you will find. (Document handed in.)

13,347. (Mr. Price.) Who are the solicitors?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was the first solicitor.

(Mr. Coleridge.) These names must go on the shorthand writer's notes. This was signed:—

(Witness.) That was, so to say, the articles of agreement upon which the petition against Mr. Westropp was founded; and I put it in now as showing that it was originally the petition of those who joined in that compact not merely to proseute the petition against Mr. Westropp's return, but to ask for a commission of inquiry into the proceedings at Bridgwater. That is why I put it in now. I did not know it was of any service before.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You do not say anything about a commission, do you?

13,348. (Mr. Price.) You say, "a petition to the "House of Commons to institute an inquiry into the "bribery by which the return of Mr. Westropp was "obtained." You never thought, therefore, of an inquiry into the bribery on both sides?—I had no idea that more than one side was implicated.

13,349. But Mr. Benjamin Lovibond and Mr. Hurman and other gentlemen named here could have given you a good deal of evidence. From what you have heard now you would be of opinion that they could have given you a good deal of information about bribery on the other side?—Most certainly; but I am quite in the recollection of the Commissioners, when I say that it was a condition precedent that——

13,350. (Mr. Anstey.) This is before the presentation of the election petition itself?—Precisely; undoubtedly.

13,351. You are aware that unless the election petition itself was so successful as to induce the committee to report that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed, there was no power in the Crown to issue a Royal Commission of Inquiry?—I am quite aware of that; but I think I am within the recollection of the Commissioners when I say that it has been over and over again said here that it was no part of our intention, that is to say, of any of us who signed that paper, to have any inquiry into corrupt practices. Now, I have tendered myself purposely this morning to ask that that impression may be removed.

(Mr. Anstey.) But it does not remove my impression at all. This is only an agreement, as far as I read it, "to raise the necessary funds for prosecuting "a petition," not yet tried, "against the return of Mr. Westropp, and also," not a petition to the House of Commons for a joint address of both Houses of Parliament, but "a petition to the House of Commons "to institute an inquiry into the bribery by which "the return of Mr. Westropp was obtained." That is a one-sided inquiry which the House of Commons has power at common law to institute by means of one of its committees, but which would have no effect whatever in producing a commission of inquiry. It does not remove the impression upon my mind in the least, having regard either to the date of the document or to the objects for which it was drawn up.

13,352. (Mr. Price.) Who prepared this, Mr. Mayor?—This is in the writing of Robert Fletcher. I am sure the learned Commissioner will make some allowance for my not knowing what the precise legal bearing of this would be; but it was present to our minds that there should be this inquiry, as I hope some correspondence which I am now going to place before you will further convince you.

13,353. (Mr. Price.) You were a layman, but you had the assistance of several lawyers. Did they not point out to you, for they must have known, that it was perfectly futile to ask for an inquiry by the House of Commons into the bribery of Mr. Westropp, except in the form of an election petition? It could not go farther than that?—It was not distinctly pointed out or in any way pointed out.

13,354. (Mr. Anstey.) But, Mr. Mayor, let me further direct your attention to the point of this document. This is the point of it, that a sum of money is wanted. Does not that clearly show that it relates to an election petition which is to be conducted at the expense of the petitioners?—Precisely.

13,355. How can that possibly apply to a Royal Commission of Inquiry or an address for a Royal Commission, which cost those who asked for it not one farthing, the expenses being at that time entirely defrayed by the Treasury, now by the peccant borough?—I am sorry that you seem to miss the mark to which I endeavoured to draw your attention. I did not bring that document forward as being a proof that the money subscribed there was to be spent in a commission of inquiry. That I am, of course, quite conscious of; but I bring it forward as a proof that when we commenced the proceedings against the return of Mr. Westropp it was present in our minds that it was not to stop with that. That is the extent to which I wish to go.

13,356. (Mr. Coleridge.) Although I will not dispute the law as laid down by my learned friend, yet by the 56th section of the 31 & 32 Victoria, chapter 125, such a petition can now go straight to the House of Commons without any intervention. "If upon a "petition to the House of Commons, presented within "21 days after the return to the Clerk of the Crown "in Chancery in England, or to the Clerk of the "Crown and Hanaper in Ireland, of a member to "serve in Parliament for any borough or county, "within 14 days after the meeting of Parliament, and "signed by any two or more electors of such borough or "county, and alleging that corrupt practices have extensively prevailed at the then last election for such "borough or county, or that there is reason to believe "that corrupt practices have there so prevailed, an "address be presented by both Houses of Parliament, "praying that such allegations be inquired into, the "Crown may appoint commissioners to inquire into the "same, and if such commissioners in such case be appointed, they shall inquire in the same manner and "with the same powers and subject to all the provisions of the statute of the 15th & 16th of Victoria, "chapter 57." You are doubtless aware that it is an alteration of the law at the present time that such a petition as that could avail in Parliament without going through a committee of the House of Commons in the first instance?—Yes, but that is more recently.

13,357. (Mr. Anstey.) You are speaking of 1866?—I am speaking of the election of 1865 and the petition of 1866.

(Mr. Price.) The 14th July 1865. Well now, Mr. Mayor, you were going to hand something else in.

(Witness.) I am going to hand in some other letters. Before I do so I am going to ask the Commissioners whether it is in their recollection that I stated that at the termination of the inquiry before the committee of which Mr. Baxter was the chairman, there was a considerable difference of opinion amongst the Liberals of Bridgwater as to the abrupt termination of the inquiry before the committee, and also as to the reticence of our legal friends in pushing for the second portion?

(Mr. Price.) Yes.

(Witness.) Now it was in consequence of that difference of opinion that Mr. Francis Thompson, Mr. Henry Nicholls, and myself put ourselves in communication with Mr. Brand, with Mr. Baxter, and with another member of the committee who has been very active against church rates; I forget his name at the moment.

13,358. (Mr. Anstey.) Sir John Trelawney?—No, not Sir John Trelawney, his successor, Mr. Hardcastle. We had several interviews, and I had one interview with Sir George Grey, urging upon him the importance of appointing such a Commission. The result of all our inquiries and of all our applications was just one, and it was, "Mr. Baxter refuses to move in the "matter, and as he refuses to move in the matter, no "one else can do it." Now I propose to read certain letters which, hunting over a lot of private letters of my own, I find bear upon this matter. This is from Mr. Francis Thompson, and by the correspondence of the dates I find it was written on the 4th of May 1866:

"London, 9 o'clock, Friday evening.

"My dear G. B. Sully,

"Mr. Nicholls has just called, and he informs "me that Sir Harry Verney has had an interview "with him at the House of Commons. I learn that "Sir Harry has written to you and to me urging the "importance, the necessity, of the petition being in "his hands on Monday. It is of the most importance "that the petition should be a statement of facts and a "prayer for a commission of inquiry. The number "of names is not so important, but what is done "must be done on Saturday afternoon and evening, "and the petition posted to Sir Harry Verney at his "address or to the House of Commons (or to the "care of Kinglake if you do not know Sir Harry's "address).

"Yours,

"F. J. Thompson."

There is another letter written the next morning, which clearly confirms the same thing. I shall put them both in (letters handed in).

"Dear G. B. S., Saturday, May 5th, 7.30.

"I have had rather a thoughtful night, yet its "all clear before you at B'water, and not much difficulty to get the needful petition ready with a few "good names to post to Sir Harry. Our postmaster "will have care that it is sent off, and of course you "write to Sir Harry. I opened the Bible this morning "on the words of Paul,' Now, I exhort you to be of good "cheer.' I try to take hope and faith from this. You "will say I am superstitious. Ask one of your hands "to write me a line at Limpley Stoke, or if you see "Lewis, my son, tell him to tell me what is done. I "want to be with you, but my wife is in the way.

"Yours,

"F. J. T.

"P.S.—This matter takes us somewhat by surprise. "I did not know there would be such haste required. "You will feel hurried, I fear, but Mr. Cook or Mr. "Fletcher will please take the writing part, and Mr. "J. W. S. will soon get a few names with designations. "Mr. Nicholls thinks I am wrong in saying the "prayer should not be for a commission, but that it "should be for the evidence or information given "before the election committee to be laid before the "House. You have the words of Sir Harry's motion, "and that will be your guide. If you think it best to "take up the petition instead of posting it, so "much the better. All this may be needless from "me, as you may (and I expect) have acted upon Sir "Harry's letters of instruction posted so as to arrive "in BW. by Saturday morning."

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. B. Sully.

6 Sept. 1869.

13,359. (Mr. Price.) We have understood, so far, that the House of Commons in a most extraordinary manner refused to act in any way upon the report of the committee that corrupt practices had extensively prevailed, and we also understood that Mr. Baxter, the chairman, for extraordinary reasons of his own, refused to take the initiative as one would expect. And we have also understood, which is still more extraordinary, that when Sir Harry Verney brought it before the House Mr. Baxter gave no encouragement to it at all, and the commission of inquiry was not granted. It is the sin of the House of Commons or partly so. I want to ask you, Mr. Mayor, considering the revelations that you have heard in this room, does not it strike you that it seems rather like a solemn mockery to see the names of Benjamin Lovibond, Henry Lovibond, and Reed and Cook to a protest against corrupt practices?—It certainly has deeply pained me.

13,360. (Mr. Anstey.) I called your attention, when you were examined before us on the first day, to every statement in that petition, and to the names to it, and you then were unable to give us a single particle of information about it except that you yourself had no information to offer?—I beg your pardon, Mr. Commissioner, I think you will find, if you refer to the shorthand notes, that I stated that I gathered my information from the brief that had been prepared.

13,361. You said you had no knowledge except from general rumour about the corrupt state of the borough, but you were of opinion that at the last election the working class element, though you at first thought otherwise, alone accounted for the sudden turn that had taken place, and you gave information of such an effect that, if we had received it as conclusive, we might have fairly declined to go on with this inquiry?—I must certainly beg pardon for any misconception that may obtain upon your mind. I gave you what was present to my own mind. I have been as much surprised as you, more surprised than you can have been, by the revelations that have been given here, because you had information beforehand of great bulk. What I have heard here to-day, and in the days that this commission of inquiry has been sitting, has been as new to me as to anybody else in this hall, and as startling.

13,362. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Mayor, will you just tell me this. This clearly is, in form, an agreement to find the expenses of an election petition in the ordinary way. That petition was presented, and it was fought?—And it was fought.

13,363. And was the cost of it paid out of this company?—It was entirely.

13,364. So this agreement in reality, it is only a mistake, as far as I understand, for you to call it a petition for a commission of inquiry, it really was for a committee of the House of Commons?—That was a condition precedent.

13,365. And the expenses of that have been paid by the people who pledged themselves in this way?—Yes.

13,366. What were the whole of the expenses?—Between 2,000*l.* and 2,200*l.*

13,367. How much out of the four shares you took did it fall upon you to pay?—40*l.*

13,368. Then there has been 10*l.* paid up on each of these shares?—There have been a few defaulters.

13,369. Do you mean that Sir John Shelley paid 1,500*l.*?—No, I was going to make a qualification with regard to Kinglake and Sir John Shelley. I am going to make an observation before I explain that. There is an impression upon the minds of some of the Commissioners that I did not say that I knew anything about the petition or the grounds upon which the petition was fought. Everyone who is connected with the Liberal party in Bridgwater must have been aware that if I had said such a thing I should be saying that which I knew to be untrue, and therefore if I have produced such an impression upon your minds I have done so by error. Every step connected with the prosecution of that petition against Mr. Westropp I have known, so far as a layman can know it, and am cognizant of. The meetings were held in my office very largely, and a great deal of minutiæ was known to me; and therefore if such an impression exists I want to remove it at once. I did not know that it did exist, but from the observation of Mr. Anstey I thought that it must be so.

13,370. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you mean that you knew of no corruption on your own side?—I knew of no corruption on my own side, and nothing of the corruption on the other side, except from the brief which was prepared, and as far as one can read a written document.

13,371. (Mr. Coleridge.) And from the getting up of the brief?—Yes. Now, as far as concerns that document upon which Sir John Shelley's name appears, he was asked what he would contribute, and he said, "If the Bridgwater people contribute 150 shares, I will contribute the same," and he signed his name for the 150; but, in fact, he paid 600*l.* The Bridgwater people paid about 1,200*l.*, and Mr. Kinglake paid 300*l.*

13,372. And that made up the whole amount?—That made up the whole amount of the costs of the petition.

13,373. Did any of the people in Bridgwater subscribe except these who have entered into this agreement, whose names are here?—Yes, those whose names are on this second agreement gave a lump sum. (Document handed in.)

13,374. Not a limited liability?—It was asked in the committee how it was that Mr. Kinglake did not subscribe as much as Sir John Shelley, and we were told in the end of the inquiry that there were some payments which would have to be made for the election of 1865 which Sir John Shelley could not be asked to contribute to, and which Mr. Kinglake would pay.

13,375. Then this is a subsequent agreement, which contains very few names?—Very few indeed.

13,376. But several gentlemen say that they will subscribe something towards the petition?—Yes. (Document read.) "We, the undersigned electors of "Bridgwater, and other persons favourable to purity "of election, whose names appear in the schedule "hereunder written, being satisfied that the return of "Mr. Henry Westropp as one of the representatives "for the borough of Bridgwater was procured by "open and profligate bribery, do hereby subscribe the "several sums set opposite our respective names in "aid of the expenses of prosecuting a petition against "the return of Mr. Westropp, and also a petition to "the House of Commons to institute an inquiry into "the bribery by which the return of Mr. Westropp "was obtained. Dated Bridgwater, the 15th day of "July 1865."

13,377. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does not the very fact of Mr. Allan's name appearing to that show at once there could be no idea of an inquiry, but only a petition?—Certainly not. I had no knowledge until a few months ago that Mr. Allan had ever been mixed up with the bribery, and by his own evidence which was published at the time.

(Mr. Allan.) At the time of that inquiry I stood, politically, as upright as any man in Britain.

(Mr. Coleridge.) This was signed before you had anything to do with these things?

(Mr. Allan.) Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge.) But I am afraid that won't apply to Mr. Bussell, whose name appears here?

13,378. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Mayor, you surely remember, because you gave us evidence about the petition of 1866, and you have got that preliminary agreement in your hands?—Yes; I say I remember distinctly.

13,379. Do you mean to say that you did not know in 1869, and 1868, and in 1867, and in 1866, what that blue book called the Minutes of Proceedings before the Election Committee disclosed with regard to the infamous proceedings at the election of 1865?—I was in the committee room the whole time.

13,380. Do you mean to say that you did not know the name of Allan, and that you did not know the name of Bussell at that time?—Yes, I say I knew them both, but I did not know them as bribers, nor does that blue book contain one tittle of evidence to that effect.

13,381. (Mr. Price.) Do we really understand you that, having taken an active part in politics, you believed the elections in this borough in former contests down to the last increase of franchise were conducted on pure principles, either on one side or the other?—On the contrary. I have said so again and again here.

13,382. On your own side?—On my own side I have said I was not cognizant of any improper practice; but I was afraid that there had been such.

13,383. When you say "cognizant," I daresay you, like many others, were not a party to any agreement about money being spent; but had you ever the slightest doubt, from what has been proved over and over again to us, that whenever there was a contest there must have been money for bribing on both sides?—I have said in my own examination on the first day, and I must ask your forbearance for not having said all that I might, I have said that about 2 o'clock on the day of the election (Mr. Bagehot's), I was informed for the first time that our hands were not clean, and I left the town and went home.

13,384. (Mr. Anstey.) What you said was simply this, that Mr. Nicholls met you and said, "Mr. Sully, "I am afraid our hands are not clean;" and that so disgusted you that you went away. Do you mean to say that you had not the least suspicion before that time that the borough was a mass of rottenness?—As far as our party was concerned I had not the least conception that money had been spent before that.

13,385. Had you any suspicion that money was spent in 1865, when Mr. Westropp came in?—On the Conservative side?

13,386. I mean on your side?—No, certainly not.

13,387. As it had been put by the learned Commissioner, were you not immensely astonished that a man like Mr. Bussell should not be put into the box, who could prove ten cases of bribery, but whom the legal agents conducting the petition kept out because his name was put down as a person at whose house treating had been going on?—This is the first time I have heard of it.

13,388. Did they allow you to attend the consultations of the lawyers?—No.

(Mr. Price.) Then I advise you, Mr. Mayor, never to put your name upon a paper in a case in which the lawyers are to conduct an inquiry of this kind without seeing that you have your money's worth.

13,389. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you ever an alderman?—No, I have never been alderman.

13,390. Were you ever a magistrate?—No.

(Mr. Price.) The lawyers put you and those who signed this petition honestly in a very false position, because you were asked to come forward and subscribe to a petition against Mr. Westropp, when Mr. Kinglake's hands were as dirty as the hands of the other side; and then in consultation they kept back from you the fact that one of the best witnesses they could put into the box to prove their case they were obliged to keep out because they knew his hands were dirty also.

13,391. (Mr. Anstey.) You made a statement just now which I must ask you to explain. It was a most irregular statement. It was put forth by way of showing the difference between the Commissioners and yourself. You said that we were informed of these matters before we came down, and you were not aware of them before you came into this hall. Explain that, if you please. On what ground did you assume that we were informed of anything before we came here?—I assume it from the fact that you have material for the cross-examination of witnesses which proves that you have received information of which I was certainly ignorant.

13,392. Before I make any reply to that, do you think it decent to apply the term "cross-examination" to our inquiries?—Certainly, if it is at all offensive to the Commissioners, I will withdraw it. It certainly is not the proper word.

13,393. On what fact do you ground that assumption, which is utterly unfounded, that before our inquiry commenced we were informed of anything which you or anybody else in the world who used common industry might not have acquired from the same medium, the parliamentary papers and the public press?—I will take, for example, the question which was put to Mr. Smith with reference to the letters and Mr. Westropp. That certainly indicated to my mind that you were in possession of materials upon which you founded that question.

13,394. You mean Mr. John Smith?—Yes.

13,395. How does that justify what I must call an unwarrantable assumption, that we were informed of those facts before we arrived here?—Perhaps it does not go to that extent; and if it is at all offensive, I have no wish to say anything offensive.

(Mr. Price.) You must be perfectly well aware that when an inquiry of this kind goes on in a town like this, the Commissioners may have from time to time, we do not encourage it, because we much prefer that persons should come into the witness box; but from time to time, of course, certain information is given to us by parties belonging to one side, as regards parties on the other side. There are two very strong political parties, and very strong political feeling in the borough; and perhaps thinking that the time has now come, and that "open confession is good for the soul," they wish to make us aware of the iniquities which have been going on on both sides. It may be that people's consciences are beginning at last to be aroused.

(Witness.) If I had thought over the answer I should not, perhaps, have said before coming into the town; I meant previously to the examination of the witnesses. I am sure I do not wish to say anything offensive.

13,396. Tell us what else you know?—I merely wished to lay before the Commissioners the motives which were operating upon some of our minds at the time. Now, after Mr. Baxter's committee had decided that Mr. Westropp's seat was vacant, and after we had found out that a commission of inquiry was impracticable, efforts were made to find another candidate.

13,397. I should really like to know. Do you know anything of how it was that the commission of inquiry fell through, or rather, how the proposition to have a commission of inquiry, after such an unusual report by the committee, came to nothing—was abortive?—I can only say that I twice waited upon Mr. Baxter and once upon Mr. Hardcastle. Mr. Baxter's answer to me was this: "Mr. Sully, it is of "no possible use to have a commission of inquiry. "The House of Commons won't follow it up. If the "House of Commons will follow it up, I, for one, will "go into it."

13,398. The commissions of inquiry have been followed up in other instances. I want to know this, whether there was any communication with Mr. Brand

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. B. Sully.

6 Sept. 1869.

or Mr. Glynn, who are called the "whips" of the party, and intimation given to them that Bridgwater was a Liberal borough, and it was better not to have an inquiry, or the Liberals would lose two votes?—Our suspicions were that Mr. Brand had been got at, and we went and saw Sir George Grey.

13,399. What did he say?—He said, "If Mr. Baxter won't move I cannot do anything."

13,400. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the reason for the motion for the writ not being moved in the usual way, but that the writ was left to be moved for by Colonel Taylor, the Tory member for the county of Dublin, and not in any way connected with the borough?—He was the Tory whip at the time?

13,401. Yes?—And it was a Conservative seat vacated.

13,402. And the majority was composed of Conservatives and Liberals?—I believe so.

13,403. And the minority consisted of Liberals alone?—I believe so.

13,404. And you can throw no light upon these highly suspicious circumstances?—I can only state what is within my knowledge.

13,405. Mr. Baxter's only reason assigned to you, which he does not appear to have assigned in the House of Commons, was that if the address went up and the commission of inquiry issued and made its report, the House of Commons would not proceed to disfranchisement?—Precisely.

13,406. (Mr. Price.) There is no mistake about the Mr. Baxter?—It is Mr. W. E. Baxter, of Montrose.

13,407. (Mr. Price.) It may be necessary to ask him to come to explain his conduct. Your hopes of purifying this borough seem to have been entirely extinguished by Mr. Baxter throwing cold water upon the flame that was burning?—Yes.

13,408. (Mr. Anstey.) You are not aware that there was any compromise amongst the lawyers on that occasion?—No, I have not heard of it. I was going to say that when this seat was vacated there was an application made to Sir John Shelley. A requisition was got up, and it was signed; and I wrote a letter, a copy of which I do not possess, to Sir John Shelley, or rather, I think I waited upon him with it, and I received this letter in answer:

"1, St. James' Place,

"My dear sir, 8th May 1866.

"I have to thank you very sincerely for your "kind letter, received this morning, together with the "requisition which you have been so good as to send "me. I find the requisition signed by 200 electors, "who have thus testified their wish that I should "again appear as a candidate at Bridgwater. This "requisition so signed is most agreeable to me, as "proving that I have left behind warm and sincere "friends. The Liberals of Bridgwater may well "believe that it is with the utmost reluctance that I "have arrived at the determination not again to contest "the borough after the encouraging reception given "to me on the last election; but, having satisfied "myself that advocating, as I do, purity principles, "I could not succeed against the corruption practised "by the Tories, I should be only weakening the "Liberal party at Bridgwater. Pray be good enough "to express to my friends my great gratitude, and "believe me,

"Very faithfully yours,

"JOHN VILLIERS SHELLEY."

As Sir John Shelley is now deceased, I think it right to put in that letter, it is the only one, I believe, that I have in my possession, as shewing just the negotiation that passed between a portion of the Liberal party and himself. After that negotiation broke down our professional gentlemen went to London and made some inquiries about a candidate, and they came down and reported that they had seen Samuel Morley and Lord Bury. Mr. Morley—I have the honour of his personal acquaintance.

13,409. (Mr. Price.) The present member for Bristol?—Yes.

13,410. He was unseated at Nottingham?—He had just been unseated at Nottingham. I shall read to you a draft copy of a letter to him.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Morley was unseated for unconscionable bribery in hiring, under pretence of messengers, decrepit old men, and men who never walked out of their houses or carried a message, or anything of that sort.

(Witness.) When it was proposed that Lord Bury or Mr. Morley should stand, the idea was at once discarded, from that very circumstance. I want to read you this letter, because it is a reflex of what was passing in our minds at the time.

13,411. (Mr. Coleridge.) And Lord Bury had been unseated; where was he unseated for?—I think it was Dover.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Oh yes, Dover.

(Witness.) This is the letter that was sent to Mr. Morley:

"My dear sir,

"I accidentally heard that application had "been made to you to become a candidate for the "representation of our borough, and, although at the "time I was told you had declined, I cannot allow "the first opportunity to pass without explaining "(what might otherwise appear as the indifference of "those you have placed under great obligations) why "we did not with the others urge your compliance. "The large majority of the Liberal party here are "engaged in an earnest effort to purge our electoral "system from the corrupt practices which have so long "demoralized our borough, and in contrast to which "what was done at Nottingham was purity. It may "be sufficient for me to say that we have good reason "for believing that out of 620 electors over 200 were "bribed at the last election. Those with whom I act "pressed the professional leaders of our party not to "allow themselves to be led into any improper or "questionable conduct, averring that we infinitely "preferred defeat to victory on such terms. I have "reason to believe the pledge they gave was faithfully "kept. We lost one of our candidates, but have "unseated the Conservatives on petition. It was "part of our original intention, if success attended us "to this point, that we should apply for a commission "of inquiry with a view to the effectual stopping a "a repetition of such scenes. The two solicitors, "however, who were in search of a fresh candidate, "appear to have had other thoughts and aims. They "acted against the wishes and instructions of their "friends, and nothing which they did during the early "part of last week has been confirmed. They re-"turned to Bridgwater on Tuesday evening with the "name of a candidate, but instead of entertaining the "proposal, a deputation was sent to London to carry "out the original instructions if possible. I was one "of this deputation, and we succeeded in preventing "the writ being issued on Friday, though I am not "sanguine we shall entirely succeed, Mr. Baxter, the "chairman of our committee, being opposed to a com-"mission on public grounds. I have thought it right "to trouble you with this explanation." And then I go on to say a few words of friendship. The parenthesis alludes to some subscriptions which he had given to the Congregation chapel in this town.

13,411*a*. (Mr. Price.) Who is the Conservative alluded to there?—Mr. Westropp.

13,412. (Mr. Anstey.) What are the "public grounds" on which Mr. Baxter objected?—I have not understood there were public grounds. Those I have just stated, that Parliament had never followed up, or had not pledged themselves to follow up, these commissions with any action.

13,413. Are you not aware that Sudbury and St. Albans were both disfranchised in consequence of Commissioners' reports?—You see I am not answerable for Mr. Baxter's opinion.

(Mr. Price.) His opinion was that the House of Commons was not honest. He was one of them, and he thought from what he knew of the House of Commons that it was not honest in its endeavours to put down bribery.

(Witness.) I find also a letter from Mr. Kinglake about the same date; and I intend to put all the letters in.

13,414. (Mr. Anstey.) Who are the two attorneys who went down to see Lord Bury and Mr. Morley?—I think Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Paul Reed.

(Mr. Price.) The candidate who appears to be the choice of the lawyers is either a candidate who has been unseated for bribery or a rejected candidate who has been qualified for claiming to represent the borough by having petitioned against his opponent.

(Witness.) That was not confirmed by the party to whom it was referred, and hence it was that Mr. Bagehot, who pledged himself not to spend any money, was accepted.

13,415. But he spent 1,500*l.*?—Yes, but that was without his knowledge.

13,416. (Mr. Anstey.) That we have to form our opinion upon. It will throw some light on the purity of this borough. Am I to understand that it is your opinion that it is not possible to partake in bribery retrospectively? I will explain my meaning. Is it part of your theory—the theory of Bridgwater—that bribery to the extent of 1,500*l.* can be practised at an election, and if the candidate on whose behalf it is spent can only keep himself away, keep out of knowledge of the fact at the time, he is not guilty of bribery—directly guilty of bribery—when six months afterwards, or twelve months afterwards he honours the demand made upon him to recoup his bribery agents for the sum?—I should certainly say he was guilty of bribery.

(Mr. Price.) Now we want Mr. Kinglake's letter:—

"12, St. James's Place,

"My dear sir, May 8, 1866.

"I received your letter, kindly apprizing me "of the petition confided to Sir Harry Verney, and "this morning a print of the petition was placed in "the hands of members. It is very well worded, and "I entirely agree in that part of it which suggests "that upon a member being unseated for corrup- "tion, the seat should go to the candidate next on "the poll without the process of a scrutiny. Last "night, or rather this morning soon after midnight "Sir Harry Verney obtained an order for the pro- "duction of the minutes of evidence given before the "committee, but did not carry his motion any further, "there being, it seems, an undertaking that the "writ will not be moved for until members have had "time to read the evidence.

"I remain, my dear sir, very truly yours,

"A. W. KINGLAKE."

Then follow three letters from Sir Harry Verney, The first is dated, "Admiralty House, Devonport. "May 13th, 1866. Dear sir,—I beg to acknowledge "your note of the 11th. I came here yesterday for "two or three nights, and expect to return to London "to-morrow or Tuesday. You may be certain that I "shall do my utmost to get rid of the abomination of "corrupt practices at election in Bridgwater and every "other borough. I am not aware whether there are "any means by which you can assist me. If there are "I will take advantage of your permission to inform "you. I venture to add how sensible I am of the "public spirit that must animate you and those who "act with you in this matter. I think the whole "country is greatly indebted to you. I fear that we "shall not find many boroughs in which influential "inhabitants will give the co-operation that you are so "good as to offer." Then on May 29th I received another letter: "Dear sir,—You were so good as to "offer me any assistance in proving that the writ for "Bridgwater ought not to issue. The writ is to be "moved, and my amendment comes on on Thursday, "and I shall be obliged to you if you will give me any "information in your power, either by writing to me, "telling me which are the witnesses whose evidence "you consider the most conclusive on the subject, or "by coming yourself, or by sending some one who can "inform me, as I think it probable that the opposition "intend to fight this proposal." I am not sure whether I waited on Sir Harry Verney or wrote to him, but on the 1st of June I found this letter: "Dear sir,—You "will see that our efforts last night (rather at two "this morning) were unsuccessful. You will under- "stand that at such an hour, and the House being very "weary after the reform debate, it was important to "address to them as few sentences as possible. I hope "therefore that you and those who participate your "honourable sentiments at Bridgwater will pardon me "for not having said more in a case where there was "so much more to be said." And then he goes on speaking about a candidate which came to nothing, but which I will read if you please. Those are all the letters I can find.

13,417. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did he recommend as a candidate?—He does not say. I will read the whole if you like. I have read all the letters I can find now amongst every parcel of letters that I can think of.

13,418. (Mr. Price.) Do we understand you to say that until the revelations took place before Mr. Justice Blackburn as to bribery on your side of politics, you were not in the least degree aware or had any reason to suspect, I mean any well-grounded reason from previous contests, that the lawyers on your side had encouraged the spending of money?—I could not have had that impression, because I think I named to you, when I was here the first time that immediately after Mr. Bagehot's election I had a serious difference with Mr. Lovibond.

13,419. If you had that impression why did you and the other gentlemen of the party who you say were zealous, and I give you credit for it, determined to put an end to it, not say "You shall not act as agent for "the party at all; we will not have anything to say "to you; we will have some one not mixed up in these "matters," and try that?—The step we took in that direction was this. Two of us waited on Mr. Barham and asked him to be associated with the other lawyers. We did that purposely and wittingly, believing that he was a man who would not lend himself to these purposes, and it was not until Mr. Allan told me he was the medium that I had the least idea.

13,420. Mr. Barham fell almost immediately after that?—Yes.

13,421. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that your reliance on a single man, and he apparently a new comer, justified you in supposing that the whole evil influence on your side among the lawyers would be affected by him, even if he himself remained pure?—I must confine my answer to Mr. Bagehot's election. I must say, as far as Mr. Vanderbyl's election is concerned, having heard that money was spent in Mr. Bagehot's election, I took no part in Mr. Vanderbyl's election. There was no meeting at my office. Mr. Barham has made a mistake in that matter, and beyond accepting him after he was elected, and voting for him as a Liberal, I took no part in his election.

13,422. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to go to Sir Harry Verney in this would-be purity business?—He had already put on the files of the House a notice of motion.

13,423. It was not any of your party went to him?—Certainly not; I do not know how he came to move in the matter, whether it was Sir John Shelley induced him. We were moving rather in the direction of the Home Secretary, Mr. Brand, and Mr. Baxter.

13,424. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not know who suggested it to Sir Harry Verney?—No.

13,425. Because he is not at all connected with this part?—No, he is the member for Buckingham.

13,426. You told us in your first examination that the borough was in the hands of the lawyers. When I asked you whether they had anything besides personal ambition or vanity to gratify, or something more lucrative to look for, you assured me that the lawyers were not paid. When did they give you that assurance?—I heard so from Mr. Henry Lovibond and Mr. Eustace Barham on more than one occasion. I am now referring to the last election.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. B. Sully.

6 Sept. 1869.

13,427. Only the last?—I do not know that I conversed with him at any previous election.

13,428. (Mr. Price.) What led to that assurance being given with regard to the last election? How did the question arise of their being paid at the last election?—It was in consequence of the conversation with regard to the new Act. I may say what I ought to have said in the last examination, perhaps, that some of us were aware of the very stringent clauses in the new Act, and we took measures to have them circulated amongst the poorer voters as well as the rest, so that they might know the risk they ran, and we did hope that might be a preventive. I do remember looking through the Act and seeing the section of the Act which says that any agent who is paid, his vote would be vitiated, and I remember saying to Mr. Barham or Mr. Lovibond, "How will you be able to vote? You are acting as agent?" They said, "We have decided to receive no remuneration for our services."

13,429. That is how it arose?—That is how it arose.

13,430. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you anything further to state?—Yes, I have to make a statement on another matter, and it is with reference to the interview which I had with Mr. Fennelly on the Saturday before the election. I was sitting in my office at 10, and Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly came into the room, and Mr. Vanderbyl introduced Fennelly to me. I had no previous knowledge of him, and Mr. Vanderbyl was suffering from a severe cold, and he introduced Mr. Fennelly and said, "I have brought Mr. Fennelly to you to make a communication." I said, "You must "remember, Mr. Vanderbyl, I am holding the office of "mayor, and I do not think it right that I should mix "up in an affair of politics. If the communication "you have to make is one which, having made that "statement to you, you think propriety would lead "you not to make, it would be much better not to "make it, and I would much rather not hear it." Mr. Vanderbyl answered for himself and said, "Mr. Sully, it is a communication I must make to you." Mr. Fennelly then made this statement. He said, "I have "had a serious difference with the professional men all "day yesterday, and I have been in communication "with them, and they have been urging Mr. Van-"derbyl to make an illegal expenditure; and Mr. "Alexander, Mr. Vanderbyl's father-in-law, and he, "Mr. Vanderbyl, and all his friends, have formed a "decided opinion that on this occasion at least he "should spend no money." I believe these are the words he used: "Mr. Vanderbyl is not going to brand "himself as a felon; he is not going to break the law, "and I am come to tell you of the serious differences "between him and the professional men." I said to him, "Mr. Vanderbyl, you will excuse my entering "into the matter at all beyond saying I am glad to "hear you have come to that resolution. I hope you "will keep it, and there is not one of your friends in "Bridgwater whose respect or esteem or vote you "will lose by adhering to it, but I will go no further." That is all I remember since I was last examined.

13,431. (Mr. Anstey.) You remember speaking with reference to this last statement of yours which is very important. Do you recollect when you were examined my asking you a question to which I am going to read my note of your reply to; whether you could give the Commission any information yourself of any bribery transactions at any elections. Here is what I took down at the time. "I have only seen bribery committed on one occasion." That is explained at the end of your evidence to me as not bribery committed, but bribery atoned for. "I saw money for "that purpose brought into Sir John Shelley's com-"mittee room." Now at the end of your examination you said what you meant by that was, the person who was bribed brought the money which he had received from the Tories, and laid it down at the feet of the committee, and that you then went on to say; I have not it here, "that is the only case." Why did you not instead of telling us that story which had nothing to do with my question, relate this confession on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl that at the second election in 1866, there had been this bribery?—The interview did not occur to me at all when I was here on that occasion, but as soon as it did I sent to Mr. Purcell, and told him I had a communication to make.

13,432. When did you tell it to Mr. Purcell?—About the middle of last week.

13,433. Even the latter end, was it not?—I should think it was Wednesday or Thursday certainly, it was before Bagehot had opened his mouth. Now I have made one omission which in justice I ought not to do. Mr. Fennelly told me that he had a serious misunderstanding with the professional men, and he said that all of them with one exception were down on them for not agreeing to an illegal expenditure. He said, "I daresay you can guess who that is." I said, "Mr. Barham." He said, "You are right."

13,434. What time in the day was that?—I should think it was 10 o'clock on Saturday morning.

13,435. (Mr. Price.) Before the nomination, of course?—On the Saturday; the nomination was on the Monday.

13,436. Did you gather from what Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly had said, that they had made up their minds not to spend money?—They had formed a very strong resolution.

13,437. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the object of coming to tell you that?—I suppose nothing more than knowing how strongly I had felt in that direction on previous elections.

13,438. Who was the most active man apart from the lawyers on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl before you were in office? Whom did you call chairman, Mr. Sealey, the banker?—Yes, Mr. Sealey generally, I think.

13,439. At any meeting?—Yes. I do not remember any public meeting at which Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl addressed it beyond a ward meeting of the Working Men's Association. I do not remember any public meeting at which Mr. Sealey was not the chairman.

13,440. Did you see Mr. Vanderbyl himself except on that one occasion during the time he was in Bridgwater on the former elections?—Yes.

13,441. Frequently?—Not frequently. Of course I called on all the candidates.

13,442. Did you exchange visits?—Yes.

13,443. Did you see him on the Sunday?—No, I did not. Yes, I saw him in church.

13,444. But not to speak to him?—Not to speak to him.

13,445. Did you see him on the Monday?—No. Yes, excuse me, I must have seen him; it was the nomination day, but not privately I mean to exchange anything.

13,446. Had you heard on the Monday, or before the Tuesday, or on the Tuesday, that a change had come over the spirit of that resolution of his not to bribe?—I had not heard so.

13,447. You had not heard it?—No.

13,448. You had not heard therefore what many others are stated to have heard?—No, but I heard of it immediately afterwards.

13,449. When?—I think immediately after the close of the poll, or next day, I heard that there had been an illegal expenditure feared.

13,450. That he had adandoned his virtuous intentions?—Necessarily so.

13,451. Did you speak to him about it?—I do not remember seeing him after.

13,452. Did you have any correspondence with him on the subject?—None at all.

13,453. Did you see Mr. Fennelly?—Only when I saw him here, not since.

13,454. Who did you hear it from immediately after the election?—I do not remember who it was.

13,455. How soon was it?—I think it must have been the next day.

13,456. The very next day after the election you heard that Mr. Vanderbyl had changed his mind?—I think so.

13,457. Can you tell who told you?—No.

13,458. Was it many people, or one or two, or was it generally said?—I heard it in some quarters, and most obstinately denied in others.

13,459. What did you say about it?—I had no knowledge at all.

13,460. Did you believe it or not?—I did not believe it. I must not say what I believed. I will not make a statement that I do not know.

13,461. Was the quarter from which you obtained your information so trustworthy a quarter that when you heard it you did not refuse to believe it, but preferred to believe either that Mr. Vanderbyl had deceived you or else had changed his mind?—I certainly made up my mind that he had either deceived me or had had occasion to alter his determination, when I found that Bussell had left my employment and had gone surreptitiously, silently, and quietly, and I felt then what had been a vague rumour before was an ascertained fact.

13,462. Why did Bussell's going away in particular cause it?—I knew of his going away after he had gone.

13,463. But why did his going away cause it? You recollect you told me when I examined you the first day that you did not know he had been a bribe agent?—Neither did I.

13,464. Was the mere fact of his going away so suspicious a fact as to induce you to believe that Mr. Vanderbyl had abandoned his determination or changed his mind?—Because it was a part of the rumour.

13,465. Do you mean to say that until you heard that rumour, which was not until after the election, you had never heard that Bussell was a bribe agent?—I do say so.

13,466. And had been named in the witness-box in the way the Chief Commissioner has described in the inquiry of 1865, in the promotion of which you took so conspicuously a part?—It did not come to my knowledge at all.

13,467. Are you aware that his name is given on the minutes of evidence given in the House of Commons as spoken to by the other witnesses?—As being a proved briber?

13,468. As being a treater at all events, a man who had opened his house for treating?—I do not remember it.

13,469. (Mr. Price.) Had you heard at all the transaction of Sir John Shelley's unpaid bills being paid by the candidate who succeeded him, Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, I did not; and as I said just now, there was a reservation in Mr. Kinglake's subscription of 300*l.* to pay these bills.

13,470. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you never heard that Bussell on hearing that Sir John Shelley had given some pledge against bribery, and Mr. Henry Lovibond had done the same, had taken on himself to conceal the fact from the bribable voters at that election, and on the contrary told them that there would be money going?—No, I do not know it.

13,471. Had you heard it?—No, I had not heard it.

13,472. Is not it a very extraordinary thing that that name which seems to have been familiar, if I may judge from the parliamentary reports to your friend, Sir Harry Verney, in the month of June 1866, was not known to you in the month of November 1868?—I do not know what name you are alluding to.

13,473. Bussell's?—I do not think you will find that Sir Harry Verney made any allusion to it.

13,474. (Mr. Coleridge.) In your experience of this place have you ever in your heart believed that the Liberal party had any power here at all independent of the lawyers?—I think that that letter which I handed in, the draft letter, will explain it.

13,475. I want you to answer it yourself. Do you in your heart believe in the course of your business the Liberal party have any separate existence from the lawyers, or any power?—They have had a separate existence, but their power has been overshadowed.

13,476. (Mr. Anstey.) You told me yourself that the candidates were always introduced on both sides by the attornies, six or seven in all take an active part in that business; you had seen four yourself on recent occasions, and then you enumerate Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Cook, Mr. Reed, and Mr. Barham, and afterwards Mr. Haviland making five instead of four. On the Conservative side, Mr. Smith, when in health, that is I suppose the person who was convicted of bribery at the Taunton assizes in 1838. Then Mr. Trevor, another gentleman; Mr. Brice, together with Payne's son. You also named Mr. Bate on the Liberal side, who was dead; and a number of clerks on both sides; and you also supplement a list of solicitors on the Tory side by Mr. Veysey, and on the Liberal side by Mr. Boys, a clerk; and then you said at the end of all which is a passage I read before—"The borough is "in the hands of the lawyers." You do not wish to qualify those statements?—Not at all.

Mr. Eustace Barham recalled.

Mr. E. Barham.

13,477. (Mr. Price.) I want to ask you a question which the name of Boys reminds me of. Do you know anything of Mr. Boys?—He was a clerk in Smith's office.

13,478. And was one of the Conservative attornies?—Yes, and now is in the office of Messrs. Reed and Cook.

13,479. Did you ever hear any reason given why he went from the Conservative office, where he must have known some of the secrets of that party, to assist and become a clerk in the other camp?—There was some rumour.

13,480. Was it a sum of 400*l.* which he had kept back?—I should not like to say, because I have really forgotten what it was, but there was a rumour as to some dispute.

13,481. About money matters?—Yes, I believe so; but I could not say what it was.

13,482. Is it the fact that if there is such a report about a man, he can get at once from the Conservative camp to the Liberal camp, if he is in an attorney's office. Was it pretty well known in the town that there was a claim made against him?—I am so little mixed up in the gossip of the town; I live at Wembdon.

13,483. You are not in a position to answer that?—No.

13,484. There was some rumour?—Yes, there was some rumour.

13,485. Your living out of town, and hearing there was a rumour, the probability is that Mr. Reed, or Mr. Cook, who live in the town know it pretty well?—Yes, I should think you could get that from half-a-dozen persons, but I am not a good person to answer that question.

13,486. (Mr. Coleridge.) You told us about the way the money of Mr. Bagehot's election was raised, that you and Mr. Bate, and Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Reed entered into a joint guarantee to the extent of 1,000*l.*?—What I have told you is that I raised the money on the representation of Mr. Henry Lovibond, who had represented that Mr. Reed and Mr. Bate had guaranteed.

13,487. You drew your cheque for 500*l.* yourself which Mr. Ford took to Bristol and got cashed in sovereigns?—Yes.

13,488. Subsequently you drew 200*l.*?—Yes.

13,489. That is all that was spent in bribery so far as you know?—Only 600*l.* on the polling day, because 100*l.* I paid back into the bank.

13,490. How did you get paid that, you have not told us?—Yes, by Messrs. Warry, Robins, and Burgess, about three weeks afterwards, Mr. Bagehot's, lawyers.

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

6 Sept. 1869.

13,491. With his knowledge and assent?—I should think there could have been no doubt about it, because when I saw him subsequently he alluded to the expense of the previous contest.

13,492. With whom did you deal?—Mr. Robins.

13,493. Can you tell me how the anomalous conversion of Mr. Brice from a Liberal to a Tory agent and patron of the borough was brought about?—That was before I came to Bridgwater. The first time I took any part in an election in my life, he was on the Conservative I believe.

Mr. J. Cook.

Mr. James Cook recalled.

13,494. (Mr. Price.) I trust that you will take example by Mr. Barham in one point at all events, and that is by making a full disclosure without putting us to the trouble of examining you, because in the first place it shortens the thing very much, and makes it a connected story, and tends to produce a greater amount of belief in our minds when it comes out voluntarily. First, I will ask you how long have you been in partnership?—From the 1st of May 1865.

13,495. Before then, in whose office were you?—From July 1859 until the 1st of May 1865 I was an articled clerk in Messrs. Carslake and Barham's, and for some years prior to July 1859 I had also been an ordinary clerk.

13,496. Now tell us what part you took in the last election of 1868?—It occurs to me that the first date of any importance at all as regards money matters, in fact the very, first day would bring me to Friday, I believe the 13th of November last year. On the morning of that day either at our office, or at the office of Mr. Henry Lovibond, I forget which, a meeting of four solicitors took place, namely, Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Barham, Mr. Reed, and myself. At that meeting a report was made of the result of the canvass on the part of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, and I have here the report or tabulated statement as it was then made up, of the result of the canvass, and with your permission I will place this before you:—It is divided into five columns, in the first column there is "L" representing Liberals; in the second column "C" representing Conservatives; in the third column, "D. F." doubtful for; in the fourth column, "D. A." doubtful against; and in the fifth column the letter "N" representing neutrals. Now in the first column there are three sets of voters, being one to represent Mr. Lovibond's report, the other to represent Mr. Barham's report, and the other to represent our report, and I would put in parenthetically, as far as the canvass was concerned, I took little or no part in it. It was done by my partner. I think I went out on one or two occasions. In the first column is Mr. Barham's return, 87 Liberals, 77 Conservatives, 196 doubtful for, 75 doubtful against, and none under the head of neutral.

13,497. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the difference between doubtful for and doubtful against?—I did not take them that way, but all three reports. Then Mr. Lovibond's report was under the first column 68, under the second, 81; doubtful for, 138; doubtful against, 68; and 11 neutral. Then the return marked R. and C. being 202 Liberals, 135 Conservatives, 138 doubtful for, and 114 doubtful against; none under the head of neutral. The total of those columns would represent 357 Liberals, 293 Conservatives, 492 doubtful for, 257 doubtful against, with 11 neutrals.

13,498. Under which of those columns of doubtful for and doubtful against would the balance men be?

13,499. (Mr. Anstey.) I apprehend that as to this "doubtful for" you mean in classifying them, there are two distinct classes which will be added together and represent a large body whom it was doubtful whether they would be for or against?—Yes, no doubt.

13,500. "Doubtful for" would be more likely to be for than against, and "doubtful against" more likely to be against than for?—No doubt. I think that is the interpretation to be attached to it. In adding up these totals it was found that they only represent a total of 1,410. I think the last figure is not quite legible, but then it was found out that two figures representing 46 had not been included for West Street or a part of the borough, being a portion I think of Mr. Henry Lovibond's, and adding that it would make it a total of 1,456. I do not think that represented the total on the register, but it was taken to represent generally the figures. I found on the paper this sort of summary of the report, taking the number of Liberals at 357. According to that report, I see deducted 293 Conservatives, which would leave a majority of 64 upon those two first columns, and then I find the next column, which is "doubtful for" 492, having "doubtful against" 257 deducted from it, leaves a majority of 235 in favour of "doubtful for." Then I find the next thing I did—this was all done in the presence of the four parties—when I took the 293 Conservatives, on taking the 293 Conservatives and adding their "doubtful fors" which appear under my head as "doubtful against" would give them a total of 550. However, the result may be taken out on this statement, that there was a majority of from 200 to 300 doubtful for, as against Conservatives and doubtful against.

13,501. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that made on the assumption of its being a pure election?—Not a word I believe had transpired as far as myself, and I believe my partner.

13,502. Was it on the assumption that you made it, and did you make it on the assumption of money being spent as there had been, or of being exceptionally free?—At that moment no money had been mentioned.

13,503. It is the assumption I want to know on which you made the list, was it on the assumption that it would be a pure election?—No, certainly not, neither one way nor the other.

13,504. (Mr. Price.) "Doubtful for" and "Doubtful against" are people who are amenable to bribery?—Yes, unquestionably.

13,505. And with those who are more doubtful, for or against it would be a question which would pay them highest?—I have no doubt that in both cases the same observation would apply.

13,506. (Mr. Anstey.) I may take it for granted that in preparing this statement you know well those persons whose names figure in the columns "Doubtful for" and "Doubtful against"?—The names of the voters?

13,507. By character and reputation?—As a Bridgwater man I must have known so.

13,508. Then I take it for granted that those two columns represented the estimate which you had formed on the political morality of those voters?—I have no doubt that, substantially speaking, it represented the state of things in that respect: but I should have said that, according to my knowledge, it has been the practice to have the canvass book framed in this particular manner, namely, a column for each candidate on both sides, and three columns for Doubtful for, and Doubtful against, and Neutrals.

13,509. (Mr. Price.) When you have this kind of cabinet council of the borough, do you then go into the probable expense by putting the prices against the men?—Certainly not.

13,510. I thought you might have wanted to tell the candidate what it would cost?—Certainly not.

13,511. (Mr. Anstey.) You say, at previous elections each canvasser, including, I suppose, the candidates, who pretend to know nothing about these things, has a canvass book with him. We have it on evidence that there is a particular stage of every election in which these doubtful-fors and doubtful-againsts are bought like cattle. I want to know at what period the price of this man and that man (if I may call them men) on the face of those two lists of "For" and "Against"—what time is their value per head calculated ?—I have no idea.

13,512. (Mr. Price.) You want to know in Bridgwater how much money is necessary, and you cannot have that without having them appraised, when are they appraised, and the value set on each vote, so that you can say to a candidate, "We shall want 1,500*l.* or 2,000*l.*" ?—I have never been present at an appraisement.

13,513. That is reserved for an inner cabinet ?—Possibly so; I have never been present.

13,514. (Mr. Anstey.) What was said when you presented that statement ?—Of course that was the first time a canvass had been made of the new constituency, and the remark that was made according to the result was that there was a majority of 200 or 300 in favour of the Liberals.

13,515. (Mr. Price.) Who did you employ to make the canvass ?—The canvass was generally made by the solicitors, accompanied by the candidates, and sometimes two or three leaders of the parties would join in. I believe that it is the usual course of practice.

13,516. You did not trust this to the Bussells and Allans ?—To the best of my knowledge and belief they did not canvass on the last occasion, nor do I know of any previous election at which they have.

13,517. Was there a thorough canvass before that paper was made up of the town or their agents ?—I believe so.

13,518. (Mr. Anstey.) Not having the assistance of Allan and Bussell and those who knew best where to get the materials for the estimate, may it not be that you have underrated rather than overrated the amount of bribable element in the borough ?—It is quite possible.

13,519. (Mr. Coleridge.) Bussell has said he does not believe in canvassing ?—No, in a place like Bridgwater it is mere nonsense to talk of it.

13,520. It goes for nothing ?—It goes for nothing, no doubt of it.

13,521. So that having got the Doubtful-fors and against, your estimate went for nothing ?—To a certain extent, it was separating the wheat from the chaff.

13,522. Had you in the course of your canvass on this occasion acquired such a knowledge of the bribable element of the new constituency as to enable you to speak with certainty or with tolerable certainty as to them ?—No, as I before said, I stated I think already, I had but little to do with it, only on one occasion, I think.

13,523. (Mr. Anstey.) We have it in evidence as regards the old constituency your knowledge, if we may believe the minutes of evidence on the trial of Sir John Shelley's petition, of the bribable element in the course of that canvass, must have been very great ?—A large proportion, I believe.

13,524. It is mentioned that you were present with Sir John Shelley from the beginning to the end of the canvass, and you heard the numbers of voters of whom he speaks and to whom he applied for their votes tell him with the greatest audacity and shamelessness, "I "do not know whether I shall vote for you, Sir John "Shelley, or no. I shall vote for Mr. Most,"—a remark which is stated on Sir John Shelley's oath to have been received with shouts of laughter whenever it was made by you ?—I do not think he said I was with him canvassing from the beginning to the end; in fact, my canvass on that occasion was very little indeed. I do not know that that affects the question, but for explanation you will permit me to say that I believe, beyond canvassing the Bath Road with him, and I think Barclay Street, but not a great deal, certainly, I was not with him from the beginning to the end, or anything like it; but then, I do remember one occasion being with him canvassing, but I forget the street, but my impression is it was Barclay Street, where something you have remarked and have read from that blue book took place. "I turned round and "said to Mr. Cook, who was with him, 'What does "he mean ?' Mr. Cook burst out laughing, and said, "'Why, the man who will give most.'" I have no doubt. I may say that was not the first time in my life I had heard of Mr. Most in Bridgwater.

13,525. You had heard in the course of your former canvassing ?—I had not canvassed before.

13,526. Or since ?—Except a little on the last occasion.

13,527. You found in the course of your canvass on the former occasion, and formed a good opinion of the bribable element in the old constituency ?—No doubt there was a considerable element.

13,528. You had that former experience, and the novel experience which you acquired at the last elecvass ?—Certainly.

13,529. In addition to that did not you use for the purpose of your estimate of which you have spoken such information as your acquaintance with Bussell and Allan and others might furnish you with ?—Except the last occasion, except so far as Bussell was concerned, I had no previous acquaintance with them.

13,530. Allan or anybody else, I do not care who; but did not you use for the purpose of your estimate of the Doubtful-for and Doubtful-against, and their comparative numbers, did not you use such information as the bribery agents gave ?—I have no doubt as much as this, if you called on Mr. John Jones (and he is a man you would probably know before from his position in life), if he said, "I will vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl," no doubt he would be put down by Mr. Vanderbyl as a man who had promised, who would be open to be influenced by the other side. Supposing that he had promised the Liberals, and money was offered to him on the part of the Liberals, that influence would not be sufficient to prevent him expecting money to vote for the Conservatives.

13,531. Did you get that same knowledge from your senior partner ?—Yes, no doubt.

13,532. He has been in practice for many years ?—Yes.

13,533. How many ?—I think he has been a professional man about 20 years.

13,534. Was it upon all this combined information that you formed your estimate ?—The figures were all laid down in their presence, and all by dictation.

13,535. (Mr. Price.) With the experience of this last election before you, and the revelations which have taken place, have you any doubt that it fell far short of the truth as regards the amount of corruptible matter ?—I can hardly say, according to the revelations made. I believe there has been very little, comparatively speaking, money spent, compared, for instance, with the one of 1866, of Mr. Vanderbyl.

13,536. I speak of corruptible matter with regard to this estimate; does not it now fall far short of what you would estimate the corruptible matter ?—I have no doubt of it.

13,537. (Mr. Price.) If you had to estimate another election, would not you have to take a larger proportion of those persons who could be dealt with as doubtful ?—Yes, that is exceedingly likely.

13,538. (Mr. Anstey.) You agree in what was said by Bussell, concurred in by Allan ?—As far as I can express an opinion I believe that was rather over estimated.

13,539. By how much ?—Perhaps by 50 or 100; not more than 100 I should think.

13,540. Bussell affirmed what I may take to be three-fourths of the constituency corruptible, and the total being 1,400 to 1,600, it is an exaggeration only of 100 ?—Yes, I think so.

13,541. (Mr. Coleridge.) Should you consider those who bribed as corruptible in the same sense as those who were bribed. In the estimate, should you add or subtract all those persons who would give money, like Bussell and Allan ?—They would go under the first head.

13,542. As corrupt votes ?—No, under the first column as Liberals.

13,543. In making your estimate of the number of people who will or will not take bribes, do you include bribers as well as bribees ?—I should think not.

13,544. (Mr. Anstey.) You add them, therefore, to the bribees ?—Well, according to the revelations made here, a large number would have to be added.

13,545. (Mr. Price.) Would there be 50 righteous ?—In the entire constituency ?

13,546. Yes ?—I should think so.

13,547. (Mr. Coleridge.) Because the bankers and all would have to go in ?—I think if all go in in that sense, it would dwindle down to a very small number.

13,548. Fifty then ?—I should think it extremely doubtful.

13,549. Now will you go on to what took place on that day ?—Then later in the same day Mr. Reed and myself were at work in Mr. Lovibond's office discussing matters generally, and whilst we were there Mr. Barham came in and leant against the wall of the office, and by posture and gesticulations seemed to have something of an extraordinary kind to communicate, and he said he had been waited on by a friend of Mr. Vanderbyl's to the effect that this election was to be fought on pure principles. That was the first conversation at which, to the best of my knowledge and belief, as to money matters, or the manner in which the election was to be conducted, was mentioned, and I confess that a feeling of surprise was expressed and shown on the faces of all present.

13,550. (Mr. Coleridge.) And disappointment ?—And disappointment.

13,551. (Mr. Price.) Who was present ?—Mr. Barham came in as I have before said, and Mr. Lovibond. Mr. Reed and myself were there. Mr. Barham came in and said he had been waited upon.

13,552. And you said with an amount of gesticulation and posture ?—No, Mr. Barham came in and leant against the wall. I remember his position, as if really he was going to communicate something which he believed would be a matter of surprise. That was the first time, I believe, so far as my partner as well as myself is concerned we had heard of money matters.

13,553. (Mr. Anstey.) You had better speak for yourself only ?—Then at all events, speaking for myself, I never heard of an arrangement suggested or communication with Mr. Fennelly with regard to any communication being made to fight that election up to that moment. I believe it was a voluntary visit on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl's friend to Mr. Barham. The matter was considered, in all human probability the Conservatives would resort to corrupt practices, because for three or four reasons they urged that Mr. Westropp's name—I remember that expression being used—meant money in Bridgwater, the new constituency, and Mr. Gray had been spoken of as an exceedingly rich man at that time.

13,554. They said this, that Mr. Westropp's name meant money ?—Yes, and also reported from the very moment, in fact, that Mr. Gray was to be candidate, he was an exceedingly wealthy merchant, and it was the impression certainly that the Conservatives meant to fight the battle as it had been fought before.

13,555. I understand this is what was expressed amongst you all at this meeting ?—Unquestionably. Then Mr. Barham was asked to go back and see Mr. Vanderbyl's friend, up to that moment it had not transpired who that friend was, and explain our views, and in the event of the Conservatives resorting to bribery——

13,556. Before that, come to the second conversation. Do you remember Mr. Reed expressing great anger at hearing of this determination by Mr. Vanderbyl ?—There is no doubt that my partner was warm about it.

13,557. Your answer to my question is yes ?—Yes.

13,558. You have heard what Mr. Barham has said about that ?—He was warm, there is no doubt about it.

13,559. You agree with him then ?—He was warm, no doubt. Mr. Barham left, and came back a second time and stated that he had communicated what had previously transpired to Mr. Vanderbyl's friend, but he still adhered to his determination. A further discussion took place, and we were all present, and I remember Mr. Lovibond making a suggestion that if that were so the best thing to do would be to ask Mr. Vanderbyl to retire, in the hope of a coalition between Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Westropp. Whether rightly or wrongly, I certainly did make a very strong remark on that, and I believe in the presence of all, I believe Mr. Barham was present, that it should not be said of me that I would support a coalition under the circumstances, and I did strongly dissent from it.

13,560. Who proposed it ?—Mr. Lovibond and I did make use of that particular remark. Then it was arranged that I should go back with Mr. Barham to his office where Mr. Vanderbyl's friend was then staying, and hear what he had to say ; communicate again the determination he had come to, and if necessary ask if he would meet all by-and-by. I went back, and then found it was Mr. Fennelly, whom I had previously known by meeting him at Mr. Vanderbyl's house. Then Mr. Fennelly was no doubt very strong in his remonstrance. "Mr. Vanderbyl has fully made up his mind to pure principles." And then, in answer to a remark about what the Conservatives were prepared to do, he made use of the expression which I well remember, that Mr. Vanderbyl did not mind money, he would rather spend 5,000*l.* afterwards in the prosecution of a petition against the Conservatives in the event of their doing it. It was arranged after all that Mr Fennelly should meet us again at Mr. Barham's later in the evening. I then returned to Mr. Barham's office. I do not know whether Mr. Vanderbyl accompanied. I found Mr. Reed and Mr. Lovibond there, and it was arranged that we should attend at Mr. Barham's office. At the appointed hour we attended. Mr. Fennelly came accompanied by Mr. Vanderbyl. He retired into Mr. Carslake's room, and we again went over the course which had been travelled over.

13,561. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who retired into the rooms ?—Mr. Vanderbyl, and we travelled over the same course again, and Mr. Lovibond was no doubt upon that, as Mr. Barham has said, the chief spokesman, and he expressed his conviction that it would be useless to have the election on pure principles, for the reason that the Conservatives would resort to improper means, and we should be nowhere.

13,562. (Mr. Price.) Will you tell me whether that proposition, which seemed to me a very practical one, was discussed, submitting that the Conservatives would win the election by bribery, fighting on purity principles, which you say the Liberal party wanted so much to do, and your chance then of turning out the Conservatives on petition. Was that opinion of Mr. Fennelly's ever discussed among you ?—It certainly never was.

13,563. (Mr. Anstey.) It was not entertained even for the purpose of discussing it ?—I think, so far as that is concerned, there had been recently a petition, and we had quite enough of it.

13,564. (Mr. Price.) Here was the friend saying he would spend 5,000*l.* which was double the amount before, and proposed you Liberal gentlemen, who wanted a pure election beyond anything in the world, should keep your money in your pockets ?—It was never seriously considered at all.

13,565. (Mr. Anstey.) It was not entertained even for the purpose of discussion ?—Not in a serious way at all. I cannot say it was not talked of at all. Then it was arranged after that was over with Mr. Fennelly, to consider the matter still further and to write a letter to Mr. Barham by a given hour that evening, stating whether he had altered his mind or not.

13,566. (Mr. Anstey.) What hour ?—I forget the hour, 7 or 8 o'clock. I will not be positive.

13,567. On Saturday evening ?—No, I am still upon the Friday. Then at the appointed hour I think we all went to Mr. Barham's office, I think it was, and then there was a letter which had been received from Mr. Fennelly confirming his previous determination. Nothing further as far as I can remember took place that night, but on Saturday there was a public meeting, as Mr. Barham has described, in this building ; I think one of the largest that had been held in it during the election. Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake were both present, and both addressed the audience. A resolution was carried by acclamation approving of them, and promising to support them. This was Saturday evening.

13,568. (Mr. Anstey.) At that meeting, notwithstanding all the jealousy and fears evidenced before us between Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, is it not the fact that the greatest affection and confidence was expressed by Mr. Vanderbyl towards Mr. Kinglake and by Mr. Kinglake towards Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

13,569. So much so, that you thought it proper to put those expressions of mutual affection into separate briefs, for I believe in defence of the seat they severed?—There was a severance no doubt.

13,570. And in each brief it was thought advisable to rely on those expressions of love. Is not that the case?—No doubt. There was nothing which took place in their conduct or manner which led anyone to suppose there was any estrangement in any shape or form. Whilst at that meeting some person on the platform asked if I would attend at Mr. Sealey's after the meeting was over. Not knowing what it was, my partner and myself went there, and there were several persons present on that occasion. I cannot give you the names, but at all events Mr. Sealey said Mr. Fennelly had placed in his hands that day a resolution which had been passed, I think by the National Bank, with reference to Mr. Vanderbyl's examination some few days before with regard to the Lundy Island Granite Company. The resolution was discussed there by all present, and I think I may say we unanimously came to the conclusion that there was nothing in that resolution which would alter the previous determination to support Mr. Vanderbyl. The deputation was appointed consisting, as I believe, of Mr. Sealey, Mr. Sully, and I think, Mr. Wilton; I will not be sure, but I think Mr. Barham.

13,571. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Sealey take an active part?—He was considered chairman at that particular meeting. There were seven or eight more present probably. That deputation was requested to wait upon Mr. Vanderbyl, and communicate the result the meeting had arrived at.

13,572. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you promoted the meeting?—Not in any sense or form. I had only been asked on that platform to go to Mr. Sealey's house. I did not know that there was a meeting there, or even the object of the meeting.

13,573. I do not mean that meeting which was not friendly to Mr. Vanderbyl, but the one which was friendly to him, the previous one, which had determined that there was nothing in the Lundy Island Granite Company's frauds?—That was the first meeting.

13,574. Or malpractices which would disqualify him from representing such a place as Bridgwater?—That was the first meeting, as far as I remember, at Mr. Sealey's. There were other meetings the following day, which I will come to presently.

13,575. (Mr. Price.) That meeting you were invited to while on the platform?—Undoubtedly.

13,576. When those two gentlemen, Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, spoke at this public meeting, did they then announce that they intended to conduct the election on pure principles?—Not to my knowledge. I remember no such expressions.

13,577. Here, were the electors of Bridgwater and their political principles must have been very well known?—No doubt.

13,578. Did not they say a word—let the Conservatives do as they like?—I do not remember such an expression.

13,579. (Mr. Coleridge.) If they had spoken of that they might as well have gone home at once?—No doubt about it.

13,580. (Mr. Anstey.) At any rate, if anybody were to come and speak in that way, be it an angel, you do not believe he would get in?—Not a suggestion of it.

13,581. If they had, what would be the consequence?—As the learned Commissioner suggested. Now, so much for Saturday night. Then on the Sunday morning, I forget the time, I received that letter from Mr. Henry Lovibond. It is dated:

" Westfield House,
" Dear sir, 15th November 1868.
" Will you kindly give me a call this " morning.
" Yours truly,
" Henry Lovibond.
" James Cook, junior, Esq."

Well, I did not go, and I daresay Mr. Barham has told you already that he went to meet Mr. Lovibond there. Then I have heard, in the course of these revelations, there was a meeting at Mr. Nicholls' house, at about 3 o'clock on that same Sunday. That letter being dated the 15th, the following Sunday, I was not present at that meeting, and I did not know that it had taken place until later in the day; but about 8 o'clock on the same day Mr. George Wilton called at my house in the Taunton Road. He asked me if I would attend at Mr. Nicholls's at an hour which he then named.

13,582. Who is Mr. George Wilton?—One of the firm of Brown and Co. He asked me, and I think he said half-past 9 or 10 o'clock; I will not be sure as to the time. I went.

13,583. To his house?—No, to the house of Mr. Nicholls, in the square, and on arriving I found several persons already assembled. Mr. Henry Frederick Nicholls was there, Mr. Lovibond, and several others; and, to the best of my knowledge, I prepared a list of persons who were at that meeting, and they were as follows: " H. J. Nicholls, C. B. Mogg, Dr. Winter-" botham, Joseph Palmer, John Smith, C. Symmons, " George Wilton, J. W. Sully, Thomas Collins, " Lovibond, Reed, Cook." To the best of my knowledge those are the persons present. There was no doubt at that meeting the subject of Mr. Vanderbyl's examination, in reference to the Lundy Island Granite Company, was discussed, and the discussion on all matters extended over, I should think, at least two or three hours, and there is no doubt about the fact that it was whispered round there, to the effect of the communication that Mr. Vanderbyl had made of his intention to fight the election upon purity principles; the communication he had made through his friend.

13,584. So late as Saturday night?—Yes, this was Saturday night.

13,585. (Mr. Anstey.) Do not let me misunderstand you. You say at this meeting which took place, both subjects were discussed, namely, his misconduct or alleged misconduct, as the accountable director of the Lundy Granite Company, and his more recent offence of the refusal to go into bribery, and the alleged determination to conduct the election on purity principles?—No doubt one was open discussion and the other was whispered round—the communication he made.

13,586. Which was the real prevailing cause of complaint, the Lundy Island granite scandal, or his determination not to spend money in bribes?—I have no doubt in my own mind, and such was my impression at the time, that the real object was to consider the determination he had come to, to fight the election on purity principles.

13,587. And to get him to revoke it?—I have no doubt we did. Then it was suggested and discussed again that he should be asked to retire. A good deal of discussion took place as to his retiring, and I remember again repeating there that which I repeated at Mr. Lovibond's office on the previous Friday, that I would be no party to a coalition between Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, or Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Westropp. I used the expression that I would rather fight half a dozen honest battles, and lose, than

THIRTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

be a party to that. At last it was arranged that a deputation—I think it was put to a division—I am not quite sure whether they approved the course, but at all events it was arranged at last that Mr. Nicholls, Mr. Collins, and Mr. Joseph Palmer, should form a deputation to wait on Mr. Vanderbyl, to explain to him that they had been considering the examination with reference to the Lundy Granite Company, that they believed it had made him unpopular with the electors, and that by continuing to persevere, he would affect the seat of Mr. Kinglake, and that probably both would be lost in consequence. That was the message the deputation were to carry to Mr. Vanderbyl.

13,588. (Mr. Anstey.) Had they in their mind at that time any other person in case he had acceded to that?—Not a suggestion had been made about it.

13,589. What did they intend to do? Have a coalition?—Yes; the deputation returned, and I think as late as 12, or possibly later, and they said they had seen him, and also, I think, Mr. Fennelly, but he saw no reason to alter his determination.

13,590. As to the Lundy Granite Company, or the bribery?—At all events to retire, that he did not see why he should retire, and so it was arranged according to the report of the deputation, that he should further consider until 10 o'clock the next morning. Now, as far as I can remember, it was after 12 o'clock when that meeting broke up. I will not be positive of it. My partner left perhaps a minute before me. I stayed at the door in conversation with someone and followed in about a minute, I should think, and on reaching my house, which is a quarter of a mile from Mr. Nicholls on the Taunton Road, I was informed that a friend of Mr. Vanderbyl's had been there to inquire for me.

13,591. (Mr. Anstey.) Who had informed you?—My servant. This certainly must have been after 12 o'clock. Shortly afterwards Mr. Fennelly went to my house; he went into the dining-room and then complained of the way Mr. Vanderbyl had been treated; he had been asked to retire. He told me of the deputation having waited on Mr. Vanderbyl; he had taken a part in the discussion, and he certainly, just before the deputation were about to leave, said to them, "Gentlemen, it is all humbug your talking "about the Lundy Island Granite Company, you "mean money."

13,592. Who said this?—Mr. Fennelly said this to me, and no reply was given to that by the deputation either one way or the other. Then there was no doubt upon that occasion Mr. Fennelly complained of the pressure which had been brought to bear upon him by Mr. Henry Lovibond; it was Mr. Fennelly's expression, this deputation and one thing and another, and then he told me he had recently come from the house of Mr. Hennett, who is a friend of Mr. Westropp's, that he had been asked by Mr. Spink, who is a partner of Mr. Hennett, as I understand, if he would have any objection to meet Mr. Westropp that evening at Mr. Hennett's house, and he consented to go there. In going there he saw Mr. Hennett and Mr. Spink. A suggestion was made about Mr. Vanderbyl coalescing with Mr. Westropp. While they were in conversation Mr. Westropp came in, and Mr. Hennett and Mr. Spink retired. According to the way Mr. Fennelly put it before me, a suggestion was made. I understood that Mr. Westropp had suggested, as Mr. Gray was indifferent about his seat, and what they wanted was to see Mr. Westropp get in, he suggested a coalition between himself and Mr. Vanderbyl. A conversation took place upon it, and then Mr. Fennelly said he left to go as I understood him to say, to the house of Mr. William Brice which is in the same street, about 60 yards distant, to consult him and Mr. James Trevor, who was understood to be in the house at that time. Shortly after that Mr. Westropp came back, a further conversation took place on the subject, ending in saying if anything is to be done in this it had better be done as between the lawyers. You had better see Messrs. Reed and Cook. Mr. Fennelly then appears to have gone to the "Globe," because he saw the deputation between going to Mr. Hennett and my house, and Mr. Fennelly said, "I have come to ask you what you think of that proposition." I was equally strong in the condemnation of that as in the condemnation of the suggested coalition between Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Westropp upon the Friday, and on that evening at Mr. Nicholl's house, and I said I would rather fight half a dozen honest battles and lose, than be a party to an arrangement of that kind. I believe that was substantially the answer that I gave. Upon that he said, "You know that Mr. Barham has been to me and made a proposition." I was not aware of it, nor did I make any assent or dissent to what he then stated. He followed it up and said, "Mr. Bar-"ham has made a proposition on the part of Mr. "Berkeley's friends, and that Mr. James's friends "should be prepared with 1,500*l.* and Mr. Berkeley "with the same sum."

13,593. (Mr. Anstey.) We have it in evidence who were meant?—No doubt, that is the first time I heard the names of James and Berkeley in connexion with the Bridgwater election. Mr. Fennelly asked me if I thought it was an honest proposition, because he complained of the conduct of Mr. Lovibond in bringing this pressure on Mr. Vanderbyl with reference to the deputation and other things, and I made this answer, "If Mr. Barham has made you such a proposition as that no doubt it will be carried out." A further discussion took place with reference to it, and I have no doubt on that occasion it was stated that the arrangement was being made to be carried out only in the case of the Conservatives resorting to improper means, when it would become necessary as a sort of protection. Then I was asked if I would that next morning convey to Mr. Berkeley's friends the acceptance by Mr. James's friends of the proposition which had been so made, and I arranged to do it.

13,594. Mr. Fennelly asked you?—Yes, and then he said he should go to town in order to make the necessary arrangements for the carrying out of the acceptance of that proposal.

13,595. You have put it down in white and black who was meant by James and Berkeley throughout this conversation?—Mr. James was at all events Mr. Vanderbyl, and Mr. Berkeley was meant for Mr Kinglake.

13,596. You agree with Mr. Barham's statement?—Unquestionably. Then I was asked to communicate it. It is due to Mr. Fennelly to state that he was exceedingly bitter with regard to the manner in which Mr. Vanderbyl had been treated in the strong desire to have that election carried out on pure principles. I was asked to press the acceptance of the proposal on Mr. Barham the next morning, and the next morning I wrote a letter to Mr. Henry Lovibond, asking him if he would call at our office on his way to town, and before I reached the office I met my partner, and told him all that had transpired between Mr. Fennelly and myself on the previous Sunday night. It occurs to me that I should now go back to that communication with regard to the suggested coalition. That was communicated to me as a masonic communication, and I was not to divulge that.

13,597. Who used that expression?—Mr. Fennelly said it was coming from Mr. Westropp, who was a mason. I think he said he was not a mason, but it was to be conveyed to me as a masonic one.

13,598. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you a mason?—I am.

13,599. (Mr. Anstey.) I ask whether it is competent according to the rules of masonry for one mason out of a lodge, and by a mere admonition of that kind, to bind the others to masonic secrecy?—Well, I certainly paid attention to it myself in the way I was going to describe to you with regard to my conduct on the Monday morning, as to that part of it at all events, except as far as my partner was concerned who was a mason, and therefore I felt at liberty to communicate it to him.

13,600. You do not consider it equivalent to the secret of a lodge?—Certainly not, I should not like it to be understood for a moment that it would be in any way equivalent to it.

13,601. For I am afraid otherwise there would soon be an end to the administration of justice in this country ?—Then I wrote on Monday morning to Mr. Lovibond a note, asking him to call at our office on his way to town. Just as I was outside the office door I saw Mr. Lovibond coming in the direction of Mr. Barham's offices, and he said to me, "Well, I "have had your notice, but the writing is so much like "Barham's I have been down there. I did not notice "the signature, thinking it was his." He came in, and we got into Mr. Reed's room; Mr. Reed was not present at that particular moment. Then I communicated to Mr. Lovibond what had transpired between Mr. Fennelly and myself previously saving the coalition. That I did not communicate at that time, for the reason which I will place before you, and I told Mr. Lovibond the question which was put as to whether Mr. Berkeley's friends will be prepared, and his answer was "Certainly."

13,602. That is whether Mr. Kinglake's friends would be prepared to meet Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Certainly, whether they were honest in their proposal.

13,603. I do not think that either Mr. James or Mr. Berkeley would be flattered by having their names taken in vain so much, I would much rather you would use the names of the real parties ?—Personally I much regret having to use them. Then I believe Mr. Lovibond left, no particular discussion took place at that time, and I believe going out he met my partner. I should state that when I made that statement to Mr. Lovibond, he made use of this expression, "Last night's meeting was not without its influence." When I made the communication of Mr. Fennelly's proposition, then he said, "Last night's meeting was not without its influence;" alluding to the meeting unquestionably at Mr. Nicholls.

13,604. Or the deputation, which ?—The deputation and meeting as a whole no doubt. That was the nomination morning, the deputation as I told you before consisted of those parties at the meeting. Mr. Sully was present, and it would appear that he had previously promised Mr. Vanderbyl to nominate him, or second him, I forget which, but it is due to Mr. Sully to state that I think he was one of the persons who from his observation and so on, whether actually put to the vote I do not know, who was unwilling to concur in the suggestion of the deputation, at all events he formed no part of the deputation, but said "I shall go down and tell Mr. Vanderbyl for "reasons, of these disclosures, and one thing and "another I do not feel in my own mind that I am "able to perform the promise, and I shall go down "and tell him that I want to be relieved from it." And I was told by Mr. Fennelly that Mr. Sully did come there some quarter of an hour or 20 minutes in front of the deputation, and made the communication to Mr. Vanderbyl, that he was sorry he could not propose him as he had previously promised to do, or to second him I forget which.

13,605. Was that on account of his supposed participation in bribery or on account of his unexpected non-participation in bribery, which ?—Mr. Sully urged strongly those disclosures, that in his own mind he felt from his position an unwillingness.

13,606. That is the Lundy Granite affair ?—Yes.

13,607. And bribery ?—I believe Mr. Sully, when he made that, was honest.

13,608. (Mr. Price.) He put it on that ground ?—He did so far as my impression is concerned; it is due to him to say he was honest in that. Then there was the nomination on Monday morning, and there is no doubt there was a difficulty in getting the persons to propose and second Mr. Vanderbyl.

13,609. On what ground ?—I think there was a meeting that morning again, after Mr. Lovibond had gone, of the lawyers, and I think including Mr. Barham, at which this difficulty was discussed, and it was arranged different persons should be seen by the different lawyers, with the view of getting Mr. Vanderbyl proposed and seconded.

13,610. The nomination being about 12 o'clock ?—11 or 12 o'clock, something of that sort; and I remember two persons whom I saw, Mr. George Wilton I believe, and Mr. Thomas Collins, both of whom expressed their unwillingness; and said the shortness of the notice, and for one thing and another, they were unwilling to do it. That was the only reason they gave.

13,611. I thought you said one thing and another ? Well, they said the shortness of the notice, and they preferred not to do it, and that kind of thing.

13,612. Not to do what ?—Proposing or seconding him. Then I believe the two persons I saw were Mr. Wilton and Mr. Collins, and we met on the Cornhill, each lawyer making his report :—"I have seen A, and I have seen B, and he will not do it;" and at last Mr. William Hurman was present, and I think Mr. Reed, Mr. Barham, and myself were present, and after some little persuasion he consented to do it. Time was drawing short, and at last it was consented that I should take on myself to be proposer, or seconder, and I took it upon myself. I preferred, though rather reluctantly, to second.

13,613. Did Mr. Thompson decline ?—I did not see Mr. Thompson, but I think he was seen by Mr. Barham.

13,614. And he refused ?—And he refused.

13,615. What was the ground on which they all refused ?—The ground they urged, so far as those two I saw were concerned, was the shortness of the notice, they had never done so before, and I think they then referred to these recent disclosures, and would rather not do it.

13,616. Did any refuse to propose him on the ground that they feared there was going to be bribery going on ?—Certainly not.

13,617. Or on the ground that they feared there would not be bribery ?—Certainly not.

13,618. I will only ask one question with reference to something you said you would prefer to state presently, the reason why you did not communicate with Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Reed the conversation with Mr. Fennelly which conveyed the distinct proposal of the coalition between Vanderbyl and Westropp ?—I think you must have misunderstood me. I did mention it to my partner as a mason, all that did transpire between myself and Mr. Fennelly on the Sunday night.

13,619. You said there was something to conceal ?—What I mean is that I concealed part of the suggested coalition from Mr. Lovibond.

13,620. What was your reason for concealing that ?—The reason was it was conveyed to me as a masonic communication, and Mr. Lovibond not being a mason, I did not feel at liberty to tell him.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

Tuesday, 7th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

FOURTEENTH DAY.
Mr. E. Barham.
7 Sept. 1869.

Mr. EUSTACE BARHAM recalled.

13,621. (Mr. Anstey.) You stated in your evidence mainly as to this effect, that the consultation between you and Mr. Lovibond and the other attorneys, during the canvass, and after the canvass down to the nomination day, as to the course to be taken supposing Mr. Vanderbyl did not bribe and Mr. Kinglake did not bribe, proceeded upon the assumption that this was a Liberal borough, but that you would be hopelessly defeated if there were no bribery on your side. Now I understand that to presuppose another fact, which was that the opposite party had determined on bribing?—That is to say, that we supposed so.

13,622. Would you have the kindness to inform the Commission what were the facts, or what was the information, which induced you for so many days before the nomination day to take that important fact for granted, so far as to found all your proceedings on the assumption of it?—One fact was Mr. Gray's being here, as I have stated before. That appeared to us to be very indicative of the intention of the Conservatives to spend money. Then there were little rumours and reports that came in; we had rumours of treating; that was called "randying." We understood there had been meetings of Conservatives, which I think have been spoken of in evidence, at Denman's inn opposite.

13,623. What is the nature of "randying"?—A meeting of that kind, as I understand it, is a meeting of the voters of the party, the bribable portion, and their drinking together at night; and therefore having noticed that recourse was being had to that kind of proceeding with which each election usually commenced in the earlier portion, it was supposed that the rest of the old programme would be followed out in the course of time. Then two or three things came within my own knowledge, one of which made me get into the box now, because I remember it since yesterday, with reference to Providence Place; they were all new voters in Providence Place, and upon the canvass which we had in Providence Place it was a very successful one indeed. I think, speaking roughly, out of about 40 voters in Providence Place, but I have not the figures, we received promises from all but about four voters. We considered it was a very successful canvass. Now, close by Providence Place is another row of houses fronting the Wembdon Road, called Providence Terrace, and there lived there a certain member of the Liberal party, Captain Robins, who had taken a good deal of pains at the time of the registration in helping, and he lived very near this mass of houses in Providence Place, to furnish us with the information as to the claim which should be made, the objection which should be made, and so on. I remember that shortly before the election, and after the canvass, Captain Robins said to me one morning, "They are tampering with the voters in Providence Place;" and I told him to look out, and if he could give me any information as to who the persons were he was to let me know; and I think he did tell me afterwards that a man of the name of Ford, who kept a public-house just opposite, had been up there. I do not remember his mentioning any other names; but that was one among the other indications upon which the idea was based that the Conservatives were intending to spend money. I remember also being distinctly told that there was a Mr. Jarman on the Conservative side.

13,624. Frederick Jarman?—I believe so.

13,625. (Mr. Coleridge.) Jarman the draper?—No, I do not think he is. I think he is a baker. But I was told he had been very active either in John Street or Barclay Street, I forget which.

13,626. (Mr. Anstey.) The same man who has been mentioned as having bribed in 1865?—I think he probably is, but he is on the Conservative side; and I recollect information being brought to me that he was very active, and seen going about from house to house in either Barclay Street or John Street. Those were the indications from which we arrived at the conclusion that the Conservatives intended to spend money; and of course all our statements with respect to the hopelessness of the contest were based upon that supposition.

13,627. To make it more clear, if Frederick Jarman had been known as an innocent agent of the Conservatives his being very active in going about from house to house would have signified nothing?—That would have signified nothing.

13,628. Had you ever known Frederick Jarman as reputed to be anything but a bribery agent?—Well, my impression was he was a bribery agent on that side. I had no knowledge, but that was the idea I had of him.

13,629. And no other purpose?—No other purpose that I know of.

13,630. (Mr. Price.) Was he in the same kind of capacity to the Conservative party, so far as you knew, as Mr. Bussell was to your party?—One of the men of the same class, and just as I understood.

13,631. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you communicate those highly probable suspicions of yours, when I say "you," I mean the whole knot or coalition of attorneys, to any respectable persons on the other side with a view of preventing any mutual agreement, any practice of the kind?—No, I did not.

13,632. Why not?—I was acting as one of the three. I remember distinctly proposing, and I think I stated before, on the occasion of that interview, that I should go to Mr. Trevor; but I was only one of several, and that proposition was overruled, so I did not consider myself at liberty to act in opposition to the others.

13,633. (Mr. Price.) They said it would be perfectly useless to do so; it would only make the Conservatives more determined?—Yes.

13,634. That was the reason?—That was the reason.

13,635. (Mr. Coleridge.) And put them on the qui vive in fact?—Yes.

13,636. (Mr. Anstey.) There was some confusion in court at the time, and I did not catch what you said or were going to say when you mentioned the name of Mr. Hennett, of Hennett and Spink; did I understand you to say that there was a proposal that Mr. Hennett should propose Mr. Vanderbyl at the election?—Well, I do not remember that; I do not think I said so.

13,637. Then I may have misunderstood you, or have heard it from Mr. Cook, or it is possible I did not hear it at all?—I do not think I have heard that.

13,638. I only want to make it more clear; this Mr. Hennett of whom you spoke with reference to the compromise—I believe it is in evidence already, if not you can tell us; he is a Conservative, is he not?—Yes.

13,639. And has always acted with the Conservative party?—Always.

13,640. And it was he whom you described as a friend of Mr. Vanderbyl, in promoting the coalition between himself and Mr. Westropp?—Yes, certainly, he was always a Conservative.

13,641. (Mr. Price.) He was a friend of Mr. Vanderbyl?—He was a friend of Mr. Vanderbyl. I understood that Mr. Vanderbyl had given his firm some considerable contracts for companies in which he was engaged.

13,642. (Mr. Anstey.) Before the election?—Before the election.

13,643. Before they were friends?—That I do not know; but I recollect Mr. Vanderbyl mentioning the circumstance when he was down here. He said, "I have transactions with them in business."

13,644. Did he vote for Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, I do not think he did.

13,645. Mr. Axford, however, the petitioner against Mr. Kinglake in 1865, did vote, we find from the lists, for Mr. Westropp and Mr. Vanderbyl?—Dr. Axford I believe did.

13,646. How came that Conservative, who had been so active as to present an election petition in 1865 against Mr. Kinglake's return, to split his vote as against him between Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp?—I have no knowledge of that.

13,647. I asked you yesterday about the undue influence alleged to have been put upon him?—I heard there had been some mistake.

13,648. Did you never hear, over and above the undue influence, that there was a gratification in the shape of an appointment under a very powerful steam packet company, terminable at pleasure, guaranteed to Mr. Axford's son?—I have heard something about an appointment to Mr. Axford's son.

13,649–50. Through Mr. Vanderbyl?—I believe so.

13,651. In connexion with that election?—I cannot say that; I think it took place some time before.

13,652. I do not say that it took place in connexion with the election, but you, in connexion with the election, have heard of that?—Yes; I think what I have heard was this, that there had been an appointment gained for Mr. Axford's son, and that he felt himself under some tie of gratitude to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl in consequence.

13,653. Mr. Westropp and Mr. Vanderbyl?—Well, he is a Conservative, so he would naturally vote for Mr. Westropp.

13,654. But against Mr. Gray?—Against Mr. Gray.

13,655. There is another point I wanted to ask you about connected with the election. You have heard Mr. Lovibond distinctly repudiate the liability for that 500*l.* in that irregular way by Mr. Prior?—Yes, I have.

13,656. You have heard Mr. Mogg, I daresay, declare that he also is not liable for it?—Yes.

13,657. If Dr. Kinglake in like manner refuses to pay it, I ask you, have you any reason to believe that Mr. Kinglake will make it good?—No, I have no reason to believe it at all beyond the circumstances that are before the court. I have no other reason to believe than you would have the same thing.

13,658. Among those circumstances to which you refer, this is one; that it has been the invariable practice in cases of bribery in this borough, for the bribe which was due and not paid at one election, or due and not repaid to the person who bribed at one election, to be paid; or, as the case may be, repaid at some subsequent election?—Well, you have in my evidence already, my own knowledge on that point. If I should say it was the invariable practice, it would only be as far as I have seen it in my experience.

13,659. That is not quite all, for I am coming to a point which I forgot to ask you yesterday. You told us of the conversation which took place between you and Mr. Bagehot when you asked him to stand the second time?—Yes.

13,660. I would ask you the same question with reference to the settlement of accounts of his contest at the preceding election which I asked you with reference to that; were you present when Mr. Bagehot settled with you and the other strangers the sums advanced, as has been said, without his knowledge, behind his back, for the purpose of bribery at that contest?—No, that was never settled with Mr. Bagehot; it was settled with Mr. Robins, his solicitor.

13,661. Was Mr. Robins authorized by Mr. Bagehot to settle it?—I understood so.

13,662. And he has never had it called in question?—Never; I have not had the slightest doubt about the whole matter.

13,663. You saw Mr. Robins face to face of course?—Certainly.

13,664. Was it perfectly understood, from what passed then or formerly, by Mr. Robins that the money had been expended for illegal purposes?—Unquestionably.

13,665. Did he say that Mr. Bagehot refused or objected, or had any scruple whatever to make good the money so advanced, 1,500*l.*; I think it was on the score of venality or corruption?—No, he did not think it was.

13,666. He made no such objection?—No, he put no such objection.

13,667. Did he tell you he was authorized by Mr. Bagehot to settle?—No.

13,668. But he did settle it?—Yes.

13,669. Then why did you see him if he did not tell you he was authorized?—Because Mr. Bagehot had referred us to him for a settlement of account.

13,670. That was the only part that Mr. Robins had in the election?—That is the only part he had in the election, so far as I am aware.

13,671. There is an instance similar to that of the 500*l.* now pending, except this, that it is more than probable that Mr. Prior will lose the 500*l.* otherwise you see it is an analogous case?—He may so.

13,672. Supposing that Mr. Kinglake was ignorant and Mr. Bagehot was ignorant beforehand, always assuming those very important points, now take the other case. Mr. Bagehot, I now understand from you, though you did not say so, but I gathered it from what you said, declined to settle the demands on Sir John Shelley, which Sir John Shelley had refused to honour. I shall speak more particularly with reference to Mr. Hurman's 37*l.*, and claims of that kind?—No, that was not so; he never refused, for you see Mr. Vanderbyl's election followed so quickly on Mr. Bagehot's, and Mr. Vanderbyl being successful, and Mr. Bagehot unsuccessful, Mr. Bagehot was never asked to discharge those claims, nor was Mr. Vanderbyl asked to discharge them then.

13,673. He was asked to discharge one of them certainly at the time when Mr. Hurman promised his vote?—Well, through his agent, but not directly.

13,674. I am speaking of Mr. Bagehot, or his agent?—Yes.

13,675. Mr. Bagehot and his agent having allowed the contest to pass without having honoured any one of those demands, am I to infer at that time he or they refused to honour them; those demands of the previous year?—If you can recall the evidence I have given, you will see the position of things was different; at Mr. Bagehot's election you will remember we were acting on our own authority, whereas, on the occasion of Mr. Vanderbyl's election Mr. Brogden was down.

13,676. That is an explanation, but not an answer to my question. I want to know is it or not a fact, whether acting on your own responsibility or on Mr. Bagehot's, or on your joint responsibility, that those conducting the election in Mr. Bagehot's interest declined to do at that election what appears to have been done at the next election of Mr. Vanderbyl himself, and through his agents; that is to say, the honouring of those demands which Sir John Shelley had absolutely refused to honour it?—Certainly, that is not the fact, so far as I know it, because I do not remember at that time hearing anything about it.

13,677. (Mr. Price.) You were aware at that time that there were demands?—I have very imperfect knowledge, because I was only just entering on the subject.

13,678. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not know the circumstances?—No.

13,679. However, it unfortunately happened, did not it, that Mr. Vanderbyl honoured them?—He paid, I believe, a portion of them; I do not think all.

13,680. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Kinglake paid some of the others?—Mr. Kinglake a portion, Mr. Vanderbyl a portion; but I do not think they were entirely paid.

13,681. (Mr. Anstey.) When did Mr. Kinglake first, and Mr. Vanderbyl first pay any of them?—After Mr. Vanderbyl's first election, when the account was made up.

13,682. But with reference to that election?—With reference to that election. He paid a portion, no doubt. I do not know that of my own knowledge, absolutely, but I know that was the arrangement, and always understood that was done.

13,683. I will now ask you distinctly the question, supposing that Mr. Vanderbyl had been as steadfast as Sir John Shelley in refusing to honour those demands, and supposing that Mr. Bagehot had refused to authorize that most irregular transaction of the 1,500*l.*, and supposing that you yourself and Mr. Bagehot had refused to ratify what had been done most corruptly, as it appears to me, by Mr. Prior at this election, and by the clerk Reynolds, left in charge of the West of England Bank; and, lastly, supposing that Mr. Kinglake, or Dr. Kinglake, imitating Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Mogg's example, repudiated the 500*l.* advanced by Mr. Prior, do you think if there was to be another election for this borough there would be any more transactions of that kind?—I cannot say. My impression is at present that most people feel that they have had enough of it. I can say that is my feeling.

13,684. This illustrates my question. Is there really any difference, after all, between prospective presents and retrospective participation in bribery?—I do not quite follow.

13,685. Is there any difference between promising the money and providing the money, and recouping the money afterwards, it being provided by other people?—As a matter of guilt?

13,686. As a matter of guilt?—Not the slightest that I can see at all.

13,687. (Mr. Price.) The distinction about Mr. Bagehot's purity?—I have never made any such distinction.

13,688. I did not say that you did, but that distinction falls to the ground?—Yes.

13,689. You had something to do with the preparation of the accounts; in some cases you were election agent, I think; in other cases you had an official capacity. I want to know whether these entries, to your knowledge, were intended by way of a blind. I will not go through them all, but give you one as a specimen, as there are several exactly alike. This relates to Mr. Kinglake's election of 1865, and to Sir John Shelley's election of 1865, but there are some entries with regard to the subsequent election only, substituting "Hodge" for "Phelps." What I wish to direct your attention to is this, that in these returns on behalf of Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley, which are now confessedly false, there is this peculiar note or memorandum appended, and I want to ask you whether this is inserted by way of blind, in order to make people believe this was the only excluded item. "Mr. George Phelps, of Bridgwater, "innkeeper, has sent in a bill to Sir John Villiers "Shelley, Baronet, and Mr. Kinglake jointly, for 53*l.* "for horse and carriage hire. This account has been "rendered in a form which cannot be passed, there "being no particulars. Mr. Phelps has been applied "to for particulars, but has declined to furnish them. "Dated the 18th of September 1865. (Signed) "Eustace Barham, Agent for the said A. W. King-"lake." And the like with regard to Sir John Villiers Shelley's abstract of election expenses. There is a similar special memorandum for the next year in the case of the first election in that year, the election in May or else the subsequent one, in which it is stated, in addition to the above—I am speaking from memory now—Mr. Hodge, of the "Railway Hotel," sent in a demand, which is disputed, for so much, 17*l.* or whatever it is, for horse and carriage hire. Now the object, so far as you know of that very unusual insertion, does not appear in the abstract of expenses on the other side at any one of those elections. Is not it inserted for the purpose of producing there a conclusion in the mind of the reader, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, that that is the only irregular demand connected with the election?—No, certainly it was not; that statement, when it was made, was precisely to represent what it does represent.

13,690. It was the only claim of that kind?—It was the only claim which had been sent in within the proper time for which Sir John Shelley and Mr. Kinglake might have been sued, where they admitted in point of fact a certain liability, but did not admit the claim which was made; and it appeared to me at the time, with reference to Sir John Shelley's election, and Mr. Kinglake's first election, and you will remember I have stated—if you believe what I have stated—at that election I was acting with perfectly clean hands, and in good faith, and I knew of no other claim, and that was precisely the form which appeared to me most easy to adopt in order to comply with the requirements of the statute.

13,691. Were you aware, when you inserted that memorandum, that there was an unpaid bill claimed by Mr. Phelps, avowedly for treating expenses?—No, I was not.

13,692. You have heard the evidence on that head which has been given by one or two witnesses who have been examined here, that Mr. Phelps, at this very election of 1865, had opened his house for treating, and had sent in a bill which was not paid?—No, I have no such recollection of any such bill. I think it was carefully kept from me at the time.

13,693. You have heard the evidence on that point now?—Yes, I have heard the evidence.

13,694. If you had known Mr. Phelp's demands were of that various description, some legal and some illegal expenses, would you have inserted that still?—I should have still inserted that memorandum, and for this reason, that I should have considered myself bound only in that account to notice those claims for which the candidates could be sued.

13,695. You are a lawyer, and the Act of Parliament, I believe, makes no such distinction?—I may be wrong in my law, but that is the view I took at all events. I am not pretending to infallibility.

13,696. That was the little vehicle, I will not call it "a coach and six," which you were trying to drive through the express letter of that Act of Parliament?—I think if you read through the words of the Act you will think the view I am taking is the correct one, I had to deal with all those accounts sent in within a certain time, and as to which the liability was in some way admitted, either by payment or otherwise.

13,697. Did you believe the statement made to you according to the Act of Parliament, by the auditor, Mr. Wilton?—No, there was no auditor; that was a previous election. I may have been wrong, but at that time I was acting in the most perfect good faith, and I believe that was the precise proper form to adopt.

13,698. Then that accounts for what I have asked one or two witnesses an explanation of but failed to obtain, why your papers, not the printed return, but the manuscript return, are all endorsed, "Abstract of the legal expenses?"—I take it that is so; that is the endorsement of the clerks, but I have no doubt that is what is meant.

13,699. I do not find any other attorney has made that. Was not objection taken to that very unusual mode of endorsing, "Abstract of legal expenses"?—No, I do not recollect my attention having been drawn to it until you drew it.

13,700. I understand you to put that in in order to exclude any interpretation which might otherwise be put in your return of its being meant to include all manner of expenses?—At all events I was not aware there was such a statement.

13,701. But that was in your mind, at all events?—I do not think I had the wording of it.

13,702. You say you had it in your mind to evade the Act of Parliament in that way?—No, I do not say that; not upon the first election. I quite freely admit on the second election, Mr. Bagehot's, I was aware about the other payments, and did not insert them.

13,703. (Mr. Coleridge.) I understood you to say that you were doing what you understood to be legally right?—Yes. Allow me to say what my principal object was, that by publishing this claim at once, to avoid the necessity of publishing another account, should the claim be subsequently settled. If you will look at the Act you will see another account would have to be prepared if I made any payment afterwards, and I wished to avoid putting the candidates to the expense of another insertion in the papers, and it appeared to me if I published that statement at once, and the amount which Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley admitted, it would not be necessary.

13,704. (Mr. Anstey.) But this is September 1865?—Yes.

13,705. Do you mean that on the 4th of September 1865, when you signed those abstracts of expenses, you were not fully aware, or at least quite prepared to expect that very shortly there would be illegal expenses to settle also?—No, I mean to say most emphatically I was not prepared to expect anything of the kind.

13,706. I cannot understand the similar statement with regard to Mr. Hodge's claim subsequently?—That was in pursuance precisely of the same plan, the liability to Mr. Hodge was admitted as a legal liability, the amount was disputed, and the same course was adopted.

13,707. But at the same time it was then perfectly well known what had taken place?—Then, I quite freely admit that.

13,708. (Mr. Price.) I see in Mr. Kinglake's return of expenses for 1865 there is put down under the fourth head, "Professional assistance, 65*l.* 2*s.*"?—Yes.

13,709. What is that?—On looking at the account I think you will find it composed principally of my bill, which I told you of, and Mr. Haviland's. I think you will find that to be the case. I do not know whether Messrs. Reed and Cook came into that or not.

13,710. Then, Sir John Shelley has a claim of 105*l.* for the same; that looks like 100 guineas to some solicitor, does not it?—No; if you will have the kindness to refer to the accounts they will speak for themselves, but I am quite certain it is nothing of the kind.

13,711. It comes to that sum, however?—It may happen so, but I feel quite certain if you refer to the accounts it is not so.

13,712. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were asked about what made you imagine the Tories were going to bribe, and you told us about this "randying." Did not the Tories always bribe to the best of your knowledge?—Undoubtedly.

13,713. Therefore you were not looking at any special thing, but it was merely following up?—Following up the ordinary course at Mr. Bagehot's and Mr. Vanderbyl's.

13,714. As far as you had heard by rumour of former elections for this borough?—Yes, the rumour as well.

13,715. The general rumour that the Tories always did bribe?—The general rumour of our party was that if they did not there was not the slightest chance for them.

13,716. But if there was no difference of any sort between the Tories and the Liberals, each side would?—The only difference being the Tories had to begin.

13,717. Because they were in a minority?—Because they were in a minority; that was the only difference.

13,718. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing your proposal had been adopted by your brethren, and communications had been opened with the other side, and a treaty against bribery and corruption on both sides, would Mr. J. R. Smith have been the principal party to that treaty on the other side or not?—The proposal was not that we should make any treaty, but that I should go to Mr. Trevor and give him notice that we were not, and if they were we should take every means to expose them.

13,719. That is not what I asked, but was any proposal made on your side for such a treaty as I have indicated, a treaty between the two knots of lawyers if you like, or if not, between some one to represent the parties respectively, by which either party would pledge itself to abstain from all corrupt practices during the election, bribery, treating, and undue influence?—Mr. Henry Lovibond told me some time before the election, that he had made such a proposal to Mr. James Trevor, and that it had been met by the difficulty of binding the subordinate agents and others outside the solicitors.

13,720. How long before?—I think it would be a month or six weeks.

13,721. (Mr. Price.) What difficulty was there in binding the outside persons, because I conclude that they never bribed out of their own pockets?—No, but the idea was this, that although they could not bribe out of their own pockets, they would make promises; and in point of fact the election would be conducted not with direct money payments, but with promises made by those, on which afterwards there would be pressure put on the candidates and on the solicitors to make good.

13,722. (Mr. Coleridge.) But if not paid they would have been claimed at any future election?—No doubt.

13,723. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Lovibond tell you that it was a thing that ought to be done in consequence?—No, I do not think he did. I think he told me that himself. I do not think it was in consequence of my stating it.

13,724. Supposing such a treaty had been made, would Mr. J. R. Smith, then the late mayor, or I suppose at that time the actual mayor when the proposal was made, have been a necessary party to such a treaty?—I should think he would.

13,725. Without specifying any more names, assuming that all the active names of the Tory party, as well as lawyers, were parties to it on that side, I ask you would your party have been inclined to place reliance upon their undertaking?—Well, I am speaking of what Mr. Lovibond reported, and there was a doubt as to whether some of the persons on the other side would have kept their word.

13,726. I presume the Conservatives would have had the same distrust as to the honesty of some of the contracting parties on your side if such a treaty had been made?—I think you may safely say that.

13,727. Was not that the reason why such treaty was made, that neither party could fairly or fully trust the other?—I think that was so.

13,728. You told my learned colleague, Mr. Coleridge, just now—and a very good reason it was—that the inferior agents, instead of bribing when they had no funds, would do the work as effectually by promising bribes to be paid in futuro. Have you any reason to believe, turning all your attention to the last election, and what you said about the rumours of the Conservatives bribing, that, as a matter of fact, the bribery to which you attribute the ill success of your party at the commencement of the day, took that particular form, not of payment but of promise?—I have no other reason to believe it than this, that a number of men polled in the morning, whom I was informed by persons who knew the thing better than I did, would not have polled without either money or promise.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

7 Sept. 1869.

13,729. I am drawing your attention to the distinction, not a substantial one, but a formal one, between payment and promise. Had you any reason to believe there was money circulating at that moment among the Conservatives, or have you any reason to believe that money not circulating amongst them they were contented with the promise of money to be paid thereafter?—I do not believe that money was circulating, I have not heard any case of it; but I certainly did believe at the time from what was told me, and also what I knew myself beforehand, that there must have been promises given, that there must have been inducements in point of fact.

13,730. And more likely promises than payments?—More likely promises than payments.

13,731. You told us what you were informed had taken place the night before, as to the change in Mr. Vanderbyl's intentions; have you any reason to believe that the opposite party had met the night before, and themselves contemplated giving up the contest?—Well, I think since the election I have heard something of the kind, but I cannot recall it; but it was quite a question whether the contest should be given up. I think I have heard that.

13,732. (Mr. Price.) I think I understood you to say, this is what you call a liberal borough?—Yes.

13,733. And that three-fourths of them vote for "Mr. Most" in preference to any other candidate. That is about it, is it not? Their politics are Liberal, but they prefer "Mr. Most" to any other candidate?—No doubt. They would prefer to take the Liberal money, but they would take the money on the other side.

13,734. (Mr. Coleridge.) If there were no Mr. Most at all you mean the majority would be Liberal?—Yes. If there were no Mr. Most at all I think there is no doubt about it. I wish to mention, at Mr. Bagehot's election, a voter of the name of Chedzey; I mention it because I recollect I took some pains to poll him. He on that day promised he would vote in the morning, and then he would not vote at all. He said he had been. He was evidently under some kind of restraint not to vote on the other side; and I recollect taking some considerable pains to poll him, therefore I mention it because I think it is almost the only voter I endeavoured to poll in the course of the day.

13,735. But you did not succeed?—I do not think he polled at all; neither voted one side nor the other, but I remember going to his house.

13,736. There were three Chedzeys, Henry, Edward, and Richard?—It is Henry. I remember going to his house, which is a corner house in John Street and Polden Street, and using all the persuasion that I could to get him to poll. I do not think I offered him any bribe myself. That is my firm impression. I do not think I ever offered any direct bribe to any person to vote, and I do not remember that I made him a promise. I remember, whilst I was there, I saw other persons there, and I wish to state with great diffidence as to who those persons were, because, although I connect certain persons in my mind with being there, I am not sure I am right; therefore I should be sorry to state anything against any person which should turn out to be incorrect. But my impression is, that I saw there agents on both sides endeavouring to secure the vote of this man. My impression is that I saw on the Liberal side, Mr. Henry Jarman and William Hurman; and on the Conservative side Mr. Cuthbert Ritson and somebody else I cannot remember at all.

13,737. (Mr. Price.) What did you say to the man? You say, you do not think you gave him a bribe personally?—No, I do not think I did.

13,738. But you know there is a mode of reaching a Bridgwater man which is a most effectual mode?—I do not think I did. I am endeavouring to speak the truth. I am not aware of it, if I did.

13,739. Did you promise him?—No, I did not.

13,740. I put it to you because I believe, as far as you have gone, you have desired to tell us thoroughly the whole truth; I desire only to put this to you, in case it should turn out afterwards that either of those two Conservative gentlemen heard you offer him a bribe or make him a promise to pay him money.

13,741. (Mr. Coleridge.) Surely the paying of money in the way of bribery is so distinct an act that if at any time of your life you offered any person any money you must remember that?—I am quite certain of that.

13,742. You are quite certain that you did not pay the money?—I am quite certain I did not pay the money.

13,743. (Mr. Price.) But did you make any promise to him, which, coming from you, no doubt would be a very cogent argument?—I do not think I did. Not only is it very clear in my mind that I did not do it, but I think there is a reason why I did not do it; that at the same time that I was there there were two men there on the Liberal side, who, I was well aware, were there for bribery purposes, and I did not make the offer. I am very sure I did not at all. They were just going away as I came.

13,744. Is that all you say?—At this last election there was a man of the name of Culliford. I was trying to exhaust every person I spoke to at the election at all. He is a cabinet-maker in this High Street here, and I remember his making a statement as to the amount of annoyance he had been subjected to by Mr. Joseph Smith in consequence of his political views. I cannot remember the statement, but it was something about his back premises I recollect at the time, and I recollect his saying that he should be able to get some of the voters together; and the impression he conveyed on my mind by that statement was, that he would be one of the men who would take part in the corrupt practices, if they had recourse to them. There was nothing like that said in exact words, but that was the impression on my mind at the time. That is all I wish to state about it. Then with respect to the endeavours to put an and to the petition, I did not state that I had one or two interviews with Messrs. Reed and Cook. I find in my diary interviews with Messrs. Reed and Cook, and with Mr. Lovibond. Things were in this position at that time, that Mr. Lovibond and Messrs. Reed and Cook were, up to that time, on terms so unfriendly that neither would go to the other's office, and I, on that very day, remember perfectly well that I was a sort of go-between between the two.

13,745. (Mr. Price.) What was the cause of their unfriendliness; was it political? If it was a private cause I do not want to know it. Was it an estrangement caused by private matters, or was it in consequence of something political?—No, it was in consequence of something which occurred in London. Messrs. Reed and Cook thought they had come to some definite arrangement with Mr. Lovibond as to the terms which should be proposed. I only state what was reported to me. I was not present.

13,746. If it had anything to do with the election, go on.—Yes, it had to do with the settlement of the petition; and what I understood was, on Messrs. Reed and Cook's part, that Mr. Lovibond had come to a distinct understanding with them that both candidates should retire; but when the meeting took place with Mr. Trevor, Mr. Lovibond said he had only understood that Mr. Vanderbyl was to retire, and in consequence they were very much offended with that; and in consequence of that this estrangement took place between them.

13,747. You were going to say that you acted as intermediary, and you were going to tell us what you did according to your diary?—I have no entry in my diary of what took place, but I do remember this. I cannot tell you all that passed. The object of the interview was to try and patch up the broken thread, and to see if an arrangement could not be come to between Mr. Lovibond as representing Mr. Kinglake on the one side, and Messrs. Reed and Cook as representing Mr. Vanderbyl on the other; that was the object. And I remember this passing, that Mr. Cook, among the different terms which were discussed, in case it should be arrived at that Mr. Vanderbyl should retire, and Mr. Vanderbyl only was to retire, Mr. Cook put this: he said, "Well, Mr. Vanderbyl "has been at considerable expense, and if he is to "retire and lose his seat, and Mr. Kinglake gets the "benefit of it, Mr. Kinglake ought to pay for it; he "ought to pay the money; he ought to recoup it." And I remember that my reply was this: "These are "subjects we cannot enter upon now, or make any "distinct arrangement with reference to them, but "all this must be left to some mutual friend of "Mr. Kinglake's and Mr. Vanderbyl's," and whatever arrangement may be come to, I would undertake myself that Mr. Kinglake should carry it out.

13,748. (Mr. Anstey.) Was this after all the parties came from London?—Yes, that was on the 12th January. I have got the date in my diary, so that that will enable you to check it.

13,749. What was resolved?—I do not think we arrived at anything. I think that there was still a difficulty about arranging it, and I do not remember that any distinct arrangement was come to. I may be wrong, but I do not remember it. Well then, sir, you asked in the course of the examination about the purchase of land——

13,750. Wait a moment. Before you come to that, I will ask you this question. At the time Mr. Cook made this objection, founded upon the usual erroneous view of a member's position, that he has gained an advantage for himself instead of having taken upon himself a solemn public trust, was it within Mr. Cook's knowledge that Mr. Lovibond had been applied to so many months before by Mr. Vanderbyl to throw his firm over, as I understand—at all events to put himself into Mr. Lovibond's hands—on condition that Mr. Lovibond would throw over Mr. Kinglake?—No, I do not know that it was; I certainly did not tell him. You asked some questions with respect to land purchased of Mr. Bate; you mentioned my name.

13,751. (Mr. Coleridge.) I asked Mr. Allan?—Yes. There is no foundation at all for anything of the kind.

13,752. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Allan cleared that up entirely. It never rested on our minds afterwards?—Very well. There is only one other thing I wish to say, and I will ask the mayor's leave to relieve me from any professional tie of secrecy, and that is, with respect to the employment of Bussell after he returned, and after the trial of the petition. The mayor came and consulted Mr. Carslake and myself, who are his regular solicitors, and he said, "Oh, I "wish to ask your advice. Henry Chapman Bussell "has returned, and it is perfectly plain from what "has taken place, that he has been so mixed up with "these illegal proceedings and bribery at this recent "election, and I wish to take your advice, on which I "shall act, and I wish to ask you whether I shall "continue to employ him." And Mr. Carslake said, "I think you had better not." I said, "Before I "answer you your question, will you allow me to ask "you this one, 'If you continue to employ Mr. Bussell "'would it be an act of charity; would it be, in point "'of fact, a matter of indifference to you whether you "'employed Bussell or got anybody in his place, or "'is Bussell's knowledge and experience and ability "'in that kind of business such, that if you ceased "'to employ him, it would be a detriment to your-"'self?'" And Mr. Sully's reply was, "He does the "work better than anybody else would." Then I said, "Unquestionably, then, you are justified in continuing "to employ him. You are under no obligation to do "your business any damage or injury simply because "of the ill-doing of others." That was my statement.

Mr. George Bryant Sully recalled.

Mr. G. B. Sully.

13,753. (Mr. Anstey.) With reference to that last statement made by Mr. Barham, I will ask you, why did you not at the outset of our inquiry, when we requested to have the fullest information on the subject of your connexion with Bussell, why did you not say that Bussell had charge of all your ships?—(No answer.)

13,754. I will read to you what you did say, but answer that question first, if you please. Not only you did not tell us that, but you did not tell us that he was in your employment?—You ask me why I did not say that he had the entire charge of my ships.

13,755. Yes?—He has not. I have a portion of his time, and only a portion of his time.

13,756. Well, but you heard what he said on that subject, when he was recalled, and was solemnly informed by the learned Chief Commissioner that from circumstances which had come within the knowledge of some us, it was desirable for us to know whether he was screening anyone?—Yes, I remember that question.

13,757. He was asked whether he was not in receipt of 30*l.* for taking care of your ships?—I remember his answer well.

13,758. You remember when I examined you the first time, I asked you, from information placed at that moment in my hands, the question whether Bussell had been placed by you in any way, or permitted by you in any way, to have control over the votes, or influence the votes of those voters who were masters of your ships, and you said, "Not at all." I put to you the question, "Did you not send telegrams to Cardiff to request some of them to come over." Your answer was, "Those were masters of ships over which he had control, not masters of my ships?"—If it is not troubling you, I would rather that the questions and answers were read.

13,759. Very well, I will read them. I was taken by surprise by this statement. I would have found it before, only it was Mr. Barham's statement made me ask the question. First of all this is what Mr. Bussell says: the Chairman asks, "Have you any control at all over the vessels?" There is one question before that I see. He says about the 30*l.* "I am under the mayor. The present mayor?—Yes." This is page 54 of the shorthand writer's notes of Saturday, the 28th August. "What do you do?—Superintend his vessels and look "after the repairs. How long have you done "that?—Four or five years. You receive a salary "for that?—I do. How much?—30*l.* a year." And then there is a matter of allowance on the amount of bricks shipped and so on, and then he is asked as to Mr. Vanderbyl's money, and he says he himself has paid it to the labourers, not to the captains; and then after the questions are asked about drink money he is asked as to any other advantage. He is asked: "What are those services; are you a ship's husband? "you may call it that?—Yes. How many ships "have you to look after?—Eight or nine I think it is, "I have some of my own. You do not get paid by "the mayor for looking after your own?—I know "that. How many have you to look after for which "you get this 30*l.* a year?—I will give the names: "the 'Peregrine,' the 'Roseville,' the 'Tom,' the "'Grace,' the 'Anna,' the 'William and Martha,' the "'Onward,' the 'Queen,' and if there are any others "I will furnish you with the names. Are those all "the matters?—They are. Did you ever receive 50*l.* "instead of 30*l.* from the mayor?—I had 40*l.* once. "Then I took an active part in looking out for work "for the steamer. What is the name of the steamer?—"The 'Petrel.'" Then he is asked, "When were you reduced?—Three or four years ago"? Then the Chief Commissioner asks, "Have you any control at all "over the vessels?—If any repairs are wanted I go "and see to them, and consult the mayor upon them?—

FOURTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. B. Sully.

7 Sept. 1869.

"That is exactly the position I am in." Then your answer is given the second day towards the end of your examination; this is what you stated at your first examination, you being the first witness called—this at page 87 on the second day: "As regards your-"self you are the owner of ships or small craft?—"Yes, I am. The captains are, for the most part, all "of your political persuasion?—No; some vote one "way and some the other. Do you know that you "have authorized or allowed Mr. Bussell to fetch men "in your employ from your vessels in order to vote?—"No. You have never authorized him?—No. Has "he done so?—Not that I am aware of. Do not you "know that it came out before Mr. Justice Black-"burn?—No; it was not in connexion with my "vessel"?—I adhere to my statement.

13,760. Having read those over to you, I ask you why did you leave me, and I suppose I may add, my colleagues, under the impression that those answers were certainly calculated to produce, that Bussell was in connexion with his own vessels, and not with yours?—I am not aware that that impression was left, and I am sorry that it was left; as I said yesterday, when I came into the box the next day, I understood that the examination would be confined to matters relating to the last election in my official capacity. I was not prepared for any examination. I gave you, however, to the best of my ability, straightforward answers to every question that was put to me, and I am not conscious that there was any inconsistency between any answer I gave on the first day, and those I gave on the other days.

13,761. You have no further explanation to offer?—Not at all. I have an explanation to make with reference to a remark that fell yesterday. I was asked yesterday if I could tell who it was that first spoke to me about illegal practices after the election of 1868, and I said that I heard it, and then I was pressed as to a name, and then I said, "I really do not remember the name at the present moment," but on reflection last night it has occurred to me that the first man who spoke to me about it was Mr. Toogood the parliamentary agent from London. He came up to me and said, "I give you notice that this will be a void election."

13,762. Was that Henry or William?—I do not know; it was one who was here during the contest.

13,763. Was he tall or fair, or what?—I do not know; I believe it was Mr. William Toogood. I believe on my first examination—and I intended to say this yesterday—I believe on my first examination that I was asked whether I had in my employ any balance men, and I said, "Certainly not." That was my firm and honest belief at that time. I am bound to say that during my examination here I have heard of two names I have employed; men who are, more or less in my employ, who have been bribed.

13,764. The first time you have heard of it was in this court?—In this court was the first time.

13,765. (Mr. Price.) When you were examined in the first instance you say you were under the impression you were only going to be examined as to former matters, and then as the matter proceeded, you could see we wanted to test your knowledge of the general principles of the Liberal party, and you gave us information of the parties as we asked you. Did it not occur to you at that time that it might be a matter of importance when you were asked these questions about Bussell, for you to explain that you had had this very proper consultation with your solicitors, Messrs. Carslake and Barham, as to whether you should retain him after the exposure before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—It did not occur to me or I certainly should have named it.

13,766. Because there has been—I will not say an imputation, but an examination as to the kind of connexion between you and Mr. Bussell. After what has been stated about Bussell's employment, did it not occur to you that you should tell us you had seriously considered the question of dismissing him from your employment?—No, it did not occur to me until Mr. Barham asked my permission to name it.

W. Gibbs.

WILLIAM GIBBS sworn.

13,767. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A master mariner.

13,768. Are you a voter for the borough?—Yes.

13,769. Did you vote in 1865, at Sir John Shelley's election?—Yes.

13,770. Did you get anything for it?—No.

13,771. Did you vote in 1866, for Mr. Bagehot?—I did.

13,772. Did you get anything for it?—Yes, I had 5*l.* given to me.

13,773. By whom?—Capt. Bussell.

13,774. Did you vote for Mr. Vanderbyl in 1866, the next election of 1866?—Yes.

13,775. Did you get anything for it?—Yes.

13,776. How much?—Two 5*l.* notes.

13,777. From whom?—Capt. Bussell.

13,778. Did you in 1866 vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—Yes.

13,779. Did you get anything for it?—No.

13,780. Were you promised anything?—Yes.

13,781. How much?—5*l.*

13,782. 5*l.*?—Yes.

13,783. Or 10*l.*?—5*l.*

13,784. You are sure you were not promised 10*l.*?—Yes.

13,785. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get nothing for your expenses?—No.

13,786. (Mr. Price.) By whom were you promised the 5*l.*?—Capt. Bussell.

13,787. You are a master mariner; do you work your own vessels?—No, I do not work my own vessels, but a portion of them.

13,788. Whose vessels do you work?—They belong to Mr. Joseph Palmer and myself.

13,789. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you got at all these elections a glass of drink?—I never got a glass of drink at any election, except what I paid for myself.

13,790. We have heard of these public-houses where the treating was going on at different elections; do you mean to say you did not get anything to drink?—To the best of my recollection, at any of these elections, I never had a glass of drink, with the exception of what I paid for myself.

J. Smith.

JOHN SMITH recalled.

13,791. (Mr. Price.) You have written a letter to our secretary, wishing him to lay your explanation in writing before us, but we decline to take notice of any representation which is not made under the solemnity of an oath, by a person who has been examined as a witness, and who was bound to tell the truth when he has been before us. Now, in the witness-box, you may give us, on your oath, any explanation you like; but we cannot take any notice of a letter. What is the explanation you have to offer?—Yesterday I was in Bridgwater, in the market, and when I came home I heard from my wife that something was said in the "Bridgwater Mercury" to have been said by me, but which I had not said, and I went and made a complaint to Mr. Dunsford, the reporter of the "Times," that my name was mentioned to Mr. Westropp that I would vote for him; and, according to my reading of it in the "Mercury," it appears it was so. I asked him to alter what appeared to be a typographical error, and I told Mr. Dunsford.

13,792. You do not mean the reporter of the "Times," you mean the reporter of the "Mercury"?—Yes, the "Mercury." I told Mr. Westropp I should not vote for him.

13,793. (Mr. Price.) Your letter is, "Mr. Smith "says he did not state that he told Mr. Westropp that "he would not vote against him?"—Yes. I told Mr. Westropp that I should never vote for him.

13,794. What is it you say you did tell Mr. Westropp?—I told him I never should vote for him.

13,795. You were asked a great deal about it the other day, and you were particularly pressed by me as to what you meant by that letter?—What letter?

13,796. In which you say that no act of yours should stay Mr. Westropp's chance of success. You said then you did not think voting against a man was meant by you as any act of yours which would stay him. We had that explanation, and we placed the value upon it which it deserves?—No act of mine did stay Mr. Westropp.

(Mr. Price.) Do you not think to vote is an act, the most solemn act you could do at an election.

13,797. (Mr. Anstey.) You admitted the authenticity of that letter?—Which letter?

13,798. In which you say that no act of yours should stay him?—I did.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then all your protestations and explanations will not satisfy me that you did not mean to convey by that that you would not vote against him.

(Mr. Price.) The most solemn act you could perform at an election was to record your vote, and you said no act of yours should stay him. The only act of yours that could stay him would be your vote, and that is your solemn assurance. The fact is, you said to Mr. Westropp before you got your favour granted by him that you would not vote against him, and afterwards, having got the favour granted, you did vote against him. That is what it comes to. There are one or two typographical errors in the "Bridgwater Mercury"; it does not very much matter, but it is stated in Mr. Barham's evidence yesterday that some of them put themselves in communication with Mr. Briard. It should be Mr. Brand. And Mr. Baxter is put as being the clerk of the committee; he is the Chairman of the Committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. James Cook recalled. Mr. J. Cook.

13,799. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you go on with your story, will you answer the question that I put to Mr. Barham? On what did you found your opinion that the Tories were going to bribe?—I think I hit upon that yesterday, at all events I gave a partial answer to it, that Mr. Westropp had been connected with the borough of Bridgwater from the year 1859, and had been contributing money in various ways from 1859 down to the year 1865. He had been elected in 1865, and was ousted by petition, and I may say that the very name of Westropp in Bridgwater meant money; there is no doubt of it. Mr. Gray was here, and there was a report that Mr. Gray was a very wealthy man, and that he came down for the purpose, if possible, of securing his election.

13,800. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who and what is Mr. Gray?—I believe he is a large Indian merchant; at least I have heard so by report.

13,801. In any way connected with this place?—Not the slightest in the world that I am aware of.

13,802. Or the county?—Not the slightest, but that is reported. On reading Mr. Gray's addresses from time to time to the electors, I was very much disposed myself to think that he was not much of a politician, and therefore it was not from his experience in politics that he would be likely to make an impression on the electors, and so secure his return in that way.

13,803. How did Mr. Westropp's name become associated with large wealth? You say his name meant money?—That was from Mr. Westropp's practices from the year 1859 down to the year 1868.

13,804. Then go back to 1859. In 1859, before he indulged in those practices, what did the people of Bridgwater know about him?—I have not the slightest idea that they knew anything whatever of him.

13,805. Then who and what was he, or is he?—As I understand, he is a gentleman residing in Ireland, and has a residence there, or rather he is living with an aunt of his.

13,806. Was not that with a view to the petition of 1866, petitioning against his return in 1865; and was it not inquired into; and was it not ascertained that he had no property in Ireland?—Not that I am aware of. I remember taking two sheets out of Mr. Lovibond's brief which had reference to Mr. Westropp's position, and which were incorporated in the last petition against Mr. Vanderbyl. Speaking from knowledge, I have no knowledge of Mr. Westropp's position.

13,807. Supposing he has no property in Ireland, where has that notion come from that he is a wealthy man? From whence was he supposed to derive his wealth?—There is a notion that if persons like Mr. Westropp do not supply the money personally, they get it from some of the clubs. Mr. Westropp is reported of late years to have had an income of 3,000*l.* a year.

13,808. Then it was not founded so much on his supposed wealth as on his supposed means of commanding wealth?—It is upon the rumour in Bridgwater during the last few years that he is a man of considerable wealth.

13,809. Do you know whether he is a merchant or not?—No; I have heard that he has a residence in Ireland, at Green Park, Bruffs, Limerick.

13,810. Was not that inquired into, and ascertained to be untrue?—I believe Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had inquired into that.

13,811. But with respect to property at Cork, and at Limerick?—Yes, I believe so.

13,812. (Mr. Price.) Have you given us your history——?—I have not finished; there are one or two things more.

13,813. Hear my question. Have you finished your history of what took place on the Sunday night, when Mr. Fennelly was present, at the interview you have spoken of?—I have not quite finished. That interview lasted some time, as I before said. Mr. Fennelly complained of the pressure which had been put upon Mr. Vanderbyl in being asked to retire, and so on, and spoke about the deputation that had waited upon him at the "Globe" hotel, and the answer which Mr. Fennelly had given as to what was meant by the deputation, and then Mr. Fennelly told me, as I stated yesterday, of his having been at Mr. Hennett's house, and the preparation which was there made for a coalition as between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Vanderbyl, and the communication made by Mr. Westropp to his solicitors, and the suggestion that if it were carried out at all it should be as between the solicitors on both sides. That was the effect and substance of the communication as to that suggested coalition, which, as I told you yesterday, I refused to countenance in any shape or form, whether rightly or wrongly; but afterwards there was a long discussion as to matters, and there is no doubt that we rehearsed what took place at the interviews when the solicitors were present, and Mr. Fennelly, at Mr. Barham's, on the previous Friday, and a very long discussion took place about it, and I have no doubt on that occasion that I concurred again in the opinion expressed on the Friday, that if Mr. Westropp spent money that Mr. Vanderbyl's chance was quite hopeless, and also Mr. Kinglake's, and my impression is that I expressed my belief that they were going to spend money, and a long conversation took place upon it, in which there was some reference, I believe, made to Mr. Vanderbyl's being nominated, and Mr. Sully having withdrawn his promise to nominate him. At last, after a good deal of conversation—I could not charge myself with all that took place—but after all, it ended in the proposition which Mr. Barham had made on the part of Mr. Kinglake as to the 1,500*l.*, and for Mr. Vanderbyl's friends to be prepared with a similar sum. There is no doubt upon that occasion there was a good deal of conversation which I cannot recall. Then Mr. Fennelly talked about the petition, and said that Mr. Vanderbyl would fight. I think he said he would rather spend 1,000*l.*, and I think he mentioned a larger sum than 1,000*l.*, in showing up the practices of the Conservative party, or pay any reasonable sum of money to the lawyers if they would only fight the matter purely, something like that. That is all that took place, I think.

13,814. (Mr. Price.) That puts a very different complexion on my mind to that which was produced by what you said yesterday. You never said a word about paying the lawyers for their services. Now, I will ask you this; did not Mr. Fennelly say this, "I "do not mind the spending of 1,500*l.*, provided it is "not illegal"?—I do not remember those precise words.

13,815. Did he say this: "If the lawyers can manage "to have the election go on according to my views, I "will willingly pay them 1,500*l.* for their services"?—I think Mr. Fennelly said he objected to an illegal expenditure, and I think he said if the election could only be won purely, he would pay any reasonable fees to the lawyers.

13,816. Did he say he would pay 1,500*l.*?—I cannot undertake to say he did not say it. I would not say so.

13,817. You said last night——?—If you will permit me, I will just say that I have been in court now for some time, and I am under medical treatment, and I am exceedingly unwell.

13,818. You have given us information to-day which really ought to have been stated yesterday, as it seems to me. When Mr. Fennelly came to you, and the question of money was introduced, did not he immediately say what I have just read to you, "I do "not mind the expenditure of 1,500*l.*, provided it is "not illegal," and, "If the lawyers will carry on the "election according to my views, I would willingly "pay them 1,500*l.* for their services"?—No doubt he repeated what he said at the previous meeting about his willingness.

13,819. When he introduced the question of money, did he not begin by saying that?—I do not know that he began by saying that, but certainly he did repeat what he had said in the course of Friday, winding up by saying he would concur, winding up by falling in with the proposition that Mr. Barham had made.

13,820. Before he said anything about falling in, did not you say it was impossible, and you could not see how Mr. Vanderbyl could be nominated unless he did not consent to the proposition?—I did.

13,821. What did you say?—What I did tell Mr. Fennelly was this. I repeated to him what I had said on the Friday, that if he did not spend money the contest was hopeless, and all that.

13,822. Did you not say it was impossible, and you did not even see how Mr. Vanderbyl could be nominated; that is very important?—No doubt.

13,823. Unless he consented to the proposition?—I have no remembrance of any such expression being used; no doubt the word "nomination" had been made use of, because it was said in connexion with Mr. Sully's not nominating him.

13,824. It goes a great deal further in the way of pressure on Mr. Fennelly than you stated yesterday?

13,825. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why did Mr. Sully withdraw his nomination?—Because he said he had heard of these disclosures with reference to the Lundy Island Granite Company, and the National Bank had passed a resolution with reference to it.

13,826. (Mr. Price.) That is all I have to ask you about the Saturday?—The Sunday, I beg your pardon.

13,827. Yes, the Sunday I mean. Now I should like to ask this: I see there is something important on this part of it that I should like to ask Mr. Sully about. (Mr. Sully was called, but was not present.)

13,828. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not understand, Mr. Cook, nor did I understand it yesterday, why Mr. Fennelly selected you at that late hour of the night, instead of going to Mr. Reed, or instead of going to Mr. Barham to take the lead?—I can give no reason except that I lived nearer the town than any of the other professional men; and no doubt Mr. Fennelly was rather complimentary. He spoke about Mr. Lovibond's conduct in the proceedings in the election of 1866.

13,829. Did he say anything about Mr. Reed?—His name came up generally.

13,830. Had he seen Mr. Reed?—Not that I am aware of.

13,831. Had he been to see Mr. Reed?—Not that I am aware of.

13,832. It was a very late hour of the night; it was past midnight?—It was.

13,833. He had previously called there?—He had.

13,834. At what o'clock?—I cannot tell. When I got home afterwards, which was somewhere about one, I heard he had been there, and that he had said he would call again.

13,835. Did he call again?—I had not been in the house but a very few minutes when he came again.

13,836. How long were you with him at that late hour?—I should think an hour and a half.

13,837. And you wound up by saying there was nothing for it but to go in for this joint bribery fund of 1,500*l.*?—That certainly was the end of it. No doubt I repeated my own opinion, that it was useless to fight without spending money, believing the other side——

13,838. That is what you have told us already. I ask you what he did. Did he give instructions to you what to do when you got the money?—That was the addition I was going to make with respect to what the learned Chief Commissioner spoke to me. It was arranged that I should see Mr. Fennelly on the following Monday night, when he returned to town; and it was discussed that night how it should be arranged as to the getting this money, and that we should try to get evidence, if we could, that the Conservatives were spending money in bribery, before this fund was reverted to.

13,839. All this took place on the Sunday night?—Yes.

13,840. And I understand that this bribery fund was to be drawn on in the last resource, that is, if you could not get a sufficient case against the Conservatives?—Yes.

13,841. You mean to say, if you found the Tories were bribing, or supposed the Tories were bribing, that would be something to oppose to the petition presented against you?—No doubt it was a sort of defence against the Conservatives spending money.

13,842. (Mr. Price.) I put to you upon that, were not all the arrangements for distributing the money made by you, and not by Mr. Fennelly?—I think not; at all events, I think the arrangements were not entirely completed on the Sunday, but were further discussed and spoken of on the Monday night, when I again saw Mr. Fennelly.

13,843. When you say it was discussed, there were two parties to the discussion?—Oh, yes.

13,844. And there must be the person who makes the proposal. Upon the question of the distribution of the money, and the mode in which it was to be dealt with, did not the proposals come from you to Mr. Fennelly?—On the Monday night?

13,845. No; on the Sunday night you say there was some arrangement made with respect to the money?—We were to see Mr. Fennelly on the Monday night, and to discuss and arrange as to the disposition of the money. Will you allow me to see whether I made myself intelligible yesterday, with reference to the canvass books. I am afraid I did not.

13,846. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not mean about the contents?—Yes, about the contents; I am afraid I did not make myself intelligible yesterday. The practice is this, to prepare a book containing the names of the voters of the borough, and they are arranged in streets, house after house; in fact, by arrangement, you call upon John Smith at one house and John

Jones at the other. Then the columns are left blank, Kinglake, Vanderbyl, Westropp, Gray, "Doubtful for," "Doubtful against," "Neutral," and as they are called upon by the persons canvassing, and according as they give their promise, or refuse, so they are registered in those books from time to time, and the pages are added up from time to time, and it was in consequence of those additions that the result was arrived at.

13,847. (Mr. Anstey.) That is what I understood?—I thought I had not made myself intelligible. There was another matter I was thinking over which I am not certain that I clearly understood. There was a question put by Mr. Coleridge as to the number of voters in the borough. I am sorry to take up the time of the court, but if you will allow me to hear that question again, so that I may see whether I really did understand it, I should be obliged. The learned Commissioner, Mr. Coleridge, put it to me, what were the number of voters, under the circumstances which I mentioned.

13,848. (Mr. Coleridge.) Yes, I said, adding up not only all those who took money, but also all those who meddled with money in the way of bribing others, adding them up in that way, I said, would you think there would be more than 50 pure voters in the borough, and you said you doubted whether there would be?—Yes; I would not go beyond 150 or 200.

13,849. Then you agree with Mr. Bussell?—Yes.

13,850. (Mr. Price.) I understood Mr. Bussell to say, that in his opinion, three-fourths of the present constituency were corruptible. He said there were 80 on one side who would not take bribes?—That is under the old register.

13,851. Everybody agrees that the new is as corrupt as the old?—No doubt of it.

(Mr. Price.) It comes very much to the same thing, "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump."

13,852. (Mr. Anstey.) Before this conversation, had you the canvass of the new voters?—I stated yesterday that I had not been out during the election for more than three-quarters of an hour to the best of my knowledge.

13,853. Did you hold out any expectation of bribes?—I remember perfectly well going to Mr. Manchip's workshops with Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl amongst that class. They were journeymen. It was only three quarters of an hour that I was out.

13,854. (Mr. Coleridge.) To all those men, did Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl say anything about money?—I believe not.

13,855. (Mr. Anstey.) How could you say they did not if you were not there for more than three quarters of an hour?—I only speak of my experience during the three quarters of an hour. I omitted to state yesterday that in the morning of the Monday, when I met Mr. Barham, I communicated to him that Mr. Fennelly had gone to London.

13,856. (Mr. Price.) That a change had come over their minds in the course of the Sunday night?—Yes.

13,857. That change, in point of fact, was produced by your arguments?—No doubt.

13,858. You were the last person who saw him, and it was in consequence of your argument that he came round to your views?—I certainly did use all the argument I could.

13,859. (Mr. Anstey.) You understand the question of the learned Chief Commissioner. When he came to you that night was it to argue the thing over with you, or to tell you of the change which had taken place in his mind in consequence of what had passed at the meeting?—It was to come and tell me the effect of the meeting in Hennett's house.

13,860. Did he communicate the change which had come over his determination only at the end of this discussion, or had he communicated it at a previous period?—No; he gradually led up to it. Then he said he would accept Mr. Barham's proposition, and something was said about coming down the following night, and then it ended, I think so. Then I think I stated yesterday with reference to the meeting at Mr. Sealey's house that what was discussed there was Mr. Vanderbyl's relations with the Lundy Island Granite Company; it was not, but it was the resolution of the bank directors.

13,861. (Mr. Price.) That is the same thing. I understood that at this meeting nothing else was discussed, except Mr. Vanderbyl's connexion with this company?—Nothing whatever else. It was entirely confined to that I believe.

13,862. (Mr. Anstey.) I think you have intimated your opinion as to the hopelessness of going on if the election was pure?—That was at Mr. Sealey's on the Saturday night; that was not on the Sunday night. Mr. Fennelly had that day placed in the hands of Mr. John Lovell Sealey the letter or some official communication which he had received from the bank enclosing the resolution, and Mr. Sealey being interested in it, he called a few of the leaders of the party together to see it.

13,863. (Mr. Price.) Was not Mr. Sealey in communication with the leaders of the Liberal party?—No doubt.

13,864. And was he not consulted as to the candidate who should be selected?—No doubt he was in the confidence of the party; he was the chairman.

13,865. And no doubt knew everything which you, and Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Barham could inform of?—He was a particular friend of Mr. Lovibond's, and knew more about Mr. Lovibond than ourselves.

13,866. And being intimately connected with the party, and being also intimately connected with Mr. Lovibond, both personally and politically, have you any doubt that Mr. Sealey knew everything about that which was pressing upon your mind and upon Mr. Reed's and Mr. Barham's as to the eligibility of Mr. Vanderbyl?—Well, the circumstances were very suspicious.

13,867. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, do you know whether these awkward, not to call them by stronger terms, these very awkward imputations against Mr. Vanderbyl's honesty, as I understand them, were only heard of in Bridgwater for the first time that day, Saturday; or had they not been notorious, as far as the public press could make the thing notorious, for weeks and months before?—No. As far as I can now charge my memory, Mr. Vanderbyl was examined about a week or ten days, perhaps a fortnight, before the election, perhaps ten days, and then the daily press contained a statement of his examination; immediately upon which, I dare say it was done on the opposite side, slips were printed off, containing the same matter, and posted all over the town just before the election.

13,868. Had you not heard it long before the examination of Mr. Vanderbyl?—I cannot say that I had.

13,869. At all events, you had heard of it days before the election?—Oh, certainly.

13,870. And days before that Saturday?—And days before that Saturday? Oh yes, three or four days before that Saturday, no doubt.

13,871. But was not the bitter controversy between those two gentlemen, Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Joseph McKenna, a matter of public notoriety weeks and months before?—I had no personal knowledge of it at all. To the best of my belief Mr. Vanderbyl had never stated anything about this difference between himself and Sir Joseph McKenna.

13,872. It was when he was Mr. McKenna, long before he was Sir Joseph McKenna?—No.

13,873. The very fact of your mentioning him as Sir Joseph McKenna seems to disclose to me the date. In this statement he is described as Mr. Joseph McKenna; the one I read in the brief the other day he was stated as a Mr. Joseph McKenna; he was not Sir Joseph till 1868?—He must have been Sir Joseph then. If he had the knighthood in July, this resolution must have been passed in November.

13,874. That has reference to your knowledge of what had taken place. Were you then aware, when you were seeing Mr. Fennelly at 12 o'clock at night, of this proposal, made to Mr. Lovibond months and months before, to get rid of you and Mr. Reed altogether, and take Mr. Lovibond "for better for worse"?—I certainly had no knowledge that such a proposition had been made.

13,875. Would not that materially have influenced your zeal with regard to Mr. Vanderbyl, had you known it?—I do not know what impression it would have made upon me at the time.

13,876. Was it not the fact that Mr. Reed was Mr. Vanderbyl's private adviser rather than you?—No, I think not. I think of late it has been rather the other way.

13,877. But at that time?—I think not. Mr. Lovibond was considered chief agent at that time, no doubt.

13,878. But Mr. Vanderbyl's chief supporter in your firm, was it Mr. Reed, or was it you?—I think I have taken a more active part since the last election than Mr. Reed.

13,879. At that time I am asking you about, down to the time when you saw Mr. Fenelley under the cloud of midnight, had Mr. Reed been the chief, the almost prominent supporter of Mr. Vanderbyl?—I think not.

13,880. As far as you have heard?—No, I think not.

13,881. Then go on. Have you finished the Sunday night?—I have finished the Sunday night. Then after the nomination during the Monday, I think there were two interviews, certainly one, if not two, possibly more, interviews between ourselves and Mr. Lovibond.

13,882. On Monday?—On Monday; and the last was certainly as late, I should think, as seven or eight o'clock upon the Monday night, and that was at our office. He came there with his son, and my partner was in the room. All four were in the room, and then my partner said to Mr. Lovibond's son, "Well, George, I think you and I will go down-" stairs," upon which they both left, and Mr. Lovibond and I were left in the room together; and upon that a discussion took place as to what we had heard the Conservatives were doing, and the latest reports as to their movements, and also as to the steps which were to be taken as to the disposition of the money upon the following day, which was the polling day; and after some discussion it was arranged that matters should stand as they were, no complete arrangement should be made till the following day, the Tuesday. I could not tell how long the conversation lasted, or what the conversation was that passed; but it was left that no arrangements should be come to until the following day, the Tuesday. That interview took place about seven or eight o clock at night. After that interview—because I have previously told the Commissioners I had seen Mr. Fennelly and communicated to him the proposition, and had communicated to Mr. Lovibond his reply that same evening, after the arrival of the express—Mr. Fennelly called at our office with Mr. Lomas, and was seen by my partner and myself. Mr. Lomas, to the best of my recollection and belief, was introduced by Mr. Fennelly as a Mr. Williams, in the tea trade.

13,883. (Mr. Price.) Now was that introduction in that form arranged beforehand? Had that been a matter of pre-arrangement between you and Mr. Fennelly?—To the best of my recollection and belief I think not. If I could remember it was the result of pre-arrangement, of course I should only be too pleased to state so.

13,884. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he give you a wink, or a sign, when he pronounced the name "Williams"?—Well, I do not remember that he did.

13,885. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came the tea trade to be hit upon?—I do not know.

13,886. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you not understand it was a nom de guerre, a false description, when he mentioned that?—Yes, I imagined that.

13,887. Why did you imagine that?—I cannot say whether it was from something that was said the previous night.

13,888. (Mr. Price.) When Mr. Fennelly went to London he communicated to you that he was going to London?—Certainly.

13,889. And he intimated that he was going to bring someone down?—Certainly.

13,890. And the money?—Yes.

13,891. Did he have some means of communicating with you when he spoke of money?—I think he spoke of "samples."

13,892. (Mr. Anstey.) On the Sunday night?—Yes.

13,893. (Mr. Price.) Can you say whether he did not openly call it "money," or did he call it "tea," that Sunday night?—I could not mention one way or the other.

13,894. (Mr. Anstey.) When he mentioned the word "samples," what key had you to it?—It was spoken of.

13,895. You must have had the key of it?—Very likely something was said like that on the Sunday night.

13,896. Was there anything extraordinary in a firm of provision merchants bringing somebody down in the tea trade?—No.

13,897. Therefore you must have had some reason for supposing that this person was not in the tea trade; because there was nothing more likely than that a man in the tea trade would come down with another man in the tea trade. Do you know whether anything was said?—I could not say so; but the inference would be the other way.

13,898. (Mr. Price.) Then he came in and introduced Mr. Lomas as Mr. Williams, in the tea trade?—Yes.

13,899. What passed then?—Then, I think, Mr. Lomas stayed there about ten minutes, somewhere about that time, or a little longer, and then left when Mr. Fennelly did; and then there was a conversation to the effect that the business would begin very early. I understood he was going to stay at the "Railway Hotel;" and a suggestion was made, I believe, by myself or my partner, or both, that what he had should be made up in packets of 10*l*.

13,900. Did not Mr. Fennelly bring Mr. Lomas down with the money to your house with the view of leaving it with you, and having nothing to say as to its distribution at all?—No, I think not; because I remember after Mr. Fennelly had left I expressed my surprise to my partner that he had brought this Mr. Lomas down.

13,901. But did not he bring him there at your house, with the money, to leave in there, without having anything to say to you about its distribution?—No; I am certain nothing was said on the Sunday night.

13,902. I am not speaking of the Sunday night. On the Monday, did not Mr. Fennelly bring Mr. Lomas to your house with the money, with the view of leaving it with you, and having nothing to say as to its distribution?—I do not know.

13,903. That is a very important question. You really can say one way or the other; it is most important?—There was no arrangement, if you will allow me to put it in this way, on the Sunday night.

13,904. I am bringing it to the Monday night. I am bringing you to the introduction of Mr. Lomas. I ask you this simple question, did not Mr. Fennelly bring Mr. Lomas with the money to your house on the Monday night, with the view of leaving it with you and saying nothing about distribution?—It was not so stated that it was brought for the purpose of giving it to us, because there was a general discussion, and it was understood that Mr. Lomas had got it, and then the suggestion was, "You, Mr. Lomas, are to tie it up."

13,905. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Lomas took it away again?—Yes, undoubtedly. There was no conversation in any shape or form about it.

13,906. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there any conversation on the Monday night between you and these other persons to the effect that Mr. Fennelly, having done his work in bringing down the money, was to know nothing of your intention to apply it, or not to apply it, to corrupt practices, but was to leave the discretion and responsibility of all that, entirely on the shoulders of yourself, and perhaps your partner?—On the contrary, sir, it was arranged, when money was required the next day, that it should be done through Mr. Fennelly.

13,907. I wish you would not use those auctioneering phrases, "it was arranged." Tell us what was said. Who said that?—I have no doubt that the suggestion was made by himself.

13,908. "Suggestion!" Why do not you speak English? What was it you said? "When the money was wanted to-morrow"—what then?—When I spoke?

13,909. When you spoke to Mr. Fennelly, tell us, without using your Latin language, what it was you said?—I understood Mr. Lomas was going to stay at the "Railway Hotel."

13,910. What did you say? What were your words, as nearly as you can recollect?—To the best of my recollection I said, "When anything is required I "will communicate with you," something of that sort.

13,911. When "anything" is required?—Whenever the "samples of tea," or whatever it was that has been spoken to, "are required, I will communicate "with you."

13,912. In the morning?—In the morning.

13,913. (Mr. Price.) I put it again to you. Was not the state of things this, that Mr. Fennelly had originally intended to leave the money at your own house on the Monday night, and have nothing more to say to it, but as before, when you had got him to come to the arrangement as to bribing at all, it was by your arguments or by your instructions that Mr. Lomas took the money back, and then prepared it in these samples?—Mr. Fennelly did not state certainly that he had brought the money there for the purpose of handing the money over to me for distribution.

13,914. Then, how did it happen that the money went back from your office, if nothing was said about leaving it there? How did you know it was there?—Mr. Fennelly told me Mr. Lomas had the money.

13,915. That he was prepared?—That he was prepared; no doubt of it.

13,916. And was it in consequence of your urging him to take it back that he took it back to make it up?—There was no urging in the matter. There was a conversation about the business commencing early in the morning, and he was told——

13,917. (Mr. Anstey.) Told by whom?—By me, or by me and my partner, no doubt.

13,918. (Mr. Price.) Have you the slightest doubt that, but for that arrangement for him to take it back to make it up, that he would have left the money there under your control that night?—There was no arrangement to that effect. He might have had the intention, but there was no conversation to that effect.

13,919. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he show you the money?—Certainly not.

13,920–1. Did he show you the money that night?—Certainly not.

13,922. Did he show you the bag?—Certainly not.

13,923. He told you, at all events, that it was there?—Oh, clearly.

13,924. Did he tell you that that money was to be spent in a given way?—Well, I told him——

13,925. Will you answer my question? You go on with your "understandings," and "impressions," and "best of recollections," and all that sort of thing. I want to know, in plain English, did Mr. Fennelly say anything to you which led you to understand, as you like to say, that that money was to be spent specifically for br bery purposes?—There is no doubt about it.

13,926. Did he say anything when he spoke of the money? Will you tell us what he said bearing in that direction, as near as you can recollect his words; and do not talk of your recollection, and what you understood, and all that sort of thing?—There was an introduction first, and then Mr. Fennelly spoke and said that he had come down prepared in accordance with the arrangement, and that he had got the "tea samples" with him. I think he said he had got the "samples" with him, and then I think the answer I made was, "The business begins very early in the "morning; it will be better for you to tie it up in "packets of 10*l.* each." It was spoken of in that sort of way, and no doubt he acted on that suggestion.

13,927. I am coming to his acting. What did he say to that, when you said he had better make it up in 10*l.* packets?—Merely assented to it.

13,928. He assented to it?—Oh, yes.

13,929. And it was for that purpose, and no other, that the money was taken away by Mr. Lomas?—Certainly.

13,930. Not because of any proposal to you, and your refusal of the proposal to do it yourself?—Certainly not.

13,931. You are a lawyer, you know, Mr. Cook, and you know the difference between giving us your impressions and understandings, and so on, and what actually occurred?—Clearly.

13,932. I wish you would, in relating a conversation, give us the dialogue as nearly as you can, and we will form our impressions as to what the understanding was.

13,933. (Mr. Price.) That finishes the Monday interview?—I think so.

13,934. (Mr. Anstey.) What o'clock did they leave that night, or did you leave them rather?—I should think about 10, or something of that sort.

13,935. You saw them no more until the next day?—No, sir, not till next day.

13,936. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Cook, will you go on to the polling morning?—On the Monday night, permit me to state, there was a pass-word agreed upon which should be the key for the money which Mr. Lomas had got. He was to be called Mr. Williams, and the key was, "What is tea a pound?" and the parties who said that and asked for him as Mr. Williams were to state what they required and he supplied them with it.

13,937. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the meaning of his saying "Eureka"?—That was the next day. The other was the Monday night. Then upon the Tuesday morning, which would be the polling day, we had got, as you heard, the management of what is called the eastern district, and, if you will permit me to state, in the eastern district there are three polling booths, one almost immediately adjoining the "Globe Hotel," another in Church Street, and another in Polden Street, all being in fact part of the eastern district, the "Globe Hotel," or rather the large room adjoining the "Globe Hotel," being used as the return room for those three particular polling booths. Mr. Lovibond had got the south district, and only one polling booth in that district, which no doubt was close to the church, the market house and the church, and the return room for that polling booth was a large room adjoining the "Rose and Crown Inn," in the same district. Mr. Barham had got the north district, the polling booth for which was near High Street, the street here, and the return room for that polling booth was the large room of the "Mansion House Inn;" and we had got at the large room of the "Globe Hotel" three large sheets of the voters in the eastern district, and a clerk sat at each sheet, marking off the persons who polled from time to time according as the returns came in, and with each clerk there would be a person to call over, and a lad to run to and from the particular booth attached to that sheet to bring the returns. That would be the position, and the "Globe Hotel" is close to the bridge and the main thoroughfare of the town, whilst the return room in the southern district would be in a back street, as I have before told you. Well, that was the state of things on the morning of the poll, and for something like half-an-hour or hour the Liberals were in a majority. Then about nine or shortly afterwards it was discovered that the Conservatives were polling a class of men which we, that is, my partner and myself, as we noticed the returns as they came in were of opinion could not be polled unless upon promises of money or something of that kind, and we arrived at that conclusion in this way: The returns were compared with the lists, as I have before said, which were placed before those clerks, and some of those names were marked, as Mr. Barham said with regard to his own list, with a red cross as being men who had promised us but were doubtful, and we found in three or four instances that these men instead of polling for us, as we believed they would, had voted on the other side.

13,938. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were these men who were marked in your list marked as doubtful for or doubtful against?—No doubt they were marked doubtful for. Well, then, when we discovered that, Mr. Reed and I saw Mr. Lovibond; I am not quite sure whether Mr. Barham was there on that occasion or not, the first meeting in the morning; and we told what out experience had been, and then Mr. Lovibond stated that he had seen Mr. Bussell, and he had told him that the bird had flown, and that there was something illegal in our proceedings, and that if the candidates got in the election would be a void one.

13,939. (Mr. Anstey.) Who told him that?—I understood that Bussell gave that knowledge to Mr. Lovibond.

13,940. Bussell imparted that legal information to Mr. Lovibond?—No doubt; Mr. Lovibond told us that Bussell had stated that the other side, the Conservatives, stated there was something wrong in our procedure, and the election would be a void one.

13,941. Do you know what that alluded to?—No, I have not the slightest idea. Then between half-past nine and twelve o'clock that day there were at least three or four meetings between Mr. Lovibond and ourselves, on all of which occasions he came to the "Globe Hotel" rooms which we were occupying.

13,942. (Mr. Price.) You occupied those as agents for Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, we were all in the house.

13,943. (Mr. Anstey.) Vanderbyl was there himself?—Well, Mr. Vanderbyl was there in the house, but we were acting then jointly. There was a general return room for persons who had voted always. We did not regard ourselves as acting exclusively for Vanderbyl.

13,944. You were acting for him more than for Mr. Kinglake. Though you acted jointly for both, you were in Vanderbyl's interest, and Mr. Lovibond was for Kinglake?—We were acting jointly.

13,945. By arrangement between you on the nomination day and the polling day you had all agreed to act jointly, all three of you?—We had been acting jointly throughout.

13,946. You could not have been acting jointly before you began to act at all?—No, but during the canvass.

13,947. But before you began to act jointly at all you were acting each, not for your own client, for you were the principals, but each for your own candidate; but afterwards, there being no difference between the interests of the two candidates, you agreed to act jointly?—We agreed to act jointly, no doubt. Then between half-past nine and twelve o'clock two or three interviews took place between us and Lovibond, on each of which occasions he came to the "Globe," and a meeting took place in a small room, the return room, with Mr. Smith, Andrew Allan, Bussell, and Alway. I could not fix the time, but I should think it was about ten o'clock. Their opinion was asked what they thought of things, and how the election was going, and if they could account for certain names polling in the way in which they had, and they expressed their opinion that money must be going or some improper conduct going on on the part of the other side, or else those men (I believe certain names were mentioned) would not have polled in the way they had.

13,948. Was that Mr. Alway's opinion?—I could not fix the opinion upon him. No doubt they all concurred in the opinion.

13,949. Was it the Mr. Alway who has been distinguished at previous elections for bribery?—It is the same Mr. Alway.

13,950. And who had signed the purist petition of 1866?—I remember your reading the name. Then I believe nothing particular came of that meeting, and there was another meeting of the same parties in the course of the day, in which they admitted it would cost hard upon three or four thousand pounds to win the election; and the lawyers retired for the purpose of considering the information which they had given and the opinions they had expressed; and upon that occasion I know that Mr. Lovibond stated that Mr. Kinglake's friends were desirous that he should be returned, that he valued the seat, and that he was prepared to go in to the extent of, indeed the sum was mentioned, two or three thousand pounds.

13,951. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Kinglake's friends were?—They would not mind two or three thousand pounds for the purpose of securing the election. We discussed it, and the majority had increased. It must have been later than ten, and we came to the conclusion then, that with the majority going on as it was it would be useless to attempt to win the election without the expenditure of a very large sum of money; and I remember using the expression to Mr. Lovibond that it could not be done without flooding the town with money, and I would be no party to it.

13,952. (Mr. Anstey.) Who used that expression?—I used it.

13,953. Are you quite sure it was not used by one of the other witnesses who has been examined?—Quite sure.

13,954. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you used that expression, did you draw either a moral or a legal distinction between flooding the town and tolerably well paying the town?—No.

13,955. Was your objection to paying money at all, or paying so large a sum?—To paying so large a sum; that was it. Then about twelve o'clock I think there was another interview, and Mr. Lovibond came, and that must have been the time which Mr. Barham refers to in his evidence when he speaks of having come in and seen Mr. Lovibond taking down some notes. I looked out and saw Dr. Kinglake near the "Globe Hotel," and Mr. Mogg.

13,956. The Mr. Mogg who has been examined here?—Yes.

13,957. You saw Dr. Kinglake, you say?—Yes, I saw them when I was looking out of the large window of the "Globe Hotel." It was about 12 o'clock, and then there had been a conversation between Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Reed, and myself; and at that time Mr. Lovibond again said that Mr. Kinglake's friends were desirous of securing his election, and did not regard the expenditure; and I believe that substantially the same answer was made as was made upon the previous occasion, upon which Mr. Lovibond left, followed by my partner, Mr. Reed.

13,958. Do you mean Dr. Kinglake heard this?—Oh, no; I saw him through the window in the street. Then Mr. Reed left and Mr. Lovibond, and in two or three minutes my partner came back and said that Mr. Lovibond had seen Dr. Kinglake's friends, and they valued the seat, and they would not mind two or three thousand pounds to win the election.

13,959. Mr. Kinglake's friends?—Mr. Kinglake's friends would not mind two or three thousand pounds if they could see the way to win the election.

13,960. Did he say whether he had seen Dr. Kinglake?—Oh, certainly.

13,961. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure of that; quite certain that he had seen Dr. Kinglake, and that was the conclusion at which they arrived?—Quite certain that my partner reported that they had seen Dr. Kinglake.

13,962. You thought your partner had heard that from Dr. Kinglake?—He saw Mr. Lovibond in conversation with Dr. Kinglake, and on leaving Dr. Kinglake Mr. Lovibond came back and reported that to my partner, and then my partner told me.

13,963. That was said first to Mr. Lovibond?—Yes, by Dr. Kinglake.

13,964. You have no doubt he did say by Dr. Kinglake?—I have no doubt he did.

13,965. Do you suppose that Dr. Kinglake had told him that?—Told Mr. Lovibond that?

13,966. No, told Mr. Reed. I am talking about your partner; you say your partner told you that Mr. Lovibond had told him that. Do you suppose that Dr. Kinglake had communicated the same thing to your partner?—No, he had not communicated it to my partner, but to Mr. Lovibond. It was communicated by Mr. Lovibond to Mr. Reed, and by Mr. Reed to me. Nothing particular was done upon it; but it was just shortly after that that Mr. Lovibond was up in the room with Mr. Reed and myself and Mr. John Smith. They were at one end of the room, and we were called over by Mr. Smith; and he said, in the presence and hearing of Mr. Lovibond, he had been speaking to Mr. Lovibond as to the management of the election; and he said, "Mr. Lovibond says he has been prepared "from this morning, but you are not prepared;" and the answer I made in the presence of all parties was, "It is not so; we have been prepared, but we were "unwilling to flood the streets with money."

13,967. (Mr. Price.) Whom did you say that to?—Mr. Smith.

13,968. Mr. John Smith?—Mr. John Smith. He had been having some conversation with Mr. Lovibond the minute before; and when he came up he said, "It appears Mr. Lovibond says he has been pre-"pared from early this morning, but you are not "prepared." I said, "It is not so; we have been "prepared, but we were unwilling to flood the streets "with money."

13,969. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the distinction you draw between his being prepared and your being prepared? He was prepared as representing whom? Did you take it that Mr. Lovibond meant, "I am "prepared on behalf of Mr. Kinglake; you are not "prepared on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl;" is that what you understood?—I do not know that these words were used, but it conveyed that.

13,970. (Mr. Price.) Were you present when somebody came into the room, Bussell or Allan or somebody, and either you or your partner (of course if you said it you were present) said, "We have done all we could. Where the devil is Lovibond?"—That was later. I am now speaking of about ten o'clock. It was later in the day that that happened. Well then, after that the majority increased in favour of the Conservatives. There was a talk as between my partner and myself about leaving. Several parties said they should go; and I remember the expression used by my partner was, "No, we will sink with the ship," and we stayed behind.

13,971. (Mr. Coleridge.) At this time did you know Mr. Kinglake had gone?—I had not the slightest idea nor any intimation of any sort or kind was conveyed to me that Mr. Kinglake was gone, until, I believe, bordering upon the close of the poll.

13,972. (Mr. Price.) Was there anybody in the borough who knew Mr. Kinglake was gone except Mr. Allan?—I have no knowledge that they did.

13,973. None of his agents knew he was gone?—I certainly had no intimation whatever, nor had my partner.

13,974. He slipped off?—Then about half-past two or a quarter to three, Bussell came, and things had no doubt materially changed in the meantime. Return after return came in by which it was seen that the large majority which was in favour of the Conservatives at about twelve, or half-past twelve, or one, was materially changed, and Mr. Bussell returned. I forget how he began it, but at all events, I think he told me that there were some men who would not go to poll without money. I made the reply, "Well, you had "better get them together, and we will see what can "be done," upon which Mr. Lovibond was inquired for. But if you will permit me, it occurs to me that during the morning it is right that I should state I held three or four conversations with Mr. Fennelly, giving him, in fact, the result of our interviews with Mr. Lovibond, in which he had expressed about Dr. Kinglake and his desire that Mr. Kinglake should go in, and our unwillingness to spend money; and Mr. Fennelly certainly said, "I approve the course you have taken."

13,975. (Mr. Price.) At that time he had Lomas down at the "Globe" waiting?—Yes, he was down at the "Globe." Then, when we determined at that time, about 11 or 12 o'clock in the day, that no money was to be spent, I saw Mr. Fennelly, and said, "You had "better make a communication to Mr. Lomas. He "had better not let money go." After that Bussell was seen, and he was told to get the men together; and then I saw Mr. Fennelly, and he told me he should have Mr. Lomas up from the "Railway Hotel" to the "Globe," that he might be nearer in case of anything being required. Then Bussell came in, and an inquiry was made for Mr. Lovibond. Shortly after he came back into the "Globe Hotel," and a conversation took place between him, my partner, and myself as to the altered state of things, and he said there were men who would not go to the poll without money, and he said, "You find it." I made the reply, not as Mr. Lovibond said, "We have exhausted one lung, and nearly the other," but the answer I made was that it was unfair to breathe from one lung.

13,976. What time was that?—About a quarter to three.

13,977. (Mr. Coleridge.) Although you had coalesced for the purposes of the election you still looked upon the two purses as quite distinct?—My partner had made arrangements that no money was to be spent unless we were satisfied that Mr. Kinglake was spending money.

13,978. Yours was the Vanderbyl lung, and theirs was the Kinglake lung?—Yes. Then Mr. Lovibond asked, "Have you seen Allan?" and left at the time. Immediately upon his leaving Bussell came in and said he had got a certain number of men at his house, and asked for 120*l.* I then went to Mr. Fennelly, explained the position of things, that Bussell was there and wanted 120*l.*, and suggested that he should send Mr. Lomas, who had by that time arrived at the "Globe Hotel," into the small room which I before mentioned, where the parties had met earlier in the day, for the purpose of giving him 120*l.*; and, in the meantime, my partner having seen me go, he had directed Bussell to go into this small room before Mr. Lomas got in there; as it turned out, it must have been; and then after I came back he was directed to go in again, and then it was that Bussell saw Mr. Lomas, and had the money which I speak of.

13,979. (Mr. Anstey.) Who directed him to go in again?—I dare say I did. On the first occasion I believe I did.

13,980. (Mr. Price.) Was not Mr. Fennelly acting under your instructions entirely when he got down to the "Globe," as to where he was to go and what he was to do?—Mr. Fennelly did nothing without my telling him what was required.

13,981. (Mr. Anstey.) Was he completely master of the case? Was he aware of the way in which the money was going, and for what purpose it was going?—I told him that Bussell was there, and that he wanted a certain amount of money for men.

13,982. Will you answer my question? During the whole of this day, when he was coming and going, and you were coming and going, and you were speaking and he was speaking, and money was going in the way you describe, was he perfectly well aware that money was going in the way of bribery?—Unquestionably.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

7 Sept. 1869.

13,983. You practised no concealment upon him at all?—No, no concealment. Then it was, I think, that Mr. Lovibond again came and was with Allen; but before he came I had no doubt used the expression, seeing that Lovibond had been inquired for and had not come, "Where the devil is Lovibond?" I do not know that that was addressed to any particular individual, but it must have been heard by persons who were standing near at the time. Well, he left with Allan, and then Bussell came back a second time for money, and said he had a certain number of other men, and required 60*l.* I then saw Mr. Fennelly, told him how it stood, and told him to send Mr. Lomas in there with the required sum for Bussell to have it; and Bussell was directed to go into the room and have it, and no doubt he got it at that time. (This would be drawing us up to at least half-past three.) Garratt came and said that he had three men who would not poll without money. And, with reference to Garrett, permit me to state he was not an entire stranger to me, for as I pass up and down the rail I see him. I had seen him at one of the working men's associations, and I knew some of his connexions, and looked upon him, at all events, as a trustworthy man.

13,984. Trustworthy for bribery purposes?—Yes.

13,985. What does it matter whether you did or not?—It is only to tell you that I listened to an application which he made.

13,986. It really is an abuse of terms to speak of him as "trustworthy."—If you please. Well, then he came in and said there were three men who would not poll without money. Upon that I communicated with Mr. Fennelly, and I told him that 30*l.* were required. I will not say that I mentioned Garrett's name at all; but no doubt he had the 30*l.*

13,987. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you speak of Garrett as trustworthy, I suppose you mean that he was a man whom you could trust with money for other people without fear of his appropriating it to himself?—I did not believe he would appropriate it. Later in the day, about a quarter to four, he came again and said there were two other men who would not poll without money, upon which I went to Mr. Fennelly again, and directed that Mr. Lomas should be sent into this small room to give the 20*l.* to Garratt; and he was sent into the room, and gave him the money in the way I have described. But it occurs to me that I should have stated to you that when Bussell came back the second time for the 60*l.*, it is perfectly true, as he says, that I remonstrated with him for the hasty way in which the money appeared to be got rid of, and he made use of the expression, "Whilst you are caddling about it, the election will be lost." And upon that I went to Mr. Fennelly and told him what was required, and directed that he should send Lomas to the small room, and Bussell was directed to go in again. About a quarter to four there was another case. Mr. William Dymond, whose name has been mentioned in this room, came to me, saying that a Mr. French would not poll without he had something, and I replied to Dymond "Make the best arrangement you can with him."

13,988. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not you give him any money?—Certainly not, no money then. I said, "Make the best arrangement you can with him," and he did it, for I heard some time after, but I confess I had forgotten the fact, that he had paid French a sum of 10*l.*

13,989. Who repaid him that?—It has never been repaid to this day.

13,990. Who and what is French?—He is the keeper of the inn called the "Rose and Crown."

13,991. (Mr. Anstey.) You say he has never been repaid to this day. We know what that means.—No doubt. I told him to make the best arrangement he could with him.

13,992. He would have been repaid before "this day" if there had not been the election trial and this inquiry, would he not?—I had forgotten it. He mentioned it to me, and directly he mentioned it the facts were fresh in my recollection.

13,993. That was lately, was it not?—Oh no, some time ago.

13,994. Then was it when the election trial was either on or about to come on?—No.

13,995. Would not it be nearer the truth to say he would have been repaid but for these inquiries, and will not be repaid now these inquiries have been instituted?—There is no doubt he would have been paid if it had not been for the inquiries.

13,996. (Mr. Price.) I do not see that myself. I do not see why he is not to be paid. Do you mean to say that Mr. Kinglake is going to be so dishonourable that he will not repay money?—It was for Mr. Vanderbyl.

13,997. Well, do you mean to say that Mr. Vandeybyl will be so dishonourable that he will not repay the money which this man has paid out of his own pocket for Mr. Vanderbyl's benefit? Are you the interpreter of Mr. Vanderbyl's honour to this extent; no matter what becomes of the borough, whether the borough is disfranchised or not, that Mr. Vanderbyl will sneak out of a sum of money paid on his account?—As the learned Commissioner, Mr. Anstey, said, but for these inquiries the amount would have been repaid.

13,998, (Mr. Anstey.) Has Mr. Vanderbyl ever told you that he means in any contingency whatever to repay or settle these bribery accounts?—He never has said so.

13,999. Have you any reason, as regards Mr. Vanderbyl, to suppose that he will not do it?—I do not know that there is.

14,000. I will ask you the same with regard to Mr. Kinglake. Seeing the jeopardy which Mr. Prior is placed in with regard to the 500*l.*, do you think that Mr. Kinglake will make good this money?—I cannot say what he will do.

14,001. Was not the repayment of these bribery accounts contingent entirely upon the prospect of a fresh election?—No doubt it was in times past.

14,002. If there is no prospect of any fresh election, I ask you as a man who knows the practice here, I will not say whether it is good or bad, is there any chance of these sums being paid?—Unless it is a question of honour.

14,003. It is a question of honour. I want to know from you whether, from your knowledge of Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake, they are two men who will allow these men to be money out of pocket for what they intended to reap benefit from by being members of parliament?—I cannot say.

14,004. In what position in life is this man Dymond?—He is the clerk or accountant at Thompson and Collins'. He is a man in some position of life.

14,005. (Mr. Coleridge.) You considered him trustworthy to the amount of 10*l.*?—Yes.

14,006. You never entrusted him with the 10*l.*?—No. I told him to make the best arrangement he could.

14,007. Did he get that money from his employer?—No; he told me that he had it from his wife.

14,008. (Mr. Anstey.) If there had been a few more instances of such unpaid accounts, retribution in kind, in times past, do you think we should be now troubled with this inquiry? If there had been a few more instances of Frenches being bribed with money not recouped to the briber at former elections, do you suppose there would have been any inquiry at the present time?—If persons had not been recouped?

14,009. Yes?—I suppose they would have had nothing to do with it.

14,010. Would not it have had the effect of breaking the neck of the system?—No doubt.

14,011. (Mr. Coleridge.) How do you account for the fact that, there being this large sum of hard cash in the custody of Mr. Lomas of which we hear, only 240*l.* was spent, that there should have been such a hard drive and difficulty to get a sum of money from the banker at the last moment?—Just about a quarter to three Mr. Lovibond came, and money matters were referred to. He suggested we should spend, knowing as he did that the provision had been made.

14,012. He knew that there was 1500*l.* in cash, I suppose ?—Yes, he knew that no doubt; but I told him on the Monday morning of the acceptance of the proposal. Then it was that he suggested we should spend the money, and I made the reply, "It is unfair "to breathe from one lung."

14,013. Comparatively you had breathed very little from that lung before ?—No, we had not.

14,014. Was it rather your inducement to throw the expense more upon Mr. Kinglake than to adopt it for Mr. Vanderbyl ?—No, the object was not to throw the expense upon Mr. Kinglake ; but we were unwilling to spend money for Mr. Vanderbyl unless we knew that Mr. Kinglake would spend money too.

14,015. Was not it rather the game played between your firm and the other to work as far as you could for both, but to see which would be least out of pocket ?—No.

14,016. (Mr. Price.) I suppose you could not control that every vote would be for Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—Yes.

14,017. There would be no plumpers ?—No.

14,018. (Mr. Coleridge.) And no split votes ?—No.

14,019. (Mr. Anstey.) We have heard of one very remarkable split vote—— ?—I am speaking of the money expended in bribery.

14,020. (Mr. Price.) The mass of the money, as you understood, even if it went from your lung as you say, would go to get votes for both the candidates ?—Clearly.

14,020*a*. There was no idea of getting plumpers ?—Not the slightest.

14,021. (Mr. Anstey.) Does this, or does this not, throw any light upon what has been to this time inexplicable, that is to say, the concealment practised upon Bussell which prevented him from knowing until after the election that Allan was bribing quite as much as he was, or was trusted quite as much as he was to bribe ; and that there was also a third person employed, though not to the same extent, one Garratt ?—Bussell had no communication whatever with the others.

14,022. Does what you have just stated explain that, or does it not ?—There was a concealment.

14,023. Was it not for the very purpose of relieving one lung, so that both lungs should breathe equally ?—No, it was not that.

14,024. What was it ? Was it for the purpose of overcharging the one lung, Mr. Kinglake's lung ?—No, we were not prompted by any such motives.

14,025. Why was the fact that a known bribe agent, Andrew Allan, was employed in bribing for both candidates concealed from Henry Chapman Bussell another bribe agent also employed in bribing for both candidates, and so concealed until after the election was over ?—You see Mr. Lovibond came in with Allan, having asked for him, and was seen with him. What it was Mr. Lovibond did with Allan I did not know at the time.

14,026. But Mr. Allan knew that Bussell was bribing, but Bussell was kept in the dark ?—I do not know that Allan knew it.

14,027. He stated that he did ?—Did he ?

14,028. Yes; and Mr. Bussell stated that he did not know that Allan was bribing, and when I asked him the question he said, "I do not believe he was "trusted with any money"?—We had nothing to do with Allan.

14,029. Was there any reason for concealing from Bussell the fact that Allan was entrusted with money, and that Garratt was entrusted with money ?—No communication whatever was made to him.

14,030. Why was that so, I want to know ? What purpose was the concealment meant to answer ?—I do not know.

14,031. (Mr. Price.) It might have tended to this state of things, that these two men, in ignorance that they were both working for the same end, might both bribe the same voters ?—Except so far as this, that Bussell reported when he came in for the money that the men were at his own house ; and it is improbable that Allan would go there ; and Allan said he had got a certain number of men. And the same with regard to Garratt. So it was not as if a sum of money had been entrusted to each man for him to go out into the streets with.

14,032. Each man was specially employed for a particular lot of voters ?—Yes.

14,033. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not this the reason that you wished to conceal, it was thought desirable to conceal from you, at least, how much money Lovibond was spending in Mr. Kinglake's behalf ?—I did not know what Mr. Lovibond had had, and I did not know what his motives were.

14,034. Was not that your object in concealing, if possible, from Mr. Lovibond how much you were spending on Mr. Vanderbyl's side ?—Because they should not know what it was ?

14,035. Yes ?—No, I do not know that it was. These men came in and asked for certain sums, and they had what they asked for, which happened to come to three or four hundred pounds.

14,036. But that sum went much farther than what was squandered by Mr. Kinglake ?—I do not know how far it went, except that from the number of men that Bussell had money for on both occasions, and the number that Garratt had money for, it would appear that they were asking for about 10*l.* for each man, and from what Allan said it would appear that he had the same sum.

14,037. There was a greater number bribed by Allan than by Bussell ?—Oh yes, no doubt.

14,038. (Mr. Coleridge.) Allan got rid of 500*l.* ?—No, he said he had spent 315*l.*, and there was 185*l.* balance, which he still has.

14,039. (Mr. Anstey.) That brings you to a quarter to three ?—It brings me up to the close of the poll nearly.

14,040. Before you come to the close of the poll, did you see nothing more that day of either Mr. Mogg or Dr. Kinglake ?—Nothing whatever.

14,041. I forget whether you saw them together, as well as your partner ?—I saw Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Mogg together in the street as I looked out of the window.

14,042. (Mr. Price.) Was Mr. Mogg a very active partisan of Mr. Kinglake ?—He was a very warm supporter, no doubt.

14,043. Apart from bribers and apart from lawyers, whom do you look upon as the heads of the Liberal party ?—Mr. Sealy, Mr. James Wood Sully, Mr. Mogg, Mr. Henry Nicholls, and persons of that kind.

14,044. (Mr. Anstey.) But the elections are not in their hands ?—There is no doubt that the lawyers have a very material interest. I think I have referred to nearly the close of the poll. I have exhausted Bussell, Dymond, and Garratt. These are the only instances of money, or the promise of money, that I knew on that occasion.

14,045. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who told Mr. Lomas what to do with the remainder ? Was that you ?—No. Then just at the close of the poll I think there was a majority, and consequently no more was spent, and upon that occasion I saw Mr. Fennelly, who congratulated us upon the success and all that sort of thing, and at four o'clock the parties went to the hustings for the purpose of hearing the mayor declare the state of the poll.

14,046. Was he one of those who came and congratulated or was congratulated ?—Directly the poll was over at four o'clock, before we went to the hustings, a large number of persons went up to his private room, and congratulated Mr. Vanderbyl.

14,047. Were you one of the persons ?—Yes.

14,048. What did he say ?—Thanked us for our congratulations.

14,049. Was anything said or whispered about money ?—Nothing.

FOURTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

7 Sept. 1869.

14,050. Did he then come downstairs?—Yes, and went to his carriage.

14,051. You met Mr. Eustace Barham on the stairs?—He was at the hustings.

14,052. He did not get into the carriage?—No, not on going up.

14,053. Where was Mr. Reed at the time that the last act of bribery was committed at the "Globe"?—In the large room the return was taken in.

14,054. You say there was nothing done; Mr. Reed was in the large room?—Yes.

14,055. Had you seen him during the day there, when Mr. Lovibond was taking the names and addresses, and so on, furnished him by people in the room?—Mr. Reed was in the room at the time.

14,056. Did you see him on a subsequent occasion in an upper room, at or soon after the close of the poll, looking out?—No, I did not.

14,057. Did you see him at all at or after the close of the poll?—Yes, I did.

14,058. Did Mr. Reed accompany him to the hustings?—Whether he was in the carriage or at the side I won't be sure, and he came back from the hustings, and on getting out of the carriage he was joined, and he certainly was not in an upper room at the "Globe" at the time the party returned from the hustings.

14,059. On returning to the "Globe" did he go into the house?—Yes.

14,060. He?—Yes, both of us.

14,061. Did Mr. Barham go into the house?—That I cannot answer.

14,062. Therefore it is perfectly possible, is it not, that Mr. Reed, on going into the house, went up and looked out of the window?—Oh, it is possible certainly.

14,063. All that Mr. Barham says is, that on returning from the hustings he looked up at the window, there he saw Mr. Reed looking on?—Yes, it is possible; but I say at the time when we got out of the carriage after returning from the hustings I know I joined my partner, and we went into the "Globe."

14,064. (Mr. Anstey.) Was anything said between you and your partner in the course of either of those two rides, or in the course of that afternoon at all, on the subject of the risk that had been run, the penalties that had been incurred, or the money that had been spent?—No; my partner was as well acquainted with what had been done as myself, but neither of us discussed it.

14,065. Was it mentioned?—No, it was not.

14,066. It was too much a matter of course?—Well, I suppose so.

14,067. Were you alarmed yourself?—Well, perhaps I was.

14,068. Was Mr. Reed alarmed?—He has been alarmed.

14,069. Did he express that day to you his alarm?—No, certainly not.

14,070. Nor you to him?—Nor me to him.

14,071. It was a subject you avoided?—It was not mentioned, certainly, on one side or the other. No doubt it has been one of the most painful things which can happen to a human being. The mental torture which this has brought upon one is such as not only to unfit one for business, but to sink into one's system, and cause consequences which perhaps one can hardly tell. From the time of the election it has been to me, and I know it has been to my partner, a source of great grief and mental anxiety indescribable.

14,072. Have you found that the impression which you have described in such proper terms has been produced upon your associates, Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake?—Well, I cannot say so far as they are concerned; but I know that it has to me, and I have no doubt to my partner, caused an indescribable anxiety and pain and mental torture.

14,073. Have you seen either Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Kinglake since that triumphal ride to and from the hustings back to the "Globe"?—Certainly.

14,074. Where did you see them?—If you will allow me, there is one more feature on the day of the poll which I should like to describe, and then I will take up your question. Late in the day of the poll, I cannot fix the time, Messrs. Roberts, who are coachbuilders at Eastover, were not polled. They had that crotchet as Mr. Barham described with reference to the Maine law, or rather the permissive bill; and then Mr. Vanderbyl left, accompanied by, I think, Mr. Nicholls, to go down and see Messrs. Roberts, with a view to induce them to poll, but they would not. Well, then, before coming from the day of the poll, it is right I should state that, about the 11th of November, before the polling day, there was a Mr. Chant, the son of Mr. Chant the corn merchant here, who was in London undergoing a surgical operation. He was a voter for the borough and poor, and we did, I think, upon the 11th November send to Mr. H. A. Reed, our agent, a sum of money for the purpose of paying Mr. Chant's expenses to come down to vote. Mr. Reed wrote this letter:—

"Dear sir,

"Mr. Chant left London for Bridgwater by the "10 o'clock train this morning upon election business.

"I remain obediently yours,

"Herbert A. Reed."

There is no doubt that if he had not returned that cheque for 2*l.* 10*s.* it would have been handed over, and that payment would have been made. It never has been paid, and certainly, as far as I am aware, no promise has been made in respect to his coming down to vote.

14,075. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you not to give him the cheque?—He had left.

14,076. (Mr. Anstey.) Now answer my question, please. What is the first occasion of your meeting either Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl after you alighted on your return from the hustings at the door of the "Globe Hotel"?—I did not see Mr. Vanderbyl next day, which would be the Friday.

14,077. (Mr. Price.) No, the Wednesday?—Yes, the Wednesday, for the reason that the excitement of the election, and one thing and another laid me up, and I was ill in bed the whole day. That brings to my knowledge another circumstance which I should explain. Whilst I was in bed my partner, Mr. Reed, came down the day after the election, and said that a Mrs. Williams had called upon him, being the wife of a voter who had come from Liverpool to vote for Kinglake and Vanderbyl, a telegram having previously been sent by my partner, in the name of Mr. Hammill I believe, to this Mr. Williams, asking him if he would come to vote. The telegram was sent, and he came down to vote; and the day after, as I understand from the statement made by my partner to me, the wife came and said that they were poor, and wanted to go back to Liverpool, and asked that his expenses should be paid. Mr. Reed came to me and asked what I thought it was best to do. I was certainly very unwell in bed the whole day, and I believe I suggested, "Well, you "had better ascertain what the expenses are and pay "them." He saw I was not perhaps in a state to be troubled much about it then. He told me afterwards that he went to Mr. Henry Lovibond and told him the facts, and that he suggested there should be a 5*l.* note sent to pay those expenses; and there is no doubt upon the fact that my partner acted upon that, and did pay to Mrs. Williams, as I believe, the sum of 5*l.* to pay the expenses of coming down to vote.

14,078. (Mr. Price.) Whose advice did your partner take?—He saw me first, I believe, and then Mr. Lovibond.

14,079. Has your partner ever been paid that 5*l.*?—No; it is a matter of account at the present time in our books.

14,080. (Mr. Anstey.) Against whom?—Debited to Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

14,081. Now, will you answer my question, if you please, Mr. Cook, for I do not want you to break it up by introducing these incidents of intermediate dates?—I cannot fix the dates. Mr. Vanderbyl returned to Pightley House.

14,082. That is not an answer to my question. If it is necessary to explain those particulars, you can do so. What was the time, as nearly as you can recollect, of your meeting either of these candidates after the close of the poll?—A few days after the election I certainly saw Mr. Vanderbyl.

14,083. Where?—At Bridgwater. He was then stayingat Pightley.

14,084. He had come into town?—Yes.

14,085. Where did you see him?—At the office.

14,086. Did you converse with him?—There was a conversation——

14,087. Answer "Yes," or you will make me ask with whom the conversation was. Did you communicate to him any of your doubts or fears of what had taken place or what was likely to take place?—No, I wilfully abstained from it.

14,088. You said nothing about the danger of the petition?—No.

14,089. You had heard in the meantime that the Tories were preparing one?—There was a rumour of it.

14,090. Was anything said about the rumour by him?—Certainly; the second or third time I saw him he mentioned about the rumour.

14,091. How long would that be, at the furthest, after the election?—Perhaps ten days or a fortnight.

14,092. Did he express himself to you at that time in that conversation as fully aware of the fact that bribery had been practised in his behalf?—Certainly not. He did not say so.

14,093. What did he say about it? Did he say nothing about Mr. Fenelly's coming down with 1,500*l.*?—Nothing whatever.

14,094. Did he pretend to know nothing about it?—He said nothing about it either directly or indirectly.

14,095. You were concerting measures, were you not, to resist the threatened petition?—Yes.

14,096. Yet you practised this mutual concealment upon one another?—We did.

14,097. You were concerting your measures, yet you concealed all your mutual knowledge, and the knowledge that each had of its being mutual, from one another?—It was not referred to in the course of our interview.

14,098. Was it assumed as a fact?—Of course I perfectly well knew it.

14,099. Half your statement is true. You must have known it. Did you take it for granted on both sides that there had been these corrupt practices, in the conversation?—On both sides?

14,100. Yes?—You include the Conservatives?

14,101. Did you, on your side, and did Mr. Vanderbyl, on his side, take for granted that there was foundation for the petition which it was your purpose then to resist?—If his silence meant it, it must have been so.

14,102. Listen to me. You were not talking unprofitably together, I suppose. You were talking about the best mode of resisting the petition?

14,103. (Mr. Price.) Were you?—No.

14,104. (Mr. Anstey.) I asked you whether you were concerting your measures, and you said "Yes"?—Not with him.

14,105. With whom were you concerting your measures?—With Mr. Henry Lovibond.

14,106. Then I will rather deal with the master than with the servant. If you answer in this way, without giving more information than you seem inclined to do, I must come at once to the point. When was the first time that you had any conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Kinglake; first of all with Mr. Vanderbyl, in which he acknowledges his familiarity with these practices, and that he was aware of the existence of these practices?—On the 4th of December I saw Mr. Vanderbyl in London, the 4th of December following the election, with Mr. Henry Lovibond. We had previously met Mr. John Trevor at the "Tavistock Hotel," Covent Garden, and there overtures were made that one seat should be vacated.

14,107. By whom?—Mr. Lovibond had previously. At the meeting of solicitors, it was agreed that it was desirable that an arrangement should be made in some way, and on the 26th Mr. Lovibond went to London at the request of the meeting of solicitors which was held, which thought that it was desirable that an arrangement should be made just before the 26th, and from London he addressed to our firm this letter:—

"Dear sirs, London, 26 Nov. 1868.

"Petition not filed although drawn. Negotiation opened which I have reason to believe will be attended with some success.

"Yours truly,

"Messrs. Reed and Cook. H. Lovibond."

Then on the 4th December I had received a communication from my partner that morning that Mr. Lovibond was there, which asked me to meet him, and on that 4th December I went to the "Tavistock Hotel," and there met Mr. Lovibond and Mr. John Trevor.

14,108. Who else?—There were two interviews. I do not remember any other person present at that one. Mr. Lovibond had seen Mr. Trevor before. When I arrived a conversation was entered into, and Mr. Lovibond said "We must arrange this thing somehow or other, and we will give you a seat." And the question was raised as to whether the principals would consent to it; and Mr. Trevor suggested, or Mr. Lovibond, that we should meet later in the day, and in the meantime he should see Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

14,109. (Mr. Anstey.) Both of whom were then in London?—If that was the date, both were then in London, no doubt. Whether Mr. Lovibond saw Mr. Kinglake before that, and I saw Mr. Vanderbyl, I am not sure; at all events I did not see Mr. Kinglake with Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Lovibond and I did see Mr. Vanderbyl at his chambers in Winchester Buildings; Mr. Fennelly was present on that occasion. We stated that it was desirable that we should come to an understanding for the sake of the peace of the borough with regard to the threatened petition; and and an overture was made of one seat; and we wanted to know whether, in the event of that being done, he would be ready to agree to that proposal, that one seat should be given up. He first of all stoutly refused, and said, "No, I will do nothing of the kind. I know "of nothing," said Mr. Vanderbyl, "by which I "should be induced to enter into an arrangement of "that kind;" that is all. Afterwards he retired, and Mr. Fennelly was still there, and the matter was discussed with him, and we said, "Now you had better "induce Mr. Vanderbyl to consent to an arrangement "this time, for the sake of all parties;" and then afterwards, when Mr. Vanderbyl came back, he had gone to one of the adjoining rooms, he said, "Well, I "think the better plan, perhaps, for the sake of all "parties, would be to consent to some such course as "this," as had been proposed. That was agreed on, and then at that meeting a positive undertaking was drawn up to be signed by Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, that one seat should be given up, and that it should be left to some other independent member of parliament to be agreed upon as to which seat should be given up, and the terms on which it should be given up.

14,110. Who was to appoint or select the independent member?—Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

14,111. Supposing they did not agree, as probably they would not?—The memorandum was destroyed, and I do not know how it ran. At all events that was the effect of it; that it was to be left to an independent member. After that was over and signed by Mr. Vanderbyl, we again kept the appointment at the "Tavistock Hotel," where we met Mr. Trevor, and Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Kinglake. They were there on that occasion clearly, so that there were four parties; I do not remember anyone else. Mr. Westropp said he was unwilling, and could not accept the proposition which had been made, unless he submitted it to the Conservative Working Men's Association here in the first place, because he had pledged his word to them that he would not do so without first of all communicating the fact to them. Then there was a further conversation, to the effect that he said, "What do we know of Mr. Vanderbyl?" He said he had no confidence if Mr. Vanderbyl had to retire it would be carried out. Then, after some further discussion, Mr. Kinglake himself said that he was prepared to place a letter in the hands of Mr. Gore Langton, or any other person the Conservatives thought proper, as undertaking, if the agreement was made, that it should be carried out. There was other conversation having reference to the election; I cannot quite give you the detail.

14,112. (Mr. Anstey.) This is not an answer to my question, though it is very important information?—That is the first time I saw Mr. Vanderbyl, I mean really to talk to him about a compromise or anything of that kind.

14,113. I ask you about corrupt practices having been dealt in at the election. When was the first occasion on which the existence of the fact of corrupt practices having taken place at the election was mentioned in a conversation at which you and Mr. Vanderbyl were present?—I cannot fix the date for it.

14,114. Was it mentioned that day?—No; except it was put in the way that it was desirable for the sake of the borough, and all parties, that an arrangement of that kind should be made.

14,115. Was the subject delicately and studiously avoided and taken for granted rather than mentioned?—It certainly was avoided, and taken perhaps for granted.

14,116. (Mr. Price.) I understood you to say that Mr. Vanderbyl resisted the proposition on the ground that he knew of nothing which should induce him in any way to compromise the matter?—Certainly; that was his first answer.

14,117. (Mr. Anstey.) I cannot understand your reluctance to use plain English language. You understood, I suppose, that you were talking about the petition founded upon the corrupt practices at the election?—Clearly.

14,118. And the hopelessness of defending it, and the advisability of a compromise?—The advisability of a compromise.

(Mr. Price.) You did not say hopelessness in the presence of the adversary.

14,119. (Mr. Anstey.) No, your adversary was not present on the first occasion?—Mr. Vanderbyl was present the first time.

14,120. Not the first time, was he?—Not at the "Tavistock Hotel."

14,121. The first time that day he was not present?—No.

14,122. It was then I asked you was anything said, or was it taken for granted, admitted tacitly or expressly by Mr. Vanderbyl, or denied by him, that there had been any corrupt practices at the election?—By Mr. Vanderbyl it was denied.

14,123. That being so, what was the inducement which brought him round afterwards to consent to a compromise?—When he came in Mr. Fennelly was there, and I think he said, "Mr. Vanderbyl, I think "under all the circumstances you had better consent "to a course of this kind."

14,124. Did he repeat his denial of the existence to his knowledge of corrupt practices?—He certainly said he was unwilling to do it, but at the same time for all parties he thought it was best, and he would.

14,125. Did he continue to protest tacitly or expressly that he knew nothing about it?—He continued to, and then I say we left Mr. Vanderbyl's and went to the "Tavistock Hotel," where we met Mr. Trevor, Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Kinglake.

14,126. Now, with regard to Mr. Kinglake on that day, did he in like manner, and I must say with equal success with Mr. Vanderbyl, profess his ignorance of all these practices?—He protested his ignorance.

14,127. In the same way?—In the same way.

14,128. Did anybody besides Mr. Vanderbyl assert Mr. Vanderbyl's ignorance, or did anybody besides Mr. Kinglake assert Mr. Kinglake's ignorance of the corrupt practices of that election?—Not in my presence and hearing; certainly not.

14,129. Was there any person there who would truthfully confirm their statements and their connivance in that regard?—Not on our side, certainly.

14,130. Did you contradict them or think it more civil not to?—We did not contradict them.

(Mr. Price.) You heard, no doubt, Mr. Barham say yesterday that Mr. Kinglake returned the next day, and the question put by Mr. Anstey is, "Did you have any "conversation about the way in which the election "had been worked"? I remember at once telling him there could be no doubt money had been spent at the election, and that Messrs. Reed and Cook for certain were implicated in it. Then it goes on to say he had in his mind the idea as he had in reference to a point of law. We did not ask Mr. Barham when that was; when did you first convey that, Mr. Barham?

(Mr. Barham.) On the eve of the hearing of the election petition.

(The witness.) That was on the 4th December, and it was arranged at last that the offer should be communicated to the Conservative party at Bridgwater to see whether it would be accepted. It was communicated to them, I believe, and it was refused, and then negotiations went on from that time right up to the hearing of the petition, which was the 23rd February; they were renewed time after time. The negotiations between the Liberals and Conservatives went on as from that time right up to the time of the election petition in the hope that some arrangement would be made.

14,131. (Mr. Anstey.) There is still another thing. At one stage of this correspondence you are stated as having offered or suggested the abandonment of one of these seats in order to save the party from exposure; what meeting was that?—I cannot fix the date of it, but I know it was talked about. I know this, it was talked of before the evening of the trial and then upon the day.

14,132. You have heard Mr. Barham state the 4th January?—The 12th, I think he said.

14,133. Have you any doubt it was that time?—I have no doubt, from the fact that he speaks of it.

14,134. Then this proposal having failed in London, you having returned, all of you, you proposed to whom, or at what meeting did you make this proposal to abandon both seats?—I do not remember making it at any meeting except the observation to Mr. Barham, but it was made no doubt at a meeting.

14,135. Was that with the knowledge of Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Kinglake?—It was not made with the knowledge of either.

14,136. Was it afterwards made known to them that you had proposed it?—Not to Mr. Kinglake.

14,137. To Mr. Vanderbyl it was?—Yes, no doubt.

14,138. What did Mr. Vanderbyl say to that?—"Well, do whatever you think is right and proper," or something of that sort.

14,139. Have you any doubt that he, having been prepared to assent to the abandonment of both seats, was fully aware that his seat was not defensible?—I think, no doubt, he must have seen it was not.

14,140. Was that proposal made to Mr. Trevor, or anybody on the Conservative side?—I did not myself make it, but I believe it was made.

14,141. By whom?—Either Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Reed; I cannot say which.

14,142. And refused, we have heard, on the ground of its being too late?—It was refused.

14,143 On that ground, that it was now too late?—I have no doubt that was it. I do not remember the exact reason; it was refused, and probably that was it.

14,144, I suppose they did not imagine that if the agreement were made Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl would not apply for the Chiltern Hundreds, and so vacate the seat?—No, they fully expected it.

14,145. Therefore it would have been that it was too late?—Too late. I remember this, that the first proposal was that one of them should retire in 12 months, then it came down to six months, and then three months. As I say, the negotiations went on from this 26th November, which is fixed by Mr. Lovibond's letter, up to the very time of the hearing of the petition.

14,146. Now from that time there was a series of interviews at which Mr. Vanderbyl, and one of which Mr. Kinglake was present, down to to the close of the election trial. Can you recall any conversation you had either with Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Kinglake, in which anything was said by him on the subject showing his ignorance or knowledge of these practices?—I cannot recall anything.

14,147. Take the very last day, or rather the day before the last, does your knowledge coincide with that of Mr. Barham as to the reluctance of Mr. Henry James to go on with so hopeless a case?—I was not aware of his reluctance at the time, but I have heard of it since.

14,148. If you did not know generally his reluctance at the time, did you know the day before, or the very day when he threw up his brief, or rather when he gave up the seat, that he was looking out for an opportunity to do so?—Certainly I did.

14,149. How long was it, hours or days, before the close of the proceedings that that fact became known to you?—To our counsel it was known almost within an hour of their arriving in Bridgwater.

14,150. Who were they?—Mr. Serjeant Sargood, with Mr. Edlin for junior. They attended to it as soon as they could. We explained everything, especially to Mr. Edlin, as regards the position in which we were, speaking of myself and my partner. We explained the unfortunate position, and that something or other should be done in order to prevent the dreadful position in which we were placed by this thing proceeding. And Mr. Serjeant Sargood having the same communicated in effect to him day after day as it went on, at least my determination was that we would not allow it to go on any longer unless some understanding was arrived at, because it was placing us in a very awkward and perilous position, and we determined that something or other should be done.

14,151. For what?—To bring about not allowing the trial to go on as it was.

14,152. A compromise?—Yes, or rather that they should give up.

14,153. (Mr. Price.) Should knock under?—Yes, throw up the sponge.

14,154. (Mr. Anstey.) Was anything said to Mr. Serjeant Parry to induce him to soften the statement?—No, not to my knowledge; it was left to counsel, and Mr. Serjeant Sargood made a reply, "I see how things "stand, you must leave Mr. Vanderbyl to me, and I "shall take such course as I think proper."

14,155. All that took place with regard to nullifying the zeal of counsel was done between the respective counsel of the two sides?—Clearly so.

14,156. When were you informed, in Mr. Barham's phrase, that Mr. Kinglake's counsel was going to throw up the sponge?—At the time they were adjourned for lunch on the last day of hearing.

14,157. That was a few minutes before they did?—Yes, they came back, and then statements were made by the respective counsel.

14,158. That adjournment which is mentioned in the minutes of the trial was not for consultation, but the usual retirement of the court for luncheon?—Yes.

14,159. Then in point of fact the arrangement must have been come to before that?—Yes.

14,160. By whose advice or at whose instance was it that under such circumstances you allowed Mr. Vanderbyl, for he was your nominal client, to go into the box and make the statement on oath which has been so frequently read to you, and which I shall not pain myself by reading again?—It was by no instructions given by us, because counsel were in possession of the facts, and took what course they thought proper.

14,161. Do you mean that counsel advised calling Mr. Vanderbyl to make that statement?—They acted on their own discretion with the knowledge they had got.

14,162. From whom?—My partner and myself.

14,163. Did you duly inform counsel in your behalf, Mr. Vanderbyl at all events, for whom you were immediately concerned, had received this fund of 1,500*l.* and had directed it to be employed in bribery in the way that came out?—We did not mention Mr. Vanderbyl's name but told him of the fact that it had been raised by Mr. Fennelly his partner.

14,164. But for his purposes?—Clearly so.

14,165. I do not want to press you any more than I did Mr. Barham, but would you feel it a painful thing to answer the question and tell me what impression Mr. Vanderbyl's statement on oath and Mr. Kinglake's made on you that day?—It was painful, there is no doubt of it.

14,166. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did it astonish you; I mean were you surprised to hear the statement?—We were scarcely in that state of mind from the excitement and knowledge of the position of matters to state what our feelings were at that particular time. Now will you permit me to say that we were exceedingly desirous to come to an understanding, and that Mr. Reed and myself and Mr. Lovibond were in London on the Saturday as the hearing of the petition began, I believe, on the Tuesday, and we met at the office of our parliamentary agents, Messrs. Wyatt and Hoskins, in Parliament Street. Mr. James Trevor was in London, at the "Tavistock." After the interview with Mr. Wyatt as our agent we went out and found Mr. Lovibond in another room, and said, "This thing must be settled under any circumstances." He was in the act of tying up his brief, and he said, "I think so too." And it was agreed to go to the "Tavistock" where Mr. Trevor was and state our wish to him to come to an understanding, but Mr. Lovibond had preceded us about a minute or two, and when we got there we found that instead of proposing an abandonment on both sides Mr. Lovibond had simply proposed that one should be given up.

14,167. (Mr. Coleridge.) And that had failed before?—And that had failed before; and then we also understood right through that why Mr. Lovibond had intimated to the Conservatives his desire to bring about a compromise with reference to that petition was on account of his friends and not of himself personally, because he was in no way implicated in that election. We had heard of that. Mr. Brice himself made the communication that it was so stated. So desirous were we that we actually threatened, so far as Mr. Lovibond was concerned, to file a petition signed by two ratepayers, under the sixth section of the Act of Parliament which the learned Commissioner, Mr. Coleridge, referred to the other day, to state our belief that corrupt practices extensively prevailed, in order that it might be put on its proper footing, not knowing what was going on with the other side and Mr. Lovibond.

14,168. Then you and Mr. Lovibond did not entirely trust one another?—We did not, and there was a strong impression on the other side that we were the persons implicated; it was conveyed to us, and just about that time there was unfortunately a professional matter which happened between ourselves and Mr. Lovibond which increased the breach between us.

14,169. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Barham acted as a sort of neutral man between the two?—He did, so far as the interviews are concerned.

14,170. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who paid you for your services?—We had no payment.

14,171. Had you a retainer?—Yes.

14,172. Are you the Mr. Cook who stood on the Castle Wall after the election was over and condemned bribery?—I do not remember using that expression.

14,173. (Mr. Anstey.) Dut you signed the petition of 80?—I did, and have all the papers with reference to it.

14,174. And so did your partner?—Yes.

14,175. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there anything you imagine which your partner, Mr. Reed, knows at the last election which you do not know or have not told us?—There is, about the payments to Bussell and Garratt.

14,176. He would not know those?—Yes, he knows them, but I do not know them.

14,177. But is there anything which he knows which you have not told us?

14,178. (Mr. Anstey.) Which has occurred within his knowledge and not within yours?—Not that I am aware of.

14,179. (Mr. Price.) Can you explain that which has either been kept back, or is inexplicable, how, according to the fact which you stated, in the early part of the day you were in the majority?—About three-quarters of an hour.

14,180. And that then the tide turned and flowed very rapidly in the opposite direction, and that Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray became in a very large majority; that then the majority was got down before the time, as I understand it, your coffers were open for distribution of money, you got very nearly neck and neck?—We were so.

14,181. I never understood how that was brought about, because I understood you to say that you all agreed the election was over, it was no use going on?—Yes.

14,182. And yet you got up very nearly to the same mark with Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, and then you let out the money?—It is an extraordinary circumstance, but I cannot, I am unable to explain it.

14,183. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is not this in some sense an explanation that Bussell and the sub-agents were holding out promises of money at that time, although they did not actually promise it from their superiors?—It must be so.

14,184. (Mr. Anstey.) Or there might be a general expectation of money on the part of the bribees that they were going to be bribed?—Yes, I know reports were brought us that morning.

14,185. They were about like beasts at the cattle market, Mr. Barham says?—Yes.

14,186. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had seen Bussell two days before, and told him there would be money?—No I did not, that was my partner.

14,187. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear anything to make you believe that the Conservative candidates were equally despairing with your candidates just before the election?—No, I had not heard it.

14,188. If you had heard that they were prepared to quit the town on the nomination night, probably there would have less bribery on your side, or none at all?—If they had left of course there would not have been.

14,189. Therefore you could not have known or heard of it at that time?—No, I had no knowledge.

14,190. Nor did to the fatal moment, half-past 2, or whenever it was, on the following day?—No, no knowledge of it.

14,191. But since?—I have heard of it in this court for the first time.

14,192. (Mr. Price.) Have you any reason to believe that there were men, of whom you say Dymond at all events was one, who paid money out of their own pockets that day before you opened the candidates' purse?—I have no reason whatever to believe that there was any man.

14,193. (Mr. Anstey.) But you know, as it happened at Sir John Shelley's election, that persons like Bussell, although there had been understood to be a solemn pledge given by Mr. Lovibond that there should be no bribing, held out hopes (might it not have happened here) that something was said to keep the bribable persons quiet; "Wait till the polling day and you will see, all will be right?"—There may have been.

14,194. Have you any doubt upon every election, and amongst others the election of 1868?—I have no doubt it was upon something of that sort, because why I say no doubt it was is, that supposing the bribe agent had gone and said there was to be no money this time, it probably would have had a different effect.

14,195. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Vanderbyl, you say, was sitting at the "Globe" the greater part of the day?—Yes.

14,196. Was he not in communication with Mr. Fennelly from time to time?—I cannot tell you.

14,197. Did he sit like a hermit in a cell, with no one to speak to him?—I do not know. It was only once or twice that day when we went for the purpose of getting him to go to Mr. Roberts.

14,198. Do you mean to say you let him sit there without giving him any information as to how the election was going on; no one to comfort him or to keep up his spirits or say anything to him?—I did not, except on two occasions as I say, which were just within one hour.

14,199. Who did?—I cannot say.

14,200. Your partner?—I cannot tell you.

14,201. (Mr. Anstey.) Why was that?—Mr. Lovibond came in.

14,202. (Mr. Coleridge.) But he was acting more particularly for Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

14,203. (Mr. Price.) Did he sit by himself in a room all day?—I think Mrs. Vanderbyl was there, and the children.

14,204. (Mr. Anstey.) They would not be much assistance to him in election matters. The question is, who came to inform him how the poll went on, and to keep up his spirits and give him information?—I did not.

14,205. But who did?—I cannot tell you. Of course Mr. Fennelly knew it from time to time.

14,206. Did not Mr. Fennelly?—Probably.

14,207. Have you any doubt he did?—Well, of course.

14,208. I will refresh your memory. Some time in the coure of the day you had communications as from Mr. Vanderbyl; persons came and said Mr. Vanderbyl said this, and Mr. Vanderbyl thinks that, or wants to know this or that?—No, I had no such message as that.

14,209. Was there an understanding, then, between you, or amongst you, that this most unusual thing for the day of poll should be practised on both sides, that is to say, both candidates, Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake, should stay within from the beginning of the day down to the going down of the sun; was there an understanding?—I know of no understanding at all.

14,210. You never saw it before at any other election?—No.

14,211. You have always seen the candidates going about, and looking their fellow men in the face on the poll day?—Yes. Mr. Kinglake had left by the express.

14,212. But not until he thought the day had left him?—No.

14,213. During that time had he been in playing this game of concealment at his hotel?—I had not seen Mr. Kinglake that morning.

14,214. Therefore, as far as you know, he too was invisible?—As far as I know.

14,215. Then surely there must have been some reason for the invisibility of both candidates, especially when we know the fact that bribery was practised on their behalf at the election?—I saw Mr. Fennelly from time to time.

14,216. (Mr. Price.) Did you see him go into the room?—No, I did not.

14,217. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Fennelly ever come to you and say anything about Mr. Vanderbyl's wishes or thoughts and the like?—No, he did not.

14,218. Do you mean to say that you received no communication, directly or indirectly, from Mr. Vanderbyl on that important day?—No, I did not. I regarded, of course, Mr. Fennelly as Mr. Vanderbyl's partner, and acting for him, and probably would make any communication to him.

14,219. Had you been told by Mr. Fennelly before that "I shall communicate with you"?—No.

14,220. Supposing that I had gone down there, and you had not known anything of me, would you have taken my instructions equivalent to Mr. Fennelly's?—No.

14,221. Then why take Mr. Fennelly's?—Because he had made the provision, and I knew him in the sense of a partner.

14,222. Did you know him from the time of his arrival to his departure; know him and recognize him, and did he recognize himself as being the representative of his partner?—Yes.

14,223. Then who stood in the same capacity towards the invisible Mr. Kinglake that Mr. Fennelly stood towards the invisible Mr. Vanderbyl?—I cannot tell you.

14,224. I suppose Mr. Henry Lovibond, or Mr. Mogg, or Dr. Kinglake?—Well, Dr. Kinglake was there.

14,225. Was Dr. Kinglake the living, moving, and walking representative of his brother on that occasion?—He must have been so.

14,226. Therefore, have you any doubt that the disappearance of both candidates during the time they were in the town until the poll was over was a thing arranged and agreed upon between them?—It might have been.

14,227. (Mr. Price.) Is there any other way of accounting for it?—No.

14,228. You see it is a most unusual thing, because the ordinary course a candidate goes about himself, encouraging his supporters, and discussing from time to time with his committee his chance of success?—Yes.

14,229. Have you any other reason why Mr. Vanderbyl should be in this state of concealment, except it had been pre-arranged that he should?—No; except it was this, that until one hour and a half towards the close of the poll everything had a downward tendency; it looked very like his losing his election.

14,230. That may be; but on other occasions was it so? did Sir John Shelley stay shut up all day?—No, the very opposite.

14,231. He lost his election?—Yes.

14,232. That being so, and no other reason, have you the slightest doubt in the world that was the result of a pre-arrangement, that he should keep himself close, and know nothing?—It looks very much like it.

14,233. If that were so, that that was the result of a pre-arrangment that he should know nothing. Must not Mr. Vanderbyl, a man of intelligence, know what that meant, that he should act so different on that occasion from what he had done before; have you any doubt about it?—No, I should think it must be so.

14,234. (Mr. Anstey.) I will take you a little further. Have you any doubt whatever in your own mind that Mr. Vanderbyl remained perdu there for the purpose of being able more conveniently to give unlawful instructions to his unlawful agent, Mr. Fennelly, for unlawful purposes?—I did not believe at the time, certainly, that Mr. Fennelly had communicated to Mr. Vanderbyl the provision which he had made.

14,235. Will you answer my question? Have you any doubt that was the object of his remaining hidden there, and Mr. Fennelly moving about and conversing with you from time to time and going back again? Did Mr. Vanderbyl lie there for the purpose of giving, without being perceived, instructions to his unlawful agent, for the purpose of enabling him more effectually to accomplish the unlawful purposes for which he had come?—I should be most happy to answer, but not seeing any communication between them, it is a matter of opinion after all.

14,236. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Fennelly could only be there, I suppose, for the purpose of communicating with Mr. Vanderbyl?—No doubt he was there.

14,237. He could only be there for the purpose of communicating with his partner?—He was there not only on that day being in communication with him, but he had been there days before, and was still with him.

14,238. (Mr. Anstey.) I will illustrate my meaning. Suppose at two o'clock in the afternoon it was discovered that 1,500*l.* would not be enough, and that 15,000*l.* would be required, would not it be very convenient for Mr. Fennelly to have Mr. Vanderbyl under lock and key to whom to put the question, "Shall I telegraph up to London, or shall I apply "to Messrs. Sealy and Prior to obtain the money"?—It would be exceedingly convenient.

14,239. Have you any doubt that some such thing as that, the supplying of a deficiency in funds or the like, was the object which kept Mr. Fennelly moving about, and Mr. Vanderbyl hidden in the upper story?—He was hidden; but when I say hidden, no doubt he confined himself to the room with his wife and family. The precise object is a matter of opinion.

14,240. (Mr. Price.) That is the only occasion on which he exhibited such domesticity?—Well, he showed a great deal on that occasion.

14,241. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is called the card system here as regards voting, do you know?—I never heard there was any particular meaning attached to it. What we have done on the last two or three elections is to issue, a day or two before, a card to each person we believe will support the Liberal candidates, giving the particular booth in which he would vote, either, as under the old system, the north, south, or east booth; and then, on the last occasion, Polden Street, Church Street, or Salmon Parade, or High Street, and so on. The cards are issued and addressed to the electors in that way. I know nothing of the card system in any other sense.

14,242. Do not you know the man who was down in 1866, who had been in Yarmouth?—I have not the slightest knowledge of him.

14,243. Satterthwaite?—I never heard of the name before.

14,244. Was there a stranger down in 1866, at Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—Not to my knowledge, except Mr. Brogden. I have heard of Mr. Brogden's being down here at Vanderbyl's election.

14,245. Was there a stranger down at Mr. Bagehot's election?—No.

14,246. (Mr. Price.) He may have been called by any other name?—Yes; for instance, Lomas was called Williams.

14,247. Mr. Fennelly would go into this room where Mrs. Vanderbyl and the family were?—No doubt; they had no separate room to my knowledge; but I generally saw him in the hall, or the front, or something of that sort.

14,248. (Mr. Anstey.) Do not you know that they were on visiting terms?—Yes.

14,249. Do not you know that he passed his last night in England, before his flight to Rome, at Mr. Vanderbyl's house?—I have heard so.

14,250. Have you any doubt that he visited Mrs. Vanderbyl and the young Vanderbyls and Mr. Vanderbyl himself during this election?—No, I have no doubt he did.

14,251. (Mr. Coleridge.) Show me where you have credited that 5*l.* you speak of to Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, because on the election day you shut your office, and there is no account on that day or on the nomination day?—The payment was made by Mr. Reed on that occasion, but not debited in the books until sometime afterwards; the ledger gives the key to it. It was not debited by Mr. Reed for some time after, therefore it could not appear on that day; but when the ledger comes it will be a key to this book, the page where it appears.

14,252. (Mr. Anstey.) I will put the same question to you as I put to Mr. Barham: Why was there no proposal on the part of your conference or consultation, whatever you call it, by your committee of lawyers before the election with the lawyers on the other side, as to a treaty by which both sides should agree to renounce and abjure the corrupt practices at the coming election?—I never heard of the suggestion that it should be made.

14,253. Why was not such a proposal made ?—It was this, I suppose, that it would not have been adhered to if made or accepted.

14,254. Why not ?—The difficulty is to bind the party either on the one side or the other to such an arrangement as that.

14,255. Why ?—They would break through it, probably.

14,256. The election is entirely under the hands of the lawyers ?—Perhaps, as far as the principal portion are concerned; but they cannot control parties as to what they should do, bribery agents, if you may call them so, or other persons on that occasion may be doing all sorts of things. The difficulty would be to control so large a number.

14,257. Could not you bind your own people ?—Not without some difficulty.

14,258. Could the other side have bound theirs ?—I do not believe they could.

14,259. Who on your side would not have been bound, or who on their side would not have been bound ?—I can hardly tell you.

14,260. Tell me first on your own side?—Well, I should think hardly, for instance, the persons who had been in the habit of spending money would not have thought it a prudent course to take.

14,261. Those are the persons we are talking of, bribery agents ?—Yes.

14,262. Which of them would not be bound by your engagement?—I do not know; perhaps all would have been of the same opinion. I do not know one in particular more than another.

14,263. Of those we have heard named ?—Yes.

14,264. Then the other side ?—The persons who stand in the same position, the same class.

14,265. I suppose all those persons have names and stations in life ?—Yes.

14,266. Now, in your station in life, could there have been any on your side of politics who would not have been bound by such an engagement ?—I should think not.

14,267. I really do not understand you ?—That is, in the same station of life, you are asking; take two classes on both sides.

14,268. You do not take the trouble to understand my question. Can you give me the names of any person in your station of life, on either side of the question who would have refused to be bound by this arrangement of the lawyers ?—I cannot give you any names on either side in my station of life.

14,269. Therefore the matter was entirely in the hands of the lawyers as far as people of influence were concerned ?—Yes, in that sense.

14,270. And therefore the effect of making such an arrangement amongst yourselves would have been to have left the lower agents powerless ?—To a great extent.

14,271. Altogether, would not it ? For instance, if you are so delicate about names, I will mention the names to you on your side of the question; would Mr. Symmons, and Mr. Henry Cornelius White, and Mr. Alway, and people of that kind have been bound by the arrangement ?—I should doubt whether they would.

(Mr. Price.) Where would they have got the money from ?

14,272. (Mr. Coleridge.) They would have promised, I suppose ?—It was this, for instance, if such a suggestion was made the answer would be this, if such an arrangement as that should have been entered into they would have said, "You are going to fight "this election in a very pretty way, we will have "nothing to do with it." That would be the probable answer.

14,273. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say they are persons who would urge you and the lawyers on to conduct the election on bribery principles ?—No, I do not say that.

14,274. Then why do you say that you think Mr. Symmons, and Mr. White, and the other men would decline to be bound by the arrangement that you made ?—So far as Mr. Symmons is concerned, at the last election, he took no part.

14,275. Then who are the persons who would decline to be bound ? Do you think people in the rank of Bussell ?—I think very likely.

14,276. You have heard him say that if gentlemen did not bring the money here he and others would not be employed in distributing it ?—I thought you were alluding to treating only; to bribery and treating, certainly.

14,277. You were asked if you and the lawyers had come to a compact that you would conduct the election on purity principles; do you think there are any persons in this borough of sufficient influence to have counteracted that ?—Yes.

14,278. Who are they ?—At least what I mean is this——

14,279. Who are the persons of sufficient influence in this borough that they could have counteracted your influence if you had exercised it ?—I misunderstood your question. I do say now, as I understand your question, I believe if the lawyers had made such a proposition as that, backed up as they would be by the leaders of the party, it would have been carried out.

14,280. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not understand how you reconcile that with the answer you have made, that there are many persons on your side who have been mixed up with former bribery transactions who would not be bound by the agreement. Then I ask you more particularly with reference to those in your own station of life, still meaning those who it is in evidence were certainly grossly connected with bribery, such as Alway, Symmons, and others, whether they would be bound by such an arrangement, and you said that you thought they would not ?—My answer to you on that was that they would not, but I did not understand your question.

14,281. Then you told the learned Chief Commissioner immediately after that you thought those persons were not of the class of bribery agents ?—I understood you differently.

14,282. No doubt, but here are two or three answers; they contradict not only the other evidence given here, but also your own, which shows they are bribery agents ?—I beg your pardon, I did not understand the question.

14,283. I will ask you, on the other side, do you know a Mr. J. R. Smith, of whom there has been a considerable mention made, a magistrate and late mayor ?—Yes.

14,284. Is he a person who would be bound and tied by any such convention amongst the lawyers from practising bribery, if he thought it would conduce to the return of his candidate ? In your opinion, he not being a party to the convention, would he be bound by it ?—I think he would.

14,285. Then I ask if you, thinking that of these persons, why did not you make such a convention with the lawyers on the other side ? Why did you not prevent all that has happened by simply entering into a compact of this kind with your professional brethren ?—It would have been very much better.

14,286. But why did you not do it ?

14,287. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Barham proposed it ?—Mr. Barham did not propose it, as I understand.

14,288. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you answer my question ? Why did you not do it ?—I cannot answer it.

14,289. (Mr. Price. I understood Mr. Barham to say that he proposed, at one of these prelimary meetings before the last election, that he should go over, or at all events, if not he, a deputation should wait on the lawyers on the other side, to announce your intention of abstaining from bribery, and that was rejected as a foolish Quixotic feeling, which would only lead to triumph by the Conservative party ?—Yes, Mr. Barham made that suggestion, and certainly we did not think it prudent, because, the expression used was it would shatter the party.

14,290. (Mr. Coleridge.) And no doubt it would shatter the party?—No doubt it would have shattered the party.

14,291. (Mr. Anstey.) What would?—A communication of that kind.

14,292. Of what kind?—Mr. Barham suggested that the thing should be done on pure principles.

14,293. How could that have shattered any party? Mr. Barham was not speaking of a convention at all?—No.

14,294. But of a mere notice that they were not going to bribe. The question put to you by me does not refer to anything of the sort, but to a positive agreement by which both sides bound themselves?—Not a positive agreement.

14,295. I am talking only of an agreement?—Not of the agreement. The question of the learned Chief Commissioner took up Mr. Barham's proposal.

14,296. No, the question was following up my question, which was, why was not this done, and then you make this statement?—Then I cannot say. I cannot give you an answer.

14,297. Why was not this common, simple, palpable method of putting an end to bribery adopted, if it be easy; it is a great assumption, perhaps, but you have heard Mr. Barham state his belief neither side could trust the other side in such an arrangement. Do you concur?—I certainly think if an agreement was made they would be bound by it.

14,298. (Mr. Coleridge.) To put it shortly, I suppose you thought it would be a bad bit of electioneering tactics?—According to the opinion in Bridgwater.

14,299. And therefore you did not think it a wise thing to do?—No.

14,300. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you seen Mr. Kinglake since the day you saw him in the street walking with Mr. Mogg?—Yes.

14,301. And spoke to him about this?—No.

14,302. Nor he to you?—No, nor he to me.

14,303. Have you had any correspondence with Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl or Dr. Kinglake?—We have had no correspondence with Mr. Kinglake; we have with Mr. Vanderbyl on the subject.

14,304. Of this inquiry?—Upon the subject of the petition, and so on.

14,305. Have you had any correspondence with him on the subject of the present inquiry?—No.

14,306. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now will you look at that entry in the ledger?—I find our cash book under date marked the 31st. It is entered "Vanderbyl, Phillip, per Hyden, for Mrs. Williams," at the time the entry in the book was kept out.

14,307. Who is Hyden?—He was a person employed by Mr. Hammill.

14,308. (Mr. Anstey.) There is a signature to the petition of 80. Is it that person?—If it is Charles Hyden, it is the same person.

14,309. But there must have been some motive in postponing the entry?—Yes, no doubt to keep it out.

14,310. From knowledge that it was a corrupt payment?—Yes.

14,311. Charles Hyden, accountant?—That is the one.

Mr. Geo. Farren sworn.

Mr. G. Farren.

14,312. (Mr. Price.) Are you a civil engineer?—I am.

14,313. A member or associate of the Institution of Civil Engineers?—Yes.

14,314. Are you the general manager of the Lundy Granite Company?—No. I was.

14,315. Were you in 1866?—Yes, I was.

14,316. Was Mr. Vanderbyl at that time a director of the company?—He was, but I think at that time he was not an acting director.

14,317. Did you receive any letter from Mrs. Vanderbyl in July 1866?—I did.

14,318. Have you the letter?—No; I looked for it, but it has been destroyed probably.

14,319. Then what were the contents of it?—These: she mentioned her husband had come down to contest Bridgwater very suddenly (the first intimation I had of that), and she said that as I knew some people at Bridgwater possibly I might help him. He had requested her to write to me to ask me to come down and see if I could; I accordingly came down.

14,320. Did you arrive in Bridgwater on the night of the 10th?—Whether it was the 9th or 10th I forget, but I believe it was that.

14,321. Whom did you meet the next morning at Bridgwater?—I went to the "Globe," where they were full, and I met Mr. Vanderbyl at half-past six in the morning. We were occupied from half-past six in arranging his speech and putting parts of it into writing. At breakfast we met Mr. Brogden, whom I never saw before, and a gentleman whose name, I think, was Salmon.

14,322. What took place at breakfast; anything with regard to the election?—No, nothing at all.

14,323. You did not know who Mr. Salmon was?—No.

14,324. You knew, of course, who Mr. Brogden was?—Well, I knew Mr. Brogden by name simply.

14,325. Were you told on that day to do anything?—Yes.

14,326. Tell us what it was?—My company having a great deal of work going on at that time in Bridgwater, I went to see the men I knew, and asked them to give their votes to Mr. Vanderbyl.

14,327. Whom did you see?—I saw a man of the name of Chedzey; I saw Mr. Hennett, and Mr. Spink, and Mr. Else, and I saw their men.

14,328. Were they employers of labour?—Large employers.

14,329. You saw them and their men?—I saw them and their men.

14,330. You say you asked for votes for Mr. Vanderbyl?—I did.

14,331. You, I suppose, at that time being an engineer, had the power of refusing certificates?—I had.

14,332. To those men?—To those men.

14,333. (Mr. Coleridge.) What if they did not do their work right?—I may mention it was the rule of the Lundy Granite Company that no account should be paid until I had given a certificate that the work was properly done, and then those cheques were signed by two directors and the secretary.

14,334. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say therefore that you used your power, or let them know in any way that you would refuse the certificates if they did not vote for Mr. Vanderbyl?—Most certainly not; I carefully avoided anything of the kind.

14,335. What did you say?—I asked Mr. Hennett to do me the favour to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl, and he said he should not. I then asked Mr. Spink, and he seemed rather undecided about it. I then asked Mr. Else, who said not only should he not vote himself, but he should do all he could to upset Mr. Vanderbyl. I then asked these gentlemen whether they would have any objection to my going round to see their men, such as knew me, who were engaged on a steamer which was there to be repaired, and I will mention what those men said presently, but Mr. Hennett had no objection whatever to my speaking to any of their men, and I then said, "Gentlemen, have you any objection? "if you have been accustomed to putting any influ- "ence on your men," I had no means of knowing "whether they had or not, "let those men go and vote "as they like without any interference at all." And they said, "They shall do as they like, we will not "exercise any pressure at all; you may go through "our works and speak to such men as you think "proper," which I did.

14,336. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are their works?—They are ironfounders and engineers; they made some boilers and alterations to engines for the steamer.

14,337. (Mr. Price.) Did you see the men?—Some of them I did.

14,338. Did you say anything to them?—As a rule

FOURTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. Farren.

7 Sept. 1869.

the men showed a curious state of indecision. They did not seem quite to know their own minds; they would think about it, and so on.

14,339. Which you put a proper construction on, I suppose?—Which I put a proper construction on.

14,340. Did you hold out any promise?—No, I carefully avoided it.

14,341. You went back to London that night?—I went back to London; I had done all I could.

14,342. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you get any promise at all?—I think I did. I got some, without being able to swear at this minute how many.

14,343. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you bring down any parcel from London for Mr. Vanderbyl?—None at all.

14,344. (Mr. Price.) You went away that night?—Yes, I was with Mr. Vanderbyl at the poll. I went with him in his carriage to the place, and was with him on the nomination at the hustings.

14,345. (Mr. Coleridge.) You came again?—No, I went after breakfast to see such men as I knew. Then I went to the hustings at twelve or one o'clock with Mr. Vanderbyl, and after that we went for a drive. Then I went to London.

14,346. Did you come down again at the last election?—No.

14,347. (Mr. Price.) Did you see Mr. Vanderbyl at all about the last election?—Yes.

14,348. When?—Meeting him at his house, perhaps at the club, and so forth. I met both him and Mr. Fennelly, whom I knew very well, and Mr. Redfern, and we talked about it, and until the very last moment Mr. Vanderbyl had made up his mind to fight this contest without spending one single shilling in bribery I am, I believe, without taxing my memory to a few days of his coming down here, right in saying the impression on my mind was that he was not going to spend a single shilling. I knew all his friends objected to it; and I knew in talking about it I said it was the very thing to do, and if we could get the agents on the other side equally to agree that not a shilling should be spent, they would force all the voters to vote without being bribed at all; and it was discussed in that way.

14,349. (Mr. Anstey.) You had suggested that to him?—I had suggested that to him in the course of conversation.

14,350. How long before the election?—I cannot say; probably a week, probably three weeks.

14,351. Did he entertain it?—Yes; he said if it could be done it was the very best thing that could be.

14,352. Did you see him again about the election?—I have not seen him since.

14,353. Therefore you did not know what change had come over his mind in the intermediate week?—Not the least in the world.

14,354. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the report that was said to the detriment of Mr. Vanderbyl as to the Lundy Granite Company?—I am very glad indeed that you have asked that question, because I was about, when the examination was over, to ask the indulgence of the honourable Commissioners to permit me to say a few words about that subject. Reading the papers in the north and elsewhere I am sorry to say that yesterday I was pained beyond expression at different denunciations in the most sweeping and unmeasured terms used respecting the Lundy Granite Company, for which I could not then and cannot now see any justification whatever. I heard it called yesterday the "Lundy scandal;" I think I heard it alluded to as the "Lundy fraud."

14,355. (Mr. Price.) Not here, I think. All that has been said here is this, that the agents found out that Mr. Vanderbyl intended, as you say, to come and fight this borough on pure principles. It was a determination to get rid of him on that ground, and that ground alone?—Exactly.

14,356. That it was not put in plain terms, because they do not like to call a spade a spade here, but they then determined to put forward as a pretext some transaction in which he was connected with the Lundy Granite Company, which rendered him unfit for the choice of this very immaculate borough; therefore, I think it is quite fair under these circumstances that you should tell us what possible pretext there could be in anything he had had to do with the company which could be put forward as a reason for his not contesting this very correct place?—I think the first time I became acquainted with the Lundy Granite Company was nine months after its establishment, or thereabouts, and I left it about 18 months or two years before its liquidation; and I say, having a seat at the board, and having a right of discussion at the board, taking a part, but not a vote, during any time which I was present there was nothing of the kind; and the whole story was false, and a fabrication.

14,357. (Mr. Price.) Was there anything in the public prints on any occasion in reference to the affairs of the Lundy Granite Company and Mr. Vanderbyl's connexion with them, that could lead to the suggestion?—Certainly not, under my observation and knowledge.

14,358. (Mr. Coleridge.) We have heard about some resolution of the National Bank as regarded his conduct with regard to the Lundy Granite Company, which has been alluded to, and which we are quite in the dark about; do you know what?—I do not think there was any resolution of the National Bank relating to that at all. The National Bank was mixed up with some other things; Mr. Vanderbyl was director of it, but there was nothing, as far as I am aware of, or so far as I have heard, to give the slightest ground for such an impression.

14,359. (Mr. Price.) You say it is in liquidation now?—Yes.

14,360. Were there any disclosures in the course of its liquidation, or in a court of law or equity, which would expose Mr. Vanderbyl in any way to reproach or opprobrium?—Certainly not to my knowledge.

14,361. Then it has come on you by surprise, that there was anything in connexion with the Granite Company which could possibly be a ground of objection to him as a candidate?—Perfectly new; and I say that not only with surprise, but pain.

14,362. (Mr. Coleridge.) Because it has been put forward here by some witnesses as a reason for wishing him to retire?—Exactly; that is what surprised me.

14,363. We wish to know whether there was anything in it, or a mere pretext?—Exactly; I believe it to be a merepretext.

14,364. (Mr. Anstey.) I will read to you from Mr. Vanderbyl's own brief, a brief prepared for him, and ask you to explain, with the help of that paragraph, what the meaning is. I take it from a friendly source. "On the 6th November Mr. Vanderbyl was called "upon to be examined as a witness in the matter of a "petition presented to the Court of Chancery by the "National Bank, for the winding up of the Lundy "Island Granite Company, of which bank Mr. Van-"derbyl was a director, and had been associated with "the company. Mr. Vanderbyl was telegraphed for "at Bridgwater, and he went to town by a night "train, having been engaged in canvassing during the "day; he was unwell. He laboured under the im-"pression that the examination was to be a friendly "one, and took no trouble to prepare himself pre-"viously as to date, and so on. The fact was that "the examination was a hostile one, and he was exa-"mined about matters extending over five years, "upon which his memory at the time was an entire "blank; as for instance, he denied having written a "certain letter which was afterwards produced to him, "when he of course immediately admitted that it was "his letter, in which there was an expression about "dealing with some of the shares of the Lundy Island "Granite Company, and rigging the market. It may "be stated, that the examination as it appeared in the "papers on Tuesday the 10th November was rather "contradictory. It was noticed at Bridgewater, and "the Conservatives had slips of the examination "printed and circulated. As the examination as re-"ported rather reflected on the National Bank and

" Sir Joseph McKenna, who was a director of the bank " and identified with the Granite Company, the direc- " tors of the bank had a meeting, at which the news- " paper report of Mr. Vanderbyl's examination was " discussed, and a resolution passed by the directors, " of which the following is a copy : ' That the board " ' should at once signify to Mr. Vanderbyl and to " ' Sir J. McKenna, that it is the united opinion of the " ' directors present at this meeting that pending the " ' clearing up of the contradictions and aspersions " ' contained in the reported proceedings above-men- " ' tioned, that in the interest of the bank, Mr. Van- " ' derbyl and Sir Joseph McKenna should vacate " ' their seats at the board.' A copy of the resolu- " tion was sent to Bridgwater, to which place Mr. " Vanderbyl had returned, and he immediately, Satur- " day the 14th November, placed the same in the " hands of Mr. J. L. Sealey before mentioned, as one " of the petitioners against Mr. Westropp, and who " presided that night at a meeting of the electors of " the Town Hall," and so on. Now take this state- ment, not from a hostile brief, but from Mr. Vander- byl's own brief, held by counsel; I ask you whether the statements therein contained are correct?—I have not the remotest means of knowing. I may state that I had nothing whatever to do with the financial depart- went of the Lundy Granite Company. I never bought a share or sold a share, or bought or sold a share in any shape or way for a friend, or trafficked in them in any shape or way, and I do not believe, during the whole time I was connected with the company, for nine months from the beginning, that Mr. Vanderbyl sold a single share.

14,365. That is not the point; but is it true that he underwent the examination?—An examination by whom?

14,366. I am only taking his own statement?—I cannot say.

14,367. Is it true that he underwent an examination in the matter of the winding up of this company, and not to his own satisfaction at all; and is it perfectly true that in that examination there was produced, though previously denied by him, a letter under his hand in which there was an expression about dealing with some of the shares of the Lundy Island Granite Company, and rigging the market, because if so it is a very melancholy fact?—It is. You ask me do I know that to be the fact? I do not.

14,368. Then why, if you have no knowledge one way or the other, state that everything that has been said about the Lundy Island Granite Company in this court is utterly unfounded and untrue?—I say in reply to that, that that is only after all these assertions. I do not know, and I am not aware that that has been proved. All this is new to me. I came into this court to hear the word the Lundy Island "scandal" used, and I know there were honourable gentlemen sitting at that board. My own character is involved, and I am obliged to draw their attention to the fact; and I say these directors, so far as I have any knowledge of the books and having a seat at the board, acted the part of straightforward and honourable men, and I know no- thing whatever from my knowledge to induce me to swear the contrary.

14,369. (Mr. Coleridge.) As engineer, would you have the means of knowing who had dealt in shares or not?—No, I have no means at all; it is not in my de- partment.

14,370. So that it is only your belief?—It is only my belief.

14,371. (Mr. Anstey.) You believe Mr. Vanderbyl's own admission, I suppose?—I believe his own admis- sion.

14,371*a*. I have read that passage to you in which it is admitted that a letter containing expressions about rigging the market was written by a director of that company?—If Mr. Vanderbyl says himself he rigged the market I believe it, but I know nothing to induce me to believe it, or anything I have seen in his conduct.

14,372. That is all, then; you have nothing to say to us about election matters?—I have nothing at all.

Mr. James Cook recalled.

Mr. J. Cook.

14,373. (Mr. Price.) I think you have done with the election of 1868 entirely?—Except one payment I wish to call attention to. I said on the 28th March of this year the sum of 4*l*. 12*s*. was paid in respect of the election of 1868. That was paid by my partner to Joseph White, fellmonger, of High Street, in this borough, in respect of the expense of a Mr. Lilley to vote on that occasion, William Osborne Lilley, who is a dissenting minister.

14,374. (Mr. Coleridge.) What expenses were they?—Travelling expenses from Lowestoft, I think.

14,375. (Mr. Price.) Did you as a rule pay, not- withstanding the statute, travelling expenses?—No doubt.

14,376. Notwithstanding the late statute?—Yes. No doubt it is illegal; clearly so.

14,377. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you paid agents vote at the election, because, although not retained, you were paid in some way or other afterwards; did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

14,378. All of you?—All of us on both sides, I believe.

14,379. Was any objection made to that in the lists handed in on the scrutiny?—The scrutiny was abandoned.

14,380. Was that class of objection taken?—No, I do not think it was.

14,381. Did your paid messengers vote too?—Yes, no doubt some of them did.

14,382. (Mr. Price.) And your clerks and paid men?—Yes.

14,383. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has there been any suit for penalties for doing so?—No, no action whatever brought.

14,384. (Mr. Anstey.) You have heard this evidence given by Mr. Farren of the conversation between himself and other friends of Mr. Vanderbyl with gentlemen in London; did Mr. Vanderbyl ever commu- nicate to you or your partner, to your knowledge, or anybody else, his desire that such an agreement as has been mentioned between the election agents, of the borough on both sides, with regard to corrupt prac- tices, should be entered into?—He never mentioned it to me, nor, to my knowledge, my partner.

14,385. If Mr. Vanderbyl had made such a proposal himself, would you have done your best to carry it into effect?—Yes, I think we should be likely to see if it was feasible at all.

14,386. But so that it was proposed to the other side?—Yes, I should think it exceedingly likely.

14,387. (Mr. Anstey.) How many elections do you speak of?—In my practical experience, four; from 1865 to the present time; from Sir John Shelley's election.

14,388. Do you mean when you come to the history of those elections to combine them together, as Mr. Barham does?—No; to take them in their order backwards, with your permission.

14,389. (Mr. Coleridge.) What were you paid after the election of 1866? Mr. Barham has said he thinks you got 100*l*. between you?—We did. On September 7th Mr. Vanderbyl called on us personally and paid us 50*l*. each.

14,390. Did you know at that time that Mr. Lovi- bond and Mr. Barham got 200*l*. each?—Certainly not. It is only within the last month or six weeks we heard what sum they had got.

14,391. (Mr. Price.) How do you mean the last month or six weeks?—Mr. Vanderbyl mentioned what he had paid them. At the election of Mr. Bagehot we had in the month of February 1867, received from Mr. Vanderbyl 50*l*. for both.

14,392. In 1865 what did you get?—We had then

FOURTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

7 Sept. 1869.

25*l.* each from the candidates as advertised, or guineas.

14,393. Then you, equally with Mr. Barham, scout the idea that professional men have given their services gratuitously, as we were led to believe ?—Certainly so in the elections.

14,394. (Mr. Anstey.) Was the fact of your being remunerated in this way by persons concealed by you and your partner from the rest of the world ?—We have only mentioned the receipts from Mr. Bagehot or Mr. Vanderbyl. In 1865 the sums were accurate expenses, so far as my recollection serves me.

14,395. Small sums ?—We had 50*l.* with each candidate, or guineas.

14,396. And were you aware that Alway and Bussell were unpaid ?—No.

14,397. Did you suppose they were at liberty to pay themselves out of any unappropriated surplus ?—Well, I imagined they were paid, no doubt.

14,398. Did you imagine they were paid, or at liberty to pay themselves, out of the unappropriated surplus, or did you suppose that they had misappropriated, if I may use the term, the money on its way to the voter ?—I had believed in my own mind that they were paid for their services, that they would make up an account, although I have not been present at the making up of an account of that kind. I believed in my mind when Mr. Bussell and Mr. Allan spent the money they got a sum given to them for their services.

14,399–400. (Mr. Coleridge.) Founded only on the reason of the thing ?—Founded only on the reason of the thing ; certainly not from knowledge.

14,401. (Mr. Coleridge.) You never paid them yourself ?—No.

14,402. Are you solicitor to Mr. Bussell, or any of them ?—We are to Mr. Henry Chapman Bussell, as he said. A client of ours has a charge on his property, which we have notice to pay off.

14,403. Here are are some items : Mr. Bussell, 49*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* ; Mr. Lear, 5*l.* ; Mr. Simms, 13*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* Can you explain those ; have they anything to do with electioneering ?—(Referring to the cash book.) Those are the cheques given on that date, and there was an entry on the other side to show what they were for.

14,404. (Mr. Price.) That is March 1866 ?—Yes, "Henry Chapman Bussell, balance of account, 49*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*" That was in respect of the lien on his property which he has now given notice to pay off, having sold it. Mr. Simms is a county court action. Marker, John, that is a man not connected with the borough at that time. None of those had any reference to the election whatever.

14,405. (Mr. Anstey.) Now with reference to this last election of 1868, I will ask you do you know the case of Richard Axford, the surgeon, of this town ?—I do.

14,406. You are aware, I suppose, that his name was given in when the petition was presented as representing a double case of undue influence and corrupt inducement for his vote ?—I am quite aware of it.

11,407. You are aware of having been an active Conservative, so much that he was a cross petitioner against Mr. Kinglake's return on the election trial of 1866, and that he nevertheless voted the first time in his life for the Liberals at the election of 1868, by voting for Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp ?—Yes.

14,408. Thereby voting against Mr. Gray, Mr. Westropp's colleague ?—Yes.

14,409. The rest of the case I require to ask you in the language of another ; is it a fact that he had promised to vote for Westropp and Gray before he voted for Westropp and Vanderbyl ?—I heard it reported as a fact.

14,410. That he had dined at his house ?—Yes, I have heard that.

14,411. That the dishes on the table, before the guests, had the party banners ?—Yes, I have heard that.

14,412. And blue colours with the motto, "Westropp and Gray for ever" ?—Yes, I have heard of it.

14,413. Is it a fact that your partner, Mr. Reed, had, some time previously to the election, procured Axford's son an appointment as mate in the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's service ?—I never heard of my partner being connected with it. Mr. Vanderbyl had certainly.

14,414. On the occasion of Mr. Vanderbyl canvassing, was Mr. Axford applied to by Mr. Reed for his vote ?—I do not know whether it was at the time of the canvass, but I heard that there had been a conversation between Mr. Reed and Mr. Axford with reference to the fact that the appointment had been procured by Mr. Vanderbyl.

14,415. But more than that, do you remember ; or did your partner ever tell you, using these words or to this effect, "Mr. Vanderbyl can remove his son ; the man who put his son in can get his son out again" ?—Mr. Reed never said so to me. I never heard it.

14,416. And you have not any evidence of the fact ?—No.

14,417. No knowledge of it one way or the other ?—No, not that much, that the one who got the appointment could revoke it. I never heard that.

14,418. That is what I mean ?—No evidence whatever ; and I never heard that that part of it was said.

14,419. Is Mr. Axford also under some pecuniary obligations to Mr. Reed ?—He is a client of the firm, and under no pecuniary obligation directly to us, there is a transaction with clients of ours.

14,420. I have not asked you a single syllable about a client of the firm, or being under pecuniary obligation to Messrs. Reed and Cook, but the question is whether he is under any pecuniary obligation to Mr. Reed ?—Not that I am aware of.

14,421. Do you remember this circumstance, Mr. J. R. Smith coming there and asking whether he was going to keep his promise to vote for Westropp and Gray ?—Came to Mr. Axford's house ?

14,422. Yes ?—No, I do not.

14,423. Do you remember Mr. Reed going to him and asking him, "Are you going to keep your promise by voting for Westropp and Vanderbyl ?"—I remember my partner reporting to me, some time after seeing him, that he had done so, but not that he intended going at the time.

14,424. Did he tell you that this was what he said, "You do not mean that. I thought that such a personal favour had been conferred upon you as would have induced you to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl" ?—"Yes, in effect that, no doubt.

14,425. And did your partner then go on and say, "I shall take it as a personal matter if you do not vote for him" ?—He did not report that to me.

14,426. Did he report to you, "I shall take it as a personal favour if you do vote for him" ?—No, he did not.

14,427. Did he report to you that he further went on to say, "Mr. Vanderbyl, who obtained the situation for your son, can get him turned out again" ?—He did not.

14,428. Or, "I ask you to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl on personal grounds" ?—No. What Mr. Reed reported to me was this, that he had seen Mr. Axford, some time after he had seen him, and understood from him that he was going to vote, and he said, "Well, you can vote which way you like, you know, but if it were my son, and a man had procured such a a situation for me as he has for your son, why, out of common gratitude, I should vote for him."

14,429. That is what he reported ?—That is what he reported.

14,430. But if Mr. Axford should come here and state upon oath that the words used were these, "You do not mean that ; I thought such a personal favour had been conferred on you as would induce you to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl. I shall take it as a personal matter if you do not vote for him, and I " shall take it as a personal favour if you do vote for " him." If he says on his oath that is what took place, I suppose you would see no reason to doubt it?—Of course subject to any further explanation Mr. Reed may give of it.

14,431. Now there is another thing at the same time; do you know a person of the name of Elsbury, a gardener at Bridgwater union?—He was either the gardener or what they call industrial teacher, at the time of the election, I believe.

14,432. Do you know anything of that case?—Not until it was mentioned here in court at the time of the election inquiry.

14,433. Have you ascertained anything about it since?—My partner reported to me that he saw the wife on the occasion, at the time of their canvass. I understood him to say, when the wife stated that her husband was going to vote for Westropp and Gray, he said, " Well, you know he was proposed and seconded " by Liberals, and came from Weston Zoyland, which " was thoroughly known to be a Liberal place, and I " am surprised at his going to do it in the face of " those."

14,434. Had not Mr. Elsbury promised to vote for Westropp and Gray?—I did not know it till the election inquiry, when it was referred to.

14,435. Is it not the fact that he voted for Mr. Vanderbyl?—I confess that I did not know for whom he voted, notwithstanding the statement made by my partner at the time.

14,436. Do you know who polled him?—No, I do not.

14,437. Did your partner report to you that what he said to Mrs. Elsbury was this, " I will tell your " husband all about it. Has he forgotten who got him " his situation "?—Not in those words. It was as I told you was my partner's report at the time, when he explained the case, that he came from Weston Zoyland, which was a Liberal place, and that it was the Liberals who had obtained him the appointment, and he was surprised.

14,438. You can throw no further light on that matter?—No.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Wednesday, 8th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.

HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. C. B. MOGG recalled.

14,439. (Mr. Anstey.) We had it in evidence yesterday that between 12 and 1 on the day of the poll at the last election you and Dr. Kinglake were in private conversation in the street opposite the "Globe" hotel?—Yes.

14,440. How often did you see him in that way on that day?—Two or three times.

14,441. Had you seen him two or three times that morning before that hour?—I do not think I had; I am not quite certain about it. I saw him once after I know.

14,442. What o'clock was that?—I saw him twice certainly.

14,443. What o'clock was the second time, the first was between 12 and 1?—The first was between 12 and 1.

14,444. What was the second time?—I walked up with him and wished him good-bye. He was going to see his brother, and I took my departure; that was the second time.

14,445. What o'clock was it?—I should think it was about a quarter to 1.

14,446. And what is the third?—I do not recollect seeing him again.

14,447. On either of those two occasions had you any conversation with him on the subject of what money should be provided for the expenses of the election?—No.

14,448. Nor the money to be drawn for it?—No.

14,449. Nor the expenses of the election?—No.

14,450. Then tell us what passed?—I was passing over the bridge, and they called me back, Mr. Lovibond, Dr. Kinglake, and some other gentleman, I do not know who, whether Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook, but some gentleman who was there, and he asked me what I thought of affairs, and I told him we had lost the election and had better give it up, and one of them made the remark, " I am glad to hear you say so."

14,451. (Mr. Price.) Who said that?—Either Dr. Kinglake or one of the others.

14,452. You said you were glad to hear the thing was lost?—No; he asked me what I thought of affairs, and I said the election was lost and had better be given up, and he said he was glad to hear me say so.

14,453. (Mr. Anstey.) Who?—I think Dr. Kinglake.

14,454. What did you say to that?—We walked away together.

14,455. Then you did not have any more conversation with him?—I did not have any more conversation with him, but I saw him in the street and went up and shook hands and wished him good-bye.

14,456. When he went to take leave of his brother?—Yes.

14,457. Did he take leave of his brother at his brother's residence?—I do not know; I rather think he was at Mr. Allan's at that time.

14,458. Were not they staying there together, the two, on that day?—I cannot say; I never saw Mr. Kinglake during the day.

14,459. When you say he went to take leave of his brother, you mean to say the last time you saw him there he went into Allan's house where his brother was supposed to be?—I thought he was going there.

14,460. You did not see him go there and leave with his brother?—No, I did not see his brother.

14,461. How soon after these two conversations was it that you got the verbal message for the 500*l.* out of Mr. Prior's hands?—Between 3 and 4.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. C. B. Mogg.

8 Sept. 1869.

14,462. (Mr. Price.) It is a little inconsistent, is it not; you say that you had seen Dr. Kinglake and advised him that his brother had better give up?—Yes.

14,463. What induced you to change your mind and become a sub-bribery agent and get this money for bribery then?—I explained the other day that under the excitement——

14,464. I should have thought that the excitement was all over, because you say you had come to the conclusion during this time that the election was lost, and persuaded Dr. Kinglake that the thing had better be given up, and he was very glad to hear it; one would have thought you would have gone home yourself then?—I went home at 1, and it must have been half-past 2 before I left again.

14,465. What put you under excitement?—Because I heard we were gaining ground and were only eight behind.

14,466. Then you thought it time to get money?—No, I never gave it a thought.

14,467. You yielded?—Yes, I did so.

14,468. (Mr. Anstey.) You were an active person we heard from two witnesses only the day before, and the day before that, both Sunday and Monday?—Sunday evening.

14,469. Being an active person on that side of the question, do you mean now seriously and upon your oath to say that when you went to get the 500*l.* at that critical moment when you were only eight behind, there was no connexion whatever in your mind or thoughts between that which you were going to do and Mr. Kinglake's chances of election?—Certainly not.

14,470. (Mr. Price.) Then I cannot understand why you did it?—I have explained to you as far as I can.

14,471. You have not explained it. That is what we should like to know?—Mr. Lovibond and myself were friendly.

14,472. But there are some things that you would not do for a friend. He asked you to bribe and you did it at once, and yet you say there was no connexion in your mind between that and Mr. Kinglake's chances of success?—Not the least in the world.

14,473. (Mr. Anstey.) If there were really no connexion between them, why did you make a secret of it, and put it down on paper without remark and hand it over to Mr. Prior, for fear the clerks in the bank should overhear any verbal communication that passed?—I did so.

14,474. Then surely at that moment there was a connexion between the election and what you were about?—I had no idea at the time.

14,475. What was the motive for so much secresy if you had no connexion in your mind between those two important facts, both recent, and to both of which you were privy?—Because I am of a very excitable disposition.

14,476. Do you mean to swear that it was because you were of an excitable disposition that you took that extreme precaution of writing it down and handing it without a word, and then going away?—I did so.

14,477. Will you answer my question?—Is it because you were excitable, or cool and prudent, that you took that precaution?—I was excitable.

14,478. And therefore you took that precaution?—I did.

14,479. Now, you certainly have not answered my question?—I have answered to the best of my knowledge.

14,480. (Mr. Anstey.) You will see when the time comes, that is all.

14,481. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do I understand you to say that it was because you thought you would get excited when you got to the bank that you wrote this down in this way, or that you were excited when you did it?—I was so excited when I went into the bank and saw a second person there.

14,482. Do you mean that you thought you would be so excited when you got to the bank that you would not trust yourself with words, so that you wrote it down in readiness, or that you wrote it down because you were so excited that you did not know what you were about?—I did not know what I was about.

14,483. (Mr. Anstey.) You could not have written it before you went there, because you had no means?—Certainly not. I asked for paper.

14,484. And it was done in the bank and not elsewhere?—Yes.

14,485. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean that your intellects were not sufficiently collected, and that you did not know what you were about?—I did not know what I was about at the time.

14,486. Then were you under a mental hallucination or aberration of intellect, or what?—I was acting under excitement.

14,487. (Mr. Anstey.) And therefore was it that Mr. Lovibond chose you for the work?—I beg your pardon.

14,488. Because you were unfit to transact business, was it that Mr. Lovibond chose you for that highly delicate work?—I cannot say.

14,489. It is clear that he did not think you unfit for business?—I cannot say what he thought.

14,490. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had been an intimate friend of his, and he knew your character pretty well?—Yes.

14,491. And whether you were an excitable man and fit for the work or not?—I do not know whether he thought of it or not. He asked me, as I told you the other day.

14,492. Was he so excitable that he could not understand what he was doing too?—I should think not. I do not know.

14,493. (Mr. Anstey.) You have also stated, which is anything but a proof of your being off your guard, that you did not tell Mr. Prior more than you were told to say, but you prudently told him less, because you suppressed the words, "By Mr. Henry Lovibond's desire." All you wrote was, "500*l.* for Allen," not saying, "I am come from Mr. Lovibond." That was a further precaution you took. How do you account for that?—I never thought a word about Mr. Lovibond when I went in.

(Mr. Price.) Having just parted from him, and walked in there, and he having said, "I wish you would go in and deliver a message for me, 500*l.* to Allen."

14,494. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not deliver it as from him, but from yourself?—I wrote it on paper.

14,495. (Mr. Price.) Have you told us of all that passed between you and Mr. Henry Lovibond?—I have.

14,496. (Mr. Price.) It is a strange story. Have you told us everything that took place on that day between you and Mr. Lovibond with respect to the election?—I do not know whether I have or not. I am sure I cannot, I do not recollect anything I said to him.

14,497. Your mind must have been in a prepared state to undertake this matter by something that transpired in the course of the day, and it was on that account that he selected you as agent for getting this money. That is a state of mind you were in?—I beg your pardon, he selected Mr. Bate first of all.

14,498. But Mr. Bate declined?—He did, and I ought to have done the same.

14,499. Then Mr. Lovibond selected you afterwards, that is elected you, because he knew your mind was in a prepared state to undertake such a matter by something that had taken place early in the day, or by what you knew of the election, and the way in which at the last moment it was intended to conduct it?—I do not know what Mr. Lovibond thought.

14,500. But you must know whether anything passed between you?—There was not a word of anything passed respecting money.

14,501. (Mr. Anstey.) When?—Not during the whole of the election.

14,502. What do you call the election?—After Mr. Vanderbyl arrived in Bridgwater.

14,503. You were at the meeting you admitted, or had something to do with the meeting of which we have heard on the Sunday night?—Yes.

14,504. Were you one of the deputation that went to Mr. Vanderbyl's?—I was not.

14,505. At what meeting were you?—That is the meeting, the Sunday meeting.

14,506. Yet you were not present; I do not understand?—There was a meeting of 12 there on the Sunday evening, and there were four or five selected as a deputation to go and see Mr. Vanderbyl.

14,507. You were present when that deputation went?—I was.

14,508. And you were present when that deputation came back?—No, I was not.

14,509. Had you not heard when that deputation came back this answer of Mr. Fennelly's reported, "You may say what you like about these Lundy "Island granite affairs, but the real objection to Mr. "Vanderbyl is that you want his money, or he will "not spend money," or words to that effect?—I never heard words of the sort. I never heard Mr. Fennelly's name mentioned before now.

14,510. Did you hear that Mr. Vanderbyl personally, or through someone else, had expressed himself to the effect that the objection to him on the score of his mercantile delinquencies was all hypocrisy and pretence, and the real objection was that he would not spend money?—The thing was discussed at the meeting.

14,511. You did not hear anything like that?—I did not.

14,512. You heard nobody suggest on Sunday night that Mr. Vanderbyl or anybody thought this was all pretence, and that the real objection to him was that he would not spend money?—Certainly not.

14,513. You had been always an active person on that side of the question?—I suppose you may call me an active person. I should not think so.

14,514. If you had not been active you would not have been one of the 12?—I was going to bed.

(Mr. Price.) That shows that you were, otherwise they would not have called you out of bed to be there.

14,515. (Mr. Anstey.) You are one of those who are facetiously, as I believe, called the leaders of the party?—Yes.

14,516. I will give you another opportunity. Do you mean to say that down to the moment you went into this corrupt transaction of the 500*l.* to the bank, you had never heard from anyone in the borough anything about a proposal on anybody's part to spend money illegally?—I never did.

14,517. Down to half-past 3 was this. What o'clock was it that you took the money?—I should think it was about a quarter-past 3.

14,518. Will you really swear that?—I will.

14,519. During, recollect, the whole time which had intervened between the commencement of the canvass in October, and the quarter-past 3 when Mr. Lovibond sent you to get the bribe money from the bank, you never heard from the lips of anyone so much as a rumour or report that there was any intention or wish on your side of the question in the world to spend money, or procure money to be spent illegally at that election?—I heard there was no money going to be spent.

14,520. That is not an answer to my question. Did you hear anybody suggest it?—No.

14,521. Down to that time?—I did not.

14,522. (Mr. Price.) Then that surely ought to have made you much more cautious, and have surprised you more that you should be asked to go at that hour of the day for 500*l.*?—It so happened.

14,523. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you knew Allan's character at this time?—Yes.

14,524. And it had not struck you as anything remarkable, "500*l.* for Allan"?—I told you the other day that I put my own construction upon it.

14,525. You told us you knew perfectly well that it was for bribery purposes?—Yes.

14,526. (Mr. Price.) This is what I put to you before: "It seems to me very strange that Mr. "Lovibond should have sought you out to make you a "co-conspirator with him as a bribery agent unless "you had been in their secrets and had taken an "active part in elections. Unless you make a fuller "disclosure we shall not think you have told us all "you know about it, for it is not likely that you, a "respectable man, should at once consent to become a "bribery agent under Mr. Lovibond, to whom you were "under no obligation the moment he asked you." And your answer is: "I know nothing more than I have "stated, and the only excuse I have is the excitement "under which I laboured at the moment." Then my learned friend, Mr. Anstey, says: "Before leaving the "box, Mr. Mogg, it is right that I should inform you "that I shall require a great deal more information "before I am of opinion that you have given any "answer to the question: 'What was there in your "'previous communication with Mr. Lovibond which "'should make him believe that he would find in you "'a ready bribery agent? You had better think it "'over, and give us a more satisfactory explanation of "'the matter subsequently in the day, otherwise I am "'afraid it will go hard with you.' (Witness.) I can-"not give you any other reason." You still adhere to that?—I do.

14,527. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not adhere, I perceive by the answers you have already made to-day, to the answers which I am going to read to you, for they certainly entirely conflict. The question is asked: "Q. But have you taken a part in the management of "elections?—A. No. Q. Have you been in con-"sultation with anybody about the management of "elections?—A. Occasionally. Q. With whom?—"A. I am sure I cannot say. Q. With any of the "lawyers?—A. No. Q. Never?—A. Never." You perceive, do not you, that all those answers are quite inconsistent with your present admission that you not only have taken an active part at this election but at former elections, that you were what is called a leader of the party, and that you were so important a leader that you were sent for on your going to bed, and requested to form one of the committee of 12 which was to decide as fast as they could upon the fate of at least one candidate on the Liberal side of this election, and that this committee of 12 was selected at a meeting convened by the lawyers, with whom you say twice over you had never been in consultation?—I was not aware of the meeting before they came to me between 10 and 12 at night.

14,528. (Mr. Price.) You did not tell us one word about going to the meeting when you were in the box before, as I understand, about having been called up out of bed?—Not before; I was just about to retire.

14,529. You did not tell us that before?—I did not.

14,530. Why did not you, because I believe I addressed to you what I believe I have addressed to every witness at the conclusion of the examination by form of question and answer by the Commissioners, a request to say whether there is any other part he took in the election which he can give any information about?—I thought you were alluding to the poll.

14,531. And it was your bounden duty therefore to tell us?—I did not quite understand the question, or else I could have answered.

14,532. I do not know why you did not understand the question, because it is as plain as language could be: "Any part that you took in the election." It is not restricted to the polling day. Now, what did they say when they called you up?—They said there was a meeting.

14,533. Who said?—I think Mr. Winterbotham. I would not be certain whether Mr. Winterbotham or Mr. Lovibond, it was one of the two said there was a meeting at Mr. Nicholls' and asked me if I would go in.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. C. B. Mogg.

8 Sept. 1869.

14,534. What time was this?—I should think between 10 and 11 o'clock; I am not quite certain of it.

14,535. (Mr. Anstey.) Both were at your house?—As they were passing they were going to the meeting, and then they called upon me.

14,536. (Mr. Price.) Did they tell you what it was to consult about?—They did not.

14,537. Did you ask them?—No, I did not.

14,538. Why did you not say it was an unseemly hour to come on Sunday night about election matters?—I had my slippers on and boots off.

14,539. That is just it; you were preparing to go to bed, and it was an unseemly hour on Sunday night to have a conversation on election matters; why did you not say, "Gentlemen, it is not a time to come about that; I cannot come"?—I did object first of all, but one of them asked me a second time, and I went.

14,540. Then was it because you had taken an active part?—Certainly not.

14,541. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why should they then come to you to go and attend this meeting? What had you done at former elections to make them so anxious to have you at this meeting?—They thought I had some interest in the town.

14,542. Had you at former meetings always used your influence?—I do not think I attended the meetings.

14,543. What was the reason they could not go on until they turned you out of bed?—No, not turned me out of bed, you make a mistake.

14,544. (Mr. Price.) It was an unseemly hour on Sunday night, when you were partly undressed, and you refused in the first instance to go, and they thought you of so much importance that by importunity they got you to go, and yet you told us you were not an active man?—Well, I do not think I am. I am a man that perhaps has a little influence.

14,545. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many votes can you influence?—Five or six.

(Mr. Price.) It is an extraordinary thing that you should have been pressed so much, being a person not taking an active part, to go to the meeting, and still more extraordinary that you should be the person of all others in the town who should be selected by Mr. Lovibond to get the money at the bank in that surreptitious way.

14,546. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was anything said to you at the meeting whether you would do anything if it should be necessary on the polling day?—Certainly not.

14,547. Were not you asked if you would lend a helping hand if it was wanted?—Certainly not.

14,548. What were you asked to do?—Nothing at all.

14,549. (Mr. Price.) Were you called on for your opinion at that meeting?—Yes.

14,550. What about?—Whether Mr. Vanderbyl should stand or not.

14,551. On what ground?—They said he had entered into a coalition with Mr. Westropp.

14,552. Was that the only ground?—The only ground.

14,553. The only subject of discussion was because he had entered into a coalition with Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

14,554. Who said that?—It was generally reported in the town.

14,555. Who said it at that meeting?—I do not recollect.

14,556. Was Mr. Barham there?—No.

14,557. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was nothing said about his refusal to spend money?—Certainly not, not a word about money.

14,558. About "bales," or anything else?—Not anything of the sort, or any allusion to it.

14,559. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear the next morning that Mr. Vanderbyl had changed his mind, and that the tactics of the party had been changed?—I heard that he was going to stand.

14,560. Only that?—Only that.

14,561. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first know that Mr. Fennelly had gone to town?—I did not know anything at all about Fennelly.

14,562. (Mr. Price.) The only subject of discussion while you were present was whether Vanderbyl should be asked to retire or not?—I could not swear that positively, I think there was something about the Lundy Granite Company. I would not be quite certain, but I rather think so.

14,563. Then you left them there?—I did.

14,564. Did they ask you to be one of the deputation?—No, I do not believe they did.

14,565. (Mr. Anstey.) I have been going over your evidence, and I must ask you which of the two statements you adhere to, the statement which you made just now, that during the whole of this period that elapsed between your receiving that message and going to get this bribery fund of 500*l.*, and your delivering the message suppressing the name of the sender, and coming away, a very short period, there was no connexion whatever in your mind or thoughts between what you were doing and the election. I ask whether that statement which you now make is the one you mean to adhere to, or whether you mean to adhere to the statements you made on the former occasion, after considerable pressing, which I will read to you from the shorthand writer's notes: "Did you know who Allan was?—Yes. That he "was a bribe agent?—Yes. And therefore Mr. "Lovibond mentioned him as a person you perfectly "knew?—Yes. You knew it was bribe money you "were going for?—I had no doubt about it." And again further on, "I was not cool." Then Mr. Price says, "You were cool enough to be aware that you were asked to get money to bribe with?—Yes." Which of those two statements do you adhere to?—I do not see any difference between them.

14,566. (Mr. Price.) You have said to-day that there was no connexion in your mind between going to the bank and getting the money and the election?—It must have passed through my mind; there is no doubt of that.

14,567. You said it had not, that there was no connexion in your thoughts between money from the bank and Mr. Kinglake's success?—No more it did not, not till after it was done, and then it did.

14,568. (Mr. Anstey.) Another thing you have stated, but not until pressed, is shortly before your going on this errand to get money enough to bribe 50 men at 10*l.* a head, you yourself had heard, and so stated to Mr. James Trevor, I think, or Mr. John Trevor, that hundreds of persons, or rather you heard from hundreds, and you afterwards say, "I do not know hundreds, but a large quantity." You had been hearing that morning from hundreds, or at least, a large quantity of persons, that the brickyard men of Brown & Co. would not vote without being paid, representing a number of something like 400 or 500 persons, that you had heard that, and you stated on your way back from dinner, I think, to one of the Mr. Trevors, was it not?—When going to dinner.

14,569. That was immediately after you had left Dr. Kinglake?—Yes.

14,570. You told Mr. Trevor whom you met in the street, "Our party is beaten, the brickyard men of Brown & Co. will not vote without being paid?"—I did.

14,571. And you told us that report you had heard from hundreds, or at least a large number of persons?—I heard it from a large quantity.

14,572. That is the expression you use here; then you went to dinner, and afterwards got this message; do you still say, with this impression on your mind, that there were 400 or 500, or even as many as 50, who wanted to be bribed, and without bribing whom your patry could not succeed, that there was no connexion in your mind between that and the illegal act you were committing?—There was not, for I understood Brown's people were polled, and that is the reason we were brought up so close.

14,573. But it is "will not vote," not "voted"?—That is when I was going to dinner.

14,574. Then after dinner they had all been polled whom you heard would not vote?—No, from half-past 2 to 3 I heard they were polling.

14,575. That these men were polling?—Yes, in my own house.

14,576. Then in your examination on the former day it does so happen that what you said was the hour at which you met Mr. Lovibond, and went for the bribe money in the street, was not a quarter past but a quarter to three, now which is right?—I am sure I cannot say.

14,577. If it was a quarter to three, that would just be the time when these bribable 400 or 500 persons were polling, and perhaps some 50 hanging back?—I cannot say to 10 minutes.

14,578. Was not there a distinct connexion between what you were doing and your wish to secure those votes?—Certainly not.

14,579. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose this is an error in the notes, if not, you will say so; you are made to say at page 33, you repeated this phrase, "Our party is beaten," and so on, to Mr. Lovibond; it was to Mr. Trevor that you made that statement, was not it?—To both.

14,580. When did you see Mr. Lovibond?—When I was coming up over the bridge, they called me as I told you just now, Dr. Kinglake, Mr. Lovibond, and some other gentlemen.

14,581. Then you had previously to meeting Mr. Trevor said the same thing to Mr. Lovibond?—I had.

14,582. And this was two hours before Mr. Lovibond gave you the message?—Yes, I should think so, quite that.

14,583. Why did you tell us on the former occasion, and again to-day, I think, but certainly on the former occasion, that you had had no previous conversation with Mr. Lovibond in the course of the day on the subject of the election?—On money matters.

14,584. (Mr. Price.) You told him you were beaten because Mr. Brown's men would not go without being paid?—Told who?

14,585. Mr. Lovibond?—No.

14,586. You kept that information for Mr. Trevor?—Mr. Trevor.

14,587. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not you tell Mr. Lovibond that Brown's people would not vote unless they were paid?—I did not.

14,588. Did Mr. Lovibond tell you?—Not to my knowledge.

14,589. (Mr. Price.) Who did you see first, Mr. Trevor or Mr. Lovibond?—Mr. Lovibond.

14,590. (Mr. Anstey.) How could you have told him except to your knowledge, or he knew except to your knowledge?—It was a general report in the town that the brickyard men would not poll.

14,591. Was not Mr. Lovibond one of those who communicated to you that report?—I never communicated to Mr. Lovibond a word on the subject.

14,592. I am not asking you that, but was Mr. Lovibond one of those large quantity or hundreds of persons who told you that piece of intelligence that Brown's people would not vote without being paid?—To the best of my knowledge he did not.

14,593. I do not qualify in the least, but on the contrary, repeat with still more emphasis than I did on the former occasion, that my material questions to you are to this moment unanswered within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. With that intimation you may withdraw.

(The witness.) I shall be happy to answer any question you may put to me. You wish to make me know more than I really do.

(Mr. Anstey.) If you volunteer a statement now more fully and less evasive than you have made already, we shall be glad to hear it, or if you like to come back and do so; but certainly from me at least you will not hear during the whole course of this inquiry any one of the questions repeated which I have now for the second time put to you and in vain.

(The witness.) I can only say this, that I have answered to the best of my knowledge every question you put to me. You want me to do that which I am not able to do, and I cannot do it.

14,594. What is that, to tell the truth?—To say I know all about it, and I do not.

14,595. I ask you only to tell the truth?—So I do, and I defy any man to say I do not.

14,596. Then the truth of the other day must be the untruth of to-day, for your answers are contradictory. I ask, which do you adhere to, and you cannot tell me?—I do not see any difference in them.

DR. FREDERICK FARMER sworn. Dr F. Farmer.

14,597. (Mr. Price.) Are you a physician practising here?—I am a physician and surgeon.

14,598. Are you the medical attendant of Mr. Cook, the witness who was examined yesterday?—Yes.

14,599. We understand that he is not well enough to attend to-day?—He is very ill indeed, he has been ill. It is only just to him, though, that I should state that on Monday evening I saw him, and was with him four hours, and he was very anxious to be able to be examined here, and I got him up as well as I could to come here, but he was not fit yesterday to give his evidence. He was very ill last night and sent for me. I was with him four or five hours. He is now in bed. He may be able to be examined to-morrow, he is anxious to be, and there is a hope that he will be able to.

14,600. The quiet of to-day will bring him round?—Yes.

14,601. What is the nature of his illness?—He has a weak action of the heart, and he is altogether a delicate man, overworked brain and body, an energetic clever fellow who has overworked himself. I think it right to mention to the Commissioners that I am the medical attendant of Mr. Richard Smith, the solicitor who has been mentioned here, and if agreeable to you I will certify as to his state of health. In March 1866 he had a rupture of a blood-vessel in the brain, causing paralysis of one side, and also great injury to the brain and to the mental functions. He was dangerously ill for some time, and in such danger that I had Dr. Reynolds down to see him with me. He has by great care, simply living an animal existence, eating, drinking, and sleeping, and for exercise being carried into the open air, lived on, but his life is a very precarious one, and we studiously avoid any excitement of any kind.

14,602. (Mr. Coleridge.) He is able to go to church, is he not?—He goes to church. I think I had better mention also that we had the opinion of Dr. Russell Reynolds of University College upon him, and he advised along with me.

14,603. (Mr. Price.) Is he in such a state that he could not undergo an examination if we attended at his residence?—Yes, he would not have the mental capacity to sustain anything. He might speak a few minutes, and then I think from the excitement in fact might drop dead.

14,604. Assuming that we went without any person attending, merely the shorthand writer, ourselves, and our secretary, and you present, if you like, do you think then that he would be able to answer the questions that we should put to him?—I do not think he could bring his mind to recollect what took place.

14,605. Would it be attended with danger to him?—It would decidedly.

14,606. (Mr. Coleridge.) Does he answer questions which you put to him; you ask him how he is?—Yes, but it was political excitement that led to this state.

14,607. Has he had any conversation with you since we have been in the town about what is going on?—No.

14,608. Is he aware what is going on?—Yes.

14,609. Does he read the newspapers every day?

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Dr. F. Farmer.

—He did read them; at least he is not able to read because he has lost the sight of one eye, and I should think he never reads hardly, but he has been read to, and I found that was damaging, and I went to where he was sitting in a bath chair in his garden, and said, "Mr. Smith, I must forbid you the papers. I am "sorry to deprive you of such a pleasure, but it would "be injurious to you." Everything political has always been studiously avoided, everything has been light in amusement, such as light literature read to him, and then his mind does not hold it for any length of time; he is quite shattered in mind and body.

14,610. You wish to represent to us that he is not in a fit state to be examined with safety to himself?—I have no hesitation in swearing it, and I have also two certificates, one from Dr. Russell Reynolds, and one from his friend Dr. Orton.

14,611. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he well enough to bear the service of a notice to produce, or a subpœna duces tecum, or something of that kind, so as to enable us to get to documents the production of which was unobtainable at the election trial of 1866, because, as is alleged in the report of that trial, Mr. Smith's family prevented any person coming with a notice to produce, on the plea that he was just taken ill, and that the mere service of the notice to produce documents was a thing they would not allow on pretence of his sickness?—No, it would not be injurious to him, anything of that sort.

14,612. If we call on him to produce those documents with the mere notice, can it possibly have any injurious effect upon him?—I do not think it would require any notice at all.

14,613. Would that injure his health, the notice to produce all papers, &c. &c., with reference to certain matters?—I do not know that it would if done in a nice way, not a peremptory way.

14,614. I am asking you a question as a doctor, not as a friend?—It would greatly depend on the way it was done.

14,615. Is he too ill even for that?—Anything done roughly or without caution.

14,616. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has he a wife?—Yes.

14,617. Supposing our secretary served notice on his wife, and she gave it to him and asked for these papers, would there be any difficulty then?—I do not think so.

14,618. (Mr. Price.) He knows perhaps that a summons has been prepared and served upon him?—I cannot swear that he does. I never speak to him on the subject of this Commission.

14,619. But there would be no difficulty you apprehend?—Not in the way proposed.

14,620. Through Mrs. Smith, who having notice from our secretary, would have no difficulty in getting his assent to it?—No.

W. Hamson.

WILLIAM HAMSON sworn.

14,621. (Mr. Price.) Are you a mariner?—Yes.

14,622. And a voter for the borough?—Yes.

14,623. And you want to go to sea?—Yes.

14,624. Did you vote in 1865?—At Sir John Shelley's first.

14,625. Did you get anything for it?—I did not.

14,626. Did you vote at the first election of 1866?—Bagehot's.

14,627. Were you promised anything in 1865?—I was not.

14,628. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ask for anything?—I did not.

14,629. Did not you ask Mr. Bussell to give you something?—I did not.

14,630. How was that?—Because I never asked in my life.

14,631. And nobody offered?—And nobody offered.

14,632. (Mr. Price.) In 1866 did you vote for Mr. Bagehot?—I did.

14,633. Did you ever have anything for that?—Five pounds, about a month afterwards.

14,634. From whom?—From Bussell.

14,635. How did you get that, if you say you never asked?—He came to me on the quay.

14,636. Without your asking?—Without my asking.

14,637. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had he promised you before you voted?—No.

14,638. (Mr. Price.) Did you ask what it was for?—No, I did not.

14,639. But you knew what it was for?—I considered I knew what it was for; I did not know exactly.

14,640. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did not refuse it?—I did not.

14,641. (Mr. Price.) Did you vote for Mr. Vanderbyl in 1866?—I did.

14,642. Did you get anything for that?—Ten pounds.

14,643. When?—I will not be certain whether it was after I polled or before.

14,644. On the polling day?—On the polling day.

14,645. Did you ask for that?—I did not.

14,646. Were you equally surprised to get 10*l.* that time?—I did not expect it, but I had it.

14,647. (Mr. Price.) Who gave it to you?—Bussell.

14,648. You knew money was going?—No.

14,649. (Mr. Anstey.) Going amongst people generally?—Yes, most people on the quay.

14,650. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you thought you might as well have a turn at it?—Yes.

14,651. (Mr. Price.) In 1868 did you vote?—I did.

14,652. Who for?—Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

14,653. Did you get anything then?—Ten pounds from Allan.

14,654. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time did you vote at the last election?—In the morning, about 10 or 11 o'clock.

14,655. Then Allan paid you after you voted?—He did.

14,656. Because he did not pay you until the afternoon?—About half-past 3.

14,657. (Mr. Price.) Did he say anything to you before?—He never spoke to me in his life, nor I to him.

14,658. Did you go to him or he to you?—I saw a lot of people round the door, and I went like the rest.

14,659. To Allan's?—No, the "New Inn."

14,660. You saw a lot of people there, you say, and you went in. Did Allan know you had voted?—I cannot say.

14,661. Did he know?—I never spoke to the man before or afterwards in my life.

14,662. Did they introduce you as a voter or going to vote?—No.

14,663. You walked simply in?—Yes, and he put it into my hand, and he never spoke to me nor I to him, and I walked out.

14,664. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who vouched for your being a voter?—No one at all.

14,665. (Mr. Price.) For anything that he knew you may not have been a voter?—Just so; I believe anyone could have had it at the time.

14,666. Whether voters or not?—Yes.

(Bussell.) There is one question I should like you to put to this witness, which is very important for me, whether he is one of the class that always run away with the notion that I had 10*l.* and only gave 5*l.*

14,667. (Mr. Price, to the witness.) You say you got 5*l.* from Bussell in 1866, when you voted for Bagehot. Have you ever said that you believed Mr. Bussell had actually 10*l.* and only gave you 5*l.*?—Never in my life; I have heard tell of it about the quay.

14,668. Have others said to you, when you told them you only got 5*l.* upon it, that Bussell had kept back 5*l.*?—No, I never told about it.

14,669. Did you ever hear it said at that time?—No.

14,670. You never heard it said?—No.

14,671. But with regard to other voters?—I heard it talked about the quay—quay talk.

14,672. But you never said so?—I might have put a word in, or like that.

14,673. What did you say then?—I said, "I have 5*l.*," never 10*l.*

14,674. Did you join in the accusation against Bussell?—Never at all.

14,675. And it was not your impression that he had?—No, never at all.

(Bussell.) There is another matter I want to know, whether the witness and some of the rest have not left my house being under the impression that I had 10*l.*, because I have suffered through this business.

(Mr. Price.) You say you have suffered in consequence of this?

(Bussell.) Yes, through running away under the impression that I had 10*l.*

14,676. (Mr. Price.) Is that so?

(The witness.) I am a teetotaller, and have not taken anything for the last two years.

Mr. Henry Frederick Nicholls sworn.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

14,677. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A draper and shipowner.

14,678. It is your large premises at the side of the High Street, on the Cornhill?—My present residence is in the square.

14,679. You took an active part, we understand, in the general election of 1868?—I took an active part as being desirous of the success of the Liberal candidates.

14,680. You had been some time, had you not, at all events at the last election, a prominent member of the party?—I have always espoused the Liberal cause and voted for the Liberal candidates.

14,681. But you have been a prominent member, and always voted for the party?—Not previous to the last election, I think.

14,682. At the last election were you?—Not at the canvass; I never canvassed.

14,683. Then what part did you take which induced the Liberals to come to your house, never having met at your house?—I think I had better explain that it was not a meeting convened by the Liberals at my house, but it was convened by myself, and if you will allow me I will just narrate exactly how the thing came about. I think it was about 2 o'clock in the afternoon of a Sunday, after I had lunched, I was going for a walk, and met Mr. Lovibond on the High Street pavement, just by the "Clarence Hotel," and he said, "I am glad to have met you. I wanted to talk to you about our prospects on Tuesday." I turned with him, and walked to his house, and during the conversation he said, "I think there is great danger of our losing both seats." I expressed surprise, because I had been given to understand that the canvass was a satisfactory one, and that we were sure to win, provided there was no spending on the Conservative side. He said, "I think there is no "doubt about the intention of the Conservatives, "otherwise Mr. Gray would not be here, and if they "fight we shall lose both our seats."

14,684. (Mr. Price.) What was known about Mr. Gray? We have never known how it was that Mr. Gray's name should mean money?—I cannot explain further than that was just the remark he made, and it made an impression on my mind which led me to say, "I am very sorry to hear that. I am extremely vexed;" and he went to his house, and we walked together up his lawn, conversing on this matter, and I suggested we should call together a few friends. It was not suggested on the part of Mr. Lovibond, and I named the individuals. I proposed Mr. Francis Thompson, and I said I thought that Mr. Wilton and Mr. Sully should be seen. I undertook to see them. I walked across to Mr. Francis Thompson's house, which is something like half a mile from the town, and also called on Mr. Wilton, and I arranged with them that they should meet at my house at half-past 4. We met Mr. Barham coming in, whom I did not know previously was expected. I suppose it must have been an arrangement with Mr. Lovibond. At that meeting Mr. Lovibond introduced the conversation in a conversational manner (I must correct Mr. Barham), not in the form of a speech. There was no speech-making. He never rose from his seat. He simply spoke some continuous remarks, and it did not take the form of a speech. It was conversational, and he stated that over again which he stated to me in the morning, to Mr. Thompson, to Mr. Sully, and to Mr. Wilton, in the presence of Mr. Barham, and that was that he felt strongly that we should lose both seats; that there was not the slightest doubt the Conservatives intended to fight as they had always hitherto fought at Bridgwater in previous contests, particularly referring to the previous one of Mr. Vanderbyl's, and particularly the one previous to that in which Mr. Bagehot was the candidate.

14,685. (Mr. Price.) You say that Mr. Lovibond stated this, that there was no doubt that the Conservatives intended to fight as they always had fought?—Yes, and he particularly cited the immediately preceding elections; and he also again mentioned in the presence of Mr. Wilton and of Mr. Sully that there was no doubt that Mr. Gray's presence was the most conclusive proof that such was their intention. If you will kindly allow me I will just correct one portion of my statement. On my first interview with Mr. Lovibond he said that he had been extremely disturbed during the previous night, very restless, and that he had during the morning consulted with Mr. Sealey and also with Mr. Barham, and, as I understood him to say, that they both entertained the view which he was then enforcing upon my judgment.

14,686. (Mr. Coleridge.) And what was that?—That it was desirable we should have a consultation, so that one of the candidates should be withdrawn, and at that first interview with Mr. Lovibond, when I met him on his lawn, we taked the matter over. There was no mention as to which of the candidates. It was simply the interest of the Liberal party, which seemed to weigh with him at that moment. Mr. Barham, to my surprise, combated, that is, differed from Mr. Lovibond upon the desirability of seeing Mr. Vanderbyl, with a view of getting him to retire; and there was a manner displayed between Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham which suggested to my mind at the moment that there was perhaps not a thorough understanding existing between them. Whether it was a right or a wrong impression, I don't know; and Mr. Barham introduced another topic, quite apart from the subject for which we met, and that was, as to the mode of getting the working men to the poll on the following morning; and he produced a draft of a form of circular, in which he proposed that the employers of labour, such as Mr. Wilton, for instance, and others, should issue to their men, with a view of announcing to them that those who were willing to go with their principals to the poll should have an opportunity of going at the same time as they polled, of course only having reference to those who were willing to poll on their side. Mr. Wilton at once said he thought it was a most impolitic step, and Mr. Lovibond expressed the same opinion, and I did also, and I said that I thought nothing could be so unwise, and a very few minutes after that Mr. Francis Thompson, who was present at this meeting, left my house, and then Mr. Barham (Mr. Sully leaving, I think, about the same time) and Mr. Wilton remained behind, and we had coffee and sat chatting together. Mr. Lovibond reintroduced the question as to the election prospects, and urged again very strongly (and I would, just for the purpose of giving you a reasonable opportunity of judging, say he does it very ably and very forcibly) the necessity of something being done.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

8 Sept. 1869.

14,687. (Mr. Anstey.) Something being done in the way of what?—In the way of getting one of the candidates to retire. After a time I said, "If that is your "view I am very willing and ready to assist you, and "we will have a few more gentlemen together, if "possible, to take their judgement, and advise in the "matter;" and I suggested—I want to be very accurate in my statement, and if you will allow me I will just refer to these names, just for the purpose of being accurate—I said, "I undertake to see Dr. "Winterbotham, I undertake to see Mr. Collins, and "I undertake to see Mr. Palmer." Mr. Collins I saw, Dr. Winterbotham I did not see, but left a message at his house; Mr. Palmer I did not see, but I left a message at his house. They came as the result of my calling to see them. Mr. Wilton, as I believe he will tell you, saw some other gentlemen, I do not know who it was he saw. He will tell you whom he saw. I only tell you those I saw myself.

14,688. I do not know whether that Mr. Palmer you saw is the gentleman who was examined here before this Commission?—Oh no. I do not know exactly at what period. I may say that the whole of these gentlemen were present, but most of them were present off and on between 8 and 10 o'clock. I will just read the names. There was Mr. Mogg, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Wilton, Mr. Collins, Mr. Symmons, and Mr. Smith.

14,689. (Mr. Coleridge.) What Smith?—Mr. John Smith.

14,690. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Symmons the person who was examined before us?—No.

14,691. Another one?—Clifford Symmons, a young man. Mr. James Sully. I must tell you that Mr. James Sully came to the second meeting.

14,692. Just finish your answer first?—Mr. Lovibond and myself. Mr. Mogg said the number was 12. I believe I cannot make the number more than 11. I think Mr. Sully came to the same meeting, not at his own volition but at my request. I sent to him.

14,693. Is that Clifford Symmons the son of the Symmons that was examined before us?—It is. The conversation was repeated very much, as I have also stated of the first meeting, only that there were other elements introduced, and that was particularly a feeling of distrust of Mr. Vanderbyl's position relatively as a Liberal, and the other the possibility of his coming to an understanding and a coalition with the Conservatives, and thus losing the seat of Mr. Kinglake; and I will tell you that Mr. Kinglake was my particular favourite candidate, and I think so to a very large extent that of others who were present, that he had a great many friends in Bridgwater; and under no circumstances would we have allowed Mr. Kinglake to be defeated for the purpose of giving Mr. Vanderbyl a seat.

14,694. Then in point of fact this meeting was held for the purpose of inducing Mr. Vanderbyl to retire?—Most certainly, for no other object in the world. There was also a long discussion with regard to the affair in connexion with the trial, the Lundy Granite Company and the bank resolution. During the morning of Sunday it came out at those meetings, for there were two distinct meetings, that Mr. Hammill, who had previously promised Mr. Vanderbyl to nominate him, had that morning declined.

14,695. Hammill?—Mr. Hammill had that morning declined, very much to the annoyance and mortification of Mr. Vanderbyl, and that Mr. Vanderbyl had called upon Mr. James Sully during the morning, and he had promised. When Mr. James Sully came to these meetings, and heard that Mr. Hammill had previously declined, and learning the opinion which seemed to grow that there was a large amount of unpleasantness in connexion with the whole of that affair, that is, I speak of the trial and the Lundy Granite matter, he said, "I think that I shall decline also," and he during the course of the evening, as you will learn from my statement, he went down there, and had an interview with Mr. Vanderbyl, and declined to propose him. I must state that at this second meeting, when the question of the Conservatives spending money was raised, I suggested that the very best and most desirable course for us as a party would be to let them do so, and to oppose them on petition.

14,696. What was said to that?—I will tell you. The professional men (and I asked them each individually) said, "We will have nothing to do with the "petition, we have had enough of the petition. It has "cost too much sacrifice of time, of money, and of "health;" and they then alluded particularly to the then condition of Mr. Smith and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, who had been both paralyzed in connexion with the petition against Mr. Westropp. I do not hesitate to say that the impression in Bridgwater is that both of those gentlemen were really in the condition in which they were, both being paralyzed, arising out of the anxiety connected with that petition in London, and that the consequence of their state influenced other gentlemen, more or less, to refuse to acquiesce in my proposal that we should fight the Tories and petition as I proposed.

14,697. (Mr. Price.) That is, the anxiety that they felt as to the discovery of corrupt practices which had been pursued by both parties?—Well, they may have had that view. I never knew of the corrupt practices.

14,698. The anxiety, I suppose, was an anxiety which you understood as being produced by the result of the inquiry?—I did not understand it in that light. I understood it simply in the light I have named, that the anxiety of prosecuting a petition under the circumstances was caused in getting up the evidence.

14,699. Do you mean the physical labour or the mental labour?—The physical labour. I made no reference to the mental labour.

14,700. But anxiety caused by the discovery of corrupt practices?—The physical labour, connected with the mental anxiety. There is also a certain amount of mental wear and tear.

14,701. (Mr. Anstey.) How could that be so, because it was proved in evidence on that very petition, which according to your hypothesis produced Mr. R. Smith's paralysis, that Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had been already paralysed and had been so for years, insomuch that he could only accompany the candidates in their canvass on horseback. The only petition which they had had in 1866 had not produced paralysis in the case of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, whatever it may have done with Mr. Smith?—I do not know what impression you may have had. Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had been for years lame and could not walk, and he rode on his canvass, and I met him again and again on his canvass, and he was as able as I am at this moment; and the alarm at Bridgwater when we heard this telegram—when Mr. Winterbotham was going to London to see Mr. Lovibond—the alarm was very great because the onus of the petition rested upon him, and if he fell ill probably the whole thing would fall through and be a failure.

14,702. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said in answer to the learned Chief Commissioner that you knew nothing about the corrupt practices. Did you know nothing about the large sum of money spent by Mr. Vanderbyl in 1866?—I did not.

14,703. When did you know of that?—Not till Mr. Vanderbyl told me that evening.

14,704. You saw Mr. Vanderbyl afterwards?—I was one of the deputation afterwards.

14,705. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you really mean to say that the lawyers then present gave it as their opinion that if a petition was presented against that return, that they, the lawyers presenting that petition, would be thereby put in peril of paralysis?—I do not say that.

14,706. (Mr. Price.) That they would suffer in their health?—I say they declined it; and they gave as a reason the anxiety they suffered in the previous election.

14,707. (Mr. Coleridge.). In fact they preferred to spend the money on themselves, instead of spending it on the petition?—I cannot say what they preferred. I am only speaking of what they said, and you must draw your own conclusion.

14,708. (Mr. Price.) We must draw the conclusion then that the anxiety attendant upon the discovery of corrupt practices on the lawyers' part gave them paralysis, and that good doses of bribery kept them in health on both sides. The best physic a lawyer could have would be to get lots of money spent in bribery. Now go on. You were telling us about the professional men deprecating the petition?—I want to state that Messrs. Wilton and Cook came together, and until I heard it yesterday I did not know how they came together.

14,709. (Mr. Coleridge.) They came to this meeting?—They came to this meeting. When they came into the room first, and heard the current of the conversation, as far as I could judge, they demurred to any idea of seeing Mr. Vanderbyl, or looking for or seeking his retirement. They sat near each other and conversed frequently together, and after a short time joined with the meeting that it was desirable that he should be seen, and that he should be asked to retire; and, as far as I am able to judge, such was the feeling that they displayed for the remainder of the evening, not once offering the slightest objection; they approved of the deputation's leaving, and they were present when it left and they remained until it returned.

14,710. You mean the deputation went that night to Mr. Vanderbyl?—The deputation went that night to Mr. Vanderbyl.

14,711. What time?—I should say between 10 and 11 o'clock. It certainly was not 12 o'clock.

14,712. Where did they go? To the "Globe"?—I will tell you, if you will allow me. I will just tell all I know in my own way.

14,713. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you one of the deputation?—Yes. I have just mentioned it.

14,714. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it to the "Globe" you went?—It was to the "Globe."

14,715. (Mr. Anstey.) Go on, if you please, and tell us all that passed?—The result was that four gentlemen were proposed, and Mr. Wilton, Mr. Collins, myself, and Mr. Palmer. I might go as far as to say that it was a volunteer deputation. No name was proposed or declined; and we went to express the feeling of the meeting, as I was stating before, that Mr. Vanderbyl should retire.

14,716. (Mr. Coleridge.) Well, then, you did go to the "Globe?"—We went to the "Globe."

14,717. And did you see Mr. Vanderbyl?—I must tell you, that in going down (the witness hesitated). I will answer your question.

14,718. Go on. Something occurred in going down the street?—Yes.

14,719. What was it?—When I got outside the door, and as we were going down the street, I said to Mr. Collins, "I really do not quite like this business." I said, "Are we quite sure that we are not being made the catspaws of the professional men?"

14,720. You seem to have had some doubt about your professional advisers?—I come here to tell the truth, and I wish to do so. I will do so as far as I can.

14,721. Go on; you are perfectly right?—And Mr. Wilton, I think, was the gentleman who replied to me, and he said, "Well, we know what we have to do; let "us only be the more cautious in the manner of doing "it." We walked together through Castle Street, over the bridge, never separating, and into the "Globe," and stood in the lobby of the "Globe," some time waiting until Mr. Sully, who was then having his interview with Mr. Vanderbyl, should come downstairs.

14,722. Mr. Sully had gone on before?—Mr. Sully had gone on before.

14,723. (Mr. Price.) That is the gentleman who would not nominate?—That is the gentleman who would not nominate; and there was no disguise about our going, because there was a report a half an hour afterwards in the Conservative camp that we had gone in that manner. Mr. Wilton opened the conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl when we were introduced, stating that the cause of the Liberal party was in all probability lost, unless some arrangement could be made with a view to one of the Liberal candidates retiring; and Mr. Vanderbyl, so far as I could judge, and the impression, I believe, was on the minds of the deputation, appeared to entertain the idea very willingly, until the conversation was carried a point further, and he then learnt that it was he himself that was asked to retire. Mr. Wilton mentioned, amongst other circumstances, the fact of his unpopularity in connexion, or at least his apparent and growing unpopularity in connexion, with the Granite Company's matter and the trial; and he also said there was a feeling of considerable distrust in the town with regard to the probability of his coalescing with the Conservatives. He then very loudly commenced a conversation, which he kept up for a very long time, and it was one of apparent feeling of great grievance that he had been extremely ill-used by the professional men; and for the first time it was, that I heard of any meetings between Mr. Fennelly and the lawyers.

14,724. Tell us exactly what was said, as near as you can word for word, by Mr. Vanderbyl?—Mr. Vanderbyl said, "I have been extremely ill-used by these lawyers."

14,725. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he mention their names?—No, he did not.

14,726. (Mr. Price.) "By these lawyers?"—"By these lawyers." I think at a later period of the evening either he or Mr. Fennelly said, "With one honorable exception," but I do not think he mentioned the name, "with one honorable exception."

14,727. (Mr. Anstey.) Do not go to the latter part of the meeting, but go on to what he said. You said you had not heard of Mr. Fennelly till then?—No, not that Mr. Fennelly was at any of the meetings.

14,728. (Mr. Price.) Was anybody else present with Mr. Vanderbyl on this occasion besides Mr. Fennelly?—No.

14,729. Nobody but Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly?—Nobody but Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly. He said that at his last election they had engaged to secure his return for 1,200*l.*, but they called upon him to pay 3,000*l.* more.

14,730. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he say whether he had paid that 3,000*l.*?—No, he did not, or at least I inferred that it was paid. I never raised the question.

14,731. (Mr. Price.) What was said? Was any remark made upon that by him or by you?—I immediately made the remark—that was the first time I spoke, the conversation had been carried on by Mr. Wilton alone, and then I interrupted, and I said, "Mr. "Vanderbyl, I hope you will not tell us anything "about the professional men; we do not want to "know anything about them. We come here solely "with one object, that is, to try to serve the interests "of the party and of the town. We come here to ask "you to consider our position, the position of the "Liberal party, and to save us one of the seats."

14,732. (Mr. Anstey.) That is, to my mind, less interesting than anything you have said. It makes it necessary for us to go back. You say up to this time that the conversation had been carried on with Mr. Fennelly alone?—No, with Mr. Wilton.

14,733. I thought you said with Mr. Fennelly?—No, Mr. Wilton.

14,734. Tell us what Mr. Vanderbyl said. That is all we want to know?—I am trying to do so as far as I can recollect it. I want to be very exact if I can. When Mr. Wilton recommenced his portion of the conversation after that, and alluded again to the Granite Company and the trial, Mr. Fennelly I think, and Mr. Vanderbyl together went to refer to some papers, and went into a very long and particular account of the whole matter, representing to us the circumstances under which he was placed at the time that he gave that evidence, of his night travel and his delicate health and unpreparedness, and all that sort of thing—that he did not mean what was reported by the papers.

14,735. (Mr. Coleridge.) As an explanation of his evidence?—Yes; and he then went into a long account as to his position with McKenna, and of course we interrupted this again and again, that we did not want to know anything about it, that it was not at all a part of our business, that the evening was getting late, and we should be glad to get his answer.

14,736. I will ask you this question. Did his explanation satisfy you?—I did not understand it. It was so profuse and so overlaid that I did not understand the explanation.

14,737. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, you told him it was getting late, and so on?—I believe that as the conversation was carried on Mr. Vanderbyl more and more saw the desirability of some arrangement, and partly acquiesced; but on his doing so——

14,738. (Mr. Coleridge.) Partly acquiesced in what?—In consenting to a retirement.

14,739. To his own retirement?—To his own retirement; and Mr. Fennelly got up and said, "Oh "no, no, we must take time to consider; we will let "you know in the morning."

14,740. (Mr. Anstey.) And Mr. Vanderbyl stopped?—And Mr. Vanderbyl stopped, and we left.

14,741. Do you think if Mr. Fennelly had not risen and said, "Oh no, no, we must take time to consider, that Mr. Vanderbyl would have taken time to consider?"—Well, his manner, and what he said, which I cannot repeat, was so nearly approximating to a full consent that I think he would.

14,742. Then you left, but before you left did either Mr. Fennelly or Mr. Vanderbyl say, when you were making these objections on the score of his supposed moral delinquencies in financial matters, "Nonsense, what you want is money; you want us "to spend money, that is what you want," or something to that effect?—I ought to mention to you that no such words were used in my presence as were repeated here the day before yesterday as having fallen from Mr. Fennelly's lips, and the words are these, "It is all humbug to talk of the Lundy Granite Company, it is all a question of money." No such words were used in my presence in any such sense, and I do not believe that any such words were used in any sense. As far as I remember no such words were used in any sense.

14,743. Were any such words, to your knowledge, afterwards reported by the deputation, or any member of the deputation, when they returned to give an account of what had taken place?—Most certainly not.

14,744. Not even in private?—Not even in private.

14,745. (Mr. Price.) Then you have a sufficiently clear recollection of it, to be able to say that no such words were used?—I have tried to remember. I have puzzled myself to endeavour to remember if under any condition or form those words were used, and I cannot remember that they were used. I have not the slightest recollection under what circumstances they could have been used, for there was no conversation arising that could have led up to it.

14,746. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Fennelly take an equal part in the conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl?—Not at the commencement, but at the latter portion of the interview he spoke much.

14,747. Did he seem very anxious that Mr. Vanderbyl should not retire?—I could not learn from either which way he inclined. He seemed prepared to hear all that we had to say. It was the first time I had ever seen Mr. Fennelly, the first interview I had ever had with him. He impressed me as being a very capable person, quite——

14,748. Quite able to take care of himself?—Quite able to take care of himself.

14,749. And then you went away?—And then we went away, and we returned the same way that we came.

14,750. (Mr. Price.) Are you quite sure nothing was said at that interview by you, or any of you, as to money, which could have called forth such a remark as that from Mr. Fennelly?—I do not think there was any remark made of that sort. If the remark was made by Mr. Fennelly it must have been made in connection with the professional men when that question was spoken of.

14,751. Exactly. That is what I wanted to draw your attention back to. When Mr. Vanderbyl complained of the expenditure into which he had been led by the lawyers on the former occasion, can you now say whether you can connect that in any way with any remark made by Mr. Vanderbyl as to the same being the object on the last election?—No, I cannot.

14,752. Were you under the impression then that it was represented yesterday before us that that conversation had taken place before you, and in the presence of the deputation? You say you heard with great surprise what had been said the day before yesterday to us, that Mr. Fennelly had made the remark, "This is all humbug, you want money;" and I gather from you that you understood the evidence as if it had been put that the conversation had taken place in your presence and in the presence of the others at the deputation. Now, my own impression is that it was not so at all, that the expression used by Mr. Fennelly, as deposed to by Mr. Cook, was at a subsequent meeting when you were not present, when the lawyers were there?—I did not understand it so. I understood Mr. Cook to speak of Mr. Fennelly's version of the view of the deputation when he came to my house.

14,753. I thought it was different, you can correct it if it is wrong?—I sat on that side of the hall (pointing), and I took a note of it, and no such observation was made.

14,754. We shall soon see what it was. If it is so stated and it is wrong you are at liberty to correct it. My impression is that Mr. Cook said it was afterwards, that it was said at a meeting of the lawyers at Mr. Barham's office?

(Mr. Coleridge.) That was my impression too.

(The witness.) I should like to have it referred to.

(Mr. Anstey.) Let us have the shorthand writer's note.

(The witness.) I do not recollect it; I pencilled it down immediately because it was a matter of such importance to me.

14,755. (Mr. Coleridge.) Let me see if I cannot refresh your memory just as far as this. When the deputation was leaving the room, and when you had got to the head of the stairs, did not Mr. Fennelly follow you and say, "It is all humbug about the Lundy Granite Company, it is money you want"?—Certainly not; I have no recollection of it.

14,756. Just as you were leaving the meeting?—I have no recollection of it.

(Mr. Price, referring to the Bridgwater Mercury.) Mr. Cook said that when you returned you reported that you had seen Mr. Vanderbyl, and likewise Mr. Fennelly, and that Mr. Vanderbyl saw no reason to alter his determination. Then afterwards there comes a conversation with Mr. Fennelly, in which he says: "You know that Mr. Barham has been to me and "made a proposition? I was not aware that he had "done so, but I did not either assent or dissent, and "Mr. Fennelly followed up the conversation by saying that Mr. Barham communicated to him the fact "that Mr. Lovibond had told him he was prepared "with 1,500*l.* on the part of Mr. Barclay's friends, if "Mr. James's friends were prepared with a like "amount. Mr. Fennelly asked me if this was honest "pressure, and was exceedingly bitter with regard to "the manner in which Mr. Vanderbyl had been "treated in the strong desire he entertained to fight "the election on pure principles. I said to him, If "Mr. Barham has made such a proposition as that it "will no doubt be carried out." Then the only other allusion I find in Mr. Cook's evidence to the meeting is this, "I regret very much to have to mention them."

(Mr. Anstey.) I have got the very passage in the shorthand writer's note. Perhaps it will be more convenient to read that.

(Mr. Price.) Very well.

14,757. (Mr. Anstey.) The passage is this: "As far "as I can remember it was after 12 o'clock when that "meeting broke up, I will not be positive of it. My "partner left perhaps a minute before me. I stayed "at the door in conversation with someone and "followed in about a minute, I should think, and on "reaching my house, which is a quarter of a mile from "Mr. Nicholls' on the Taunton Road, I was informed "that a friend of Mr. Vanderbyl's had been there to "inquire for me. Q. Who had informed you?—My "servant. This certainly must have been after 12 o'clock." Then he goes on to state what took place after 12 o'clock, and so on. Then in giving his account of that conversation between himself and Mr. Fennelly at his private house, he goes back to what had taken place at the meeting. "He told me of the deputa- "tion having waited on Mr. Vanderbyl. He had "taken a part in the discussion, and he certainly just "before the deputation were about to leave said to "them, 'Gentlemen, it is all humbug your talking "'about the Lundy Island Granite Company, you "'mean money.' Q. Who said this?—A. Mr. "Fennelly said this to me, and no reply was given "to that by the deputation either one way or the "other"?—Well, sir, I beg most distinctly to say that I heard no such words.

14,758. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or anything to that effect?—Nothing at all, carrying with it any such sense or meaning.

14,759. Anything suggestive of money at all?—Oh, I must tell you, not to us.

14,760. I mean to you?—Nothing.

14,761. (Mr. Price.) What does this mean? It seems that Mr. Lovibond said to Mr. Cook, after making his statement, "Then the last meeting was not without its influence," namely, that Mr. Vanderbyl had screwed up his courage to spend money. "He "alluded unquestionably to the meeting at Mr. "Nicholls'"?—I can only answer for myself. I cannot in any way be responsible for other men's intentions or faults, or whatever was in Mr. Lovibond's mind or in Mr. Cook's mind.

14,762. (Mr. Coleridge.) There were four of you. Were you one of the first to leave the room when the deputation went away?—Yes, to the best of my recollection. I could not say.

14,763. Might not this have been said at the tail end of the deputation without your hearing it?—I do not think so.

14,764. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing you had got out into the passage, and Mr. Fennelly had said to Mr. Wilton, "It is all humbug, you want money," or something of that sort, or "What you want to know is, whether Mr. Vanderbyl intends to bribe as he did at the last election," must you have heard it?—I cannot say that anything of the kind was not said, but I did not hear it.

14,765. I understood you to say, in answer to my friend Mr. Coleridge's question a little while ago, that there was something said about money at that meeting?—In the manner I have previously represented, that Mr. Vanderbyl spoke of his past expenditure, and he also——

14,766. No; of the money to be expended at that election?—He said he had had interviews with the lawyers with regard to the money, and they were anxious to fight.

14,767. (Mr. Anstey.) That you did not tell us. Go on, and tell us about it?—He told us that they had had a meeting at one of the offices, I do not think he named which, in which the question of expenditure was discussed, and that he had refused to spend a farthing, and he gave his reasons; he said that he had consulted with his friends in London, and they strongly objected to his doing so.

14,768. (Mr. Coleridge.) What else?—And that the lawyers, that is the impression on my mind, that the lawyers were uncomfortable with him on that account.

(Mr. Price.) You had better tell us what Mr. Vanderbyl said, because it is quite clear that this is most important.

(Mr. Anstey.) This is the most important part of all you have yet told us.

14,769. (Mr. Price.) Be careful, and do not hurry yourself, but do let us have this, because it is very unpleasant to be obliged, as it were, to drag it from you. Do tell us what Mr. Vanderbyl said had passed between him and the lawyers. Try and recollect, because it is of vast importance?—I cannot repeat the conversation; I can only say it was the impression on my own mind.

14,770. (Mr. Price.) The impression on your mind was, that the lawyers had put the screw upon Mr. Vanderbyl to get him to spend money?—That was the impression on my mind. I do not know that he put it in those words.

14,771. That being your impression, do you think you are wrong in saying that Mr. Fennelly said nothing of the kind which has been deposed to, bearing in mind that what Mr. Vanderbyl had told you had conveyed the impression to your mind that the lawyers wanted him to spend money, and he was disinclined to spend money. Now try and recollect whether you are of the same clear opinion that Mr. Fennelly never said anything of the kind which has been deposed to before us?—He never said it to me. I cannot recollect anything of the kind being said. I have no recollection of it at all.

14,772. You will not undertake to say it was not said?—It is impossible for me to say. A thousand sentences were said. It is impossible in my recollection to say whether it was said or not.

14,773. Let me ask you this. I do not know whether you have already told us, before you went on this deputation had anything whatever been said to you, or in your presence, by any of the lawyers, as to the necessity of spending money if they meant to win the election for the two Liberal candidates?—No; but I must tell you that it was clearly and distinctly understood by every man, woman, and child, in Bridgwater that that was the only way of winning the contest, if there was a fight.

14,774. (Mr. Anstey.) Then, if it was clearly understood by every man, woman, and child, in Bridgwater that it was the only way of winning the contest, if there was a fight, to what am I to attribute the singular delicacy which prevented you, your friends, and the professional men who met you on that occasion, from alluding to that general understanding, from saying a word about it, you having met for the purpose of winning a contest in the event of a fight. How is it that you all, by common consent, avoided that subject?—I can only explain it simply in this way, that it was always thought a prudent course not to talk of it.

14,775. I will put it to you in another way. It being considered a prudent course to avoid that question of bribery, and it always being considered so, and being so considered then, was any allusion made, not to the Bridgwater election at all, but as to the chances of Messrs. Barclay and James winning a certain election for a certain place called "Taunton"?—No.

14,776. Existing in fiction only?—I heard no reference at all to Taunton, or the names of "Barclay" and "James."

14,777. Now I ask you this question distinctly—whatever your own opinions were, I think you have stated them—was there not a feeling on the part of some of that meeting, and so expressed then or afterwards, that although the Lundy Island scandal, and the National Bank scandal, were a very good pretence on which to ask Mr. Vanderbyl to retire, the real reason why it was considered expedient that he should retire was that he was going madly to rush into a contest, and at that time was not prepared to spend, as he had done before, the money necessary to ensure success?—I never heard of any reference to the Lundy Granite Company afterwards, to the best of my recollection.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

8 Sept. 1869.

14,778. Answer my question. Dropping altogether Lundy Island, taking your own language, I will take any language you please to put in my mouth. You have said that you went to him that night to represent to him that he was a tainted character, or something to that effect; that there were rumours in the town about the National Bank, or the Lundy Island Company, or whatever name you like to call it; that there were rumours affecting his character, with respect to his dealings on the Stock Exchange in the city of London, or something of that kind; was there not a feeling on your part, or if not on your part, on the part of some of your set, expressed either that day or afterwards, that it was a very convenient pretext to put forward, but the real reason was—that Mr. Vanderbyl was going madly and blindly into a contest for which he had not provided the necessary bribery funds to ensure success, as he had done in the previous election?—Most certainly not. I never heard the expression from any man's lips.

14,779. Never to this hour?—Never to this hour.

14,780. And therefore the evidence of Mr. Barham, Mr. Cook, and of others upon that point must have taken you considerably by surprise?—Will you kindly refer to what they said?

14,781. I shall not waste the time of the court by reading the notes of other witnesses' evidence. I do not know that I should even read your own evidence over, after the way you have wasted the time of the court. But was it not your impression or the impression of anybody else, or has the evidence of Mr. Barham, Mr. Cook, and others on the point taken you by surprise?—I cannot answer for other people's impressions or their motives, and I am not responsible for them.

14,782. I am not asking you to be responsible for their impressions; but did the questions put to the witnesses, and their answers to those questions, take you by surprise?—Most certainly. I never heard of it before.

14,783. You say that this meeting, at which the deputation was selected to go to wait upon Mr. Vanderbyl, was called in consequence of a consultation which had taken place the night before between Mr. Sealy and Mr. Vanderbyl, that is, the Sunday night?—I was present at that meeting.

14,784. You have not told us of that. You were present at that meeting with Mr. Vanderbyl?—On the Sunday night was the deputation. On the Saturday night I was present. I was at Mr. Sealy's house and asked him that question.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us what took place at Mr. Sealy's house?

14,785. (Mr. Price.) You should have begun with that?—I try to take it in order.

14,786. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Sealy's meeting was before the deputation?—It was on the Saturday evening.

14,787. That would come first?—I attended that meeting and was on the platform, and was asked to go over to Mr. Sealy's house after it was over; I think there were about a dozen present. Mr. Sealy had received a communication from Mr. Fennelly which he read.

14,788. (Mr. Price.) What was that?—It was a copy of the resolution, I believe, passed by the National Bank relating to his retirement with Sir Joseph McKenna. This matter was taken up in the discussion, and it was generally felt that we had no position whatever to enter upon the question, to learn or ascertain its true merits; that we could not constitute ourselves in any way—I think I used those words: I said, "I do not see that we can constitute ourselves into a court of inquiry into this matter," and the nomination coming off on the Monday—I am speaking now of myself—the nomination coming off on the Monday, and the election on the Tuesday, that it was totally out of the question to urge him, or to press his retirement. As far as I can remember, I am not quite sure upon this point, there was no resolution come to, but it was a general feeling that such was the prudent and proper course to pursue. In justice to Mr. Vanderbyl I told them unless a searching and fair inquiry was made it was unfair to ask him to retire.

14,789. (Mr. Anstey.) This is on the Saturday night?—This is on the Saturday night.

14,790. And not on the Sunday. You were a prominent member of a deputation of four on the Sunday, asking him to retire on the very reason that you thought groundless on the Saturday night?—Pardon me, I did not take that view; I did not take the question of the Lundy Island Granite Company into consideration.

14,791. (Mr. Price.) Who was it mentioned it on the Sunday night?—Mr. Wilton; only with reference to his unpopularity with certain individuals in the town, and citing the case of Hammill's declining to nominate him on the Sunday morning, and Mr. Sully's declining to nominate him on the Sunday evening. It was only with reference to that. There was no question of the Lundy Granite Company taken up by us.

14,792. I understood that was the only argument you used?—Not at all.

14,793. What other argument did you use?—The argument that was used was the cause of the party; that if we withdrew one of our candidates, the probability would be that we should save the other seat; that the Conservatives would be most willing to accept one and one. I used that argument forcibly.

14,794. Did you suggest to him that he was the person who ought to retire in preference, because there was this report about his character?—Not directly.

14,795. It was urged upon him?—It was one of the reasons assigned.

14,796. Now I will just read to you Mr. Vanderbyl's own account of this, and ask you whether it is true or false?—I should be very glad to hear it.

14,797. "When the meeting" (in the Town Hall, that is the Saturday night, the public meeting) "was "over, Mr. Sealy, who had been entrusted with the "resolution and the letter from the bank by a Mr. "Fennelly, (who is a partner of Mr. Vanderbyl in a "second business carried on in London, and who had "been staying with Mr. Vanderbyl at Bridgwater for "a few days, Mr. Vanderbyl was in fact too ill after "his return from town to move about much, and "about whom more will be said by-and-by), asked a "few of the leaders of the Liberal party, and who "were present at the meeting, to meet at his Mr. "Sealy's house, to consider the resolution and letter "which had been placed in his hands. The docu-"ments were read, and a conclusion arrived at that "there was nothing which they need take any notice "of, and two or three persons were asked to call upon "Mr. Vanderbyl at the 'Globe' Hotel to state so, "which they did. The persons who attended were" who?—I really do not know.

14,798. Now not knowing who they were, do you confirm the rest of that statement, or do you contradict it upon oath?—Confirm what statement? As to what took place at that meeting?

14,799. Yes?—That is very much the same as I have stated.

14,800. It is very different to what you have stated. Do you contradict or confirm it?

(Mr. Price.) That you went to Mr. Vanderbyl, not, as you say, that you were not competent to form a judgment on Mr. Vanderbyl's conduct, but to state distinctly that having deliberated upon it, there was nothing in his conduct which rendered him ineligible.

14,801. (Mr. Anstey.) Or nothing which they need take any notice of?—My memory will not serve me as to what the message was that was delivered.

14,802. (Mr. Price.) It is different from what you say, namely, that you went to Mr. Sealy's meeting, and that you came to the conclusion that you were not competent to act as a court of inquiry, as it were, upon Mr. Vanderbyl, and it was not discussed in any way whatever ?—All I can say is, I made use of those remarks, that I could not see that we could take the matter up, that we could not constitute ourselves a court of appeal for the purpose of the consideration of the thing.

14,803. Are you able to say that that did not take place, that a resolution was passed that you should wait upon Mr. Vanderbyl and tell him that there was nothing in his conduct that should render him ineligible for Bridgwater ?—I recollect no resolution which was come to, and really I am ignorant of what was the exact form of it, if there was a resolution.

14,804. Who were the gentlemen who went with the deputation to Mr. Vanderbyl to tell him that ?—That I cannot answer. I think I walked down the street as far as the "Globe," and stood at the entrance, but I did not go upstairs. I did not go up to Mr. Vanderbyl. I did not see him.

14,805. (Mr. Anstey.) If you went down with the others who went to Mr. Vanderbyl, you must distinctly recollect that you went down there to communicate to him the conclusion that was arrived at ?—I went.

(Mr. Price.) Or what did you understand you were going for ?

14,806. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you going to say just now ?—I went with them, but did not go upstairs.

14,807. Will you answer the question. When you went down with them, did you or not go with them to communicate the resolution which was arrived at ?—Most certainly.

14,808. What was the conclusion ?—I cannot remember what the conclusion was. I did not go upstairs. I was not upstairs.

14,809. (Mr. Anstey.) To refresh your memory, I will ask you this, was not the real reason of the meeting on Sunday night, which was confined to revoking the decision of the previous day, this circumstance, that to your knowledge, Mr. Vanderbyl having been whitewashed by the resolution of Saturday, had used that resolution for the purpose of promoting his coalition with Mr. Westropp, through the medium of Hennett and Spink, and that he was at the very moment when you were holding your meeting of 12 at one place, he was at that very moment in close communication with Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Westropp ?—I never knew anything of the sort, and I never knew or never heard of any active coalition on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl with the Conservatives, through Mr. Fennelly or Mr. Spink, until it was mentioned here yesterday.

14,810. You did not ?—I did not.

14,811. I will put it in another way, a more general way. Had you not heard some time that Saturday that Mr. Vanderbyl was trying a coalition of some kind with Mr. Westropp, the effect of which would be to return one Tory and Mr. Vanderbyl, and exclude Mr. Kinglake ?—I had not heard of any meeting at which it was spoken of as a thing very likely and probable to occur.

14,812. At what time on the Sunday was it spoken about ?—In the evening. It was one of the topics of conversation.

14,813. And was it not for the purpose of discussing that question that the meeting was held ?—It was not my view.

14,814. Was it not the object of others ?—I cannot tell. It was not the object of myself.

14,815. Will you really answer the question in a straightforward manner. Was it known before the meeting was held ?—No.

14,815*a*. What was known ?—Nothing was known.

14,816. Was the knowledge that it was "very probable," to use your own language, which I really do not comprehend, the knowledge that it was very probable that Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp were going to coalesce, was that arrived at before the meeting of 12 which was held on that Sunday ?—I do not think it was arrived at at all.

14,817. Well, was it thought then ?—It was thought then at that meeting.

14,818. Before the meeting ?—No; it was not before the meeting.

14,819. On what did the meeting form their opinion that this step was a probable step, if they had not heard something about it before the meeting was held ?—I suppose some of the gentlemen who were present at that meeting, and who communicated with others and to me, must have been in possession of the information, otherwise it could not have been communicated.

14,820. And they must have been in possession of it before the meeting ?—Most certainly.

14,821. Then what is the use of this bandying backwards and forwards. When I speak of a meeting, I do not speak of a corporation or of yourself, I am asking you to answer me in reference to all the persons who were at it, if you can. I ask you again, so that it may be clearly understood. Had it not been before that meeting so held, esteemed, or thought, by some of the leaders of the Liberal party, or all of them in this town, that a coalition of the kind described, namely, between Mr. Vanderbyl and the Tories, to the prejudice of Mr. Kinglake, was a thing very likely to happen ?—Most certainly.

14,822. And was not one of the objects, if not the object, for which that meeting was held, to take into consideration the necessary steps to meet that danger ?—Most certainly. I wish to convey that.

14,823. You certainly have conveyed to me the contrary impression, and we have only arrived at your last answer after a very great deal of trouble and waste of time ?—I had no intention of deceiving you. I wished to convey that very thought.

14,824. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now, Mr. Nicholls, go on.—We left the "Globe," Mr. Wilton going to his own house, and Mr. Collins, myself, and Mr. Palmer returning to my house. Those who were there on our return were Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Symmons, Mr. Reed, and Mr. Cook; and we told them of our interview, and delivered to them the message that Mr. Vanderbyl would take time to consider of his retirement until the next morning, and that we were to see him at 10 o'clock.

14,825. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not tell us that, that Mr. Vanderbyl said he would take time to consider of his retirement. You said that Mr. Fennelly said that ?—Well, it was a joint arrangement between them.

14,826. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Vanderbyl at first, as I understood you to say, conveyed the impression to your mind that he was willing to yield to your suggestions, but Mr. Fennelly said, "Stop a bit, you had better take time to consider" ?—Just so.

14,827. Then Mr. Vanderbyl said nothing, and you went away ?—That is how it occurred.

14,828. Are you quite sure Mr. Vanderbyl did not adopt Mr. Fennelly's suggestion, and say he would take time to consider ?—The impression upon my mind was decidedly that he joined Mr. Fennelly in that view.

14,829. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not say so. You undertook to tell us all that Mr. Vanderbyl said at that meeting. Did Mr. Vanderbyl say anything more besides what you have already mentioned on the subject of the spending of money in illegal purposes at the last election ?—Not that I remember.

14,830. Or providing money; sending to London for money ?—Certainly not.

14,831. Or bringing somebody down with money ?—Certainly not.

14,832. Was anything said by him of that kind ?—Nothing.

14,833. Nor by Mr. Fennelly ?—Nothing.

14,834. When you got back to the meeting you delivered your message ?

(Mr. Price.) Before you get back to the meeting I want to ask you, do you remember Mr. Fennelly (he was standing up at the time) saying the word, "Be "honest, gentlemen. The true reason is that Mr.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

8 Sept. 1869.

"Vanderbyl won't accede to the wishes of the solici-
"tors," or "of the lawyers."

(Mr. Anstey.) Or words to that effect.

14,835. (Mr. Price.) Or words to that effect. Those are remarkable words. Those are the very words, "Be honest, gentlemen. The true reason is that "Mr. Vanderbyl won't accede to the wishes of the "solicitors," or "of the lawyers."—Well, I think it is very possible that such words were used.

14,836. (Mr. Anstey.) Of course we know it is possible?—I cannot remember them, but I think it is very likely that such words were used; but I should say——

14,837. (Mr. Price.) Now then wait a moment. Did you yourself then say to Fennelly, "Are you a lawyer"?—I have not the slightest recollection of that.

14,838. (Mr. Anstey.) Did anybody say that?—I think someone asked him if he was a lawyer, but I am sure I did not say it. I think someone asked him.

(Mr. Price.) You know you wished to have it corrected, an impression that had gone forth from the evidence of Mr. Cook, that Mr. Fennelly had said at that meeting, in your presence, that the Lundy Island Granite Company was a pretext, and that the real reason was that he would not spend money, and you wished to be very particular to tell us that no such thing took place in your presence; and now I understand you to say that after you had urged all you could urge upon Mr. Vanderbyl, it is possible, and probable, that Mr. Fennelly did say, "Be honest, gentlemen. "The true reason is that Mr. Vanderbyl won't accede "to the wishes of the lawyers."

(Mr. Anstey.) You say also you distinctly recollect that somebody said to him, "Are you a lawyer"?

14,839. (Mr. Price.) Well now, Mr. Nicholls, would not you like to modify, in fairness to you would not you like to modify, the rather indignant denial which you gave early this morning, that anything was said at that interview as to its being a pretext, the question of the Lundy Island Granite Company, and that anything was said at all about the real reason being the want of money. Would you like to modify your recollection as to that, having said now that it is quite possible, you think, that something was said by Mr. Fennelly at that time like this: "Be honest, gentlemen; "the true reason is Mr. Vanderbyl won't accede to the "wishes of the lawyers," and that somebody did say —not yourself, but somebody—"Are you a lawyer?" Would you like now to modify your denial that that topic was discussed, the question of Mr. Vanderbyl's indisposition to spend money?—I can deny most distinctly that the deputation ever entered upon the question at all, and when it was raised, the question of the lawyers and the spending of money, we interrupted it. Mr. Fennelly spoke so continuously that I should not be safe in saying what he did not say. He said a great deal. He said everything in connexion with the lawyers it was possible to say.

14,840. (Mr. Price.) Pardon me. We understood you to say this morning that it was not true that when you were present anything was said by Mr. Fennelly to the effect that the real reason for wishing to get rid of Mr. Vanderbyl was his disinclination to spend money. I understood you to say that nothing of that kind took place in your presence?—I did not understand it in that sense.

(Mr. Anstey.) What could possibly be the meaning of the question, "Are you a lawyer," unless it had reference to something he had just been saying. What explanation can you give of that consistent with the truth of your first statement?

14,841. (Mr. Price.) Your first statement certainly conveyed to my mind the idea that nothing of the kind took place at that interview which could possibly show that Mr. Vanderbyl was under the impression that it was a question of money that was the bar and the impediment to his being a candidate, and not a question of character or of party or anything else. I understood you to say that nothing transpired at that interview which had that complexion at all. It was all a question of party, as you say, the benefit of the party. Now do you wish to retract or to do away with the impression upon my mind by stating that a great deal was said by Mr. Fennelly in this continuous observation of his, a great deal was said by him showing that Mr. Vanderbyl's friends thought the question of money was the real question?—Undoubtedly that was the impression on my mind.

(Mr. Coleridge.) That is just the contrary of ours.

(Mr. Price.) It is a new light upon the whole thing.

(Witness.) What I want to convey is that I do not remember those words which he used.

14,842. You were very anxious to deny it, and at first I was led away by your anxious denial. My learned colleague put it from the shorthand writer's notes of Mr. Cook's evidence, and put it as at the interview with Mr. Vanderbyl; and you wished it to go forth as a correction of that statement of Mr. Cook that the question of Mr. Vanderbyl's disinclination to spend money was never a question of conversation with you at all?—I had no desire to convey that feeling to you. It was in reference to the words of Mr. Cook.

(Mr. Anstey.) But you went further, Mr. Nicholls. When it was suggested to you, as a mode of explaining the discrepancy, that it might be, as was said, a parting or farewell shot hurled by Mr. Fennelly at the last member of the deputation as he went out of the door, you even went so far as to say that it did not occur for you did not hear it.

(Mr. Price.) What was put to you was this: could such an expression of opinion have been given as a parting shot, as the learned Commissioner calls it, by anyone leaving the room after you did, and you not have heard it, and you said distinctly you must have heard it, and nothing of the sort took place.

(Mr. Anstey.) Other questions were asked about that to show that you possibly might not have heard what took place.

(Mr. Price.) Now, then, let us have it quite clearly. I understand you to say that it is quite possible and probable, if not certain, that in the course of this conversation Mr. Fennelly did distinctly tax you gentlemen that the true reason was that Mr. Vanderbyl would not accede to the views of the lawyers on the question of money.

14,843. (Mr. Anstey.) And that he implied that you gentlemen were dishonest?—I cannot assent that he taxed us.

14,844. (Mr. Price.) You said, "It is quite possible"?—Did he say anything of this kind, because these are remarkable words, and very natural words, I think, to have been used by him?—I cannot remember. I think it is very possible he used such words, but I cannot remember.

(Mr. Anstey.) It is very "possible" that he told you something about the Duke of Wellington's death. We know all things are possible in this world except things that are absolutely impossible. This is not absolutely impossible. But you are asked the question, do you believe that such a thing took place, do you remember it?

14,845. (Mr. Price.) Carry back your recollection. I will ask you this, Mr. Nicholls, and I beg you to be careful before you answer. Now, you having stated as much as you have, have you any doubt on your own mind that something to that effect was said by Mr. Fennelly in your hearing?—The only answer I have is the answer that I made before, that I think it is very likely to have been said, but I do not remember the words.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Not the words, but the effect of them.

14,846. (Mr. Price.) Have you a doubt that Mr. Fennelly expressed himself to that effect in your hearing, and to you and the deputation there present, that the real reason why Mr. Vanderbyl was to be asked to resign was that he would not spend money in accordance with the wishes of the lawyers?—No, I deny that most positively.

14,847. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, that he would not accede to the wishes of the lawyers. Which part do you deny?—That we put the question to him with a view to that.

14,848. (Mr. Price.) No, the question asked is this. Have you any doubt now, considering the way in which I have examined you about it, have you any doubt now that Mr. Fennelly said in your presence, and to you and the others who were the deputation there, something to that effect, that the true reason why you urged Mr. Vanderbyl or why he was to be urged to retire, was that he would not accede to the wishes of the lawyers. I won't say that he used the word "money" at all, but you knew what the wishes of the lawyers were?—I did not.

14,849. Have you any doubt that he said that, or words to that effect?—I do not think he said anything of the sort in connexion with our wish that he should retire. It was a separate thing altogether.

14,850. Did he say so at all?—I do not know.

14,851. Have you any recollection?—I think it is possible that he did. I have no recollection.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You said that he had been taken in and treated ill by the lawyers, that they had let him in for 3,000*l.*, and then wanted more. Was there anything then said by Mr. Fennelly about money being the object at that time, not your object, but the lawyer's object? You have told us that you know that took place.

14,852. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Nicholls, it is very painful to be obliged to say it to a gentleman in your position in this town, but I call your attention to the 7th section of the Act of Parliament relating to these commissions, to which I drew Mr. Lovibond's attention the other day, and there it is made imperative upon a witness, if he wishes to have a certificate, that he should answer the questions that are put to him, which we interpret to mean that he should give plain and specific answers to those questions. Now, let me ask you again, have you any recollection whether when you were urging upon Mr. Vanderbyl that the members of the deputation wished him to retire, Mr. Fennelly said in effect, in effect, "Be honest, gentlemen. The real reason is that "Mr. Vanderbyl won't accede to the wishes of the "lawyers?"—I have said before that I think it is very likely it was said.

14,853. Have you any doubt it was said?—Well, I will say that I have no doubt. I would gladly have said so if I could do it conscientiously.

14,854. You could not forget such a thing?—There was so much conversation. I wanted to remember the exact words.

14,855. Remember that this morning you wanted to correct a statement made by Mr. Cook, which was in effect that such a thing was said. Now you have no doubt that it was as he said?

14,856. (Mr. Anstey.) Were those words said by Mr. Fennelly after Mr. Vanderbyl had given utterance to the causes of complaint which he said he had against the lawyers, namely, that having let him in for 3,000*l.* extra above the 1,200*l.* before, or 3,000*l.* he had not bargained for, in bribing and corrupt expenditure, they wanted him now, they pressed him now, for a contribution of money for similar purposes, and that he would not accede to it. That you have stated now. I want to know whether, when Mr. Fennelly rose up, or was standing up, and made use of the expressions to the effect of which you have at length deposed, whether that was subsequent to Mr. Vanderbyl's having given utterance to that complaint. Was it after Mr. Vanderbyl had spoken about that or not?—I was going to explain that the whole of the remarks that Mr. Fennelly made were after the remarks that Mr. Vanderbyl made.

14,857. Then you can say?—After, if they were spoken at all.

14,858. Therefore you must have clearly understood that when Mr. Fennelly said "accede to the lawyers' wishes," he meant the lawyers' wishes as described by Mr. Vanderbyl in stating his grounds of complaint You must have understood him to refer to that?—Oh certainly. Whatever was said was in connexion with the complaint they made against the lawyers.

14,859. (Mr. Price.) Well, then, I ask you again, and I shall take the trouble to get the shorthand writer to refer to what you have said before, do yon wish to modify in any way the expression of denial which you gave us that anything of this kind took place in your presence, as to its being only a sham this reason which was alleged, and that the money question was the real question, because I understood your denial this morning to be as to the question of its being a pretext or a sham, and that the money, being the real question, was never mentioned at the interview. Do you mean us to understand that?—I do not understand that I ever led you to suppose that. What I wish clearly to be understood is this, that our object in going to that meeting was to endeavour to get Mr. Vanderbyl to retire. We had nothing whatever to do with any pressure to obtain money, I deny it most positively; but Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl brought up the question of the lawyers, and I told him at the very commencement that we did not want to know anything about the lawyers, but they continued to speak about them, and of course it was spoken in our presence.

14,860. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was spoken then?—It was.

14,861. Then you only want to deny that you went there for the purpose of which they spoke? They spoke of it, but you wish to convey to us that when you went there you had no idea of going about money?—Most certainly.

14,862. You do not deny in any way that that conversation took place incidentally when you were there?—The only thing I wish to deny was that those particular words were spoken.

14,863. (Mr. Anstey.) Before it passes out of your mind entirely, Mr. Nicholls, pursuing Mr. Fennelly's account given to Mr. Cook of this very important part of a conversation on Sunday night, I will ask you, is this true or is this untrue, to the best of your recollection, that no reply was given to that, namely, to Mr. Fennelly's words, "Gentlemen, it is all humbug," or, "Gentlemen, be honest," and so forth. Is it true or not that no reply was given to that by the deputation either one way or the other, but it was received in entire silence?—I do not remember the words being used.

14,864. You have already admitted that you did, or words to that effect?

(Mr. Price.) You have no doubt they were used, you say?

14,865. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you answer my question? Is this true or is this false that the deputation made no reply to the words which you have admitted in effect to have been said?—The deputation again and again replied that they did not wish to know anything of the lawyers or the lawyers' matters.

(Mr. Price.) Therefore some allusion must have been made again and again to the pressure of the lawyers upon Mr. Vanderbyl if you again and again said that.

14,866. (Mr. Anstey.) And you have already said that you have no doubt that the words read by my learned colleague the Chief Commissioner—those words or words like them—namely, "Be honest, "gentlemen; the real ground of complaint is that Mr. "Vanderbyl won't accede to the lawyers' wishes"—that those words were used, and in your presence and hearing. I want you now, without further evasion and in a straightforward way, to answer yes or no to this question: have you any doubt that Mr. Fennelly's further statement is also true, that no reply was given to those words by the deputation, either one way or the other, yes or no, have you any doubt about it?—I cannot answer further than I have already answered.

14,867. Then you have not answered a most material question?—I should be glad to do so.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

8 Sept. 1869.

(Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Nicholls, you will understand that an answer which is not according to the tenor of the solemn oath which you have taken to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," is not an answer within the meaning of the Act of Parliament, and I wish now, as you tell me that you cannot answer farther than you have already answered (which is not at all). I wish now to record my opinion that you have not in this most material instance, not to speak of others, given answers within the meaning of the Act of Parliament, and are not, therefore, entitled, as far as I am concerned, to my humble signature to your certificate of indemnity without which it will not be complete. You understand the meaning of that?

14,868. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect any answer being given to some such expression?—I am anxious to tell you everything I know, and as far as I remember.

14,869. Well, go on and answer?—I should be most willing to do so.

14,870. (Mr. Price.) This is a very simple proposition. Did you leave that room, all of you gentlemen, at all with the idea conveyed to your minds that M Vanderbyl had been pressed upon by the lawyers to spend money?—I undoubtedly did.

14,871. How could that be conveyed except by something that had been said either by Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Fennelly?—Because he told us of the interviews which had been held with the professional men at the offices. We knew of it in that way.

(Mr. Anstey.) I hope every other member of this deputation will not take so long as yourself, or we shall not finish with it to-day.

14,872. (Mr. Price.) Well, go on with your story?—If I can throw any further light on this I shall be happy.

(Mr. Anstey.) Did you report this remarkable answer to the lawyers?

14,873. (Mr. Price.) Did you tell the lawyers when you got back, "The fact is that Mr. Vanderbyl is "under a strong impression that it is a question of "money, not a question of character"?—I think we told the professional men that Mr. Vanderbyl was very much in temper about their interviews with him which they had had at the offices. It was the first time we had ever heard anything of these meetings.

14,874. Who were the gentlemen present?—Mr. Cook, Mr. Reed, and Mr. Lovibond.

14,875. Mr. Barham was gone away?—Mr. Barham was not at the later meeting.

14,876. What did they say?—I do not remember any reply that was made. We told them that we had submitted the matter of retirement to Mr. Vanderbyl, and that Mr. Vanderbyl had consented to postpone the consideration until the morning, or rather that Mr. Fennelly had proposed it on Mr. Vanderbyl's behalf.

14,877. (Mr. Anstey.) What lawyers were present when you reported that?—There was Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Reed, and Mr. Cook. Mr. Symmons was there, and shortly afterwards, a few minutes after our return, Dr. Winterbotham and Mr. Mogg came in.

14,878. Mr. Mogg came in?—Yes.

14,879. Mr. Mogg told us to-day that he came there in the first place, and went away before the deputation returned?—He did go away, and I think he had his supper. He lives two doors but one from me, and he came back.

(Mr. Price.) He left us under the impression that he had nothing more to do with it.

14,880. (Mr. Anstey.) If your recollection is right he has again concealed a most material fact from the Commission. Are you quite sure, sir, speaking with due recollection, that you did not find Mr. Mogg there when you went back as one of the deputation to report what you had done?—He was not there.

14,881. Are you quite sure, speaking with the same recollection, that he did come back?—Certainly.

14,882. And stated that he had been to supper?—I do not know that he said anything about supper, but I assumed that he had.

14,883. Did he take any part in the conversation or discussion, or whatever it was, that ensued?—I think it is very likely, but I cannot remember.

14,884. Did you tell him or tell anybody what Mr. Fennelly had said over and over again, you know, to the effect that the real pinch or the real difficulty was Mr. Vanderbyl's determination not to spend money, not to accede to the lawyers' wishes?—I do not think we reported that.

14,885. Did you mention it to anybody there?—No, I think not.

14,886. Not one of them?—I do not think we did.

14,887. Then why did you not?—The question never came up to me in the way which——

14,888. Then if it is so utterly immaterial, as a Bridgwater man, why——?—I repeated everything which I could remember and which I thought it was important to mention.

14,889. Did you imagine that the question whether he should accede to the lawyers' wishes or not (the wishes which you have reported) was to stand over with the other question of retirement till the next morning?—We repeated the conversation.

14,890. Did you give them to understand that what Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly were to take till Monday morning to consider was not only the question whether he would retire, but whether if he did not retire he would accede to the lawyers' wishes, and that the whole was to stand over?—No, I did not understand that there was any question to stand over except the question of retirement.

14,891. Did anybody so state?—No, there was not the slightest allusion to it.

14,892. (Mr. Price.) Was there no suggestion given, nothing said whatever, when you got back, that Mr. Fennelly had continuously as you say, and very often, brought up the subject of money, and that you had very often deprecated discussing it, because you say whenever it was brought up you deprecated the discussion of the quarrel or difference between him and the lawyers. Did not you think it right to tell the lawyers when you got back that that was strongly the view which Mr. Vanderbyl took?—I spoke of the events as they occurred, as far as I thought they were important.

14,893. Did you tell them amongst other things that you had gathered from the interview that Mr. Vanderbyl was angry with them or indignant with them for the pressure they had put upon him with regard to the money? It was a very important matter?—I think I repeated the conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl, and that it had that bearing and meaning.

14,894. That is not an answer?—Then it is just a dullness on my part to understand your question, not an unwillingness to answer.

14,895. Then you did mention to the lawyers when you got back that Mr. Vanderbyl had expressed himself warmly as to the pressure put upon him?—I repeated some portion of the conversation.

14,896. (Mr. Anstey.) And that amongst the rest, that Mr. Vanderbyl felt warmly?—That was the conversation, that was the matter.

14,897. What did they say to that?—I do not think that any reply was made.

14,898. With regard to yourself and the deputation, first of all, at the interview with Mr. Vanderbyl, did you during the interview with Mr. Vanderbyl, when you declined to go into the question at all about the lawyers' wishes, that is, the wishes that he should spend money, you know, did anyone of you tell Mr. Vanderbyl, "Sir, we honour you for your determination, "and if you go to the poll we will support you on "purity principles." Did anyone of you say anything like that?—I do not think anything of the sort was said.

14,899. Did anyone of you when you got back (that is, the second occasion), when you got back to the meeting and met the lawyers, and told them that very point had been raised by Mr. Vanderbyl; did anyone of you turn to the lawyers and say, "You "ought not to press Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money. "Let us go to the poll on purity principles"?—I do not think anything of the sort was said.

14,900. Then have you the smallest doubt, though you had not the courage or the audacity (whichever you like to call it) so to express it, have you the slightest doubt that the deputation generally, and yourself in particular, were quite prepared to accept Mr. Vanderbyl's determination to change his previous resolution, and to accede to the wishes of the lawyers by spending money in corrupting the voters at the poll, to accept it and submit to it if he chose to do it? Have you any doubt that you at that time were fully prepared to accept Mr. Vanderbyl's determination, supposing he were to form his determination between that and the next morning to spend money, as the lawyers wished him to do, in corrupting the voters?—As an alternative I admit that such a thing appeared possible, as an alternative; but we did not approach him with that view.

(Mr. Price.) Never mind what you approached him with. That is not part of the question?

(Mr. Anstey.) Then that will be the meaning of Mr. Lovibond's exclamation the next day, "Then the meeting of last night had its effect?"

(Mr. Price.) "That meeting of last night was not without its influence."

14,901. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that so?—I should think it was. I want to convey to you all I know in the simplest way I can.

14,902. (Mr. Price.) I am going to ask you a question, and therefore you will have an opportunity of stating all you know. Did you leave that room, and come away from Mr. Vanderbyl impressed with the notion that Mr. Vanderbyl did not want to spend money at the election?—Most certainly.

14,903. That he did not want to spend money?—It was so stated by him.

14,904. And you left the room with that impression?—It was so stated by him.

14,905. Did you leave the room with the impression that Mr. Vanderbyl objected to spend money?—Oh yes, certainly.

14,906. Now then, that being so, and you, I suppose, are anxious to have elections conducted on pure principles in Bridgwater?—Previous to this election I had always urged and pressed it.

14,907. Then having left Mr. Vanderbyl's presence impressed with the idea that he wanted a pure election, and you being a man desirous of seeing Bridgwater contested on pure principles, why did not you say to the lawyers when you got back, "Gentlemen, it is no "use attempting to squeeze Mr. Vanderbyl to get "money. Let us fight it out as a pure election?"—Well, I did wrong; I admit that I did wrong.

(Mr. Anstey.) And you have admitted already that you were prepared to accept that determination to spend money as an alternative rather than sustain defeat. That is what you mean by an alternative?

14,908. (Mr. Price.) Rather than be beaten?—What I meant by an alternative was, that if he did not retire there was no possibility of his contending for the election unless some arrangement was made such as the lawyers considered necessary.

14,909. And money be spent?—And money be spent.

14,910. (Mr. Anstey.) You were ready to accept that alternative if he did not retire?—I was not willing.

14,911. I say "ready"?—I was not ready.

14,912. You have said already you were ready?

14,913. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you acquiesce in it?—I did not acquiesce in it.

14,914. (Mr. Price.) Why did not you express it at the meeting? Here you were, a body of gentlemen wishing to get the borough purified, wishing to get rid of the thraldom of the lawyers. Why did you not when you came back again say, "We will not "admit such an alternative as that of spending money. "Mr. Vanderbyl does not wish it, and we call upon "you to abandon the idea"?—There is no doubt that that is the course we ought to have pursued.

14,915. Did any one of you twelve pure gentlemen suggest——?—There were not twelve then; there were only four.

14,916. Well, did any one of you four gentlemen who, I suppose, were all actuated by the same desire to get rid of bribery, did any one of you say that to the lawyers when you got back?—No. I have replied that there was no such remark made.

14,917. (Mr. Anstey.) You have also replied you were prepared to accept the determination of Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money, supposing he made that determination by the morning. You said distinctly to me, as will appear by the shorthand writer's notes if you deny it, that you were so prepared as an alternative?—Yes.

14,918. One minute ago you said you were not prepared. You go on contradicting yourself at every stage?—I am not aware of it. I am trying to speak to the best of my mind.

14,919. (Mr. Price.) Can there even be any chance of a pure election under such circumstances as those you have detailed? You see, four gentlemen go as a deputation to argue the matter with a candidate as to his retiring, and so get rid of a contest; the candidate expresses his desire to fight the contest without expending money, and yet those gentlemen do not intimate that to the lawyers who control the money expenditure. Can there be any hope for Bridgwater that any election can ever be conducted on pure principles? Whenever you do get a candidate who objects to spend money it is the same thing?—I had stood up for it so many times before without success that——

14,920. Then can there be any hope that such a thing can ever happen as a pure election in Bridgwater when gentlemen in your position knock under to the lawyers?—There is no doubt that there is a certain amount of moral cowardice in Bridgwater, and if they had been manful and honest this would never have come about.

14,921. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there any doubt at all that there is a very infinitesimal amount of moral courage in Bridgwater?—I could narrate circumstances in connexion with these elections to show I have made efforts for the purpose of rectifying this.

14,922. (Mr. Price.) Is the ascendancy in a party point of view worth purchasing at such a sacrifice?—Most certainly not; and I am exceedingly vexed that I ever was found in the disgraceful and offensive position in which I have found myself as the result of that meeting; for when I entered it I had not the slightest intention of doing other than simply asking for his retirement. The best proof of that is, that the very first gentleman I asked to meet us was Mr. Francis Thompson, the last person in Bridgwater that I should have consulted.

14,923. As you have mentioned the name of Mr. Thompson, I will ask did he withdraw from all co-operation with the Liberal party on account of what took place on that day?—I am not aware he did. I believe he voted.

14,924. That is not co-operation?—I do not think he has taken any active part in the elections since the election of Mr. Bagehot.

14,925. He never expressed to you his disgust at the way in which you and others who professed to stand up for purity of election, and who signed that petition—you were one of them, I think?—No, I was not.

14,926. Well, those who signed the petition of 1866, had themselves gone deeply into corrupt practices at this election. Has he ever expressed his disgust at that?—He has not. Will you allow me to explain in connexion with Mr. Bagehot's election——

(Mr. Price.) We will come to Mr. Bagehot's election afterwards.

(Witness.) Then may I go on with this matter and finish it?

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

8 Sept. 1869.

14,927. I think you stated that it has become a matter of discussion that Mr. Hammill would not propose Mr. Vanderbyl?—It was stated that evening at that meeting.

14,928. Did you know Mr. Hammill's reason for not proposing him?—I did not.

14,929. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you know Mr. Sully's reason?—I think that Mr. Sully rather followed in the wake in consequence of Mr. Hammill's declining. He did not see why he should step into a gap which was not a very respectable one. That is just my own impression.

14,930. Then I will ask you, did anybody object to propose or second (no matter which) Mr. Vanderbyl besides Mr. Hammill and Mr. Sully?—I was not aware until I heard it yesterday, when Mr. Cook stated it, that he had invited Mr. Collins, until I heard yesterday from Mr. Cook's lips that he had asked Mr. Wilton and Mr. Collins.

14,931. Did any one of the persons who objected to propose or objected to second Mr. Vanderbyl ever state as his reason for so objecting that Mr. Vanderbyl was going to bribe?—I never heard Mr. Sully say so. I have never had any conversation with Mr. Hammill, and until yesterday I did not know that Mr. Wilton or Mr. Collins had been asked.

14,932. Did they either of them object to him on the ground of his alleged delinquencies in the National Bank and Lundy Island Granite Company matter?—I think that that was a very strong reason with Mr. Sully.

14,933. But not with Mr. Hammill?—I cannot tell. I have had no conversation with Mr. Hammill on the subject. It was reported that Mr. Hammill's reasons were the revelations that were made at the trial.

14,934. Were Mr. Hammill and Mr. Sully, or either one of them, present at a meeting on the Saturday where that very question was raised, and the conclusion come to which I read to you from Mr. Vanderbyl's brief, according to which Mr. Vanderbyl was cleared?—Mr. Hammill was not.

14,935. Was Mr. Sully there?—I think Mr. Sully was there.

14,936. And yet Mr. Sully stated that as his objection to propose or second Mr. Vanderbyl on the following Monday morning, not more than 36 hours afterwards?—I cannot remember any words Mr. Sully used. It is only an impression on my own mind.

14,937. If this was so, have you any doubt, Mr. Sully having concurred in the conclusion on Saturday night, and then having made that an objection to his proposing Mr. Vanderbyl on the Monday morning, that that could not have been his real reason?—I think he objected on Sunday night.

14,938. Well then, still more, do you suppose, having regard to the fact that you and the rest of you on Saturday night whitewashed Mr. Vanderbyl, and on the Sunday night raised the same imputation against him without any further evidence, that that was so done for some other reason than that which you were pleased to avow on the occasion, you and Mr. Sully?—Will you allow me just to explain that?

14,939. Was that so or not?—I did not follow your question.

14,940. Then I wish you would follow it. First of all Mr. Sully concurred in the conclusion come to on Saturday night, after having heard everything that had to be offered at that time, that the imputation against Mr. Vanderbyl was one not worth inquiring into, and there was no reason why he should not stand. On the following night, according to you, he raised that very imputation himself as something which ought to be inquired into, and a reason, without further evidence, why Mr. Vanderbyl should retire, or as a reason why he should not propose or second Mr. Vanderbyl. Have you any doubt that Mr. Sully must have had some unavowed reason for taking that course?—Will you allow me——

14,941. No, I wont. Answer my question. Have you any doubt about it? You can explain afterwards?—I cannot give you an opinion.

14,942. Well, it speaks for itself?—It appeared that Mr. Vanderbyl with Mr. Fennelly saw Mr. Hammill (at least I only speak of it from the report) on the Sunday morning with regard to Mr. Vanderbyl's nomination, Mr. Hammill declining; and as they came up the bank of the river from Mr. Hammill's they then saw Mr. Sully, and I believe Mr. Sully then assented; and it was a fact that this declining on the part of Mr. Hammill influenced Mr. Sully, I think, to a very considerable extent to decline to nominate.

14,943. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was the objection to Mr. Vanderbyl on the ground of the Lundy Island Granite Company, that he had done something that was disgraceful about rigging the market, or something of that sort? Was that so, yes or no? Was that the imputation against him?—It was an imputation against him.

14,944. Then if that was the imputation against him you thought he was not of sufficient purity to represent the borough of Bridgwater. Was that so?—He was not the most acceptable candidate.

14,945. Then the borough of Bridgwater required an exceptionally pure candidate to represent it, was that it? Did you require a better man here on account of the character of the place than had been required elsewhere?—I can hardly answer that question.

14,946. Was that so? Mr. Vanderbyl had stood at Yarmouth?—Of course that is the inference.

14,947. (Mr. Anstey.) The night before, when you whitewashed Mr. Vanderbyl from every charge to which my learned colleague has just referred) the meeting after the town hall meeting), did you then know, you personally, that Mr. Vanderbyl had determined not to bribe?—No, I did not.

14,948. But on the following night, when you did not whitewash him, you knew he was determined not to bribe?—It was spoken of at the meeting.

14,949. It will be for you to say whether there is any connexion between those two facts, that when you whitewashed him you did not know that he would refuse to bribe, but when you did not whitewash him, less than 24 hours afterwards, you did know it; is there?—There is no connexion as far as I know.

14,950. (Mr. Coleridge.) You said that it was better that Mr. Vanderbyl should do what the lawyers recommended as an alternative. You made use of that expression. Did you mean by that that if he would not withdraw altogether he must, if he was to have any chance of coming in, spend money? Is that what you mean by the alternative?—I did, most decidedly.

(Mr. Anstey.) He said so just now.

(Mr. Price.) That is the reason that I put to him whether there could ever be any hope of a pure election in Bridgwater while gentlemen like these were prepared, rather than be beaten politically, to accept the alternative of profligate bribery. That is the reason why I put it to him, could there even be any hope while there was such a want of moral courage about the place.

(Witness.) I do not wish to accuse others, but I am just in the posilion of many others in the town.

14,951. There is a want of moral courage in Bridgwater to stand up against the pressure of bribery?—Most certainly.

14,952. Therefore, all the Liberal party can do is to knock under to the lawyers?—I will explain to you that at the previous election an attempt was made to rectify this very thing.

14,953. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that all that took place that night?—As far as I can remember I have told you everything as truthfully as I can.

14,954. When did you learn that Mr. Vanderbyl had improved the night that you granted to him, so improved it as to come to the conclusion of acceding to the lawyers' wishes, and spending 1,500*l.* in bribery?—I never knew of any arrangement, but the next morning, while I was at breakfast, I saw Messrs. Reed and Cook coming into my house. I got up from the table and went to the door, and Mr. Cook said, "You "need not see Mr. Vanderbyl; I have seen him."

14,955. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he tell you Mr. Fennelly was going to town?—I must tell you exactly——

14,956. (Mr. Anstey.) Wait one moment, please, before you come to that. There is something that you have omitted on the night before. I asked you whether there was anything else that happened, and you said you did not remember. Now, it is perfectly clear from what Mr. Cook said that Mr. Vanderbyl was to communicate with you the next day?—I was to see him the next morning. I think I stated that. Mr. Reed, who was with him, just as he was passing away, used those words, "It is all right."

14,957. (Mr. Coleridge.) You knew what that meant?—I suspected.

14,958. Did you suspect that it meant that Mr. Vanderbyl would retire, or that it meant Mr. Vanderbyl would spend money?—I suspected that it meant that Mr. Vanderbyl would spend money.

14,959. (Mr. Anstey.) Then there is something more you have not told us?—I have told you everything I know. I did not even open my mouth to that, and I had nothing more to do with that day's business, except, I believe, in the morning Mr. Cook came to me, which he forgot to mention yesterday (I have no doubt he forgot it), and asked me if I would nominate Mr. Vanderbyl, and I said I would rather not.

14,960. Why did you not do it?—I did not nominate Mr. Vanderbyl simply because I am not accustomed to public speaking, and I declined it.

14,961. Why did you not second him, which would require no speech?—I am not accustomed to coming before the public, and I declined it.

14,962. Did you give any advice to Mr. Cook or any of the lawyers, or furnish any information touching the disposal of that money?—I knew of no money.

14,963. Well, then, touching the best mode of dealing with voters who were dangerous, and who you were afraid would be bought up by the Conservatives?—I knew nothing about it.

14,964. Did you poll early, or did you not?—I am not quite sure. I think it was about 12 or 1 o'clock. I think about 12 o'clock, nearly.

14,965. Was the tide running against the Liberals or against the Conservatives then?—I think the Conservatives had a majority at the poll at the time I polled.

14,966. Then it was running against the Liberals?—Yes.

14,967. And increasing, was it?—No, I think not. Almost at that time there was very nearly a stand still. There was very little polling in the middle of the day.

14,968. (Mr. Price.) When you left the lawyers, the last thing on the Sunday night, you left without anything being resolved upon except merely you were to see Mr. Vanderbyl in the morning?—That was so.

14,969. That was really the conclusion to which you came?—Yes, it was; Mr. Wilton and I and Mr. Collins.

14,970. It stood in that way; that Mr. Vanderbyl was to announce to you in the morning his determination whether he would stand or not?—He was.

14,971. That was the result of this last interview you had on the Sunday night?—It was.

14,972. If so, how can you account for Mr. Reed saying, if there had not been any discussion about money, and the disinclination to spend money, how can you account for his saying to you "It is all right"?—Well, Mr. Reed frequently speaks very readily, and I was very much surprised at his want of discretion in using those words.

14,973. (Mr. Coleridge.) By "readily" you mean indiscreetly, don't you?—Well, he speaks hastily, and I thought it very great folly on his part to blurt it out. I thought if he knew anything he had better keep it to himself.

14,974. (Mr. Anstey.) All that he said was, "All right." Unless there is something which you have carefully and deliberately concealed from us about money which took place on the previous night the words would have conveyed the most innocent meaning to your mind?—I have not the least hesitation in saying that—I won't say the professional men as a body, but some of them—were desirous——

14,975. That is not the question. I am not asking you what they knew or what they desired, but I am endeavouring to obtain from you, by warning and interrogation and everything I can, the revelation of something not yet revealed by you. There must have been some secret of the night before to which those apparently innocent words of Mr. Reed, "It is all right," were the key, and which in its turn would be the key to the meaning of those apparently innocent but really guilty words, because they were so guilty that you blamed him in your heart for his indiscretion in blurting them out. Now, what is it that you have concealed from us?—Well, I have stated just now there was not the slightest doubt in my mind about the alternative proposition.

14,976. (Mr. Price.) Was it discussed?—No.

14,977. Then all I say is, what a marvellous thing if it was not before you left deliberately discussed, that Mr. Reed the next morning should take the trouble to say to you, "All right."

14,978. (Mr. Anstey.) I will put it to you in another way. Out of your own mouth you have betrayed yourself. You say it was arranged that you were on the following day at 10 o'clock to receive Mr. Vanderbyl's ultimatum; that is, his final determination on the matter proposed to him. Is that so?—Yes, it was.

14,979. Hitherto, you have told us that the only matter proposed to him was that he should retire, and retire because of his unpopularity among certain persons, who thought rigging the market was a disgraceful thing?—And in connexion with the certainty of our losing the contest provided we went to the poll with two candidates. The only way in which we could by any possibility save one of the seats was by the retirement of one of the candidates.

14,980. (Mr. Price.) Or by the alternative?—Yes.

14,981. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand you now at length to tell us what we have been so long endeavouring to obtain? When you left him on the previous night it was understood between you that the matter on which he was to deliberate during the night was, "First of all, shall I retire; and secondly, if I do not "retire, shall I accede to the lawyers wishes and "spend the money, the only alternative in order to "obtain success?"—No doubt that was apparent to his mind.

14,982. (Mr. Price.) Apparent to yours?—No.

14,983. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the decision that he was to communicate to you?—No, it was not.

14,984. Then if it was not, how do you account for this, that when in the morning Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook came to you and told you, not "Mr. Vanderbyl is going to retire," but "Mr. Vanderbyl is going to bribe," for that is what he told you, though not in words, you at once agreed and saw it was unnecessary to go and see him at 10 o clock?—That is quite so.

14,985. Then you must have known that is one of the points on which Mr. Vanderbyl was going to communicate with you, you must have known that was one of the points on which he was going to accede to the lawyers' wishes?—It never entered my mind.

14,986. Then how do you account for your ready acquiescence in Mr. Cook's suggestion that you need not go to Mr. Vanderbyl, and Mr. Reed adding in words which to your mind conveyed bribery, "It is all right," you at once acquiesced, and did not go down to Mr. Vanderbyl to learn his decision?—(No answer.

14,987. How do you account for that?—There is no doubt I had the idea in my mind that that thing was possible.

14,988. (Mr. Coleridge.) You knew it?—No.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

8 Sept. 1869.

14,989. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Vanderbyl was going to consider it during the night?—Not the question of bribery.

14,990. Do you mean to say that it never entered your mind that Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Fennelly having said something of the kind I have read to you about the real objection being that he would not acquiesce in the suggestion of the lawyers, and you having admitted that something to that effect was said—do you mean to say Mr. Vanderbyl was not going to reconsider his determination as to fighting the question on pure principles.

14,991. (Mr. Coleridge.) The alternative?—If you wish me to use another term I say I think there is no doubt Mr. Vanderbyl looked at it as an alternative, and I looked at it as an alternative.

14,992. Spending money?—Spending money.

14,993. (Mr. Anstey.) You expected to receive his decision about it in the morning?—No.

14,994. (Mr. Coleridge.) What then? You were going at 10 o'clock?—I was going at 10 to know whether he would resign. I do not think Mr. Vanderbyl would have told us he was going to spend money.

14,995. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing he had said, "I am not going to retire," and told you nothing more, what would you have said to him?—Then in all probability he had made an arrangement with the professional men.

14,996. Then all this is just hypocrisy; all this concealment from the real business in hand is what Mr. Fennelly described to you as "real humbug and sham, and the reverse of honesty in you, gentlemen," as he expressed it. Is not that so?—No.

14,997. (Mr. Price.) You cannot see it in that light?—I do not. I found after we had got into it there was all this about it, and I regretted very much the position I was in.

14,998. (Mr. Coleridge.) Having all you have told us in your mind, when Mr. Reed said to you in the morning it is all right, did you not, by a sort of freemasonry of corruption, know that that meant bribery?—I did.

14,999. You knew it; you said just now you only imagined it.

15,000. (Mr. Anstey.) Having done that, what earthly scruple could you have had to strengthen the hands of your associates in the work of bribery by giving them all the information in your power as to the best and most economical mode of buying up the "cattle" that would be in the market on the following day? You said just now that you never did such a thing. What earthly scruple could you have had?—(No answer.)

15,001. (Mr. Price.) From that moment I suppose you had no doubt that money was going to be spent in bribery?—I had no doubt.

15,002. Then you still acted with the party taking an active part, or did you stand aloof?—No, I went on the hustings.

15,003. And stood by your candidate and hurrahed, I suppose, and held up your hand for him, which was voting for him at the nomination; and did you from that moment ever hint to any of the gentlemen acting that you objected to the course that was being taken, or that you should yourself withdraw as you say Mr. Thompson did? Did Mr. Thompson go to the hustings?—I do not think he did.

15,004. Then I want to know, if you had no doubt in your own mind that bribery was to be the only thing the next day, and you desired to keep your hands clean, and your conscience clean, why you did not say, "I will have no more to do with this transaction. I will "give my vote and that is all"?—I admit that evening that I was dragged into it without my knowledge; if the question had been raised at the commencement of the evening whether I would go and see Mr. Vanderbyl with the idea of pressing him to spend money, I would never have gone near the place. I had not the slightest idea at the time, and the best proof is the very gentlemen I asked to join me.

15,005. Is there any difference when the thing is countenanced by gentlemen like yourself in a moral point of view between the conduct you pursued and the conduct of Bussell and others who distributed the money? is there any difference that you can see on looking back on it?—No, there is no doubt that we are all equally at fault and equally criminal. I admit it.

15,006. (Mr. Anstey.) Then perhaps you will tell me that during the following day, being now in for it, did you give any advice or any assistance in any way as to the disposal of Mr. Kinglake's or Mr. Vanderbyl's bribe fund?—No.

15,007. Why not? You had been hurrahing at the husting where the Bribery Act was read, I suppose, was not it?

15,008. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or perhaps they do not read the Bribery Act at Bridgwater hustings, do they?—I think they do.

15,009. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you compromising with your conscience in saying, "Though I will employ another briber I will not bribe myself"?—I do not say I was compromising with my conscience, it is not one of those sort of things that one would like to appear in.

15,010. I do not think you did, if you ask me. Who were the persons you say dragged you in; I suppose it is the old story of "The woman tempted me, and I did eat;" is not it? Who are the persons who tempted you?—I do not blame anybody. If there is any blame due it is to me for having invited those gentlemen to join me at that meeting.

15,011. Speaking for myself, we have not found you a very tractable or docile person. If not already predisposed to it, it must have taken a great deal of pressing, quite equal to that of to-day, if your statement is true, and you had such a strong objection, before you were led into it. Now, who were the persons who pressed you?—No one.

15,012. Are you a native of Bridgwater?—Yes.

15,013. And I suppose you imbibed it with your mother's milk?—No, I never had to do with elections previously.

15,014. Is this the first one?—Except that I endeavoured to check and prevent it.

15,015. Are you one of the justices of this borough?—Yes.

15,016. How long have you been so?—I think since 1865.

15,017. Since the election petition?—Some four or five years.

15,018. Are you an alderman?—Yes.

15,019. Have you been mayor?—No.

15,020. I suppose this revelation will not in the least degree militate against your prospects of election to the mayoralty?—I do not desire the office.

15,021. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you passed it?—No, I have not.

15,022. What did Mr. Mogg say when he came back the last time?—I think you asked me before, and I do not remember his saying anything, only he was present.

15,023. And heard all that had taken place?—He heard what was spoken, but I am not quite certain whether the conversation was repeated when he and Mr. Winterbotham came in, which was repeated on our return in the first instance.

(Mr. Mogg.) Will you have the kindness to ask whether I was present when he returned?

(Mr. Coleridge.) No, he said you were not, and you came in afterwards.

(The witness.) You came in with Mr. Winterbotham about 10 minutes after.

15,024. I believe in this borough the rule about cockades, and ribands, and that kind of thing is entirely disregarded?—I think so.

15,025. And when the Liberal party want colours they buy them of you?—I believe they have had colours at our place at times.

15,026. What was the amount last time ?—I was told on Friday night. I have been away from home for the last fortnight, but I do not think there was a penny on the last election.

15,027. In 1866 ?—I believe there was a bill then for some colors, and I believe it is 12*l.*

15,028. Anything in the other election of 1866 ?—I was not aware of that bill until Friday night.

15,029. In 1866, Mr. Bagehot's election ?—I cannot answer until I refer to the books.

15,030. Have not colours been had at your shop at every election since you have been in the trade at election times ?—No, at one election I heard that a large bill was sent in for colours, and directly I heard it I gave instructions on no account to allow another penny to be entered to an election committee.

15,031. How much was it ?—I heard there was a large bill of 60*l.* went in from one of the drapers.

15,032. Not from yourself ?—Not from myself, and immediately gave instructions on no account to let another penny be entered to an election committee.

15,033. (Mr. Price.) When did you give those instructions ?—I should think it was the last election ; I am not quite sure.

15,034. Had you ever had a bill of your own outstanding from one election to another ?—I believe there was ; I did not know it until Friday night. I do now from the statement which my brother has made to me of which I was not aware that those colours were furnished in our shop to an order, I believe, of Benjamin Lovibond's clerk, and they were furnished without my knowledge.

15,035. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that Foster ?—Fletcher I think.

15,036. Who would be the person to enter the thing in the books ?—We have a clerk.

15,037. Who would he receive instructions from as to how they should be entered in your book if ordered by a clerk of Lovibond's ? Would he enter them to the debit of the candidates ?—I have not the least idea how they are entered.

15,038. There is a bill of '65 election committee, Kinglake and Shelley, debtors to Nicholls and Co., 12*l.* 12*s.* 1*d.* for flags, ribbons, cambric, and silk handkerchiefs, and that is not settled apparently until September 28th, 1866, which would be after the date of Vanderbyl's election ; how do you account for that ?—I cannot explain it ; I have never seen the bill before.

15,039. Here it is (handing it to the witness). The goods are ordered and debited to Shelley and Kinglake in 1865, and the bill is not paid until after Vanderbyl's election, and no doubt by his money, in 1866 ?—I did not know anything of it.

15,040. Who would be responsible for allowing an account of that kind to be debited, in the first place, and to remain unpaid. There is interest chargeable on your bill after six months' credit ; you do not seem to have charged interest upon it, though it was not paid uutil more than a year after ?—In our large business we have some hundreds of accounts, it would pass through the hands of our clerks.

15,041. In 1866 there is an account of 2*l.* 12*s.* 1½*d.* for ribbons debited to Walter Brogden, Esq., that does not seem to have been paid.

(The witness.) Allow me to see it. (It was handed.)

15,042. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that included in the money afterwards paid by Mr. Vanderbyl's money ?—I do not know, and I did not know of those bills until I saw it reported the other day.

15,043. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you keep a cashier ?—We keep a clerk.

15,044. Who is a cashier in fact ?—No, my nephew is cashier.

15,045. (Mr. Price.) Supposing instead of 12*l.* 12*s.* it had been 100*l.*, in your large business would you have thought there was any necessity for you to inquire about that ?—Such a thing could not happen without coming to my knowledge.

15,046. It is only the smallness of the bill which could escape you ?—I think so.

15,047. Suppose it was 50*l.* ?—I think I should have known it then.

15,048. How far would the limit be extended ; that you would charge the candidate, and leave it unpaid, and then some one should go and make a claim on your behalf upon the next candidate more than a year afterwards, and get it paid from his money ?—I think if a similar amount as that had been added to that the probability is that it would have come to my knowledge.

15,049. Twenty-five pounds ?—It is not so much, the amount, but the second transaction.

15,050. As a respectable man would you have sanctioned such a notion as this, that anybody in your establishment should have gone and compelled Mr. Vanderbyl to pay it by his money ?—Most certainly not.

15,051. Do not you think it as disgraceful a form of bribery and corruption in one sense as anything which has been proved before us, as to monies given to a mariner for instance ?—If I had known it.

15,052. (Mr. Anstey.) As a tradesman I will ask you further is not there a kind of extortion in it, that is to say, here I have a demand on a man who accepted a certain seat, with whom you are not in any way connected by blood or marriage or representation, to whom you say, "If you do not pay me this money I will do what I can to prejudice your election." Is not that the impression made on the mind of every candidate to whom the claim for a bad debt against a former candidate or member is presented ?—It would have had no effect on my mind.

15,053. Is not that the natural effect it would have on my mind if I came down as a candidate, and such a rascally demand was made on me ?—I only mention here that I did not know how the bills had been paid ; most decidedly it is most objectionable.

15,054. (Mr. Price.) I think it is due to you that you should tell us who would have the audacity to go down to Mr. Vanderbyl's committee, or the treasurer whoever the person was who distributed the money, and insisted on payment of that bill of yours ?—I never knew it was done.

15,055. Who gave the receipt to that, because we must have him here and know the stipulations he made, whether it was with regard to your vote ?—I shall be able to tell you. I think this is the writing of the young lady in our counting house.

15,056. We must have the young lady here, she may have said, "Mr. Nicholls will not vote for you unless you pay the bill."

15,057. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is her name ?—Miss Jones, I do not know her christian name.

15,058. (Mr. Price.) Is she in your shop now ?—Yes.

15,059. (Mr. Anstey.) Did your house supply in like manner ribbons and other trash of that kind to Mr. Vanderbyl's first election, the second election of 1866, because this is Mr. Bagehot's contest ?—Does not that bill say ? If you will allow me to refresh my memory I will gladly go and look at my books, and give you every information.

15,060. We should like to know, Mr. Vanderbyl having been called upon to pay in July 1866 12 guineas left unpaid by Mr. Bagehot in June, how many more was he called upon to pay on that occasion for stuff of that kind supplied to himself ?—I shall be able to look at my books and give you the particulars tomorrow. I do not attend to the book department in our house.

15,061. (Mr. Price.) Are we to understand from you that this is the first time you have ever heard of a bill of yours which you had against Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley being paid by Mr. Vanderbyl ?—It is.

15,062. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you a partner ?—I have.

15,063. Has he a vote ?—Yes, and he is subpœnaed.

15,064. What is his name ?—Alfred Nicholls.

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F Nicholls.

8 Sept. 1869.

15,065. Have you any other partner?—No, I have not.

15,066. Did both yourself and your brother vote for Mr. Vanderbyl in 1866, and for Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl in 1868?—Yes.

15,067. It may be your brother that attended to this business of the bad debt of Mr. Bagehot?—We never regarded it as a bad debt.

15,068. You did not press it against Mr. Bagehot against whom you pretended to have the demand, and you do press it against one perfectly free from it?—I am not aware there was any pressure.

15,069. (Mr. Price.) But is it an ordinary transaction to debit one man and make him pay the debts of another?—I cannot answer you the question for I know nothing about it.

15,070. Did not you know there was a rule in this borough over and over again, that if any candidate should leave bills unpaid at one election, before the next man who came had a chance of being returned he must clear up the old score?—No, I did not.

15,071. You never heard of that?—No.

15,072. Your brother must have?—I cannot answer.

15,073. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know where Mr. Bagehot stayed when he was in Bridgwater; what hotel?—I rather think he lodged at Allan's.

15,074. Where did Mr. Vanderbyl lodge when he came in July 1866, at the "Globe"?—I think at the "Globe."

15,075. Supposing that Mr. Vanderbyl had gone to Allan's room, would not you have thought it a very extraordinary thing if you or any person for you, had said to him, supposing this case that neither Mr. Bagehot nor Mr. Vanderbyl had come in quest of a seat, but merely to lodge, and Mr. Bagehot takes rooms in June, and vacates them and goes away and Mr. Vanderbyl, an entire stranger, comes in July and lodges, and after some time goes away, would any person in your establishment in that case, there being no seat in view or in contest, have said to Mr. Vanderbyl, "Mr. Vanderbyl, a gentleman of the name of "Bagehot last month occupied these rooms which "you occupy, and left a bill unpaid, of course you "will pay those bills because you now occupy those "rooms." Would anybody in your establishment have done such an absurd thing as that?—Most certainly not.

15,076. Then is it not the fact that it was plain proof that he was called upon to pay Mr. Bagehot's debts as a condition of his being allowed to succeed Mr. Bagehot as candidate in the Liberal interest for the borough?—So it appears, but I was not aware of it.

15,077. But is not that selling a vote?—Most certainly it is when it is done with a guilty knowledge, but so far as ourselves are concerned I do not believe we ever had it under consideration a moment.

15,078. But unfortunately your two votes followed the transaction. I do not say in consequence of it, but in date?—You may put whatever connexion you like; but I say that.

15,079. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now you got to the nomination in your story, and you proceeded, you went on the hustings, what else took place on that day?—Nothing.

15,080. No meeting with anyone?—No meeting that I attended.

15,081. Did you meet any of the lawyers?—I did not. I am not aware of having spoken to anyone on that day.

15,082. Then on the following day what took place? Look at your paper?—I have nothing further here. I must tell you on the polling day, I think about one o'clock, I met Mr. Lovibond in Fore Street. He said, "I am very weary and tired. I should like to go to your house and have some luncheon." I said, "So do." His son was with him. They came to my house and stayed there and took refreshment. After sitting some little while Mr. Lovibond said, "I never was so "easy and comfortable in my mind as I am to-day. "There is no doubt the election is lost, but we are "thoroughly clean handed."

15,083. Who said this?—Mr. Lovibond.

15,084. That was about one in the day?—I think about one o'clock, after he took luncheon.

15,085. That is before he sent Mr. Mogg for this 500*l.*?—Yes; I do not think it was his intention at that time to have left my room again, for he looked so weary. I said, "Why do not you sit here and take a cigar."

15,086. Your shop commands a view of the house?—I am speaking now of my house in King Square, and he took a cigar and lit it and was smoking the cigar, and remained there I should think until perhaps half-past two.

15,087. Who fetched him away?—Mr. Charles Bate and Mr. Mogg came to the house and asked if he was there.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Mogg never told us that.

(Mr. Anstey.) On the contrary we asked whether there was any other occasion, and he said "No."

15,088. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Mogg and Mr. Bate came to your house and asked if you were there?—Yes.

15,089. Who saw you?—I saw them coming from the window. I have three windows in front, and there is a side door, and I immediately ran and opened the door myself, because I thought there would be some little delay in waiting.

15,090. What did either of them say, which spoke?—I think Mr. Bate spoke first. He said, "We have "been looking for you all over the town; we are "pulling up wonderfully." I think the words were "We are within an ace of winning; cannot you come "out?" Mr. Lovibond put down his cigar and went away.

15,091. Did he say nothing first?—I do not remember any observation of Mr. Lovibond's.

15,092. But he went away with them?—He went away with Mr. Mogg.

15,093. What became of Mr. Bate?—Mr. Bate remained with me; he said he was very heated, and threw off his coat and said, "Do give me a draught of sherry and water?"

15,094. Before Mr. Lovibond went away had he had any conversation with Mr. Bate?—Not the slightest.

15,095. He did not ask him to do anything at the bank for him?—Certainly not.

15,096. Then Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Mogg went away together?—They went away together.

15,097. When did you next see anything of them?—I do not remember seeing either of them until after the election.

15,098. After the election was won?—After the election was won, and then I am not quite clear whether I remember any incident. Of course I did see them, because I was about the town; but I do not recollect any incident to fix it.

15,099. When did you next have any conversation with Mr. Mogg on that day?—I had no conversation with him.

15,100. Or Mr. Lovibond?—Or Mr. Lovibond.

15,101. (Mr. Anstey.) I want you to fix with as much precision as the distance of the date will now admit of the hour at which these persons, Mr. Mogg and Mr. Bate, came to your house?—As near as I can say, I should say it was about half-past two or a quarter to three. I merely state it simply from the fact that Mr. Lovibond had told me previously that Mr. Kinglake had gone off by the express train, that it was after his leaving Mr. Lovibond came to lunch with me, the luncheon took some little time, half an hour or three quarters, and he had already lit a cigar, and smoked some time the cigar.

15,102. You are quite sure that Mr. Mogg and Mr. Lovibond went away together?—I am as clear as I can be. I have no doubt in my own mind.

15,103. If you were told by anybody that at the time when Mr. Mogg and Mr. Lovibond were in your house together, and walking away together, the one man was casually meeting the other for a minute or so somewhere in the street at a distance from the house, you would not believe it. Supposing you were told at that very moment you had them in your house by someone that they were not in your house at all, but casually meeting on the bridge or in the High Street, at a distance from your house, you would say, "It is utterly absurd. I saw them with my own eyes"?—What I speak of is a thing there is not the slightest doubt about, certainly.

15,104. (Mr. Price.) It becomes very important to fix the time?—I cannot do it nearer than that.

15,105. Do you think it was as much as half-past two?—I think it was.

15,106. (Mr. Anstey.) Not three?—I do not think it was three.

15,107. (Mr. Price.) You think it was not three?—I should say the probability is nearer half-past two than three.

15,108. You fix it by the lunch?—Yes. I may be in error.

15,109. If anybody was to say, "The person you "see here cannot be Mr. Bate, because Mr. Bate a "minute before also met Mr. Lovibond quite accidentally and casually in the street," you would say, "No, this is Mr. Bate, I know him, he asked for a "glass of sherry and water," would not you?—Most certainly, what I said is what occurred.

15,110. How long did Mr. Bate stay with you?—I think not two minutes.

15,111. Did he follow them out?—No, I think Mr. Bate remained longer than that, for he appeared very warm and took his coat off, and I think must have remained five or seven minutes.

15,112. Did you hear Mr. Bate say anything of this kind, "No, I will not go to the bank"?—No, most certainly not.

15,113. Did you hear Mr. Mogg say, "Yes, I will go"?—No, certainly not. There was no conversation of the kind occurred in my room.

15,114. They went away together?—Yes.

15,115. (Mr. Coleridge.) And it was Mr. Mogg who fetched Mr. Lovibond?—Mr. Mogg and Mr. Bate; not one more than the other.

15,116. What occurred after that?—Some period later in the afternoon, I should think it was about a quarter to four, or a few minutes before a quarter to four, I went into the committee room at the "Globe," and Mr. Cook came over to me and said "I wish you "would go and see the Roberts. Mr. Vanderbyl "wants someone to go with him. I believe there are "three votes there," and there was some little difficulty about the permissive matter, and I said, "Oh yes, if necessary, I will go with Mr. Vanderbyl." He took me to Mr. Vanderbyl's room by a private passage, and I came down over the staircase, and we walked down about three minutes' walk perhaps and we saw Roberts.

15,117. The carriage builder?—The carriage builder.

15,118. Did you succeed in getting their votes?—I am not quite sure. My own impression is I believe I heard afterwards one had polled. I am not quite sure whether it was previous to our interview or afterwards. Mr. Cook said yesterday neither of them polled, but I believe I am correct.

15,119. (Mr. Price.) They never will vote except for the man who pledges himself to carry out their views; is that so?—Very much that. I did not join in the conversation; I knew them only personally. And that is all I know of that election.

15,120. Now you must go to the election before that?—That is the election of Mr. Vanderbyl. I know nothing at all in connexion with Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866. I took no part in it.

15,121. (Mr. Coleridge.) Except the bill being paid?—And that I was not aware of until Friday night.

15,122. (Mr. Price.) You were not what is called one of the leaders of the Liberal party, whatever that may be?—I suppose I am entitled to be called one of the leaders of the party, but the professional men usually keep everything to themselves.

15,123. Did you know of Mr. Vanderbyl coming down?—I did.

15,124. Did you know who he was?—We knew he came from Yarmouth.

15,125. Were the party at all consulted, you and other gentlemen in your position who were supposed to have some little control in one way and the other, as to Mr. Vanderbyl coming here?—No.

15,126. You did not know at all that they had gone to London for a candidate?—Well, by rumour only. I was not consulted directly.

15,127. Were you at any meeting of the party in the same sense that you had a meeting afterwards in 1868, at which the question of the candidate was discussed, and who was a suitable man, and so on, to your knowledge?—I do not remember. I have no doubt there were public meetings held when he came here.

15,128. But I mean were the party at all consulted as to whether they should have a contest, because it was thought at one time that there would be no contest against Mr. Patton under the circumstances, because he had been just appointed Lord Advocate, and there was a feeling on the part of some that it was not a handsome thing to contest, and others that it was not worth while, and so on. Was there a meeting at which the question whether there should be a contest or not was discussed?—I do not remember.

15,129. You did not take part in anything of the kind?—I do not remember it.

15,130. So far as you are concerned the contest was brought on the town by the lawyers going up and bringing down Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes, with the general consent of the people that there should be a contest.

15,131. Including yourself?—I must take my share.

15,132. Were there public meetings?—No; whatever assent was necessary I must have given it.

15,133. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did any section of your party take the view of it that it was a hard thing to fight a man who was going into office?—I do not think so.

15,134. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Patten expressed himself strongly about it, did not he?—I have heard such was the feeling on the Conservative side.

15,135. Had not Mr. Kinglake at first rather shrunk from it?—It is the first time I think I have heard of it. I have heard the Conservatives have not treated this as a reason why.

15,136. It is generally thought an unhandsome thing to go down and contest against a minister who has been elected shortly before?—I heard that, and I think I knew it at the time that it was so considered, but there was a good deal of party feeling existing in the town at that time.

15,137. And there were a good number of unpaid bills at other elections, and 200*l.* to the lawyers, and things of that sort, which all had to be taken into account if there were no contest?—As that appears to you no doubt you are right in coming to that inference, but I knew nothing about it at the time.

15,138. When Mr. Vanderbyl came down did you take any part, did you know anything that was done?—I did not.

15,139. Any spending?—No, I knew nothing of it.

15,140. You knew money was spent; 4,000*l.* or 5,000*l.* was spent?—Of course I did. I did not know the amount, but money was spent.

15,141. A very large sum?—No, I did not know that a large sum was; it was notorious that the thing was done freely.

15,142. Was there a meeting held by any of those gentlemen whose names you have mentioned, who were anxious to get the Bridgwater election contested on pure principles, to which representation was made about not spending money?—No.

15,143. Was there remonstrance in any way whatever that you know against having Mr. Vanderbyl down, who was connected in rather a suspicious way with

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

8 Sept. 1869.

Yarmouth ?—I do not know of anything ; there may have been, but I do not know of it.

15,144. Did you know Mr. Pender was applied to, who was decidedly employed in corrupt practices at Totnes ?—I do not remember his name.

15,145. At all events, so far as you know, no impediment was thrown by any section of your party in the way of spending profusely at that election ?—There was no direct action taken in any way that I am aware of.

15,146. (Mr. Coleridge.) You as one of the heads of the party do not appear to have been consulted by the lawyers as to who should come down. Had you any voice ?—I believe Mr. Vanderbyl came here in the most extraordinary way possible, because I do not think the professional men knew he was coming.

15,147. Oh yes, they have told us ?—Did not Mr. Brogden put the address out of the train at Bath, or something of that kind ?

15,148. (Mr. Price.) No, they had been to Mr. Travers Smith, and they had been to Mr. Pender, and they had been to Mr. Campbell, and they had been to Mr. Brogden, and then they had been to Mr. Drake, who has just been knighted I see by the papers for his service in the Liberal cause. They had found some objection in getting a gentleman to come, and then Mr. Brogden, who had been asked, suggested his friend Mr. Vanderbyl, so there was nothing very wonderful about it.—You see you know a great deal more about it than I.

15,149. It could not have come by surprise on the lawyers, but there was a little difficulty about his coming, and Mr. Brogden thought, perhaps, that Yarmouth would be a cheaper place than Bridgwater, and he went to Yarmouth and afterwards suggested that his friend Mr. Vanderbyl should be bled, and he was brought down and bled, and Mr. Brogden came down and assisted. The lawyers were at Bath taking their chop, when they found Mr. Salmon in the train awaiting them, therefore they could not be surprised.

15,150. (Mr. Coleridge.) The lawyers did not consult you as one of the heads of the party about the candidates ?—No, not until he was here, when he was paraded at a meeting.

15,151. Before they went to London did they come to you and say, "We are going to look for a candidate ; what sort of man are we to look out for ?—No.

15,152. Did you know that they had gone ?—Not at that election. It was quite enough if they voted on the Liberal side for the Liberals, and voted on the Conservative side for the Conservatives.

15,153. And was a rich man ?—I do not know that it invariably follows that riches was a condition.

15,154. But "Mr. Most" was always the favourite candidate at this place; it was told to Sir John Shelley. Do you know anything about the previous election when Mr. Patton beat Mr. Bagehot ?—The only thing that I know about that election is that I made an effort to see in what way the system which you term bleeding the candidates could be put a stop to, and Mr. George Sully, our present mayor, I waited upon at his office, and asked him if it was true the professional men were going to London to see Mr. Bagehot in connexion with the election. He said he believed it was, and that they were going by the evening train. I said, "Now do let us make some "effort to see if we can secure an honest, clean elec- "tion. Have you any objection to go and see the "professional men ? Let us go and see Mr. Barham." We went to Mr. Barham's office ; he was not at home, but we were told that he was at the county court. We went together to the county court and called him out of the county court into the private room, and I then explained to him the object of our visit, and I asked him whether he would undertake to put Mr. Bagehot to a pledge that he would spend no money, and to do so before the professional men. Previously he had canvassed very warmly the object of our coming to him, and he said, "Most certainly I will do so with the greatest willingness ;" and I also asked him, "Will "you ask him whether he will share with the Liberal "electors of Bridgwater the cost of petitioning, providing our opponents spend money ?" and he said, "It is a very proper question, and I will do so."

15,155. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you aware, after doing that, that he is one of the four people who guaranteed the borrowing of the 1,000*l.* ?—I was going to explain. I understood, not from Mr. Barham himself, but Mr. Sully, that the answers he brought back from London was that he did put those questions to Mr. Bagehot, and Mr. Bagehot answered them in the way he desired, but there was nothing surprised me so much that at Mr. Bagehot's election to find that corrupt practices were resorted to, and I must tell you that on the morning of the election Mr. Francis Thompson, Mr. Sully, and myself, and Mr. George Sully were ignorant of anything but honest conduct at that election.

15,156. (Mr. Anstey.) But you do not know that ?—Only from the incidents, and so far as I can judge from those incidents that Mr. Francis Thompson had never frequented the room, but he was in the room that morning, and took a part in checking the poll list, and so was Mr. Sully. During the morning, I think about 11 or 12, I went into the town from the committee room, and from something I heard, but do not know from whom, I learnt that it was reported that the Conservatives had got packets of money which were reported to have been spent by the Liberals. After a little time I met Mr. Henry Lovibond, and I said, "Is it possible that our people have been foolish enough to spend money this morning ?" and he turned to me and said, "I fear it is true." I immediately went into the committee room. I told Mr. Sully what I had heard, and I told Mr. Sealy ; Mr. Sully was writing at the time, and he threw his pen down on the table and said, "I will have nothing more to do with the election," and he went home to my knowledge, because he told me so afterwards. Mr. Sealy said, "I cannot believe it, and I will not believe it until I know more about it." He left the room, and I left the room. That was just the history, and the key to that remark which the mayor made to you the other day, which I saw in the papers ; that I told him our hands were not clean. That is all I know of it.

15,157. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Sealy is the banker ?—Yes. I do not wish of course to offer any extenuation of what we have done at Bridgwater, but I should mention whatever is favourable, and there was an effort on our part to do that.

15,158. (Mr. Price.) Did you find out afterwards how it had been controlled in the contrary direction to your wishes ?—I was so intensely mortified that I took a ride, and after I came back I went into Mr. Lovibond's, and saw him to know what the meaning of the election was. He was lying on the sofa after dinner, and I said, "Do tell me what the day's doings mean; "where does the money come from for carrying on "such a contest as this after what Mr. Bagehot has "promised ?" and he replied to me, "You must be a "very simple person to think a man would come to "Bridgwater without zealous friends."

15,159. (Mr. Anstey.) This Mr. Lovibond had only an hour or two before told you, when you asked him "Is it true that people are bribing on our behalf ?" "I fear it is." Are you quite sure he said, "I fear it is" ?—Those are the very words he used.

15,160. Expressing sincerely or hypocritically as the case may be entire sympathy with your horror of bribery ?—It was in this way ; I think he was afraid to announce to me the full revelations. I understood what it meant ; the manner conveyed the meaning.

15,161. (Mr. Price.) Did he look frightened ?—No, he did not.

15,162. (Mr. Anstey.) Just tell me this ; is not this the common form of speech when you meet one another in Bridgwater, conscious of what is going on, to say, "I fear we have been bribing ;" and is it not a common thing for one briber to say that to another, or a person equally aware of the practices with himself ?—No, I do not think it is.

15,163. We know that those who signed this petition of 80, and who, as far as we have gone yet, are not themselves deeply dipped in corrupt practices, were within a month or so after signing it in a most miserable minority. Is not hypocrisy of speech and action the way in which these detestable practices are concealed from public view so far as your experience goes of Bridgwater ?—There is no doubt there is a reservation.

15,164. For instance, this case of Mr. Henry Lovibond. At the time he spoke to you he was secretly, as it is said, and unknown to Mr. Bagehot, promoting bribery, and was the guarantor of a large fund for the purpose, and yet when asked whether it is true that people are bribing, he says, "I fear it is." Can you have the slightest doubt what the object of that was ?—I gave you the words that were spoken.

15,165. (Mr. Price.) Did his tone of voice convey to you that it was sincere expression of fright, or a stage affair ?—No, it was just an ordinary mode of conveying information to me.

15,166. (Mr. Anstey.) That being the result of your long experience here, would you attach the slightest weight to anything that anybody would say, even on an oath, against whom there was circumstantial or other evidence of bribery, that statement on oath being to the effect, "I am quite taken by surprise by what I "have heard this day ; I was not aware that there were "any corrupt practices." Would you believe any person who should so state against whom there was circumstantial evidence to the contrary ?—It is very difficult to say ; my own impression is that it would be very difficult to live in Bridgwater without recognizing.

15,167. I tell you frankly that I would not ; I do not care who it is.

15,168. (Mr. Price.) Have you anything more to tell us about the election ?—Nothing more in connexion with Mr. Bagehot's election.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Now, 1865.

(Mr. Price.) It was an attempt made once for all, the only attempt we have ever heard of, and a failure, to try and get in on purity principles by Sir John Shelley.

(Mr. Anstey.) And even that is denied to be true, that they even made such an attempt.

15,169. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything of that ?—Only the incident in connexion with the petition.

15,170. Anything about the colours ?—No, I do not ; I should be glad to give any information to-morrow. In connexion with the petition, Mr. Benjamin Lovibond called the so-called heads of the party together for the purpose of considering the desirability of petitioning against Mr. Westropp. At a very early stage I took this objection, that I thought it was a mere accident their having their hands perfectly clean, and that it was an unfair thing to attack them on the hip as it were.

15,171. (Mr. Coleridge.) Because you were accidentally pure it was unfair to attack the other party. That is the most extraordinary reason I ever heard ?—Allow me to explain; and unless some pledge on the part of the professional gentlemen could be given to me to satisfy me that for the future the elections would be conducted differently, I would have nothing whatever to do with it.

15,172. You thought it was a piece of humbug on their part to attempt to unseat for bribery if they themselves intended to have recourse to it on the next occasion ?—Most certainly.

15,173. Did you take any steps to get an assurance from the professional gentlemen ?—I did.

15,174. (Mr. Price.) Before presenting that petition did they give you an assurance ?—They did. Mr. Lovibond said on no future occasion would he in any way commit himself to illegal practices.

15,175. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did anybody else say that ?—Mr. Bate said so, and I believe Mr. Henry Lovibond the second occasion. I raised this question again. That meeting was held at Mr. Lovibond's office, and the second meeting was held at Mr. Barham's. I raised the question, and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond was very indignant, and thought it great impertinence on my part to talk about this question of purity and not spending money, and he rated me rather severely for it ; but the result was that I pressed the point, and I believe there was one professional gentleman, I forget now which, who was not present the first meeting who also said for the future they would have nothing to with illegal practices.

14,176. Who was that ?—I am not quite sure whether it was Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook ; I believe one of the two.

15,177. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have been rather disappointed in their promise ?—This understanding, as I understood then honest and faithful, of the professional men was not carried out, and it destroyed the energy which I had.

15,178. (Mr. Anstey.) You saw the state of the town at that election ?—Which ?

15,179. The one you are speaking of now, in 1865. You saw the public-houses open there for the Liberals as well as for the Conservatives, did you not ?—I never go to a public-house, and I cannot answer the question.

15,180. Without ever going into a public-house, but as you pass them along the street, can you not tell whether they were streaming with electors or not on a given day, and that day the polling day of 1865, and streaming with electors bearing certain colours, some your own, and others your adversaries ?—The colours of each candidate are hung out of the public-houses, and people go in and out. I do not know it of my own knowledge.

15,181. But the voters who were running in and out ?—I cannot speak of my own knowledge.

15,182. Was not it a notorious fact that the town was given up to drunkenness on that day ?—I did not recognize it myself, but I have heard it since.

15,183. That house is supposed to be free at the expense of the candidate whose colours are hung out ?—I think it very likely it is.

15,184. Was not evidence given at the trial at that very election that was the meaning of it ?—I did not go to London.

15,185. I did not go either, but I have read the report ?—I have not read it, only some portion of it.

15,186. Do you not know that at some elections the town was given up to drunkenness, the Conservatives drenching the Conservatives and the Liberals the Liberals at public-houses bearing the respective colours ; treating on an organized and grand scale by both sides ?—No doubt there was a great deal of drunkenness that election.

15187. You have spoken of a few efforts by you personally to put down bribery, was any effort made by any person whether pretending teetotalism or not to put down this great disgrace ?—I do not know of any.

15,188. Have you set your face, as a justice of the peace, against granting licences to those who have been systematically so employed, the publicans at whose houses these practices have prevailed ?—I have never been asked to do so.

(Mr. Price.) The question has never been brought before the magistrates.

15,189. (Mr. Anstey.) That being so, can you say that any step has ever been taken in this town by anybody to put an end to this organized system of treating in your recollection ?—There was none except what I have stated.

15,190. You have not spoken of any except some few spasmodic efforts to put down bribery. As to the treating have you heard of any ?—No, never.

15,191. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the constitution of the magistrates here ? How many Liberals and how many Conservatives ? — I cannot answer the question without inquiry.

15,192. Which have the majority ?—I think the Conservatives are the most numerous. This is the list which I have had handed to me (handing it in).

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

8 Sept. 1869.

15,193. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know any instance of bottling voters at public-houses?—Never, no. I have heard of it on both sides.

15,194. Do you know the meaning of bottling?—Yes, most undoubtedly.

15,195. What is it?—That they should be kept until a suitable time for polling them.

15,196. How many hours or days before were they bottled?—As far as I have heard, not more than hours at Bridgwater.

15,197. The same day?—The same day.

15,198. Never over night?—I have not heard of it.

15,199. Have you not heard of a remarkable case of that kind at the "Clarence"?—No, I have not.

15,200. When there are those bottled up voters to be polled, is it the practice to give them drink as well as money?—I cannot say; I should think it was.

15,201. (Mr. Price.) These appear to be the justices. First, we know the mayor and his politics, then the ex-mayor is Conservative. Mr. John Browne?—Liberal.

15,202. Mr. James Haviland?—Liberal.

15,203. Mr. Charles Thompson?—Liberal.

15,204. Mr. Carey Bailey Mogg?—Liberal.

15,205. Mr. Henry Frederick Nicholls?—Liberal.

15,206. Mr. William John Ford?—Liberal.

15,207. Mr. Follett Charles Hennett?—A Conservative.

15,208. Mr. Robert Salmon?—Conservative.

15,209. Mr. Cuthbert Ritson?—Conservative.

15,210. Mr. William Henry Axford?—Conservative.

15,211. Mr. John Baptist Hammill?—Liberal.

15,212. Mr. Edward Lilley?—Conservative.

15,213. Mr. Frederick Farmer?—Conservative.

15,214. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the Mr. Mogg who has been examined to-day?—Yes.

15,215. And Mr. Axford about whom there has been some question?—No, he is not; there must be a distinction drawn. Mr. Axford the magistrate is "doctor;" the other is only a surgeon, not a doctor.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Frederick Farmer we had this morning.

15,216. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now the 1859 election, did you vote?—Yes, at every election I have since 1839 or 1840.

15,217. (Mr. Price.) So far as your knowledge of the town goes, with the exception of the abortive attempt by Sir John Shelley, assuming that it was pure on your side, has there been a single election since you have known politics actively which has been pure?—I should not like to say, because I have not accurate information.

15,218. What is your impression now, carrying back your recollection?—I mixed very little in politics for some time after I commenced business.

15,219. Still you would know?—I should think it would be a great novelty. I should be surprised to find either of the elections was quite pure. If anybody told me so, I should like to have very good proof.

15,220. (Mr. Coleridge.) Differing in degree, but always a certain amount of corruption?—Always more or less. I should require good proof, if anybody wished to convince me to the contrary.

15,221. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to bring you back to your efforts in 1865 and 1866 personally to put down bribery. I dare say you had very good reason for signing this petition?—I was not in town. I was in London. I think the probability is, if here, I should have signed it readily.

15,222. Would not you have been very much surprised at some of the names on it?—Whose do you refer to?

15,223. Some of those mentioned in the course of this inquiry, James Alway and Henry Cornelius White?—I was not aware at that election that Mr. White had anything to do with bribery.

15,224. And a number of others?—You stand at somewhat an advantage over us, because you look at things from a certain standpoint rather than the point of time when the things occurred.

15,225. There are some names of very ancient date here. Andrew Allan, would not you have been surprised?—I did not know at that time that he took any part in the election.

15,225*a*. Did you see anything of Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl on the day of the poll?—I did not, except that I saw Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Roberts with him, that is the only time I saw him or spoke to him.

15,226. Did not you see him that day after the poll, after the return?—I saw him on the hustings, but I do not think I spoke to him. I am not aware of having spoken to him.

15,227. How soon after that did you hear that there was a petition going to be presented?—I think it was spoken of the same night from off the balcony over the porch of the hotel, by some of the Conservatives, that they would petition against the return. I did not hear it myself.

15,228. Was it not known within a week after that Mr. Trevor had actually gone to town about it generally?—I think it is very likely.

15,229. Then there is no pretence for anybody saying it was not heard of for a long time afterwards?—I could not say so, because I thought it was a thing very well known to everyone almost immediately afterwards, as far as I know.

15,230. Can you throw any light upon the departure of no less than five persons to avoid the service of subpœnas?—No, I cannot.

15,231. Namely, three from Bridgwater and two from London?—No, I cannot.

15,232. You did not hear of it?—Oh yes, afterwards.

15,233. But you can throw no light on it?—No, I only heard of it as rumour that such persons were from home.

15,234. You had nothing to do with the indemnity for expenses incurred by such persons?—Not a penny.

15,235. You do not know from what fund those were to be paid?—I have not the least idea.

Miss M. Jones.

Miss Mary Jones sworn.

15,236. (Mr. Price.) You are employed in the establishment of Mr. Nicholls, the draper here?—I am.

15,237. Look at that bill, and tell us whether the entries are in your handwriting?—This receipt is in my handwriting.

15,238. And the other part of it?—That is not my writing.

15,239. Do you know it?—Yes.

15,240. Whose is it?—Mr. Davage's.

15,241. Is he still in Mr. Nicholls' employ?—Yes.

15,242. Looking at the receipt, it appears to have been given in 1866. Can you give us the circumstances under which you received the money or from whom or where?—From Mr. Henry Lovibond.

15,243. Where?—In the counting house.

15,244. Did he say anything about it at the time?—Nothing, any more than he handed me the bill.

15,245. Can you give us any reason why the bill should have been unpaid in 1865?—No, I do not know. I was not in Bridgwater when the entry was made.

15,246. You know this, that on a certain day of 1866 Mr. Lovibond came with that bill?—Yes.

15,247. Are you the cashier?—I am the entering clerk and book-keeper.

15,248. You would be the proper person to do it?—Yes.

15,249. He presented to you that bill, and paid you the money?—Yes.

15,250. That is all that passed?—That is all that passed.

(Mr. Anstey.) Would Mr. Davage know why the bill was made out in the form it appears there?

15,251. (Mr. Price.) It appears it is debited to Kinglake and Shelley; he would be the proper person to tell us why?—Yes, he might know.

15,252. It would be posted, of course, from your day book?—Yes.

15,253. That bill would be sent in some time after the entry?—It does not say.

15,254. The book would be the first entry?—Yes.

15,255. The bill might or not have been sent in at the time?—But this was not at the time I should say.

15,256. What is Davage's christian name?—Thomas.

15,257. (Mr. Coleridge.) Look at that bill (handing another) and see whether it is paid since. There is no receipt to it?—No, that is not paid.

15,258. Not all?—No.

15,259. Has it been applied for?—No, I believe not. It has been sent in.

15,260. Because this is of the date of 1866?—Yes, it has not been paid. That is the credit (referring to a book).

15,261. Is this the book the first entry would be in?—No.

15,262. That is where payment would appear?—Yes; I cannot give you the original entry.

Mr. Carey Bailey Mogg recalled.

Mr. C. B. Mogg.

(Mr. Price.) We wish to tell you that we do not intend to put any more questions to you, because on the first occasion you were examined, as I read to you myself, I entertained the opinion, which was coincided in by my colleagues, that you had not answered the questions put to you the other day in a manner which was satisfactory. To-day you have been under further examination, and you have fallen into the reprehension of one of my colleagues for the mode in which you answer. In addition to that, there certainly has come out from the last witness a very important statement with regard to the part you took that day in conjunction with Mr. Lovibond. You either purposely concealed that from us or not. We must judge of that. I have now to tell you that we shall not put any questions to you, but you may make any statements you like to explain away why you kept back from us that, when we pressed you over and over again to tell us everything. At the same time I am bound to tell you we shall consider very seriously whether you have any certificate, and therefore any statement which you will make now will not be one which we shall consider as an answer to the question within the statute entitling to a certificate, if your other conduct has not already entitled you to it.

(The witness.) I beg to explain that Mr. Bate came in the square at half-past two, I think, or something like that, and I think he came to my house and asked for Mr. Lovibond. I saw Mr. Lovibond, his son, and Mr. Nicholls going up the back street as I was going home to dinner. They were going in there, I suppose, to lunch. I came home to dinner. When Mr. Bate came in the square, he asked where Mr. Lovibond was. I said I thought he had gone in at Mr. Nicholls'. Whether I went to Mr. Nicholls or not I cannot say, but I walked with Mr. Bate towards the house, and he went in to Mr. Nicholls, but I do not recollect going in for myself, neither do I recollect walking away with Mr. Lovibond, no further than my house—that is the only explanation I have to give.

(Mr. Anstey.) I am not going to ask any questions from this witness, but I think it right to read in his presence and hearing, leaving him to make any comment on it he pleases, or to forbear if he please to make any comment at all, the statements he has just contradicted, made under the most searching examination on this point, in answer to questions addressed to him when he was first examined: "Did you go down "to the bank on the day of the last election?—I did. "How came you to go to the bank?—Mr. Lovibond "asked me to deliver a message for him. Did he not "tell you what the message was?—Yes, '500*l.* to "Allan." Then further on "You were in communica- "tion with the lawyers?" (which had been previously denied)—"Mr. Lovibond. How often?—Only that "once. Had you had any conversation with him "before you went down to the bank?—No."

(The witness.) Not respecting the election.

15,263. (Mr. Anstey.) "Nothing?—Nothing ex- "cept what I told you. Did he come to you?—He "came to me. Why did he select you to go down "with a note '500*l.* to Allan'?—He did not give me a "note. How came he to come and tell you to go?— "He came up to me in the street and asked me to "deliver a message to Mr. Prior for '500*l.* to Allan'" Then further on: "What o'clock was it?—I think "about a quarter to three. When you saw Mr. Lovi- "bond first?—Yes." Then again: "Had not Mr. "Lovibond spoken to you about making yourself "useful the day before?—No. When had you first "any conversation as to the part you should take? "Then. Did he come into the house?—He met me "in the street. And merely upon that representation, "you having voted and done with your own voting, "you went down and asked for this sum of money?— "I did. You knew perfectly well what this money "was for?—No doubt about it. Who told you these "men would not vote without being paid?—The report "was in the town." Then again: "You must give us "some reason why in your opinion Mr. Lovibond "selected you to become a bribe agent?—I do not "think he selected me first of all; he selected some "others first. Whom did he select first of all?—I "do not know. Why do you think he selected "others?—Because I have been told so. Who told "you?—Mr. Ford. Mr. Ford told you what?—That "he had asked a person before me. And who was "that person?—I do not know. Mr. Bate having "gone with Mr. Mogg there, and that person had "refused?—I suppose so." I have read those ques- tions and answers to you?

(The witness.) That is quite correct what you have read. If you wish me to give any explanation, I shall be happy.

15,264. (Mr. Price.) As I said before, we have no wish about it. We have on two occasions expressed to you our opinion as to the mode in which you answered the questions, and we had given to us to-day evidence which certainly, to say the least of it, is very inconsistent and almost irreconcilable with this story?—You will please to understand that Mr. Bate was asked before me to do a certain act; he refused; but you must not connect Mr. Bate with me only when he came to Mr. Lovibond. When he came to inquire for Mr. Lovibond at my house then I told him he was in at Mr. Nicholls'; he went to Mr. Nicholls to seek for him, and there he found him. Is that all you require of me?

15,265. (Mr. Price.) You know best whether you have told us all that took place?—Nothing at all. I give you my word of honour.

Miss Jones recalled.

Miss M. Jones.

15,266. (Mr. Price.) Point out to us the entry?—Page 108.

15,267. Read it out?—Kinglake and Shelley, four flags, at 23*s.* 6*d.*; three, at 23*s.* 6*d.*

15,268. That is July 8th?—July 8th, and then the 10th; four yards of ribbon, 4*s.* 3*d.*; three yards of cambric, at 8*d.*; one silk flag, 55*s.*; one canvass ditto, 23*s.* 6*d.*; 12th, one silk handkerchief, 5*s.* 6*d.*

FIFTEENTH DAY.

Miss Jones.

8 Sept. 1869.

15,269. Who made out that bill?—Thomas Davage.

15,270. There is no alteration in the entries or books?—No alteration; it stands exactly as entered.

15,271. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there no entry there of any kind in which the name of Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Lovibond appears?—There is on my ledger.

15,272. What is that?—The "Shelley" is struck through, and "Vanderbyl" is written over.

15,273. (Mr. Price.) Is the ledger a copy of that book?—It is the whole of the entry which is posted in, not the items.

15,274. When was it made?—The ledger would be posted a few days after these entries were made.

15,275. Therefore to be a correct representation of the transaction in the smaller book it would be just what you have read to us, "Kinglake and Shelley?"—"Kinglake and Shelley."

15,276. (Mr. Anstey.) Then the alteration would be made at the time of payment?—No, previous to the payment.

15,277. (Mr. Price.) How long previous?—I cannot say how long.

15,278. Would it be 1866? You remember Mr. Vanderbyl coming here; was it about the time of his election?—It was after the election.

15,279. (Mr. Coleridge.) And before it was paid?—Before it was paid.

15,280. Who told you to do that?—One of the Mr. Nicholls, but I am not certain which.

15,281. (Mr. Price.) Did he give any reason for it?—No.

15,282. Merely told you to strike "Shelley" through and put "Vanderbyl"?—Yes.

15,283. (Mr. Anstey.) Do both the Messrs. Nicholls interfere and give directions in that way of that kind?—Yes, they do.

15,284. (Mr. Coleridge.) In your journal there is 12*l.* 12*s.* 0*d.* to Kinglake and Shelley to which you have been referring, and the next entry is "Henry Lovibond, Esqre., 50*l.* by cheque"?—That is his own private account.

15,285. Then he paid you the election bill and his own private account at the same time?—On the same occasion.

15,286. This bill remains to the debit of Mr. Bagehot?—Yes.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Thursday, 9th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

9 Sept. 1869.

Mr. HENRY FREDERICK NICHOLLS recalled.

15,287. (Mr. Price.) You want to make a statement?—I wanted to make a remark, that I have anxiously reviewed the circumstances of the interview at the "Globe." I have endeavoured to fix the time and circumstances in connexion with those words, "Be honest; it is all humbug," and I have failed to do so.

15,288. (Mr. Coleridge.) You cannot recollect the words?—I cannot recollect. It has passed through my mind a great deal in the course of the night, and I cannot remember. I beg also to say that I think a remark I made was rather hastily made. When I said no such words were used I cannot, of course, be sure that no such words were used.

15,289. (Mr. Anstey.) You are still stumbling over words. We do not ask about words at all, but as to the substance and effect of the observations. You have already said you have no doubt that you do not recollect those words. Was it something to that effect that was said?—I wish to qualify my statement by withdrawing the remark which I made, and I think hastily made, when I said no such words were used. That was a hasty remark of mine. I think words of such import may have been made, but I cannot connect them with any event.

15,290. (Mr. Price.) The reason you were pressed about it was that Mr. Cook said when the deputation came back, a part of the report they made was that Mr. Fennelly had said, "It is all humbug, gentlemen, it is the money which is the thing you want." Mr. Cook could not have invented that, he represented it to us as part of the report they made when they came back?—If anything in the course of further evidence should come up by which my memory is refreshed I will state it.

15,591. (Mr. Anstey.) Then we shall not want it.—If I could remember it I would say so instantly.

15,292. You must not be under a false impression. It is not in our power to allow any statement of that kind to be retracted. All we can do is to allow your present answer to be recorded. That is all.—I do not retract anything. I say all I said before, only I wish to add that what I said I said hastily, that no such words were used.

15,293. (Mr. Coleridge.) You wish to withdraw that?—I wish to withdraw that.

15,294. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not understand you: you said just now you did not wish to retract anything? what do you wish to do now?—I have just stated the remark I made yesterday, I think I made hastily, that there were no such words used. It was a hasty remark, and on reflection, I think I was in error in making it.

15,295. That I understood you to withdraw yesterday.

15,296. (Mr. Coleridge.) You qualified it a good deal yesterday?—I wish to say so again, if you will allow me.

15,297. I understood you to qualify it yesterday to the extent that it might have been said, but you could not fix your memory that you had heard it?—There was another circumstance I overlooked yesterday, and which is rather pertinent. In the afternoon of the polling day, I think it must have been after Mr. Lovibond left my house, in fact it was after he left my house, I was at the committee room.

15,298. (Mr. Anstey.) After three o'clock?—I should think it must have been about three, perhaps a little before or a little after three. As I went in, a gentleman was standing, Canon Rooker, he said, "Good "morning," and at once commenced a conversation with me to this effect: "Do you know the Lees?" I said, "What Lees?" He said, "George Lee." I said, "I know George Lee." And he said, "There is "George Lee and his son, some one must see them "or they will not poll." I immediately asked him whether he had seen them, and he said he had, he had seen them twice, and pressed them to vote. I said, "Surely they will not vote against our party or "against the party;" and he said, "No, I do not "think they would do that, but some one must go "and see them." I looked round the room and within a few steps, or rather within four or five feet, from where Canon Rooker and I were standing Mr. Bussell stood, and I said to Mr. Bussell, "Can any-"one go and see George Lee?" and he at once left the room and beckoned me towards him. I followed him down stairs, and at the bottom of the stairs there was a man there he spoke to. I stood there a moment. I never spoke to this person, but left Mr. Bussell and this man speaking together, and I then returned to the committee room.

15,299. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that man Lee?—This man I speak of, that I saw at the bottom of the stairs, I do not know that I ever saw him before.

15,300. Was it Lee?—No, it was not Lee; another man.

13,301. When you asked Bussell, and he beckoned you out, what did he say?—He said nothing, he made no reply, and as soon as I told him that some one must go and see the Lees went to the poll, he moved off and beckoned me to follow him, and I did.

13,302. And then he said nothing?—And then he said nothing to me or I to him.

13,303. Then why did you, being beckoned out in that way, and not having finished a matter of business about Lee, suddenly leave Bussell and return?—Simply because I thought Bussell was giving this man instructions to go and see the Lees, and that there was no more need of my presence.

13,304. He had beckoned you out?—He had.

13,305. Did he say anything when he saw you turning away?—Nothing.

13,306. Neither to you nor you to him all the time?—I think there was not a word exchanged further than I have narrated.

13,307. Anything afterwards?—I do not think I saw Bussell afterwards. I wish to tell all that I know. Afterwards, when passing up the Cornhill, I saw George Lee, on the pavement. As I passed quickly behind him, I said, "Lee, have you polled?" and he said, "Yes," I should think half an hour after this occurred.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is George Lee one whom you bribed, Mr. Bussell?

(Bussell.) I do not recollect anything of the circumstance which Mr. Nicholls is speaking about at all. I do not know the man. This is entirely new to me.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is George Lee one of the persons whom you bribed, Mr. Allan?

(Allan.) No, not on the last occasion.

(Mr. Anstey.) Was he promised anything on the last occasion?

(Allan.) Not to my knowledge.

(Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember this incident which Mr. Nicholls is mentioning, that some one had seen Lee?

(Allan.) I do not remember seeing Mr. Nicholls to speak to him that day.

(The witness.) I should like him to have time to think over this matter, because I think it occurred just as I have narrated it.

13,308. (Mr. Anstey.) Was your reason for speaking to Bussell that you understood first of all from what this gentleman said that he was likely to accept a promise or a gift of money?—From what Canon Rooker said to me, I understood these men, although supporters of the Liberal interest, required something.

13,309. Did you select Bussell, because you thought him a proper man?—Not expressly for that, but he was close at hand, and I spoke to him impromptu.

13,310. Had you also in your mind that he was a man employed that day and on all occasions to bribe?

(The witness.) I did not know that any money had been spent then, but thought if there was he would in all probability have it at his command.

13,311. Therefore you made that remark?—Yes.

13,312. Did Lee afterwards tell you that he got anything or a promise?—He did not. The only conversation between us is that which I have narrated.

(Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps you will endeavour to recollect by-and-by, Mr. Bussell.

13,313. (Bussell.) I wish to ask what this George Lee is?—I think he is a shoemaker, in Barclay Street.

(Bussell.) To the best of my knowledge he is a man I never spoke to in my life.

(The witness.) I do not represent that Mr. Bussell went.

(Mr. Price.) Did any such transaction take place without reference to your happening to go to the man.

(Bussell.) I do not recollect the circumstance at all. I did not catch where the conversation occurred.

(The witness.) In the "Globe" room.

13,314. (Mr. Price.) What time of the day?—A little before three, I think it must have been.

(Mr. Price.) Is Lee here?

(Bussell.) I do not know the man.

(Mr. Price.) You may not know his name, but may recognize him.

(Mr. Allan.) At Bagehot's first election, Bunter, plumber and glazier, in the same street, polled Lee.

13,315. (Mr. Price.) Was it Bunter?—I do not know.

13,316. We had better have the man here, you can identify him and see whether Bussell recognizes him?—I told Mr. Rooker that I did not know there was a son.

13,317. (Mr. Anstey.) This gentleman said, "Those Lees." How many are there?—He said something about father and son. I said I did not know that there was a son, and he said "Yes, there were two votes under one roof."

13,318. Whom did you know?—The old man.

13,319. And is he the man you intended to send Bussell to?—Certainly.

13,320. (Mr. Price.) You wish to explain to us that you dealt with these two votes in the way you have suggested, by getting Bussell to go down and get him to go to the poll?—Yes, and as Mr. Rooker represented to me, they were supporters of ours but wanted looking after, and I knew what that meant. It has always been a practice.

13,321. Having employed Bussell as you believe to do this matter, you thought it might tell against you if you do not explain it?—I had it upon my memorandum last night, and on looking through it found that I had forgotten to mention it.

13,322. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the son's name?—I do not know. I do not know the son at all.

13,323. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Bussell make any answer to you when you spoke?—None whatever.

13,324. Did he go away as if he were going to do what you asked?—I think he understood what I mentioned to him.

13,325. (Mr. Anstey.) Canon Rooker would know?—He is dead, I am sorry to say. I wish he were alive, because it would be much more satisfactory to me to mention the circumstance while he was here.

15,326. Did Canon Rooker express his meaning more clearly, that they were voters but would not vote unless they had a payment of something?—He conveyed to my mind what I tried to convey just now, that he had seen these men and pressed them to the poll. He also told me that they would not vote against us, but they wanted looking after, and some one must go and see them.

15,327. Those are the words he used?—Those are the words he used.

15,328. You understood him to mean that he wanted some gratification?—I understood if anything was going they would like to have it.

15,329. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you say to Bussell?—I think the words, as near as I can recollect, were, "Canon Rooker tells me the Lees will not go to "the poll, they will not vote against us, but some one "must look after them." He moved off towards the door, and in gesture beckoned me, and I went to the stairs.

15,330. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you sure that the beckoning was not to some one else?—Well, yes.

15,331. And you followed him closely?—Yes, to the bottom of the stairs, but at the bottom I saw a man whom I think I should know, I do not know that I saw him before. He was a respectable man, and I should think 40 to 50 years old, but I do not know the man.

15,332. Not a seafaring man?—Not a seafaring man; he looked like a very respectable mechanic.

15,333. A stranger to the town?—There are a great many men of that class in the town who, not being much in the street, I am not familiar with.

15,334. Was he one of Brown's men?—I do not know.

15,335. Not Honeyball?—No. Miss Jones, who was here yesterday, has reminded me with regard to the payment of that account on the 28th of September 1866. She says at the time that payment was made I was in the counting house writing.

15,336. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Lovibond paid his own private account at the same time?—He paid his own private account at the same time, and that bill, and that I was there, and spoke to him, but when I stated yesterday I knew nothing of the transaction it had really passed through my mind entirely, and until she refreshed my memory I spoke to the best of my knowledge.

15,337. (Mr. Price.) Having had your attention called to it, and your recollection refreshed, can you explain to us all the circumstances, or anything that was said by Mr. Lovibond if he did say anything when he paid this account?—Miss Jones tells me, I do not know anything of my own account, that he said that other bill must be charged to Mr. Bagehot.

15,338. The 2*l.*?—Yes.

15,339. Anything about this one of 12*l.* 12*s.*?—I know nothing I can speak of, and she has not told me anything.

15,340. (Mr. Coleridge.) About its being transferred from Kinglake and Shelley to the name of Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—I know nothing of that. I believe she said yesterday she had done that by my instructions.

15,341. Either you or your brother.

15,342. (Mr. Anstey.) It is made out to Kinglake and Shelley. Was it sent originally to Mr. Lovibond or to Shelley and Kinglake personally?—I cannot tell you; one of our clerks will be here this morning for the purpose of giving evidence on that point.

15,343. It is headed "Election committee," therefore it would probably be sent to Mr. Lovibond?—Yes. May I ask whether you are satisfied that that bill of 12*l.* 12*s.* has been paid by Mr. Vanderbyl, and Mr. Vanderbyl alone.

15,344. That we cannot tell?—Because if so, with your permission, I should extremely like to send Mr. Vanderbyl a cheque for that 12*l.* 12*s.* if you will allow me. I have not the slightest idea of having received it from him.

15,345. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was paid by Mr. Lovibond, who can perhaps tell you where he got it from?—It has been stated that it was so paid. I have not the slightest knowledge.

(Mr. Price.) No doubt it was paid with some money or other, and the debit in which your book was altered in some way or other to Kinglake and Vanderbyl so as to make them responsible in your ledger instead of Sir John Shelley, and after the election of Mr. Vanderbyl, it was paid by Mr. Lovibond.

(Mr. Anstey.) You must form your own conclusions. Mr. Lovibond is stated to have had more to do with the money accounts of Mr. Kinglake, and Messrs. Reed and Cook more to do with those of Mr. Vanderbyl. Mr. Lovibond paid that amount to you. You can draw your conclusions as to the person if it presses on your conscience to return the 12*l.* 12*s.*

(Mr. Price.) We cannot interfere in such a matter.

(Witness.) I was going to ask permission.

(Mr. Price.) We cannot take upon ourselves to do so.

(Witness.) May I ask, can Mr. Barham throw any light on the source that money came from?

(Mr. Price.) If Mr. Barham wishes to make a statement about it he is perfectly at liberty to do so.

(Mr. Barham.) I have no knowledge of that at all.

(Mr. Coleridge.) If you ask Mr. Lovibond out of court, perhaps he will tell you where it came from.

Mr. Alfred Nicholls sworn.

Mr. A. Nicholls.

13,346. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what you know about the payment of this bill, which is originally debited to the election committee of Kinglake and Shelley in 1865, and afterwards paid in 1866 by Mr. Lovibond, and in the meantime the entry in your ledger is altered?—No, the alteration in the ledger is an account of September 16th, 1868, it is the other account is supposed to be closed, and the young person will explain when she posted the 12*s.* 9*d.* in to Mr. Vanderbyl she struck out Sir John Shelley, that is the account she gave me.

15,347. By whose instructions?—She said yesterday one of ours, but I have spoken to her, and she said, "I must have done it without your knowledge or "sanction."

15,348. We cannot take that, you are retracting for her?—She will come back, and explain that.

15,349. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean that you would allow any young lady to make any such alteration in your books, which are sacred in every way, and which it is important in case of bankruptcy to prove have never been altered? Do you mean that you allow such a person to alter books?—It is not so, the book will show when, because the credit was made to Kinglake and Shelley in our journal.

15,350. Then why was the alteration made in your ledger? I should like to see the ledger. You voted?—I did.

15,351. After receiving this money?—No.

15,352. Just before?—Two months before.

13,353. You, in the meantime, between when that bad debt was incurred and voting for Vanderbyl and Kinglake, I believe had signed this famous petition of 80 to the House of Commons, setting forth the necessity of purifying this borough?—Yes, I signed it in all honesty of motive.

15,354. In the interval. Would you have allowed or sanctioned any such proceeding as this, the making a claim on Vanderbyl and Kinglake for a bad debt from Kinglake and Shelley of the preceding two years unless Kinglake and Vanderbyl had been candidates for your suffrage at this election?—I think the bill was never made out to Mr. Vanderbyl. I think the bill was never delivered until after Mr. Bagehot came to the town.

15,355. Answer the question. Would this claim have been made, which stands in your books to have been made on Kinglake and Vanderbyl, whereas the real persons were Kinglake and Shelley, would you have made any such change of claim as that, especially without the sanction of the respective debtors, unless those two persons to whose debit you substituted the debit of Kinglake and Shelley had been candidates for your vote amongst others at the last election ?—The claim was never made to Mr. Vanderbyl.

15,356. Would you allow such alteration in your books ?—I did not know the alteration was made out yesterday.

15,357. Would you have asked for payment of it ?—Of whom ?

15,358. Of Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—I did not know but what we were paid from Sir John Shelley.

15,359. Do you swear that now ?—I do.

15,360. Then your brother must have managed the matter, and not you, is that what you mean to say ?—No, I do not know that.

15,361. Your brother was in the counting house writing at the time the money was paid ?—The money was credited to Kinglake and Shelley, the entry in our journal, which I showed to Mr. Coleridge yesterday.

15,362. We have it in evidence that actually when the money was paid by the agent of Kinglake and Vanderbyl your brother was in the counting house. When this young person received the payment for you had you the slightest doubt in your mind that your firm, either you or your brother, authorized that transfer of accounts and that mode of payment ? Yes or no ?—I really cannot answer that question.

15,363. (Mr. Price.) But do you mean to represent that looking at this document you had the slightest doubt in the world that when it was paid in 1866 it was paid out of money of Vanderbyl and Kinglake, and not Sir John Shelley ?—I have no knowledge.

15,364. Sir John Shelley would not have paid that. I do not know that he was alive ?—I did not know the account was standing over.

15,365. Do you mean you were under the impression that it was paid out of Sir John Shelley's election ?—I should have thought so.

15,366. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was the reason you altered it because Sir John Shelley was dead ?—It was not altered then.

(Mr. Anstey.) Look at the alteration. You will see it was struck out there.

15,367. (Mr. Price.) Why did Mr. Vanderbyl's name enter into the transaction at all ?—It did not enter into the books until 16th November 1868.

15,368. Why ?—Because we had no idea——

15,369. (Mr. Anstey.) What book ?—My ledger.

15,370. We are not talking of your ledger but your journal ?—When the young lady posted that in she struck off Shelley and put Vanderbyl.

15,371. Why ?—Because this account was closed ; it was paid then.

15,372. But why put Vanderbyl instead of Shelley ?—Because this election was closed up.

15,373. Do you mean that there was another current account opened at the same time ?—Yes.

15,374. I would rather you spoke so that the public could hear you. That explains what ? why the alteration was made in your ledger ?—You have not begun with the journal which shows the original entry, the entry of 12*s.* 9*d.* in September 1868.

15,375. (Mr. Price.) 2*l.* 12*s.* 1½*d.*, where is that ?—This is Mr. Bagehot's, those are three items never paid, and the account was ruled off at the last stock-taking as a bad debt.

15,376. (Mr. Anstey.) What is it you mean to represent ? do you mean to say this, that when you made this claim on Kinglake and Vanderbyl for this money, and received payment of it from their agent, Mr. Lovibond, after the last election, you were actually aware that you had long before closed all account with Shelley and Kinglake ?—No, I say I had written that off at Christmas last.

15,377. Then Kinglake and Shelley's account with you was an open account to Christmas last ?—No, it was paid before Christmas.

15,378. Until it was paid by Mr. Lovibond it was an open account ?—It was.

15,379. Then the question returns ; what is the use of evading it ?—I have not.

15,380. Why was the alteration made which you yourself now see, if you have not seen it before, in your book, from Kinglake and Shelley to Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?—I beg your pardon, it is not altered so. Mr. Coleridge will be able to explain to you.

15,381. You are not to devolve the giving of evidence on any of the Commissioners. The young lady yesterday herself stated it was altered, and you say it is not ?—I do not deny the alteration ; there it is on the book.

15,382. (Mr. Price.) If any accountant went through this book for any purpose and looked at this, would not he conclude that the whole of those items were items which had been originally to the debit of Kinglake and Vanderbyl as it stands now ?—Yes, as it stands now, and it was a very incorrect manner of doing it no doubt, and done without my knowledge.

15,383. Then in point of fact, it appears in your books as if the whole account was Kinglake and Vanderbyl's ?—Of course it does.

Miss Mary Jones recalled.

15,384. (Mr. Price.) What is it you wish to correct in your evidence yesterday with regard to this alteration in the ledger ?—That I made it when the entry was posted, and should have stated so yesterday had I had time to look at the ledger before I left.

15,385. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you make the alteration ?—I made it between November and Christmas.

15,386. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you do so ?—We transferred it to the gentleman who bought it.

15,387. Who told you ?—Mr. Nicholls told me to do that.

15,388. Which Mr. Nicholls ?—I cannot say.

15,389. One or the other told you to make that alteration ?—To make it by transferring it to the gentleman who bought it.

15,390. To Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Yes, but not to make the alteration in my ledger. I did that voluntarily.

15,391. (Mr. Anstey.) When were you to have done it, and where did he tell you ?—In my day book.

15,392. Is that produced ?—I have it here.

15,393. Will you show us that entry ?—There is the entry originally entered to Kinglake and Vanderbyl, and you will see the two gentlemen's names to it. Mr. Hammill and Mr. Clifford Symons.

15,394. When is the day book made up ?—Every night.

15,395. (Mr. Price.) This is the entry which you made you say after you had made the alteration here ?—I made the alteration in this book first.

15,396. What was it before you made it ?—To Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

15,397. No, it is Kinglake and Vanderbyl as it stands now ; Kinglake and Shelley ?—No.

15,398. But it is Kinglake and Vanderbyl now ?—No, that is ruled through in red ink, and you will see Mr. Hammill and Mr. Clifford Symons.

15,399. (Mr. Coleridge.) What does that mean ?—That I transferred it to their private account because they bought the goods.

15,400. (Mr. Price.) All you have done here is to put down 12*s.* 9*d.*?—Yes.

15,401. 6*s.* for rosettes, and 18 yards of ribbon 6*s.* 9*d.*, making 12*s.* 9*d.* together. That is the whole of that entry ; that does not explain the alteration of these 12 guineas ?—No, it does not refer to that ; that was made since.

15,402. No doubt this was properly debited, I suppose, to Kinglake and Vanderbyl ?

15,403. (Mr. Anstey.) The question I put to you had reference to the alteration ?—In my ledger you mean.

15,404. I asked you what was the book in which, if you had attended to Mr. Nicholls' instructions, you would have made the alteration from Kinglake and Shelley to Kinglake and Vanderbyl, and you said the day-book or journal?—The ledger.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Miss M. Jones.

15,405. You made the alteration in the ledger by mistake. You ought to have done it in the day book, and I ask you to show me the alteration you made in the day book. Where does that appear?—Allow me to explain. When I posted that entry, it was posted to the general account of "Election committee," and being a general account, I thought it was not worth while to open a fresh account to Mr. Vanderbyl. I simply ruled through the "Shelley" and wrote "Vanderbyl" over, still keeping the old folio open.

15,406. In what book?—The ledger.

15,407-8. I am asking about the day book?—I was coming to that. So it remained posted until November, and in November we did not wish to make any further claim on the committee, and we put it to each gentleman's private account who bought the goods, which were Mr. Hammill and Mr. Symmons, and in each of their private accounts you will find that entry is posted, and to each.

15,409. You are upon one thing and I am upon another. You are upon the orders given by Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl?—They were not.

15,410. But for them, and you put it to the private account of the one and the other?

15,411. (Mr. Price.) That is only the 12*s.* 9*d.*?—That is only the 12*s.* 9*d.*

15,412. (Mr. Anstey.) An outstanding claim of 12 guineas?—That was paid previously to my alteration.

15,413. We want to know all about that note of 12*s.* 9*d.*?—That remains as it was in the first place.

15,414. (Mr. Price.) Here is a summary of that account. It originally stood as "Kinglake and Shelley," and you put the pen with red ink through "Shelley" and "Vanderbyl" over it, and therefore Mr. Nicholls acknowledges that any accountant who would have to go through this account would find here, and naturally conclude, that goods to the amount of 12*l.* 12*s.* if not paid for, were owing by Kinglake and Vanderbyl, or if paid, that that had been a payment made by Kinglake and Vanderbyl. That would be the natural result, looking at this book. We want to know why you struck out "Shelley" in this book and put "Vanderbyl"?—Because it was a general account to the election committee.

15,415. From 1865?—From 1865.

15,416. Then having a new candidate coming into the field at the time you altered it, you were told to debit the new candidate?—I was not told; I did it on my own account.

15,417. But why?—Because Shelley was paid.

(Mr. Price.) No, it was not paid here; it is paid in 1866.

15,418. And when were the goods had?—In 1865.

15,419. But that was not struck out till November 1868. Why does it appear in this book that Kinglake and Vanderbyl are debited with 12*l.* 12*s.*, when Vanderbyl had nothing to do with it?—That is "Vanderbyl," the entry in the first place.

15,420. Which?—The 12*s.* 9*d.*

15,421. But not the 12 guineas?—No.

15,422. You have made it appear in these books as if Mr. Vanderbyl had ordered goods for 12*l.* 12*s.*, whereas, in point of fact, it was Kinglake and Shelley who ought to have been debited, and it appears that Shelley never paid it, and in 1866, after Vanderbyl has been returned as a member, the entry is altered?—No, it was not altered until 1868.

15,423. But that is after 1866?—Yes.

15,424. You may have altered the whole thing, because of 12*s.* 9*d.*; and then I understand you, because there was 12*s.* 9*d.* against Vanderbyl, you chose to make the whole thing stand against him?—No, certainly not.

15,425. (Mr. Anstey.) About the 12 guineas, who told you?—No one told me to do it.

15,426. You told us yesterday one of the Mr. Nicholls?—That is the very thing I came to contradict.

15,427. You have not yet. All you have said to-day is that hitherto one of the Nicholls told you to make the alteration; that you misunderstood his intention, which was that you should make the alteration in the day book, and you made it in the ledger also, and I want you to show me what the corresponding alteration in the day book is?—You have it in this book.

15,428. Have I not given your evidence correctly, that you mistook him; that was where he meant you to make the alteration—in the day book; you made it in the ledger?—No, he did tell me to make it there first.

15,429. Where?—In this day book; therefore if I altered it there, I am obliged to alter it in the ledger too.

15,430. (Mr. Coleridge.) That makes the books tally?—Yes.

15,431. (Mr. Anstey.) You made it in the day book?—I did.

15,432. You altered it by transferring it, as it were, from Kinglake and Shelley to Kinglake and Vanderbyl?—No; to Mr. Hammill and Mr. Clifford Symmons.

15,433. (Mr. Price.) That is the 12*s.* 9*d.*; I am talking of the 12*l.* 12*s.*?—I never altered the other.

15,434. (Mr. Anstey.) It speaks for itself; he made the alteration if you did not?—That "Vanderbyl" was written by me.

15,435. (Mr. Price.) Does not that to anybody looking at these books look as if Kinglake and Vanderbyl were responsible for the whole of this? Would not an accountant say that the whole account was an account for which Kinglake and Vanderbyl were liable?—Yes, I think he would, but not if he referred to the original entries.

(Mr. Anstey.) We refer to the entry, and cannot see any difference.

15,436. (Mr. Price.) Show us where the 12*l.* 12*s.* is in that book?—The 12*l.* 12*s.* is to the account of Kinglake and Shelley.

15,437. Is there a corresponding entry; this is copied from some book?—Yes; I have not got that book here.

15,438. We want to know the history of these 12 guineas, and in your book you acknowledge, as anybody must see who looks, or any accountant going through would find, the whole of this debited to Kinglake and Vanderbyl; not only the 12*s.* 9*d.*, but the 12 guineas?—It does appear in my ledger.

15,439. Then how is it that you make Vanderbyl responsible for the whole of that, instead of 12*s.* 9*d.*?—I have tried to explain it as nearly as I can.

14,440. (Mr. Coleridge.) These 12 guineas having been paid off, you then debited the smaller sums to the private account of Hammill and Symmons, and altered the name as regarded those smaller items only?—Yes, at the time that was posted.

15,441. (Mr. Price.) You altered it very imperfectly, because the entry there corresponds with the receipt; because it is perfectly certain that Sir John Shelley never paid this, and it is perfectly certain, to my mind at least, that Mr. Vanderbyl paid it?—Mr. Lovibond paid us.

15,442. But we know he did not pay it out of his own pocket.

15,443. (Mr. Anstey.) What is the meaning of your words just now, "the general election account?" referring to that unfortunate 12*s.* 9*d.*, you said something about your not thinking it necessary to open a new account, but to go on with the general election account?—I call it a general account, being a committee. Had it been a private individual I should have opened a fresh account.

15,444. Then why does that general account not show any of Mr. Bagehot's?—It does show it; those two intermediate entries are Mr. Bagehot's.

15,445. Which?

15,446. (Mr. Price.) The 2*l.* 8*s.* 4½*d.* and the 3*s.* 9*d.*?—Yes, 2*l.* 12*s.* 1½*d.*

15,447. (Mr. Anstey.) Then I understand now all these accounts were considered, and so treated in the books, by Messrs. Nicholls as forming one account, which the last comer into the borough as candidate would have to liquidate. Is that so?—No, certainly not.

15,448. Then what is your answer? You said you made a general account of it, but it comprised Sir John Shelley, Bagehot, and Vanderbyl. Shelley with Kinglake, Vanderbyl with Kinglake, Vanderbyl by himself, and Bagehot by himself; all forming one general account. Do you mean to tell me when this bill was presented for payment it was not presented for payment to Kinglake and to Vanderbyl considered as the last candidate?—No, it was not.

15,449. Were they the executors or administrators of the debt of Sir John Shelley, is that it? or the agents of Mr. Bagehot? In what capacity was it that they were asked to settle this?—We should have looked upon them as the agents of the candidates.

15,450. You therefore did present it to them as representing the whole body of Liberal candidates for this borough?—Not the whole.

15,451. The whole that had not paid their debts?—No, you will find a separate account.

15,452. Well, of those mentioned in that account, namely, Sir John Shelley and Mr. Bagehot, as well as Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, they are all mentioned in the general account?—Yes, they are.

15,453. You considered them as agents or representatives of all those candidates whose names are in the general account?—We considered Messrs. Reed and Cook responsible for Mr. Bagehot, and Mr. Lovibond for Mr. Vanderbyl.

15,454. When the 12*l.* 12*s.* were paid to you, I suppose that was the whole then due?

15,455. (Mr. Price.) No, 2*l.* 12*s.* and 12*l.* 9*s.* as well; the whole thing would have been those three?—Yes, but that former was paid before that other was posted in 1866.

15,456. It does not appear that this 2*l.* 12*s.* was ever paid?—No, it is not.

15,457. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it debited?—No.

15,458. Then why was it not paid?—Because we did not wish to receive any more money.

15,459. Messrs. Nicholls did not?—No.

15,460. Who told you so?—Mr. Nicholls has told me so two or three times.

15,461. Which of them?—Both of them said they did not want to receive money for election colours any more, and the account was stopped.

15,462. But they had received money for election colours?—In the first place.

15,463. When was that?—Sir John Shelley's election.

15,464. 12*l.* 12*s.* they received last year?—Yes; Sir John Shelley's election.

15,465. I am not talking of when it was due, but when they received it?—In 1866.

15,466. That was when it was incurred, was not it?—No, it was paid in 1866.

15,467. Then it is still more extraordinary. Do you mean to say that having received payment in 1866, you in 1868 made the alteration shown by your book?—I did.

15,468. For what purpose?—Because we considered Sir John Shelley's name as void.

15,469. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was dead, was not he?—He was dead.

15,470. What time in the year 1866 was this 12*l.* 12*s.* paid?—In September.

15,471. Therefore it was paid by Mr. Vanderbyl?—Mr. Henry Lovibond.

15,472. From Mr. Vanderbyl?—I cannot say; we have made no claims since 1866.

15,473. (Mr. Price.) If Messrs. Nicholls had desired to enforce payment against Mr. Vanderbyl by putting him into the county court, then of course it would have been necessary for you to produce your books to show it was debited?—Yes.

15,474. Would you have this book produced to show he was debited with it at that time?—No, not Vanderbyl.

15,475. Then I do not see the object of your putting it in if it was not to make the book as if it was a debt incurred by Vanderbyl, and not Sir John Shelley. I cannot understand why you altered it?—It was not my intention.

15,476. I can imagine that it might be by mistake, and that you found afterwards that Mr. Vanderbyl ought to pay it as his debt, and that you put it to Mr. Vanderbyl, and I can only suppose that you did that to make it tally with the receipt of the money, so as to show if any inquiry took place that it was Vanderbyl's debt, and not Sir John Shelley's?—No, it was not my intention to do so.

15,477. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did I catch you to say just now that you looked to Mr. Lovibond for Mr. Vanderbyl, and Mr. Kinglake to Messrs. Reed and Cook?—No, we had sent in that claim of Kinglake and Shelley to Lovibond, and the claim of Kinglake and Bagehot, sent in to Messrs. Reed and Cook.

15,478. (Mr. Price.) There would not be a claim of Kinglake and Bagehot, only Bagehot 2*l.* 12*s.*?—Kinglake and Bagehot, we have the account.

15,479. That could not be, because they never stood together. There never could be a joint debt incurred by Kinglake and Bagehot?—You have the bill.

15,480. The bill is Walter Bagehot, Esq., election committee, and that you say you sent to Messrs. Reed and Cook?—Yes.

15,481. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Messrs. Reed and Cook refuse to pay that bill?—They have not refused, the thing has gone on unpaid.

15,482. How is it?—We have not made the claim within the last——

15,483. (Mr. Price.) I understand you have received orders since not to press their claim?—We have not done so. We did not press Kinglake and Shelley's claim, Mr. Lovibond came into the counting-house and paid it voluntarily, quite unexpectedly.

15,484. And Mr. Nicholls did not say he would not take it?—No.

15,485. Knowing it was a debt incurred by Kinglake and Shelley?—He was there at the time, he did not take particular notice.

15,486. If he had taken the trouble to inquire he must have known that Mr. Lovibond in 1866 was paying Sir John Shelley's debt in 1865?—Yes.

15,487. Mr. Lovibond paid his own bill of 50*l.* at the same time. Did he give one cheque for 62*l.* 11*s.* or a separate cheque for this?—I do not think it was a cheque, as far as I remember it was cash for the 12 guineas, and his own private cheque for the 50*l.*

15,488. (Mr. Price.) The only other thing is to show where these items are debited, to whom?—To Kinglake and Shelley.

15,489. Can you tell when this bill was sent in?—I should think it would be sent in about Christmas 1865.

15,490. Therefore then, it would be an exact transcript from your book of "Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley"?—Yes.

15,491. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you send in your bills yearly or half-yearly?—Half-yearly.

15,492. (Mr. Price.) This would be an exact copy of what you read out?—Yes; I read to-day exactly what I read to you yesterday.

(Mr. Price.) That would be so. You made no demand, and Mr. Lovibond came and paid it under the circumstances; and then, for rather an inexplicable reason, you altered the name of Sir John Shelley to Mr. Vanderbyl in your book.

15,493. (Mr. Anstey.) What was it that made you contradict your evidence of yesterday; through whose information?—Because I said that Mr. Nicholls authorized me to make that alteration, and I remember he did not do so.

15,494. What caused you to make that contradiction?—Because I have been home since, and looked at my books.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Miss M. Jones.

9 Sept. 1869.

15,495. Your books would not tell you whether you got the order from Mr. Nicholls ?—No; I did it from my memory.

15,496. What has refreshed your memory ?—The dates, and referring to the ledger.

15,497. What has refreshed your memory ? The fact of Mr. Nicholls having or not ordered you to do that does not appear in your ledger at all ?—Nothing more than having had time to consider it. I had some conversation.

15,498. With whom ?—With Mr. Alfred Nicholls.

15,499. And it was in consequence of that you changed your opinion ?—It was in consequence of his reminding me in what way it was done.

15,500. (Mr. Anstey.) But he was not present ?—He was not present.

15,501. How could he remind you of how the thing was done, if he was not there when it was done ?—Because he knew that I occasionally made alterations of that kind.

15,502. That would not lead you to do it; your occasionally making alterations of that kind. Did he say you had got Mr. Nicholls into a scrape by what you had said ?—No; I was sorry for what I said yesterday.

15,503. He did not say you had got Mr. Nicholls into a great scrape ?—I did not.

15,504. But did he say so ?—No, he did not. I volunteered to explain myself this morning.

15,505. You are quite clear now that it was not at the suggestion of Mr. Nicholls that you did it ?—No, it was not.

15,506. You did it. You thought you would, by altering the thing, make it more clear and straight ?—Well, it was clear to myself.

15,507. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand you still to say (do not let us get into any confusion about it) that he told you to make the alteration in one of your books ?—In my day book.

15,508. But the mistake consisted, not in making the alteration, but in making it in your ledger ?—He asked me to make the transfer.

15,509. Was it your mistake, or was it not, that which I have just mentioned, of carrying the "transfer," as you call it; I call it an alteration or mutilation of the book. Did he ask you to make that alteration in your day book ?—He did.

15,510. And the only mistake that you made was that you made it in your ledger too ?—Yes, I did.

15,511. (Mr. Price.) And the only alteration he suggested referred only to the 12*s.* 9*d.* ?—Yes.

15,512. That is so ?—Yes.

15,513. (Mr. Anstey.) Not as to the 12 guineas ?—No; not a word about that.

15,514. (Mr. Price.) That is quite clear; and therefore you altered it, not only with respect to the 12*s.* 9*d.*, but you altered it in respect of the whole transaction ?—Yes, to the whole.

15,515. Including this ?—Yes; that was paid I considered.

(Mr. Anstey.) I should like to ask Mr. Nicholls a question.

Mr. H. F. Nicholls.

Mr. Henry Frederick Nicholls recalled.

15,516. (Mr. Anstey.) May I ask you, this mistake being made by Miss Jones, why now, nearly a year afterwards, you have not corrected this mistake, a very important one to a person who wishes to keep his books right ?—I did not know till yesterday that the name of Mr. Vanderbyl was over the account.

15,517. You do not seem to examine your books very carefully then ?—I did not know till yesterday afternoon, when the clerk called for it, that the alteration had been made.

(Mr. Anstey.) It is an extraordinary thing altogether.

15,518. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often do you audit your books ?—Twice a year.

15,519. (Mr. Anstey.) And you must have seen it twice in the first year ?—Twice a year.

15,520. Well, you have seen it once in the course of the year, if not twice ?—No, sir. The amount of the debts are taken off. I do not run through every account in my books. We have thousands of accounts.

15,521. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you an accountant in your employ ?—A young man.

15,522. (Mr. Anstey.) I must ask you the same question as to the tradesmen's books in Bridgwater, that I asked Mr. Sealy and Mr Prior with reference to bankers' books in Bridgwater. Is there any single instance of the like irregularity not connected with an election ?—It is a most irregular proceeding. This is a thing I have never done.

15,523. Is there a single instance of the same sort of irregularity not connected with an election ?—There may be so.

15,524. But is there ?—I do not know.

15,525. Do not tell me any such nonsense as "there may be." There may be entries about menageries of wild beasts in your books, and probably there may not be. To tell me "there may be" is not to tell me anything ?—I cannot tell at the present moment about this entry in my book.

(Mr. Anstey.) I have my own opinion about the matter.

15,526. (Mr. Price.) You were not present when Mr. Lovibond came and paid the account ?—I was not.

15,527. There was nobody but Miss Jones and your brother ?—No.

(Mr. Price.) I should like to ask your brother about it.

(The witness.) I think I could make that a little clearer to you.

Dr. F. Farmer.

Dr. Frederick Farmer recalled.

15,528. (Mr. Price.) What is the state of Mr. Cook's health this morning ?—He is better this morning; and I think it is quite clear that if he is kept quiet throughout the day, that by to-morrow morning he will be able to come here.

(Mr. Price.) Then he may be kept quiet to-day. We do not require his attendance to-day.

Mr. E. Barham.

Mr. Eustace Barham recalled.

(The witness.) I desire to claim your attention for a few minutes. I was present yesterday in court, when Mr. Henry Frederick Nicholls was giving his evidence, I could not very clearly understand what he said, but I did gather that he spoke to an interview taking place just before a certain journey to London made by Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Reed, and myself, a certain interview taking place between myself and Mr. George Bryant Sully at the county court. He stated that they went first to my office, and finding me at the county court, they called me out, and they then asked me, on seeing Mr. Bagehot in London, to extract from Mr. Bagehot a pledge that he would not in the coming contest have recourse to any corrupt practices; and Mr. Nicholls, I understood, also added that they exacted from me at the same time, personally, a pledge to the same effect.

15,529. (Mr. Price.) I will just look. I do not quite remember that ?—I heard it very imperfectly.

15,530. Yes; he spoke very indistinctly; but I remember his saying he had impressed upon you and the other gentlemen going to London that you should extract that undertaking from Mr. Bagehot?—I do not think he said that he impressed it upon the other gentlemen, I think he said he impressed it expressly upon me.

(Mr. Price.) I will look at the transcript of yesterday's proceedings with respect to it.

15,531. (Mr. Anstey.) What do you want to correct in it?—I want to correct that point which applies personally to myself, and to give at once the most distinct denial of my having entered into any such pledge; and I have written a note to Mr. George Bryant Sully, and also to Mr. Nicholls, merely stating that I intended to draw your attention to it this morning, and ask you to be so good as to put certain questions, because if I did enter into that personal pledge I broke it within three weeks afterwards, and it is a very gross thing.

15,532. (Mr. Price.) Wait a moment and I will see. It is towards the close of his evidence, was it not, when he got to the election of 1866?—Yes; the election of 1866; Mr. Bagehot's election.

15,533. (Mr. Anstey.) While the Chief Commissioner is referring to the authentic notes of the evidence given by those two witnesses, I will ask you a question on another point. You remember you told us of that extraordinary idea that took possession of Mr. Kinglake's mind, that in point of law an authority to act at an election is revoked by the departure of the person giving it from the place where it was given, and the impossibility you found in persuading him that that was not so; you remember that?—Quite so.

15,534. Mr. Cook, in his evidence, has stated the same thing, only that Mr. Kinglake communicated the point to him many days before, or some days before, the last day of the trial of the petition, about the 4th of January he thinks it was, that would be, you know, more than a month before Mr. Justice Blackburn closed the inquiry. Now I will ask you what was the earliest period at which Mr. Kinglake informed you or gave you to understand that he had any such idea in his mind?—I will tell you, sir, in a moment. He had told me of it before, but it was when I saw him in London. I am trying to give you the date. (The witness then referred to a paper.) On the 14th or 15th of December 1868.

15,535. Where?—In London.

15,536. At his own hotel?—I dined with him at the Reform Club. Mr. Lovibond and I were in London together. Mr. Lovibond did not dine with us. I and Mr. Kinglake dined together, and one of the topics of conversation was that very point at dinner that day.

15,537. I want to know this: did he tell you that he had left Bridgwater before these corrupt practices began?—No; I do not think he told me that. That was assumed.

15,538. Between you?—Between us. That was the assumption on which we were arguing the point of law.

15,539. Now which commenced the conversation? Did he commence by telling you of his point of law or did you commence it by suggesting that it would be very difficult for him to make out that he was not answerable for the acts of his agents, which was it?—Oh, I feel certain that he commenced it, because I remember another circumstance, and that was that that very same morning, we had then got to London, Mr. Lovibond and myself, we were at Mr. Kinglake's chambers, his private residence, not his chambers, but his residence, in the morning, and while we were there Mr. Vanderbyl came in. He had come in to see Mr. Kinglake to invite joint action in the defence of the petition, not knowing that he should find us there. He found us there, and Mr. Kinglake then told him that he declined joint action, because he considered his position entirely different from Mr. Vanderbyl's, inasmuch as he hed left the town and given up the election before any corrupt practices took place.

15,540. That was in the morning?—That was in the morning.

15,541. And in the evening when you dined with him he started the subject again?—Yes.

15,542. What did he say on that second occasion?—Well, it is a very difficult thing to say that, but it was the subject of conversation; and I should tell you this, that in the course of the day Mr. Lovibond and myself had had a consultation with counsel, and counsel had stated this, that it was at that time a matter of conversation and consideration in Westminster Hall whether or not, now that the trial of these election petitions came before a common law court, whether or not the old doctrine with respect to agency might not receive some modifications, and I think that I told Mr. Kinglake at dinner that I had received an intimation of that kind from counsel.

15,543. Then this point of law was started afresh?—Then this point of law was started afresh. It had been the subject of conversation in the morning and it was referred to again.

15,544. I forgot to ask this question before, but what had Mr. Vanderbyl said that morning when Mr. Kinglake told him of that point of law and the difference in their position?—I do not think Mr. Vanderbyl entered into it all. When Mr. Vanderbyl found that he was unwilling to co-operate he went away.

15,545. I suppose you endeavoured to explain to him at dinner how much he was in error about that point?—I told him so all through, that I thought so.

15,546. And he would not see it?—Well, sir, he did not see it.

15,547. I want to ask you this question. There was a discussion, I suppose, of more or less length, it lasted some minutes, on this point of law?—I dare say there was; I do not remember exactly.

15,548. And you may have had other conversations with him since on the subject?—No, I do not think I saw him again.

15,549. Take what I am going to ask you generally. In any of these conversations or discussions with Mr. Kinglake, or in any letter that you received from him, did he ever give you to understand that he left Bridgwater in order that he might not be made responsible for the illegal acts of inferior agents?—Most certainly not; and I feel quite satisfied that that was not so. Whatever might be the legal effect of his leaving Bridgwater, I feel certain it was a bonâ fide act.

15,550. You were not with him when he left?—No, I was not.

15,551. We are not asking you what you are satisfied about. Did he ever say this to you in any conversation or in any letter to you, "I took good care to "leave Bridgwater before anything of the kind could "go on"?—No, certainly not.

15,552. Nothing of the kind?—Certainly not.

15,553. But the fact is that he did leave Bridgwater before these corrupt practices began?—That is so.

15,554. And not only did he leave before, but just before?—Yes.

15,555. What date in November was the election?

(Mr. Anstey.) The 17th November.

(The witness.) No; December.

15,556. The election?—The election was in November.

15,557. The 17th of November?—Yes.

15,558. As early as the 14th December he had already made up his mind to rely upon that point of difference, as he had said, between his case and Mr. Vanderbyl's, that he had left Bridgwater actually before, though but a few minutes before, the corrupt practices began?—That is certainly so.

15,559. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now at the time that this conversation and this point of law was being argued at the Reform Club——?—I said "in Westminster Hall," I beg your pardon.

15,560. Did Mr. Kinglake know of the transaction between his brother and the bank about that 1,000*l.* cheque?—I do not know that.

15,561. But did he mention it?—I never heard of that transaction until I heard it in this court myself.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Mr. E. Barham.

9 Sept. 1869.

15,562. You did not know of it?—No, I did not know of it.

15,563. Did Mr. Kinglake know of the 500*l.* got from the bank by Mr. Allan?—I had not the slightest knowledge of the kind. My assumption in the argument was this, that the money which had been spent after Mr. Kinglake had left was Mr. Vanderbyl's money. This was our assumption, after that money had been spent by persons, or by the privity of persons, who, at all events up to the time when Mr. Kinglake had left, had been the agents of both, and whose authority had not been revoked.

15,564. I suppose you scouted Mr. Kinglake's point of law?—I certainly was always against it; I always said so.

15,565. Since these proceedings have been going on Mr. Kinglake has gone to the Crimea. Have you had any correspondence with him?—No; no correspondence at all.

15,566. (Mr. Anstey.) Has he gone to the Crimea?—I do not know. I believe he has.

15,567. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know whether Mr. Lovibond has heard from him?—Mr. Lovibond has received a letter from him, stating that he made a communication to you on the subject of his going there.

15,568. Where was that letter written from?—I believe it was written before he left London.

15,569. And you do not know whether any account of these proceedings have been sent from time to time to him to the Crimea?—I have not the slightest knowledge whether any account has been sent or not.

15,570. (Mr. Anstey.) In fact, you do not know whether he has gone to the Crimea or not?—No. He may be in London for what I know.

15,571. Can any one inform us whether he has gone to the Crimea or not?—I do not know. I have no knowledge.

15,572. (Mr. Price.) Probably his brother could tell us?—His brother probably could; but I do not know myself.

15,573. (Mr. Anstey.) To finish what I was asking you about, I will ask you this: At all events, on the 14th of December, twice on the 14th December, if not subsequently also, there were conversations between you and Mr. Kinglake, in which Mr. Kinglake betrayed or assumed a knowledge of corrupt practices having been laid to the charge of his and Mr. Vanderbyl's agents at the election, and upon which they were going to proceed?—Unquestionably.

15,574. And the general nature of those practices?—Well sir, that is to say, not apparently the general nature, because it appears by the evidence, that the impression we were going on then was erroneous. Whether Mr. Kinglake had knowledge I do not know.

15,575. Not erroneous, incomplete you mean?—I beg your pardon; incomplete.

15,576. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the time of this discussion of the point of law, had the petition been filed?—Oh yes, the petition had been filed.

15,577. So of course he knew what was charged?—And I remember another thing that it was on that very same day that the point first became known in London about the giving sufficient security.

15,578. And I suppose you took out a summons for further particulars?—I think so.

15,579. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not think you quite understood the question which was just now put to you by Mr. Coleridge, if I may judge from your answer to it. You say he told you he was going to stand on that point, that is to say, that he left before they began those corrupt practices. You say there was an assumption, by which I suppose I am to understand what you call down here an "understanding," between you and him, or else that it was generally understood, that the corrupt practices were not those which were merely stated in the petition, but those which appear to have been actually committed at a certain hour of the day; otherwise how could he have fixed upon that point in his own mind, if he left before they began, unless he was aware that the corrupt practices in question were generally those to which you have particularly spoken, namely, the corrupt practices conducted from the "Globe"?—Why, sir, I think for this reason, that it was after he left that that wonderful change took place in the borough.

15,580. No matter how he got at it, but he was aware of it at the time he had that discussion with you, not only that the petition contained the verbiage necessary to make a good formal petition against a return, but that there was going to be evidence of practices which would account for that wonderful rise in his favour after he left the town?—Well, sir, I think he must have had such an amount of suspicion of it as amounted to next door to a certainty.

15,581. But it was an assumption as I understand you?—Yes.

15,582. His point of law which he persisted in with such tenacity was grounded upon what you call the assumption of that as a fact?—Yes.

15,583. That being so, I must ask you this, do you think he would have taken so extreme a measure where either his own interests or those of his colleagues were concerned as to sever from Mr. Vanderbyl, unless he was thoroughly aware that the petitioners were not going to proceed with any corrupt practices earlier than his departure from the town of Bridgwater?—Well, I should think that was probable.

15,584. That is evident?—Well, I think that is a fair inference to draw; but I have no more means of drawing it than you have.

15,585. (Mr. Price.) Do you say that you proceeded on the assumption at that time that no corrupt practices had been used for him, except in the way of joint agency, which of course would make him liable; did you proceed on the assumption that there had been no direct corrupt practices on his behalf?—Yes.

15,586. No spending of money on his behalf?—That is what I mean, that no money of his had been spent by his friends.

15,587. On the 14th December, when you had this conversation, were you unaware of the bank transaction of the 500*l.*?—Entirely. I never learnt the particulars of that bank transaction until I heard them in this court.

15,588. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Lovibond never informed you?—I never learnt the particulars of it, but I did hear shortly after the petition (after the petition and before this Commission) that there was a question of 500*l.* having been taken of Sealey's bank under some very extraordinary circumstances.

15,589. But you had not heard of it at the time of this discussion between Mr. Kinglake and you?—No, certainly not.

15,590. And therefore, Mr. Lovibond concealed it from you?—Certainly.

15,591. And Mr. Kinglake, if he knew it, concealed it from you also?—Mr. Kinglake, if he knew it, concealed it from me also.

15,592. (Mr. Price.) His brother would know it. I dare say he was in constant communication with his brother?—Well, sir, you understand you are precisely on the same footing that I am.

15,593. This is what Mr. Nicholls said yesterday. He stated that he saw Mr. Sully, and persuaded Mr. Sully to go and see the professional gentlemen, and to try to secure a pure election. Then they called upon Mr. Barham. "We went to Mr. Barham's office, he "was not at home, but we were told that he was "at the county court. We went together to the "county court, and called him out of the county court "into the private room, and I then explained to him "the object of our visit, and I asked whether he "would undertake to put Mr. Bagehot to a pledge "that he would spend no money, and to do so before "the professional men. Previously he had canvassed "very warmly the object of our coming to him, and "he said, 'Most certainly; I will do so with the "greatest willingness;' and I also asked him,

" 'Will you ask him whether he will share with the " 'Liberal electors of Bridgwater the cost of petition- " 'ing, providing our opponents spend money,' and he " said, 'It is a very proper question and I will do so.' " Then Mr. Coleridge says, 'Are you aware, after " 'doing that, that he is one of the four people who " 'guaranteed the borrowing of the 1,000*l.*?"'—Then, sir, it does not amount to a statement that he exacted a pledge from me personally.

15,594. Then his answer to that question is, "I " was going to explain. I understood, not from Mr. " Barham himself, but Mr. Sully, that the answer he " brought back from London was that he did put " those questions to Mr. Bagehot, and Mr. Bagehot " answered them in the way he desired, but there " was nothing surprised me so much that at Mr. " Bagehot's election to find that corrupt practices " were resorted to, and I must tell you that on the " morning of the election, Mr. Francis Thompson, " Mr. Sully and myself, and Mr. George Sully, were " ignorant of everything but honest conduct at " that election." Therefore, what he seems to have said was this, he asked you to put Mr. Bagehot to a pledge, and that you said you would do so with the greatest willingness?—Quite so. I did not clearly understand what he said. I thought he said that he put me under a pledge personally. I may say that this was a thing that escaped me, but having had it drawn to my attention by Mr. Nicholls's evidence it brings to my mind this circumstance, which I will mention at once, that on the journey to London with Mr. Reed and Mr. Lovibond a discussion was commenced, either by Mr. Reed or Mr. Lovibond, with respect to the arrangements that should be made for the providing the money; and when that discussion arose I, knowing that I was charged with this message to Mr. Bagehot, felt myself placed in an anomalous position, and I stated to Mr. Reed and to Mr. Lovibond the pledge I had given, and that immediately occasioned a very considerable discussion, which lasted during a considerable part of the journey, as to whether or not I should make good this pledge, and I insisted upon making good this pledge, but at the same time I wish to state that the result of those very arguments which then took place was the very beginning of that alteration of my opinion and of my view and of my action which took place so shortly afterwards. It was in the course of that contest of opinion which took place then that the difficulty of conducting that election was brought home to me, and although I carried out faithfully my promise to Mr. Sully and to Mr. Nicholls, I must state that I did it to the letter only, and I am afraid that a great deal of the spirit of the thing had gone out of it.

15,595. (Mr Coleridge.) You said when you were examined before, that as Mr. Lovibond was an older hand than you were, you deferred to him?—Yes.

15,596. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Lovibond wish to dissuade you from exacting that pledge from Mr. Bagehot, as you had promised Mr. Sully and Mr. Nicholls you would?—He certainly did.

15,597. After you told him that you had given the pledge to these gentlemen that you would do it?—He certainly did. I remember he endeavoured to bring me round to his view that night, and he said, "Well, " it is perfectly clear that if Mr. Patton's friends " are going to spend money it will not do to go and " talk to Mr. Bagehot about not spending money."

15,598. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you go and tell Mr. Bagehot of the pledge you had been requested to exact for him?—I do not remember what I said, but undoubtedly I did.

15,599. (Mr. Price.) After Mr. Bagehot had been let in for this sum of money for illegal expenditure, did not he turn round and say, "What is the meaning " of your coming to me and asking me to conduct the " election on pure principles, and then, after all, " coming down upon me for this money for illegal " purposes?"—No, he did not. After the close of the poll he said, "Mr. Barham, I am afraid there has " been an illegal expenditure." He never said he would not recoup anybody. He behaved very much better than I had any right to expect.

15,600. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there not also this further point in it. You had got a pledge from Mr. Bagehot, which I suppose he understood to be a pledge to those who he supposed had requested you to obtain it?—Quite so.

15,601. When he discovered he was let in for a sum of money avowedly spent for bribery purposes, do you mean to say that he did not object to you, and say, " How can I pay this money, seeing that I am bound " by a pledge to the electors, which you have yourself " extorted from me, that I would not be a party to " any corrupt practices?"—He certainly did not, and I do not think I saw him on the subject. We only saw his lawyer, Mr. Robins.

15,602. When he said to you, "Mr. Barham," &c., &c., did not he say, " if there has been money spent " in corrupt practices, I certainly shall not recoup " anybody who has paid the money, for I am bound " by a pledge"?—No, he certainly did not.

15,603. Does not that give rise to a suspicion that, like yourself, Mr. Bagehot had pledged himself as to the letter and left himself entirely free as to the spirit of it?—I cannot say. That is my statement. There is another thing I wish to mention. I am made to state in the paper, I suppose I did say it, that Mr. Kinglake had gone upon the circuit. That is not so.

15,604. (Mr. Price.) That was in answer to my question whether he had had a legal education; and that was when, I think, we were on the point of his being bound by the acts of his agents?—In point of fact he was at the equity bar.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

A. Allan.

15,605. (Mr. Price.) I want you to be very particular as to how you answer this question. We wish to know from you whether you paid any of the bribe money which had been entrusted to you for the purposes of the last election after you had heard of the proceedings which were likely to be taken, either by way of election inquiry or the inquiry before the Commissioners?—Not one shilling.

15,606. That you are quite clear about?—All the money I paid was paid at the "New Inn" on the afternoon of the polling day. It was all paid in half-an-hour's time. I never paid a shilling to any one since.

15,607. I must now ask you this question, which I put to you the other day, it is not for the purpose of inquiring too curiously into your private affairs, but it is necessary that I should ask you. You became the purchaser of a property at Wembdon?—That was four years ago, before Mr. Bagehot's first election; before I had had anything to do with electioneering.

15,608. With your own money?—With my own money; before I had anything to do with electioneering.

15,609. Before you had had anything to do with any election at all?—Before I had had anything to do with any election at all.

15,610. You have purchased no property since? Have you laid out such a sum of money as 1,300*l.* since you began bribing for the purchase of property?—No.

15,611. Nothing like that?—That is the last property I have purchased, and it was before Mr. Bagehot's first election, and before I had had anything to do with electioneering. I effected some mortgages since.

15,612. How much have you lent on mortgage?—I may have lent more than 1,000*l.*

15,613. In what year? In one year?—I am quite prepared to show you every list of items connected with it.

15,614. We are not actuated by an impertinent curiosity. It is a public duty, and a painful duty, at the same time, we are required to perform it. You are perfectly prepared to explain it if necessary?—Perfectly prepared.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

A. Allan.

9 Sept. 1869.

15,615. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the time you had lent this money on mortgage, had you retired from what you call the "Scotch" trade?—Yes.

15,616. And you had the money which came out of that business on hand, and you lent it on mortgage, instead of investing it in property?—Yes. I am quite prepared to show my banking account, and everything connected with any transaction I have had in my life.

15,617. (Mr. Anstey.) Did I understand you to say in your former examination that you did not sign the petition of 80 because you thought it was bad taste?—I did sign it. It was before I had anything to do with electioneering matters.

15,618. One witness, I do not know whether it was you, gave such a reason for not having signed the petition?—It was John Smith.

(Mr. Anstey.) Yes; it was John Smith.

15,619. (Mr. Price.) Your hands were clean at that time?—Yes. If the prayer had been granted I should not have been in the position I am here to-day.

(Mr. Price.) Your answers to the questions we have put to you are satisfactory, and therefore we shall not trouble you any further upon that. We were obliged to put the questions to you in consequence of certain rumours about the town.

Mr. Henry Kingston Reynolds sworn.

Mr. H. K. Reynolds.

15,620. (Mr. Price.) You are an accountant in the Newport branch of the West of England Bank?—Yes, I am one of them.

15,621. Were you, in the year 1866, at the time of Mr. Bagehot's election, cashier at the Bridgwater branch of the same bank?—Yes, I was.

15,622. Do you remember Mr. Barham drawing cheques on the bank on the polling day?—I do.

15,623. To whom were those cheques debited?—To Mr. Eustace Barham.

15,624. Had he a private account there?—He had.

15,625. Were those cheques entered in the ordinary way to his private account?—They were not.

15,626. To what account were they entered?—To a separate account.

15,627. How was that account headed?—I have the books here.

15,628. Have you the books here?—The books are all here.

15,629. You had better show them to us. Were they entered by you?—They were.

15,630. Then you will be able to speak to it?—That is the account (pointing to the account in a book).

15,631. How were the cheques entered there in your book?—"1866, June 7th." Shall I read the heading exactly?

15,632. Yes?—"Eustace Barham, solicitor of Bridgwater. Separate account."

15,633. That is the way it is headed?—That is the way it is headed. "1866, June 7th. To self."

15,634. We do not care about his private account?—The cheque was payable to self. It was payable to payee, 500*l.*

15,635. (Mr. Coleridge.) In gold?—I do not know. It is not entered here as such.

15,636. (Mr. Anstey.) Go on reading it?—"Ditto, 200*l.* Total, debit balance, 700*l.*"

15,637. (Mr. Price.) Was there any payment made by him?—On the 9th he is credited "By cash, 100*l.*," leaving a debit balance of 600*l.* On the 30th June, "By cash, 600*l.*" clearing the account.

15,638. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then he paid in nothing before drawing on that account. It was an imaginary account when he drew upon it?—Oh, exactly, in that sense.

15,639. (Mr. Price.) You made him draw on credit?—Exactly.

15,640. Did he ask that it should be done in that way, not to be credited to his private account?—I believe so.

15,641. (Mr. Anstey.) What authority did he give you for paying the money, a cheque I suppose?—Oh, exactly.

15,642. He brought cheques?—Yes, two cheques.

15,643. Are you sure there were no memoranda?—I will send for them if you like. In my own mind I am perfectly satisfied they were cheques.

15,644. (Mr. Price.) In the first place they were handed to Mr. Ford?—Not on that occasion. That was the second election.

15,645. The cheques were first handed to Mr. Ford, and Mr. Ford gave you the gold for them from time to time?—For the 200*l.*

15,646. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose Mr. Barham's own private account was quite sufficient to have met those sums?—I cannot say. I will refer. I suppose I need not do that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You need not see the particulars.

15,647. (Mr. Price.) At all events, he asked to be allowed to draw upon a separate account?—So I understood.

15,648. And, in the course of the day, were the cheques which were signed by Mr. Barham given to you?—Yes, no doubt.

15,649. To square the cash account?—Yes, exactly.

15,650. Did they go through the books in the regular form, all those cheques?—Yes, certainly. The cash book is the first.

15,651. (Mr. Coleridge.) Will any book show whether that was in gold or notes?—I think not.

15,652. (Mr. Price.) I thought you were prepared to say all the advances were made in gold, because Mr. Ford had gone to Bristol the night before and got gold. Let me remind you. Do you know what the money was for?—I certainly did.

15,653. Was that from information that Mr. Ford had given you?—Certainly.

15,654. And had he gone to Bristol the night before for gold?—He had.

15,655. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he bring back gold?—I think he brought back 500*l.* I could tell you by the cash book.

15,656. Does that lead you to say that these cheques were paid by gold?—Well, no doubt about it.

15,657. (Mr. Price.) I believe you were in no communication with anybody but Mr. Ford, and you acted under his instructions?—I did.

15,658. At the time of Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866 were you in charge of the Bridgwater branch when Mr. Ford was out of town?—I was.

15,659. Now, before Mr. Ford went away did you ask Mr. Ford what course you should adopt if Mr. Barham applied for another advance?—I did, or if he should want any money. I cannot tell you the exact words of course.

15,660. Exactly. Mr. Barham is the solicitor for this bank?—He is one of them.

15,661. What did Mr. Ford say?—He said, in substance, that I was to let him have what he wanted.

15,662. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he put any limit to it?—No, I am not aware that he did.

15,663. You were not to let him have a couple of thousand pounds if he wanted it?—Oh, certainly, I should say.

15,664. Who were the other solicitors?—Mr. Carslake. It is Carslake and Barham.

15,665. (Mr. Price.) On the following day were you sent for at your lodgings by Mr. Barham?—I cannot remember.

15,666. Did you see Mr. Barham?—I did.

15,667. Did he ask you for anything?—Yes.

15,668. What for?—For money.

15,669. For how much?—200*l.* or 300*l.*

15,670. Did he ask for it in gold ?—I believe he did.

15,671. In the course of the day, did you supply Mr. Barham with money to the extent of 1,500*l.* ?—Yes.

15,672. How was that money recouped ?—By two cheques on Manchester.

15,673. Signed by whom ; by Mr. Brogden ?—Yes.

15,674. (Mr. Anstey.) On a Manchester bank ?—Yes. We have them here properly entered.

15,675. First of all, on whose authority did you pay the money out ; did they draw cheques, or did they sign memoranda if you wanted them ?—Mr. Eustace Barham, I believe ; I cannot speak positively, because you must remember it is three years ago. I believe he gave me, at various times in the day, memoranda.

15,676. Not cheques ?—Not cheques.

15,677. Have you any of those memoranda ?—Certainly not.

15,678. Have you destroyed them ?—They were destroyed at the time. Of course when I received the cheques I had no further necessity to keep them.

15,679. What was the nature of the memoranda, as well as you can remember their contents ?—Simply, I suppose, "E. B.," or "Eustace Barham," a certain amount.

15,680. And anybody who brought a memorandum got the amount ?—He gave me cheques to recoup me for those amounts.

15,681. Yes ; but if anybody brought such a memorandum he got the amount described in it ?—Nobody but himself. I paid every farthing to him personally.

15,682. Then Mr. Barham is somebody. Mr. Barham personally brought you a memorandum, and you gave him the sum you mentioned on it ?—I did.

15,683. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect anything about a guarantee of Mr. Bate's, Mr. Lovibond's, and Mr. Barham's for 1,000*l.* ?—I do not.

15,684. (Mr. Price.) You say Mr. Barham gave you no cheque that day ?—Yes.

15,685. Do you not remember that he gave you a cheque for 700*l.*, and a cheque for 800*l.* that day ; just see ?—Those entries are not in my handwriting. They are in the handwriting of a junior clerk. That is for the 800*l.*, and on the next day, 700*l.* (pointing to the entries in a book).

15,686. On that same was it, the 800*l.* ?—The 800*l.*

15,687. And the 700*l.* ?—On the next day.

(Mr. Price.) The first day is, "Manchester and "County Bank, Alexander Brogden drawer of "cheque, payable to self, 12th July, 800*l.*" And the next is, "Manchester and County Bank, Manchester. "Drawer's name, Alexander Brogden, 13th July. "Payable to self, 700*l.*"

15,688. (Mr. Anstey. Were those cheques honoured at Manchester ?—They were.

15,689. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you know of the transaction ?—That is all.

15,690. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you know, with regard to that sum, as you did with regard to the former election, for what purpose the money was wanted ?—Certainly.

15,691. For bribery ?—(No answer.)

15,692. (Mr. Price.) Did you yourself vote at that election ?—I have no vote, and never had.

15,693. Did Mr. Barham, when you saw him, say that he would hold you harmless for any pecuniary loss, either to yourself or to anyone else ?—Certainly ; most distinctly.

15,694. Did you ask him for that assurance ?—Yes. I thought I would make assurance doubly sure.

15,695. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you not take anything like a guarantee when he asked to be allowed to draw against an imaginary account ?—Do you mean in the first instance ?

15,696. Yes. Did you not take any guarantee ?—Oh, no.

15,697. (Mr. Anstey.) Then Mr. Barham gave you cheques on that occasion ?—Yes, cheques.

15,698. Now, supposing you had not got the second cheque that day, what security would you have had that the second sum of 700*l.* would have been made good to you ?—Mr. Barham's word.

15,699. Supposing he had died over night ?—Well, I really cannot say.

15,700. Then the shareholders in your bank would have suffered ; is that so ?—I presume they would.

Mr. JOHN HAWKEY BINGHAM CARSLAKE called.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

15,701. (Mr. Price.) That is a list of magistrates you have in your hand ?—It is a list of magistrates.

15,702. Just read it, and then our shorthand writer will get it on the note ?—I have prepared the list in accordance with your directions. "Justices of the "Peace for the Borough of Bridgwater. When ap- "pointed. Names. Occupation as stated in the "Commission. Politics. Remarks. 22nd January. "1836. Thomas Withy Inman, Esquire, Liberal, "Left the town. John Chapman, Esquire, Liberal. "Dead. John Brown, merchant, Liberal. Joseph "Thompson, ironmonger, Liberal. Dead. Those are the old commission. Then the new commission, dated "16th November, 1867. The mayor for the "time being. John Browne, merchant, Liberal. "John Chapman, Esquire, Liberal. He is dead. Thomas Whitby Inman, Esquire, Liberal. He has "left the town. Joseph Thompson, ironmonger, "Liberal. He is dead." The same names as I read before. They are repeated. "1841. George Browne, "captain in the Royal Navy, Liberal. He is dead. "Robert Ford, merchant, Liberal. He is dead. "Robert Bate, conveyancer, Liberal. He is dead. "1842. Robert Bagehot, Esquire, Conservative. He "is dead. Frederick Axford, Esquire, Conservative. "He is dead. John Sealy, Esquire, Conservative. "He is dead." I have put what I suppose to be their politics. I am not quite sure about what I have said of Mr. Sealy, but I believe he was a Conservative. He comes in the batch of Conservatives.

15,703. It does not always follow that the gentlemen who are nominated in one particular Government are all of the politics of that Government. My experience is, that they generally take a majority of their own side, and throw some of the other side in ?—There is a very small majority thrown in now and then. "Edward Anstie Stradling, Esquire, Conservative. "He is dead. Jonathan Toogood, Esquire, Conser- "vative. He has left the town. Richard Woodland, "Esquire, Conservative. He is dead. 1851. Abraham "King, surgeon, Liberal. He is dead. Robert Russell "Sewell, bachelor of medicine, Liberal. He has left "the town. Charles Thompson, ironmonger, Liberal. "He has left the town." He has property rated in the town, and I believe he has a right to act. "Thomas "Sully, merchant, Liberal. Dead. 1852. William "Baker, Esquire, Conservative. Dead. John Far- "quhar, merchant, Conservative. Left the town. "Thomas Ford, Esquire, Liberal. Dead." He was a Liberal, appointed in that Conservative batch. "William Dean Bath, Esquire, Conservative. Dead. "1859. Richard Reynolds Woodland, Esquire, Con- "servative. Dead. John Woodland, Esquire, Con- "servative. Left the town. 1864. James Haviland, "gentleman, Liberal. Carey Bailey Mogg, gentle- "man, Liberal. William John Ford, gentleman, "Liberal. Henry Frederick Nicholls, gentleman, "Liberal. 1866. William Henry Axford, M.B., "Conservative. Robert Salmon, banker, Conser- "vative. Follett Charles Hennett, ironfounder, "Conservative. Captain Ritson, merchant, Conser- "vative. Joseph Richard Smith, alderman, Conser- "vative. 1868. Frederick Farmer, doctor of physic, "Conservative. Edward Lilly, land agent, Conser- "vative. John Baptiste Hammill, merchant, Liberal." He was the one Liberal of that batch. Then there is the recorder for the time being under the Act of Parliament, Ernest Haythorne Reed, Esquire. Then you asked me to give you a list of the county magistrates resident within the borough. There are only two living. "George Browne, captain in the Royal "Navy, Liberal. He is dead. 1851. John Lovell Sealy, "banker, Liberal. 1861. John Browne, merchant, "Liberal." Those are the whole of the magistrates.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

9 Sept. 1869.

15,704. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that Mr. John Browne, the same person who is the justice of the peace for the borough?—Yes.

15,705. (Mr. Price.) Now, with reference to what you mentioned to me yesterday, we may as well state it to you publicly, that we shall be obliged to you if you will make out for us what portions of the parish of Bridgwater are not within the parliamentary borough, with a view to the question which may arise hereafter, a very important one, as to the expense which will fall upon the borough in connexion with this inquiry; so that we may be prepared, if we think it right, to lay a statement before Her Majesty's Attorney General, to show what portions of this borough would be rated to this inquiry, which are not portions of the peccant borough?—Yes, exactly; and that relates to the parishes of Wembdon and Durley.

15,706. Exactly; all those places which would be rated to the public rate, but which have nothing to do with the parliamentary borough?—I suppose you wish to know the number of houses, and the rateable value?

15,707. Yes?—I have that all prepared in Bridgwater.

(Mr. Price.) Very well. Will you let us have that at some time or other. Mr. Winterbotham had better be here now.

(Mr. Carslake.) He is in Bristol now, and it was in consequence of that, that I volunteered to make that statement about him.

(Mr. Anstey.) I may here remark, what it is right that everybody should know, that I am not at all satisfied myself with the practice of a general retainer being given by a witness to a medical man to come here every day on his behalf as often as his name is in the list, and so often to state that he cannot come.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

(Witness.) On referring to my bank book, I find that I am in error. It was on the 1st of June 1868 that I paid for that field at Wembdon.

15,708. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you give for it?—260*l.* was the purchase money.

15,709. What was that about the 1,300*l.*?—I bought a property in Wembdon on which I paid a deposit of 200*l.*, and there was a dispute about the acreage, and it was referred to arbitration, and afterwards the deposit was returned.

15,710. What was the amount of that property, if you had bought it?—1,200*l.*

15,711. If you had bought that property, should you have had the money on mortgage?—No, I should not. I beg to hand in my bank book. I will show you the documents relating to any item in the bank book. The 200*l.* that I paid on deposit was returned; that is, part of the 200*l.* That makes up the money I had on mortgage.

15,712. I suppose I need hardly ask you; you never paid a bribe by cheque?—Never in my life; and I never paid a shilling of my own money for electioneering purposes.

15,713. You never were so unfortunate as Mr. Cornelius White and Mr. Smith, who said they were out of pocket?—No, I never paid a shilling.

15,714. I suppose nobody ever is out of pocket?—I never lost anything.

(Mr. Price.) Very well. You knew, as I told you this morning, you should have a thorough opportunity, having been in a peculiar position, of explaining anything. We did not intend that anything should be brought to our knowledge, in which your character was involved, which you should not have the fullest opportunity of meeting. For that reason we have called you, and it is possible that we may call you again.

(Witness.) The reason I said nothing about the Wembdon purchase was the fact that I did not buy. The purchase was not completed. It went off.

Mr. J. G. Sully.

Mr. JOHN GEORGE SULLY sworn.

15,715. (Mr. Price.) Are you the son of Mr. James Wood Sully?—Yes.

15,716. I understand you want to say something about your father's state of health. The doctor is not here who attended him?—No.

15,717. How is that?—A message was just sent to my father that his medical man should appear here. I was sent for from the office, and when I saw my father he requested me to see Dr. Winterbotham with that end in view, and I find he is out of town, and won't be home till late at night.

15,718. (Mr. Coleridge.) He has gone to Bristol, as we have heard?—I do not know where he has gone.

15,719. (Mr. Price.) When did he last attend your father?—Yesterday.

15,720. Has he been in constant attendance upon him?—Yes.

15,721. What is your father suffering from?—He broke one of his ribs two weeks ago; last Saturday fortnight, I think it was.

15,722. Is your father confined to his bed?—No.

15,723. You cannot tell us, I suppose, when he will be able to come? Does he go out at all?—No, not at all yet.

15,724. (Mr. Anstey.) Has Dr. Winterbotham been atending him all this time?—Yes; he was there yesterday, I think.

15,725. Had Dr. Winterbotham been attending your father before this Commission opened?—Yes. It was on a Saturday the accident to my father occurred; the Saturday before you opened the Commission on the Monday.

15,726. I want to know why Dr. Winterbotham, when he came here to offer himself to speak to the health of another witness, did not tell us about your father's state of health, your father having been then summoned, and having had notice that he should be wanted?—I cannot tell at all.

15,727. When did your father request him first to appear here on his behalf?—I do not know.

15,728. Do you know that your father has requested him to attend on his behalf?—I asked my father yesterday, knowing that his name was on the list, whether it was all arranged for Mr. Winterbotham to speak for him when he should be called upon; and I understood from my father that it should be so.

15,729. Whenever he should be called upon?—I think so.

15,730. How long is that arrangement to last?—I suppose if he had been at home he would have spoken to-day, when he was called upon.

15,731. Are we to understand that this is to be done day after day, or how long is it likely to last?—I do not quite understand your question.

15,732. Dr. Winterbotham, you say, is to appear whenever your father is called upon?—No, I did not understand that. My father knew he would be examined, being subpœnaed, and I understood Dr. Winterbotham would state, the first time he was called upon, that he was unable to appear.

15,733. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long do you expect it will be before your father is about?—I do not know.

15,734. He is up and dressed, I believe?—Yes.

15,735. He is perfectly fit to be examined if we went to his house?—I do not know that he is.

15,736. You say that what is the matter with him is a broken rib. That would not be so very much harm?—He is an old man, and it has been a great shock to his nervous system.

15,737. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that you contemplate that we are to close our inquiry here, and perhaps in London too, without having the advantage of your father's testimony?—That depends upon when you close it, I suppose.

15,738. What prospect do you hold out?—I do not know. I have not asked Dr. Winterbotham. He is very desirous to give you his statement.

15,739. Has he gone out yet?—No; he only came downstairs on Monday.

15,740. That is something to know. Monday last?—Monday last.

15,741. And he has not since been confined to his bed?—No.

15,742. He is moving about the house?—No, he does not move much. He just walks up and down the house.

15,743. He walks about the house?—Yes.

15,744. And he attends, I suppose, to his daily affairs?—No, he does not.

15,745. Writes letters?—No.

15,746. Converses?—Yes, he talks a little, of course.

15,747–8. And takes his meals?—Yes.

15,749. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is his age?—Sixty-three, I think.

15,750. (Mr. Price.) A broken rib may be a very serious thing. Has the broken rib affected any vital part, the lungs or anything of that kind?—I believe not. The only thing is that in the case of a man of my father's age it is a shock to the nerves. Dr. Winterbotham said at first, and he says so still, that it is just quiet and rest that he wants.

15,751. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did the accident take place?—He fell from a pair of steps.

(Mr. Price.) Perhaps you will communicate with Dr. Winterbotham when he comes back to-night, or leave a message, that we should like to have his evidence to-morrow?

15,752. (Mr. Anstey.) And you will also remember, Mr. Sully, that it is at this particular period of the inquiry that we would rather have your father's evidence, because if we took it later it would break the chain?—Yes.

Mr. Charles Robert Bate recalled.

Mr. C. R. Bate.

15,753. (Mr. Price.) What we want to ask you is with reference to this piece of information. I think, to do you justice, if I recollect right, you were asked principally the other day about your father's connexion with Mr. Kinglake?—I was.

15,754. I cannot quite recollect whether you were asked to give us any information as to any part you took in the election of 1868 or not?—1868; oh yes.

15,755. And as to being asked to go to the bank?—Yes.

15,756. Now, we learned yesterday from Mr. Nicholls that you and Mr. Mogg, upon inquiry, found Mr. Lovibond at Mr. Nicholls's?—Yes. (A pause.) I beg your pardon; I said "Yes." I am not quite sure that Mr. Mogg went with me to Mr. Nicholls's.

15,757. We understood yesterday from Mr. Nicholls that you and Mr. Mogg arrived at his house to inquire for Mr. Lovibond?—Yes; but I do not think that Mr. Mogg went into Mr. Nicholls's house with me.

15,758. Then give us your version. In the first place, what induced you to go and look for Mr. Lovibond?—The report that Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham had both deserted their rooms. They were in charge of different wards. Then hearing that they were constantly asked for—I do not know whether I was asked to go and look for them, or whether I volunteered to go and look for them, but I went. I went first to one room and then to the other, and found both rooms vacant; or if there was anybody there it was merely the check clerk in charge of the sheet. Having been in the separate rooms, I then asked one or two persons in the street what had become of Messrs. Lovibond and Barham. Some one, I cannot tell you who, told me that he thought he was gone up in the square.

15,759. Mr. Lovibond was it?—Yes. I went to Mr. Mogg's house, and asked if he was there, and he was not there; and I think, I cannot say for certain, but I think Mr. Mogg told me he had seen him pass with Mr. Henry Nicholls.

15,760. Then you went up?—Then I went to Mr. Nicholls's, and there I found him.

15,761. When did you see Mr. Mogg?—Just before I saw Mr. Nicholls.

15,762. Before?—Yes.

15,763. Therefore you went to the house together?—No; I say I went to Mr. Mogg's house. They are close together, the two houses are, and to go to Mr. Nicholls's house you would pass Mr. Mogg's house, to go round the square.

15,764. Then you saw Mr. Lovibond?—Yes.

15,765. Tell us what passed?—I can hardly say what passed. I think, as far as I recollect, "they had deserted their post and the election was altering."

15,766. You said so?—That the election was altering, the position of the candidates was altering, and that Mr. Kinglake was gradually catching up. Upon that he got up immediately, and I stayed back with Mr. Nicholls.

15,767. You remained behind?—I did.

15,768. Did you see him go away with Mr. Mogg?—No, I cannot say that I did. Mr. Nicholls's front door is round the corner; it does not face the square at all. I believe I walked round the corner by myself. I do not think Mr. Mogg went with me at all.

15,769. Did Mr. Lovibond leave you then?—He did.

15,770. Did he say what he would go and do?—No, nothing.

15,771. He merely got up?—I cannot say. He might have said, "I will see to it." I cannot say that he said anything to me.

15,772. How long did you stay with Mr. Nicholls?—Ten minutes or a quarter of an hour.

15,773. When did you see Mr. Lovibond again; when he told you to go to the bank?—Over the bridge, the "Globe" side of the bridge.

15,774. You had gone away from King Square and walked towards the bridge?—Yes. There is a large room at the "Globe," not actually in the "Globe," but somewhere leading out of the coach entrance, the carriage entrance.

15,775. Then you saw Mr. Lovibond in the street, did you?—Yes, between the "Globe" and the bridge.

15,776. Then he asked you to go to the bank?—Yes.

15,777. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure, now, that that is all that took place? Nothing was said by Mr. Lovibond to you about what he would do?—Not the slightest.

15,778. Were not you very much surprised when he asked you to go and get the money at the bank?—Well, as I told you the other day, I was taken aback for a moment, and even turned to go, and then I thought and refused to do so.

15,779. What did you mean by saying the election had altered?—The position of the candidates on the poll. Mr. Kinglake, instead of being 160 behind, was drawing up to within about 40, I think.

15,780. Then Mr. Lovibond went. How long before this was it that you had seen Mr. Mogg first?—Between the time I saw Mr. Henry Lovibond and the time I saw Mr. Mogg it must have been about five minutes from the time I left Mr. Mogg's house. I walked straight from one house to the other.

15,781. You found Mr. Mogg at home?—I did.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Mr. C. R. Bate.

9 Sept. 1869.

15,782. You stayed there five minutes?—I think so.

15,783. What took place?—I merely told him of the alteration, and said the agents had deserted their posts.

15,784. And what did he say?—I cannot tell. I cannot recollect the conversation at all.

15,785. You can tell us the substance, cannot you?—No, I cannot; I have not the slightest recollection.

15,786. Did he say anything about Browne's men?—Not the least.

15,787. Or about men who would not vote unless they were paid?—No, I never heard a word about it. I was looking for Mr. Lovibond, and I was annoyed to think the agents had deserted their posts.

15,788. Then you remained five minutes?—I think I did.

15,789. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had polled at this time?—I polled the first thing in the morning.

15,790. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you went with Mr. Mogg from Mr. Mogg's house——?—No, I do not recollect Mr. Mogg going with me except to go out at the door.

15,791. Mr. Nicholls says ——?—I have heard that he said so.

15,792. Listen. He said that Mr. Mogg and you came together to his house, that you went upstairs?—Oh, no, there is no upstairs. We went into the dining room.

15,793. Well, you went into his house (it does not signify about going upstairs), and the other did not?—I do not know which you said just now. Did you say that Mr. Nicholls said that Mr. Mogg and I went into his house?

15,794. No; that you went to his house, and then one of you went inside?—That is what I say.

15,795. Was that Mr. Mogg?—Mr. Mogg stayed out and I went in.

15,796. Where did he go to?—I do not know the least.

15,797. Did Mr. Lovibond join him before you yourself left Mr. Nicholls?—I tell you I cannot say whether they met each other outside or not.

15,798. You did not see them in the street?—I do not recollect seeing them at all in the street together.

15,799. Did Mr. Mogg, when you called upon him that day, tell you that he had seen Mr. Lovibond just before?—I think he said that he saw him pass with Mr. Nicholls.

15,800. If Mr. Mogg did not tell you that he had seen him just before, did he tell you that he had seen Mr. Nicholls. You say you went to ask Mr. Mogg "Where is Mr. Lovibond?"—I did.

15,801. What did he say?—I think he said, "He has passed with Mr. Henry Nicholls."

15,802. Did he tell you that he himself (Mr. Mogg) had spoken to Mr. Lovibond some time before that?—Not that I recollect.

15,803. Well, then, tell me one thing more, Mr. Bate; how long after you left Mr. Nicholls's house was it that Mr. Lovibond asked you to be the bearer of this money?—Well, I think about five and twenty minutes. I cannot say.

15,804. Was it in the street, or was it in the "Globe"?—In the street, on the rising of the bridge, the other side of the bridge.

15,805. You were going then to the "Globe"?—No, I was coming from the "Globe."

15,806. Where was Mr. Lovibond?—There were crowds of people on the bridge, and he was standing and talking there.

15,807. Talking to the crowds of people?—No; I did not say to the people.

15,808. Whom was he talking to?—I do not know.

15,809. You are quite sure that he was not then talking to Mr. Mogg?—I cannot swear that he was not. I cannot recollect.

15,810. Did you see Mr. Mogg anywhere about there when Mr. Lovibond made you that proposal which you refused?—I cannot say that I did, but my impression was that Mr. Mogg was with him when I told Mr. Lovibond that I would not go.

15,811. That is your impression?—Yes, but I cannot say that I saw him.

15,812. About what time was that?—It was about half-past 2. I cannot say for certain.

15,813. Your first coming to Mr. Nicholls's house was about half-past 2, was it not?—No, that must have been soon after 2, a quarter past 2 or 20 minutes past 2.

15,814. The whole of what is described by you to have taken place from the time of your first going to Mr. Mogg's house to the time when you refused to be the bearer of that message about 500*l.* did not last up to 3 o'clock?—I believe it was between 2 and half-past, but I cannot say.

15,815. Certainly it was before 3?—I should think so.

15,816. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Bate, may I ask you what was your motive in going? The election was then on the balance, as it were; what did you go to Mr. Lovibond for?—Because he had left his post.

15,817. Had you any idea that Mr. Lovibond was the man who would pull the purse strings?—Oh, not the slightest. I had no idea that he was mixed up in any way. The first I heard of it was——

15,818. Deserting his post is one thing; but how was he to get voters up?—There were no voters at all.

15,819. What did you think he would do?—They generally arrange to go to the places and bring them in in tallies of five or six.

15,820. You knew that a number of men were hanging back?—I was told the new constituency was supposed to have held back, advised by the old hands, and they went to the poll on the supposition that the whole thing was lost when Mr. Kinglake went away.

15,821. You say they were nearly equal when you went to Mr. Mogg?—That was after.

15,822. The election having changed as you say, the numbers being nearly equal, why did you come to the conclusion that your people were wanted, and that you should go to Mr. Lovibond?—I did not suppose that they were hanging back for Mr. Lovibond.

15,823. You must have supposed there was a great number of unpolled voters?—I did.

15,824. And that they were hanging back?—No, they were beginning to poll by twenties, only no returns were coming.

15,825. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not this the fact, Mr. Bate, that you went to Mr. Lovibond to let him know that Reed and Cook's men were coming up, and had already changed or were changing the fortune of the day, and that Mr. Lovibond was expected to do the same with his men?—No, certainly not.

15,826. Then, without Mr. Lovibond's presence at all, the election, to use your own strong expression, was already changed?—Yes.

15,827. And yet you went to reproach him with deserting his post, and not bringing up the voters. Who had brought up the voters?—I do not know. He was not bringing them.

15,828. How did you know Mr. Lovibond was not?—Because there were constant complaints at the "Globe," that the other two committee rooms were deserted.

15,829. The "Globe" being the head-quarters of Reed and Cook?—Yes.

15,830. And not Mr. Lovibond at all?—Yes.

15,831. Then it did amount to this, that the "Globe Hotel" people were doing their utmost, and had already changed the fortune of the day, and it required only that Mr. Lovibond should do his utmost?—I had no idea that there was anything wrong going on.

15,832. (Mr. Coleridge.) You doubtless knew that Mr. Lovibond succeeded to your father's shoes in the management of these matters?—I had no knowledge of the conduct of these election matters at all.

15,833. You knew the part your father took in the elections?—I knew he was Mr. Kinglake's personal friend.

15,834. And agent, too, for election purposes?—You may call him his agent.

15,835. And after your father's death you knew Mr. Lovibond took his place?—Yes.

15,836. You said just now you knew nothing about it?—I considered my father was Mr. Kinglake's prime agent, head agent.

15,837. And then that Mr. Lovibond has taken his place?—Yes; but you said "paid agent."

(Mr. Coleridge.) No, I did not.

15,838. (Mr. Price.) Now, look here at your father's book. There is an entry here under the date of September 1859, headed "John Hamilton Kinglake, M.D." That is the brother of the member?—Yes. I know the entry.

15,839. It is 1,070*l.* And then there is 55*l.* And then there is on the other side, "By cash, 1,100*l.*" What transaction is that?—I have no knowledge of it.

15,840. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is the date of it?—It is in 1859.

15,841. (Mr. Price.) You cannot tell us at all what that is?—No. I told the secretary the other day that this book is his own private book in which he entered loans made by himself out of his own cash. This book used to be kept locked up.

15,842. Do you know anything or not which would induce you to suppose that your father advanced 1,070*l.* to Dr. Kinglake for any private purposes of Dr. Kinglake?—Do you know at all from the relations between your father and Dr. Kinglake whether there was any other transaction, any ordinary business transaction?—Oh, yes. I told the secretary the other day. I showed him another item of a heavier amount many years ago.

15,843. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom was that to?—Dr. Kinglake.

15,844. (Mr. Price.) In July and September 1853?—Very likely. It was received in 1854. I gave it to the secretary.

15,845. And Mr. Kinglake was first a candidate in 1852?—Yes; but I think he only polled 101 votes. I do not think that can have to do with it.

15,846. You cannot tell us what that means?—I think that was some family arrangement. I think the old gentleman died just before.

15,847. Why do you think so?—By casual conversation with my father about it.

15,848. Has your father left no papers of any kind accessible to you which would throw light upon that?—The day that I was examined I opened a drawer which contained the whole of the papers, to the best of my knowledge and belief, relating to any transactions with Dr. Kinglake. That drawer I gave to my managing clerk, and told him to schedule the papers. He did so, and tied them up in bundles and gave them to your secretary.

15,849. That is not an answer to my question. Did your father leave any books or papers which if consulted might throw light upon these entries?—No. I say I have produced everything I know of.

15,850. Then this I understand to mean a confidential arrangement between your father and Dr. Kinglake?—This one which you are speaking of here?

15,851. Of course. The entry which you cannot explain?—Certainly.

15,852. If that had not been a confidential arrangement there would have been, I suppose, some trace of it among your father's books and papers?—Well, I can hardly say that. There are several entries, if you look through this book, where he has lent friends of his own money merely just on a note.

15,853. And those entries you cannot explain?—Those entries I cannot explain.

15,854. Therefore this is not a single transaction?—I should say not by many, from the book.

15,855. Were there no costs charged?—There was nothing charged for doing it, therefore it would not appear in the general books. I have looked through the bill book, and there would be no charge at all.

15,856. You say your father was not a solicitor?—He was a conveyancer practising under the bar as I am.

15,857. Therefore he would have no costs?—He would in drawing a mortgage.

15,858. You mean fees?—Yes.

15,859. (Mr. Anstey.) Do conveyancer's bills of costs differ materially from the bills of costs of attorneys?—I should say they are precisely the same.

15,860. (Mr. Price.) You do not charge attendances and letters, and so on?—Yes, we do.

15,861. (Mr. Coleridge.) Just the same as an attorney?—Yes, in conveyancing only.

15,862. (Mr. Price.) Now, there is a letter sent from Mr. Kinglake to your father, speaking about the payment of 100*l.* to Mr. Lovibond?—Mr. Purcell has seen that letter.

15,863. Can you explain that at all?—Not the slightest.

15,864. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is to Benjamin Lovibond, I suppose?—No, I think not.

15,865. To Henry?—To Henry Lovibond, I think. I do not think I have read the letter.

15,866. (Mr. Price.) It was just after the election of 1863?—I cannot speak from memory to the date. I gave it to the secretary at the time.

15,867. On the 13th of October 1866 he says something about Smith being settled with, and Hamilton doing the needful. Can you explain that?—No. The secretary has seen all these letters.

15,868. But there is the letter?—There is the letter in the bundle.

15,869. Speaking of Smith being settled with, and in which the expression is used that "Hamilton will do the needful?"—Yes.

15,870. (Mr. Anstey.) I think you were asked this before. You were asked to explain any circumstance which made you look for Mr. Lovibond on the day of the poll. We know now the reason why you went to stir him up to his duty?—I never thought of this at the time.

15,871. I should have thought you would remember it?—If you remember, I did not know you were going to call me then, or that my name was on the list for the day, until I came up here from luncheon, and when I was called I answered every question you asked me.

15,872. (Mr. Coleridge.) You went in very tired, and took off your coat and had some sherry and water and went away again?—Yes, or brandy and water.

15,873. More than that. You went in and told Mr. Lovibond in the words which have been used?—I was asked whether I sat down and had some sherry and water, and I said yes.

15,874. (Mr. Anstey.) I can only say it ought to have been told us before, when we asked the question several times over, "Had anything occurred that day?"—I told you I did not recollect. I did not see that that would be any reason for his asking me.

15,875. We asked Mr. Nicholls and he said nothing to it?

15,876. (Mr. Price.) "Hamilton" is one of the christian names of Dr. Kinglake?—It is his brother.

15,877. Is there anything else you recollect?—Nothing. I can give you no more information. I should have told you that as a matter of course if I had thought of it at the time. Can I take this book?

(Mr. Price.) Yes.

Mr. JOHN PRIOR recalled.

Mr J. Prior

15,878. (Mr. Anstey.) I want to ask you this question. You have stated, you know, that Mr. Sealy on the occasion of the election of 1866 had given you pretty clearly to understand that any money transactions of yours with reference to that election, ought to be concealed from him. His words were, "Why the devil did you let me know anything about it?" and you were asked on a subsequent day, "Did you under-

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

9 Sept. 1869.

"stand that to imply disapprobation, or did it simply "mean not to let Mr. Sealy know anything about it?" and you said the latter; and you were the person who had charge of what we may call the cashier department. I ask you this question. You have stated that you did not make any entry of the 500*l.* at the last election, either at the time or afterwards, nor till long after the opening of our Commission. Let me ask you, was that omission on your part occasioned by your recollection of Mr. Sealy's understood wish, that any transactions of that kind should be kept to yourself, and that no knowledge of them should be obtruded upon him?—In my reply to your former question I stated that I had done it in an incautious manner, and I did not wish for Mr. Sealy to know anything about it, and therefore I concealed it from him. I never thought about Mr. Sealy's instructions about that cheque. In fact it never operated upon my mind.

15,879. Your answer to my question is no; that it was not for the purpose of carrying out Mr. Sealy's understood wishes that he should be kept in ignorance of these matters?—I never thought anything about such a thing.

15,880. Do I understand you, whether you thought about it or not (I want a plain answer to my question), that the plain answer to my question is "No"?—Well, it is "No."

15,881. Now let me further ask you, did you never hear it stated or rumoured in the borough about that time, soon after the last election or during the last election, that a guarantee of some kind or other, whether a legal guarantee or an honourable guarantee matters not, had been given to you or to your bank, on the faith of which you relied, that you would have repayment made to you at the proper time of the 500*l.*?—I have not.

15,882. Never heard that rumour?—I never heard that rumour.

15,883. Well, then, I will ask you, was it the fact that Mr. Lovibond, Dr. Kinglake, and another, or any one of those gentlemen, either jointly or with others, ever gave you that or offered you that sort of security for the repayment of the money?—No one ever gave me any security whatever.

15,884. Not even in honour?—Not even in honour.

15,885. You had no promise from anyone that if you advanced the money it should be made good to you?—I had not.

15,886. And after you made the advance of money, after the transaction was over so far, did anybody ever tell you that you should have repayment made of the money which you had so advanced?—No.

15,887. Nor gave you so to understand?—Well, some time after the transaction I called on Mr. Lovibond, and he would not enter into it with me.

15,888. He would not enter into it with you?—He would not enter into it with me, but he said words like this, "all right." That is all I know about it.

15,889. How long was that after the polling day?—Perhaps two or three weeks.

15,890. Did he say, "I won't enter into it with you"?—"Say nothing to me about it," or words to that effect.

15,891. "Say nothing to me about it." "All right"?—Yes.

15,892. And that conveyed to your mind a sufficient assurance that you would have the money back?—I thought I should have it from some one or other.

15,893. Is that consistent, or is it inconsistent, with what Mr. Lovibond stated on oath in court the other day; that if you were to apply to him for repayment of the money he should defend the action?—That I must leave Mr. Lovibond to answer.

15,894. Do you think so?—I do not know what took place then; nothing more than that.

15,895. Then is your recollection consistent with that?—I understood that Mr. Lovibond would see me made right at all events.

15,896. Then you think that Mr. Lovibond may have meant this, "I will get it from the person," or "I will take care that the person who is to repay it "will repay it"?—Most probably I thought so.

15,897. And not Mr. Lovibond himself?—Well, I could not charge myself to call upon him individually.

15,898. Now, after the recollection of all these matters, and particularly that important conversation with Mr. Lovibond, which we now hear and for the first time, who in your mind is the person to whom you would look to make it in Mr. Lovibond's language "All right"?—Well, I expect that Mr. Lovibond would see me made right in some way or other.

15,899. From whom?—I cannot say. I do not know. He has never told me.

15,900. No; but whom do you understand by this conversation to be the person that Mr. Lovibond meant as the person that was to make it all right?—I have no idea at all.

15,901. You said you did not think it to be Mr. Lovibond?—From what Mr. Lovibond said to me I believed that he would see it made right, but through whom I do not know.

15,902. Had you the slightest doubt it was Mr. Kinglake?—Well, I could not tell. Mr. Kinglake's name was never mentioned.

15,903. No, it was not. We know that; but you said you knew enough to make you know that Mr. Lovibond was not the person. Who else was the person whom you supposed instead of Mr. Lovibond would make it all right?—Well, I should first look to Mr. Mogg, of course, as he gave the order.

15,904. Just so; and if he declined?—Well, then I should take Mr. Lovibond next.

15,905. And if he declined?—Well, then of course I must seek further advice upon that. I have not consulted my solicitor upon it.

15,906. I am not saying what you are going to do; but whom did you understand at the time, either when you paid the money over or when you had this conversation with Mr. Lovibond a fortnight afterwards, whom did you understand you would have to look to in case Mr. Mogg and Mr. Lovibond were not in funds to recoup you?—Well, I thought I should be made right by some one, but I was not prepared to say who.

15,907. Have you the least doubt that it was either Mr. Kinglake, or his brother, Dr. Kinglake?—With regard to Mr. Kinglake I am quite sure of this, that I did not look at all to him.

15,908. Then to the Dr.?—Well, the Dr. may have been implicated in some way or another with Mr. Lovibond; I cannot say.

15,909. Did not you think he was a likely person to pay Mr. Lovibond the money or to hand it over to you?—Well, it is very probable he may.

15,910. No; but did you think so?—Well, I did not think much about it.

15,911. Much or little, did you think so?—I thought I should have the money repaid through Mr. Lovibond, by some means or other.

15,912. Then, in point of fact, you look to Mr. Lovibond in the last place?—To assist me in the matter.

15,913. (Mr. Coleridge.) I think you have already told us that if Dr. Kinglake had not had that transaction about the cheque on the night before you should not have given that 500*l.* out?—I should not; that threw me off my guard.

15,914. Did not that rather lead you to the inference that Dr. Kinglake was the person to whom you would go?—I cannot say that I would apply to him directly.

15,915. Did not it appear to you that it was a sort of sequence of the affair of the cheque?—I never thought about it, I assure you.

15,916. You have told us already that you would not have given the 500*l.* unless there had been that affair of the 1,000*l.* Did not the natural sequence of affairs show, even supposing you had forgotten about the cheque at the time, that it was upon Dr. Kinglake's responsibility?—Well, it was never explained to me.

15,917. No; all you had was "Allan, 500*l.*" You did not give it to them on Allan's responsibility?—Oh no.

15,918. Was not it Dr. Kinglake's responsibility? Unless he had been to you about the cheque you would never have given the money at all?—That may have led me to do it.

15,919. It did lead you to do it?—It threw me off my guard.

15,920. Except for the affair of the cheque you would never have advanced the 500*l.*?—Certainly not.

15,921. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever see Mr. Lovibond on any subsequent occasion about it?—No; but——

15,922. Nor hear anything about it?—No.

15,923. Now tell me what you were going on to say?—Of course I see him every day.

15,924. Nor had you any letter about it?—No, no letter.

15,925. Not even since this particular inquiry was instituted?—I have not.

15,926. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you heard from Dr. Kinglake since he was here?—I have not.

15,927. Or seen him?—I have not.

15,928. (Mr. Anstey.) You have told us of one sort of assurance you had at the time from one of the actors. Did anybody else about that time—at the time of the election or soon after, or at any time after the election—give you any kind of assurance that it would be all right, or words to that effect?—I have not had any.

15,929. Neither Mr. Kinglake nor Dr. Kinglake?—No.

15,930. Nor anybody?—Nor anybody.

15,931. Had you any reason at that time, or when Mr. Lovibond spoke to you after that time, to suppose that more than one person would make it all right?—No, I had not.

15,932. (Mr. Price.) But now, Mr. Prior, you say that Dr. Kinglake, after he had given you that cheque, came back and told you to consider it as a cancelled affair?—He did.

15,933. Then the next day you let this 500*l.* go. Supposing you had made a claim upon Dr. Kinglake and said, "Now, I shall look to you for payment of "the money," and Dr. Kinglake had said, "Oh, you "cannot do that, because I told you it was cancelled; "I told you to consider my cheque cancelled;" how would you have got over that difficulty?—Well, I do not know that I should have got over it.

(Mr. Price.) I should think not.

15,934. (Mr. Anstey.) Would not you think that Dr. Kinglake had cancelled the cancellation; had rescinded on the morning of the poll his desire of the night before that the affair should be considered as cancelled?—It was the day of the polling that he cancelled that cheque.

15,935. (Mr. Price.) The very day of the polling?—The day of the polling that he cancelled it.

15,936. (Mr. Anstey.) What time?—About 12 o'clock.

15,937. Mr. Coleridge.) Before you sent the 500*l.* out?—Yes, about three hours before.

15,938. It was the more extraordinary that you should have done it after that, that you should have risked the bank money to the extent of 500*l.* when only a few hours before Dr. Kinglake should tell you it was cancelled, unless you had some intermediate communication with him?—I told you at my first examination that I did it unguardedly.

15,939. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not you understand really, Mr. Prior, that all that was cancelled was the cheque?—I knew the cheque was cancelled, because I saw it put in the fire.

15,940. Was not that all that was considered as cancelled?—Yes.

15,941. (Mr. Coleridge.) In all your long life had you had anything of the sort occur before?—Never.

15,942. (Mr. Price.) And you considered that Dr. Kinglake still intended that there should be a kind of open credit affair for his brother's election?—No, never.

15,943. (Mr. Anstey.) Not a minute ago, in answer to my question, "Did not you consider that all that "was intended to be cancelled was the cheque?" you said, "Yes, I did"?—Well, the cheque which he gave me he cancelled, but he never kept any account with us, nor opened any account with us but on that occasion giving me that cheque.

15,944. Nor did Mr. Mogg?—Nor did Mr. Mogg.

15,945. Nor Mr. Lovibond?—Mr. Lovibond keeps an account with us.

15,946. But there was no cheque drawn on that account?—No, not for that purpose.

15,947. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say not for that purpose. Was there for any other? Did he draw any other cheque that day?—Not that day that I am aware of.

15,948. On the day before?—I will show you the books.

15,949. Did he the day before. You said, "Not "for that purpose"?—I mean in connexion with the election.

15,950. (Mr. Anstey.) I must ask you another question. Did anybody else, not Dr. Kinglake, anybody besides Dr. Kinglake, draw a cheque and leave it in your hands either that day or before the day of election?—No.

15,951. Nor in the hands of the bank?—No.

15,952. You still mean to say that you cannot explain why you honoured Mr. Mogg's unauthorized demand without cheque, without security of any kind, for the sum of 500*l.*?—As I have told you already, I did it incautiously.

15,953. On the contrary, it was done with the greatest caution, was not it; not a word spoken. The communication which passed between him and you was in writing upon a memorandum which he drew at the counter?—Yes.

15,954. All that he said was, "Give me pen and "ink and a piece of paper"?—He took his pencil out.

15,955. He says himself that he asked for a piece of paper or something, and that then he wrote these few words only, in figures, "500*l.*;" then "for Allan"?—Yes.

15,956. Not saying "to me for Allan," to "Mr. "Lovibond for Allan," "or Mr. Lovibond says that "it is to be given to Allan;" but he cautiously wrote no more than "500*l.* to Allan;" and you understood him to mean, "We want 500*l.* for Allan to employ in "bribing. It is to be kept secret from Mr. Sealey. "It is not to be entered in the books; and nobody "is to know anything about it." You mean to tell me that all that was done in the heat of the moment?—Mr. Mogg did not make those remarks to me.

15,957. No; but I say you understood those magical words of his to imply all that, because you said that you did, you know?—I really did not understand.

15,958. Well, I ask you the question whether it is consistent with your present statement that you did it in the heat of the moment, when you took all these precautions?—I did not take sufficient precautions.

15,959. I have asked you all this which I have taken from your own evidence. I will repeat it to you. You did not put him to the necessity of drawing a cheque, of mentioning Lovibond's name, of giving you security in his own name, of speaking with you, of leaving any receipt for the money; on the other hand, you yourself took away the bag, and to prevent any evidence of the fact, you give bag and all, not merely the money but the bag; you designedly omitted all entry of it in the books; and then for nearly 12 months afterwards, when surely the heat and excitement had all passed away, you continued this system of caution and concealment. How is that consistent with your statement that what you have done you account for on the theory of heat and excitement; can you explain it?—I can only say what I said in my answer the first time I was examined here. I stated that I did it incautiously, and without duly thinking what I was about.

15,960. That is all you say?—Yes.

15.961. And, on the contrary, you show that you took every possible precaution to prevent its being known, do you not?—Well, I was ashamed of what I had done.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

9 Sept. 1869.

15,962. No, but at the moment, your going to get the money and not emptying the bag, but giving him the bag, gold and all, was not that designedly done to prevent the clerks in the bank, who were present, knowing what was done?—No, my son knew it.

15,963. But the other clerks?—There were no other clerks present.

15,964. It is stated by some one. I think Mr. Mogg states that he took his pen and paper and wrote these words because he did not want the clerks in the room to hear it?—He may mean my own son by the clerk; but the other clerk was out in the street at the time.

15,965. Then you do not agree with Mr. Mogg in his statement?—Mr. Mogg very possibly makes a mistake.

15,966. Had you any conversation with Mr. Mogg when he came into the bank at the time?—I had none with reference to this matter.

15,967. Had you any conversation with him at all?—He was speaking of the state of the election, that the Liberals were going ahead, and all that sort of thing, but I cannot charge myself with the exact words which Mr. Mogg may have said to me.

15,968. No, I do not want them; but that was the substance of what he said?—Yes.

15,969. And then he wrote those words down?—I think he wrote them down previously.

15,970. Before he got this money he made this statement to you? He says as soon as he deliverd the message, as soon as he had written the message he went away?—Well, he did.

15,971. Therefore the conversation with him must have been before he actually wrote this down?—Probably whilst he was writing it.

15,972. Therefore his communication to you was not, as we have understood from him, a purely written one, but a mixed one, partly in writing and partly oral. The oral part of it was this, "We are getting "on, the election is turning;" and the written portion of it is, "500*l.* for Allan," whom you knew to be the bribery agent. Is that so?—That is so.

15,973. Then of course there can be no doubt at all now that it was a perfectly understood thing between Mr. Mogg and you that that was the way the money was to go. Is not that so?—Well, I understood so at the time, certainly.

15,974. Then I put it to you: it is, therefore, not true that Mr. Mogg came into the bank, and that the only words he said were, "Give me paper," or "Give "me pen and ink," that he spoke not another word, wrote down these words, handed the paper to you, and without a word more to you, turned and went away?—Oh, that is not true, because he said that the Liberals were winning, or something of that kind.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Mr. Mogg in court? It is right he should hear this. I do not want to ask him any question about it.

(Witness.) Whilst I am here, there was a West of England Bank question to-day, about some cheques of Brogden's, and I have the book here, and a copy of those cheques, if you want that information.

15,975. (Mr. Coleridge.) You showed me the entries before?—I showed you the entries, but in those entries it does not appear what Brogden it was that gave the cheque.

15,976. It appears that it went away through Williams and Deacon, and went to Manchester?—Went to Manchester; yes.

15,977. And was there honoured?—And was honoured.

G. Lee.

GEORGE LEE sworn.

15,978. (Mr. Price.) Where do you live?—In Dampiet Street.

(Mr. Price.) Now, is Mr. Nicholls here?

(Mr. Nicholls.) Here I am.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Nicholls, is that the man?

(Mr. Nicholls.) That is the man.

(Mr. Price.) That is the man that you told Bussell to go and look up?

(Mr. Nicholls.) That is the man, I believe, that Dr. Rooker spoke to me about, and the man that I intended and that I wished Bussell to send somebody to see.

(Mr. Price.) Now then, Bussell, you turn round. But wait a moment, I will ask him a question. You may sit down Bussell for the present.

15,979. Now, Mr. Lee, attend to me. Did anybody come to you on the day of the election about your vote?—Yes, several.

15,980. Give us the names of anybody that came, or of all?—Well, I cannot tell you, because there were several.

15,981. Do you know any of them?—Yes.

15,982. Did that man come to you (pointing to Bussell)?—No.

15,983. Not at all?—Not at all. I never spoke to him for the day.

15,984. Do you know him?—Yes.

15,985. Have you known him long?—I have known him from a boy.

15,986. You are sure he never came to you?—I never spoke to him all that day, and did not see him.

15,987. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get for your vote at that election?—Nothing.

15,988. Were you offered anything?—No.

15,989. (Mr. Price.) Promised?—No.

15,990. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you asked for anything?—No.

15,991. (Mr. Price.) What time in the day did you vote?—Between three and four.

15,992. (Mr. Coleridge.) What made you so late?—I was at work until three.

15,993. (Mr. Anstey.) What made you vote at all?—I should have thought I was not doing my duty if I did not vote.

15,994. (Mr. Price.) Did you hear there was money going?—No, not on the day.

15,995. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you vote at the previous election?—Yes.

15,996. You got money for voting then?—No.

15,997. Nor asked for any?—No.

15,998. Nor were promised any?—No.

15,999. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nor were paid any afterwards?—Yes, I was paid some time afterwards.

16,000. (Mr. Price.) When was that?—Vanderbyl's election.

16,001. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who promised you money before you voted?—No one.

16,002. Who paid you money after you voted?—Mr. Bunter.

16,003. What did he pay you?—He gave me a packet. I did not know what it was till some time afterwards.

16,004. What did it turn out to be? How much was it?—I think it was ten sovereigns.

16,005. (Mr. Price.) You did not throw it away in the dusthole?—No, but I put it away some time.

16,006. How long after the election was it?—Some days after.

16,007. How many days?—I cannot tell.

16,008. What did he say?—Nothing. He only put it into my hand, and away he went.

16,009. (Mr. Anstey.) When you voted at this last election between three and four, did you know that money was going?—No.

16,010. Or that money was about to go?—No.

16,011. (Mr. Price.) Did you expect another Bunter?—No.

16,012. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you paid anything at the last election?—No.

16,013. Did you vote at the election before, Mr. Bagehot's election ?—Yes.

16,014. Did you get anything then ?—No.

16,015. Did you get nothing after ?—I cannot tell whether I did afterwards.

16,016. Try and recollect. Was it ten sovereigns ; out with it ?—I do not know.

16,017. Who gave it to you ? Come, out with it ?—I do not know, except I received it from the same person. I do not know that I ever spoke to anyone else.

16,018. How much was it you received ?—I do not know ; I have forgotten about it

16,019. Was it ten sovereigns, or more, or less ?—I cannot tell.

16,020. What did you do with it ?—Used it.

16,021. Have you got a wife ?—Yes, I have.

16,022. Did you give it to her ?—I believe I did.

16,023. Very well, then, we will have her. What is her name ?—I do not think you will be able to get her here, for she is too ill.

16,024. What is her name ?—(No answer.)

16,025. (Mr. Price.) What is her christian name ?—(No answer.)

16,026. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is her christian name ?—(No answer.)

(Mr. Price.) Now, do you understand this, that if you do not answer the questions which are put to you you will most undoubtedly be in peril of being prosecuted by the Attorney-General. Therefore do not laugh about it.

(Witness.) I was not laughing.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Why don't you answer what your wife's christian name is ?

(Mr. Price.) Undoubtedly you won't receive a certificate, and you will be reported as a person who ought to be prosecuted.

16,027. (Mr. Coleridge.) What is your wife's christian name ?—My wife's name is Elizabeth.

16,028. How much did you get ?—I suppose it was the same.

16,029. Was it from Bunter ?—Yes.

16,030. On both occasions ?—Yes.

16,031. Was that paid before or after the election ?—After.

16,032. How much after ?—Some time after.

16,033. How much ?—I cannot say.

16,034. Was it before Mr. Vanderbyl's election ?—Yes.

16,035. And the other you were paid after the election ?—After the election.

16,036. What did you get at the election of 1865, Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley's election ?—Nothing.

16,037. Nothing at all ?—No.

16,038. Neither before nor after ?—No ; never heard of anything.

16,039. What did you get in 1859 ?—Nothing.

16,040. When was the other time that you got money ?—Only twice.

16,041. You only had it twice altogether ?—Yes.

16,042. Will you swear that ?—Yes.

16,043. And nothing at all last time ?—No.

16,044. What made you hang back with your vote ?—Because I was at work.

16,045. You could have voted at 8 o'clock in the morning ?—No, I could not.

16,046. Where were you at work ?—At my own workshop.

16,047. (Mr. Price.) Where were you ?—At work in my own workshop.

16,048. (Mr. Coleridge.). How far from the polling place ?—As far as from here to the church.

16,049. You could not find time to vote before half-past 3 ?—I suppose it was.

16,050. You were one of the last who voted ?—No.

16,051. How many voted after you ?—I do not know. I went, for my own convenience, when I finished the work I was about.

16,052. (Mr. Price.) What did people say when they came to you ?—They did not see me, many of them.

16,053. Whom did they see ?—My wife. I was upstairs at work.

16,054. Did many see you ?—After they got to the town.

16,055. What did they say to you ?—They asked me to go and vote.

16,056. What did you say in return ?—That I would vote when I thought proper.

16,057. You did not promise to vote ?—No.

16,058. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are quite sure that Bussell never came near you ?—Yes.

16,059. Nor Allan ?—Nor Allan.

16,060. Nor Garratt ?—No.

16,061. Did you see Bunter ?—Yes, that day.

16,062. Did he ask you to come and vote ?—Yes, he came across.

16,063. What did he say ?—"I suppose you will not leave us this time, but go as before," and I said, "Yes."

16,064. He said you would go and vote as before ?—Yes.

16,065. And you said yes ?—Yes.

16,066. That voting was voting Liberal, and receiving 10*l.* a few days after the election ?—No, that was nothing to do with voting.

16,067. You did that before ?—Yes, I did that before, but that was nothing to do with voting.

16,068. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know it was your vote perfectly well ?—No, I think not. They knew I had always voted Liberal.

16,069. (Mr. Price.) You knew Canon Rooker ?—Yes.

16,070. Had he been to you about voting on that day ?—No ; he came to me several times that day.

16,071. Did he come about voting ?—No, not about my own vote at all.

16,072. What then ?—He came to tell me the state of the poll at different times of the day.

16,073. He never asked you whether you had voted ?—No, because he knew I should vote, and knew I was very busy at work.

16,074. (Mr. Coleridge.) What are you ?—A shoemaker.

16,075. Has your son a vote ?—I think he had at the last election.

16,076. Did he see Canon Rooker ?—No, he did not know him then.

16,077. Did any of the people who came to see you that day see him ?—I do not know ; he does not live with me.

16,078. What is his christian name ?—Alfred.

16,079. Where does Bunter live ?—Opposite me, in Dampier Street.

16,080. Do you know a man named Buttle ?—Yes.

16,081. Did Buttle never come to you about your vote ?—No.

16,082. Did you not get any money from Buttle ?—No.

16,083. Never in your life for voting ?—No.

16,084. (Mr. Anstey.) What time of the day was it upon the last election that Bunter came to you ?—About 8 o'clock in the morning, I think. It was just as I had been at breakfast, and got to work.

16,085. You did not see him in the course of the day ?—Not for the day after that.

16,086. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he give you anything ?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) Did he tell you it would be all right if you went to the poll ?

16,087. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you not disappointed after having had it at two elections before ?—No, because I did not know that anything was going, not till two days after.

16,088. When you did hear of it did you try ?—No.

16,089. Did you ask him if he could do something for you ?—No.

16,090. How was that ?—I understood there was no money at all going.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

G. Lee.

9 Sept. 1869.

16,091. You say you heard it a few days after?—A week or a fortnight after.

16,092. Why not ask him then?—I did not give him any credit, because I understood it was to be a pure election. I did not think there was any money going.

16,093. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the first election you ever voted?—I do not know; some years ago.

16,094. Did you vote in 1837?—(The witness referred to a paper.) 1841 I first voted.

16,095. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get then?—Nothing.

16,096. Not before or after?—No.

16,097. No promise?—I had a promise then, but I did not receive it.

16,098. Who promised you?—Mr. Murlis.

16,099. You voted for the Conservatives on that occasion?—I did.

16,100. What did he promise you?—20*l.*

16,101. Have you got any of it?—No.

16,102. Not a farthing?—No.

16,103. Did your wife get anything?—No.

16,104. When was the next election you voted?—1847.

16,105. What did you get then?—Nothing.

16,106. Was anything promised you?—No. Old Smith, now present, promised to see me all right; I lived in a house of theirs then.

16,107. How much was he to see you all right to the tune of?—Nothing at all.

16,108. Did he promise to get the 20*l.* you had been promised before?—No, he did not mention any sum.

16,109. (Mr. Coleridge.) But to see you all right?—Yes.

16,110. Who did you vote for?—Tynte and Broadwood.

16,111. You voted one and one on that occasion?—Yes.

16,112. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Smith, the Conservative, canvassed you for Broadwood?—He wished me to vote for those two.

16,113. Mr. Smith himself was Conservative?—Yes.

16,114. When he promised to see you all right, it was on condition that you voted for Broadwood?—Yes.

16,115. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the next time you voted?—1859.

16,116. Not between 1847 and 1859?—No, I was out of a house.

16,117. In 1859 what did you get?—Nothing.

16,118. What was promised you?—Nothing at all.

16,119. That was a bad election, then?—Yes.

16,120. Was it ever made all right to you?—No.

16,121. How was that?—I do not know.

16,122. In consequence of the Conservatives having broken their promise at two elections, one when Murlis promised you 20*l.*, and in 1847 when Mr. Smith promised you that it should be all right, you became a Liberal?—No, I was always a Liberal, only they wished me.

16,123. (Mr. Price.) You had strong political views?—Yes, as a Liberal.

16,124. Who is your favourite candidate, Mr. Most?—No, I never voted in my life for Mr. Most.

16,125. (Mr. Coleridge.) You voted Conservative in 1841, and in 1847 you split your vote between Conservative and Liberal. In 1859 you voted Liberal. How did you vote in 1865?—I voted in 1859 for the Liberals, and in 1866, and at the last election.

16,126. And in 1865 too?—Yes.

16,127. How often have you voted for the Tories?—Only twice; then I was put under the screw, and obliged, and I lived in a Tory house.

16,128. What have you received altogether during the whole time you have had a vote for Bridgwater?—I told you.

16,129. How much?—Two 10*l.*

16,130. Nothing more?—Nothing more at all.

16,131. (Mr. Anstey.) Promised?—The promises were broken.

16,132. 20*l.*, and an undefined amount you called all right?—No.

16,133. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you done anything in taking money with the other people?—No.

16,134. Never asked?—Never been mixed up with them in anything of the sort.

16,135. (Mr. Price.) Have you been employed in any way to make shoes for those people?—No.

16,136. For Mr. Smith?—No.

16,137. Or Canon Rooker?—No.

16,138. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where is Bunter to be found?—He lives opposite me.

16,139. Where does he work?—In the same place.

16,140. Is he in court now?—I do not know.

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY C. BUSSELL recalled.

16,141. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever see this man before?—I have seen him only, but never spoke to him upon election matters in all his life.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

16,142. (Mr. Price.) Is this a man you say you thought was on Bunter's list?—On Bunter's, the two elections I had to do with—Shelley's and Vanderbyl's election. George Lee was on Bunter's list on each occasion.

16,143. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was he on Shelley's election too?—Shelley's election I had nothing to do with.

16,144. Then it is Bagehot's and Vanderbyl's?—Those are the only two.

16,145. How did he happen to come on the list last time?—There was no list.

16,146. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know anything about this man's vote at the last election?—No, nothing at all.

16,147. (To the witness.) Do you remember Nicholls coming to you in the street and saying, late in the day, "Lee, have you voted"?—No, I did not see Mr. Henry Nicholls for the day.

(Mr. Nicholls.) It happened just as I stated, just opposite where Mr. Soper's shop is. He stood on the kerb, and as I passed I said, "Lee, have you voted," and he said, "Yes, I have." I should think about half-past 3.

G. Lee.

GEORGE LEE recalled.

16,148. (Mr. Price.) Is that true?—No, I did not see him for the day.

16,149. (Mr. Anstey.) You know Nicholls?—Yes; I saw his brother Alfred.

16,150. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you drunk or sober?—I was not likely to be drunk, working hard all day.

16,151. But were you?—No, I had nothing all day from the party.

16,152. (Mr. Price.) After you had been at work, did you drink as much as you could for the party you voted for?—No, I did not get a glass of beer for the day.

16,153. Were you drunk?—No; it is many years ago since I was drunk, or anything like it.

16,154. Had you been about to the public-houses that day?—No.

16,155. Not at all?—Not at all. I was not in one public-house that day.

16,156. Then surely you would be able to say whether you saw Nicholls, and had that conversation with him ?—No.

16,157. Will you undertake to say you had not?—Yes.

16,158. Positively ? — Yes, positively. I saw Alfred.

16,159. You positively swear you did not see the other?—Not that I am aware of.

16,160. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Alfred say that to you ?—He asked me if I had been to vote, and I said no, I had not ; I should go presently.

16,161. At what time ?—Between 3 and 4.

16,162. It is very possible you mistook one for the other ?

(Mr. A. Nicholls.) To the best of my knowledge I did not see him for the day.

(The witness.) Yes, you were standing with Mr. Whitby at his shop, together.

16,163. (Mr. Anstey.) Is Alfred Lee in court ?—No.

16,164. (Mr. Price.) If we find out in the course of this inquiry that you have been deceiving us——?—I have not one word, that I am aware of.

16,165. We shall see ; we do not take it for granted at present.

16,166. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did not tell us about this 10*l.* until it was screwed out of you?—Yes ; I told you the truth, that I did not get anything at the election, but some time after I did get a present.

16,167. You did get it?—But not till some time after.

(Mr. Price.) You must stand down for the present, but must not leave the court.

16,168. (Mr. Price.) Did Bunter return him, Mr Allan, as a man being paid?—Yes, on his list, and I. returned it.

(Mr. Anstey.) That is the election of 1866.

(Mr. Allan.) The election of 1866.

(Mr. Anstey.) Has anybody returned him, to your knowledge, as having been paid at the last election ?

(Mr. Allan.) I have no knowledge what anybody has done at the last election except myself.

Mr. Thomas Collins sworn. Mr. T. Collins.

16,169. (Mr. Price.) What are you ?—A cheese factor.

16,170. In Bridgwater ?—Yes.

16,171. And a voter for the borough ?—Yes.

16,172. And a member of the Liberal party ?—Yes.

16,173. And one who has taken an active part from time to time in different elections ?—Yes.

16,174. At the last election, were you one of the deputation who waited on the candidate, Mr. Vanderbyl ?—I was.

16,175. Before you had met at Mr. Nicholls' house, where the deputation was collected, had you had any conversation with anybody about the mode in which the election was to be conducted ?—No.

16,176. None at all ?—With no one.

16,177. Then the first part you took in it was going to the meeting in Mr. Nicholls' house ?—I had conferred with the candidates one day before.

16,178. (Mr. Anstey.) Which ?—Both.

16,179. (Mr. Price.) Had you heard from either of them that they wished to have the election conducted on pure principles or not ?—No.

16,180. You were requested to go to Nicholls' house ?—I was.

16,181. And you formed one of the deputation who waited on Mr. Vanderbyl ?—Yes.

16,182. Without giving me the trouble to put questions, let us have your account of what took place as near as you can, tell us who were the different spokesmen in order of time ; first of all you found Mr. Vanderbyl at the "Globe," and with him Mr. Fennelly ?—Will you allow me to state the conversation, and what passed previous to our waiting on him ?

16,183. All that took place that you recollect that night before you went, and when you were there, and afterwards ?—I was perfectly ignorant the Sunday night of anything of the plan, or what had been adopted by the lawyers on both sides or parties, in reference to this election. I tell you at once, gentlemen, that I had concluded in my own mind that the last election would be contested just in the same way as the former election ; that it would be conducted by the expenditure of money, I imagined, on both sides. It was not until I was found in company with the gentlemen Mr. Henry Nicholls had asked to his house on that Sunday evening, that I knew that the lawyers were at all baffled in their plans, or that anything like purity of election was about to be conducted by one or both candidates on the Liberal side. I found from what took place at that meeting at Mr. Henry Nicholls' that the lawyers, that is Mr. Henry Lovibond and Messrs. Reed and Cook, appeared to be at loggerheads. I should tell you, gentlemen, that previously, for some time at the election, some weeks, long before the candidates came down, there were sundry rumours afloat in the town that these three solicitors, Mr. Lovibond and Messrs. Reed and Cook, were not pulling together with reference to the anticipated forthcoming election. There was also in connexion with it a rumour then prevailing that there was an attempt being made to form an alliance or coalition between Westropp and Vanderbyl. We exchanged our views, many of the electors, men like myself, on the subject, and simply allowed it to pass just for what it was worth ; but I discovered that night at Mr. Nicholls' house that there must have been some foundation for that rumour, or at least that the lawyers were not agreed on their plan of operations. I ascertained at that meeting for the first time that it was only Mr. Vanderbyl who was determined not to spend any money at the forthcoming election. It was at that meeting also that I ascertained for the first time that Mr. Kinglake was providing to spend money at the forthcoming election.

16,184. Who did you discover those two respective propositions from, first that Mr. Vanderbyl would not spend any money, and secondly, that Mr. Kinglake was prepared ?—I think I may speak of one person as giving me information with reference to both gentlemen. Mr. Henry Lovibond informed the meeting that the Liberal party were in a fix, that he could no longer take the responsibility of affairs, and he preferred to throw off the responsibility, or rather to ease himself of his responsibility, by throwing upon gentlemen outside the cabinet, if I may use the expression, some of the onus of a forfeited or a defeated election. I ascertained from the general conversation at that meeting after, that Mr. Vanderbyl had determined not to spend money, but Mr. Lovibond assured me in conversation directed to me alone more than to gentlemen present, as we sat next to each other : "You see, Mr. Collins, we are provided. Mr. "Collins, Mr. Kinglake is provided ;" but I said, "Let "us fight a pure election, Mr. Lovibond, and if we "are defeated let us go and petition against it. Damn "it," says he, "how can we do that with unclean "hands." Gentlemen, I should not have referred to this, but I find if anything of this sort had transpired or come up after you would have censured me for not telling the whole conversation.

16,185. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are bound to tell us all ?—I hesitate to tell of virtuous actions, because we have been told to betray our guilty actions.

16,186. (Mr. Anstey.) Who told you that Mr. Vanderbyl was determined to spend money ?—Mr. Lovibond had intimated to me in private conversation in connexion with Mr. Kinglake, and by-and-by it became a conversation with Messrs. Reed and Cook and Mr. James Sully. I was not at the afternoon meeting on Sunday, but Saturday night after the public meeting in this room. I was taken quite aback. I was simply asked to come there as a friend, and to join in this affair. The meeting then had to consider what should be done under the circumstances. It was suggested, and suggested I believe by Mr. Lovibond, that Mr. Vanderbyl should certainly be requested to retire. Messrs. Reed and Cook, who had come into the meeting somewhat late, or after the conversation commenced, demurred to such a proposition or to such an arrangement.

16,187. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say "demurred;" what did they say?—It amounted to this, this is in substance what they meant, they gave us no reason why Mr. Vanderbyl should retire, simply because, I presume, he would not spend money. I am not aware that he referred to it in that way, but that is what I understood.

16,188. (Mr. Price.) There is no other reason you heard of?—No.

16,189. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nothing about the granite company?—No, it was not then, but still the question of the granite company and the National Bank, and Sir Joseph McKenna, all came up in conversation, and it was for the first time I had heard of the seriousness of that scandal, a newspaper report, with regard to Mr. Vanderbyl; and without making any pretensions to great purity or anything of the sort, I felt annoyed and disgusted that we had to deal so close on the eve of an election with a candidate who could have these things staring him in the face from the public press. It was ultimately agreed, I am not aware that it is very essential for me to relate, but I will simply state the upshot of the conversation of that night was this, that four of us rather volunteered than that the thing was proposed, one might suggest it to the other, but there was no formal proposition put to the meeting, that we should wait on Mr. Vanderbyl at the "Globe." You are aware that the time of this meeting has been given before. Mr. Nicholls with myself, Mr. Wilton, and Mr. Joseph Palmer were the deputation. We went to the "Globe;" we entered about the same time, and saw Mr. Vanderbyl and a stranger sitting with him.

16,190. The stranger was Mr. Fennelly?—I did not know him at that time.

16,191. (Mr. Price.) You know him now to have been?—Perfectly well. We took our seats, and my friend, Mr. Wilton, opened the object of our waiting upon him. He will state more particularly what he did say, but it referred to the conversation which had passed, and which I have told you already, and after Mr. Wilton had done, Mr. Vanderbyl became considerably excited and nervous, and could scarcely express himself, very much like myself when I stood before you first, from want of breath, and there was no doubt he was very earnest in the matter, and he begged to assure us that this, and I want to be particular here, and, so far as I can, to be distinct in my recollection, so far as my memory will serve me; he says, "Gentle- "men, I am being served or used badly by my lawyers; "they are putting pressure upon me; what they want "is my money, and they wish to compel me to fight "this election upon impure principles."

16,192. (Mr. Price.) Was that said loud enough to be heard by Mr. Nicholls and all of you?—Oh dear, yes; it was a small room we were in.

16,193. (Mr. Anstey.) In fact he began by saying "Gentlemen"?—Yes.

16,194. What else did he say?—I merely refreshed my memory by this memorandum which I made this morning only, with reference to the conduct of the lawyers with one honorable exception which you have heard, and without mentioning the name of that gentleman. He also told us he had determined to contest this election upon pure principles, but would spend money; he said it was not a question of money, he had determined to contest this election upon pure principles, but should it require, I would not be certain of the amount, but I know it was some thousands, should it require thousands of pounds to unseat upon petition should he get defeated, he would willingly and readily spend his money. He also stated that he would issue a circular on the morning of the polling day announcing a reward of 50*l.* to any individual who would bring any proper information, or any information he could act upon, of any case of bribery or any improper act on the Conservative side, which, if proved, would vitiate the election on that side. He also offered in his explanation to the opening address of Mr. Wilton, he endeavoured to offer an explanation of the Lundy Island Granite Company affair, as well as the National Bank affair, and also more particularly the matter with Sir Joseph McKenna. "Now, gentlemen," he says, "this is nothing but spite," or something of that sort, "on the part of Mr. McKenna." He says, "We have been identified or "we have been acting together in many matters, and "he stands at this moment my debtor to the amount "of either 7,000*l.* or 9,000*l.*," and that debt was incurred by some speculations between him and Sir Joseph McKenna; I think others also, a kind of company with reference to some house property in London, and what I gathered from what Mr. Vanderbyl said about that matter, I may be wrong in my inference, but I think this was the impression he wished to make: it was a bad speculation, and Sir Joseph McKenna had left him entirely in the lurch with the burthen of some 7,000*l.* or 9,000*l.* on his shoulders, and he was at that moment suing him for the amount by action at law, that Sir Joseph McKenna was doing all he could just at that nick of time to ruin his prospects at the forthcoming election at Bridgwater. Gentlemen, we heard these remarks and listened attentively and respectfully to the remarks as they were being made. I was totally at a loss to know how or when this change had taken place, if a change had taken place, in Mr. Vanderbyl's views as to what he intended to be done to secure his election at Bridgwater. No one could inform me, but I did conclude in my opinion that Mr. Vanderbyl was a man who intended to do as he had done before, to spend money and carry his election. It would have been folly on my part to ask either of the attorneys. I never did it or attempted to do it. I never attempted to share their secrets or confidence. I never thought of asking either of them, "How is this election to be conducted?" I should get just such an answer perhaps as I should deserve: "Oh, "we shall go in and win, Collins; we are going in to "win," or it would be "all right." I should infer from those remarks things were to go on as usual, and I must express my surprise to have found, at Mr. Nicholls's house, when I went there for the first time that it was to be, at least on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl, a pure election, and when I heard of the deputation to Mr. Vanderbyl, and I have now come to the point I left off at, about Sir Joseph McKenna; for my own information (for I had not asked a question then) I said to Mr. Vanderbyl, referring to this coming election, "Sir, "have you determined in your own mind, and have "you given your solicitors to understand as your "determination, that the forthcoming election, so far "as you are concerned, shall be a pure election?" "Well, no," he said nothing about it. "Did you "understand, or was it your impression, that your "agents or solicitors understood that they were to "make their plans or arrangements for the election, "whether you spoke to them openly and candidly, or "whether they understood it tacitly, were they to "prepare for the election as though the contest was to "be conducted like the last?" Well, he believed he did. "Then all along they had been making their "arrangements with the idea that they were to con- "test the election as before?" He believed they had done. "Pray," I said, "when did you alter your "mind, sir? When did you determine you would not "contest the election as you had done before, but "upon purity principles?" Well, he said he was in London not very long, I thought he said a few days; I will not be positive with regard to that, but I understood him to say, a few days ago he was in London, and his friends urged him not to peril his position, and so on, by spending a shilling illegally at the next election; more especially Mrs. Vanderbyl's father had extorted from him what amounted to a pledge and solemn word, that he would not do so; that is why he was determined that he would not spend money at the forthcoming election. I do not know whether I am too wire-drawn in my remarks.

16,195. (Mr. Price.) No, go on?—I took up the conversation after Mr. Wilton had done, and I said, "Well, Mr. Vanderbyl, all that I feel concerned "about in this matter is the losing of the two Liberal "seats. We are assured by our solicitors, and it is "the impression upon our own minds, that both seats "are in jeopardy, and if we can by possibility save "one, it appears to be the utmost we can do under "the circumstances."

16,196. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did not believe in purity principles in Bridgwater, then?—Certainly not. "Our mission or business with you to-night is to save one seat;" I said, "I presume, Mr. Vanderbyl, that "you have sufficient interest in the Liberal cause as "not to wish us to lose both seats. He says, "Cer-"tainly not. I would rather retire myself than that "both seats should be lost." "Well," I said, "thank you; the object of our calling on you is answered." I said, "That will meet the case." "Stop," says the stranger, "stop, sir." Mr. Fennelly I think was the name of this gentleman who stopped Mr. Vanderbyl from finishing what he was about to say. I had accepted that as meeting our case. I said to Mr. Vanderbyl, "Is this gentleman your lawyer and legal adviser?" "Oh no," he says, "he is a friend of mine. I may say perhaps that he is half a lawyer." Gentlemen, these are the facts, and all that related to the facts about the word "lawyer" being employed at that meeting. I could have spoken, of course, but it was not my place to interfere yesterday, but that was the form in which "lawyer" was brought up, and that is the reply to it.

16,197. (Mr. Price.) Had this stranger at this point of time said anything before that "Stop, stop, Mr. Vanderbyl?"—That is the first time to my recollection that this gentleman interfered. All this took place in a short time. Then Mr. Fennelly expressed it as his opinion that this was after all nothing more than a trick of the lawyers. He assured us, as Mr. Vanderbyl had done in the commencement of the meeting, that the lawyers had brought heavy pressure to bear on Mr. Vanderbyl.

16,198. Did he say anything to this effect, "Be "honest, gentlemen; it is not the Lundy Granite "Company, it is money?"—No, not that form of words; yet you may put it, and after all it is very much the substance of it. The word "humbug" was never used at the meeting at all. Mr. Fennelly assured us that Mr. Vanderbyl was desirous of carrying this election on purity principles. Many other things passed, but it came to this, "Gentlemen, what "do you suppose it cost Mr. Vanderbyl at the last "election?" "Impossible to say." "Over," I think I am correct in the figures, "over 4,000*l.*" The first time I heard it Mr. Vanderbyl said 5,000*l.* That was said in a very affecting sort of way, to me it was at that moment, and I had a queer feeling come over me, and I felt very inclined to be weak in my conduct; but if I had known then as now, I should have felt strong in another way before I left the room. In less than an hour that gentleman had left Fryern Street, where he had been endeavouring to effect an intrigue with Mr. Westropp, and many other things had taken place then which I did not know until the last few days in this court. Well, those things were stated, and various other things were stated in conversation. I will give you the substance. Mr. Fennelly said he conceived there would be no necessity for Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr. Kinglake to withdraw. He felt morally certain in his own mind that the election would be won on the Liberal side on purity principles. I said, "I fear, sir, you do not know the borough of Bridgwater so well as the gentlemen here." He said, "I am as certain as I can be; I have had it from the very best source," and almost as good as intimated that he had it from the Tory side, that there would be no bribery on their part. Very queer, I thought, this; Mr. Vanderbyl's legal adviser, if sincere, ought not to be gathering information of that kind from the Conservative side. I must say it induced a kind of suspicion which I checked rather, and hoped against hope, that it might not be the case.

16,199. (Mr. Anstey.) A suspicion of coalition?—Yes; he persuaded Mr. Vanderbyl to withhold his answer till the morning. We shook hands and left. I think I was the last of the four. Nothing could be said after shaking hands without the four hearing it. We went downstairs; I do not recollect returning with the deputation to Mr. Nicholls. They tell me I did. If I did I omitted it. If anything passed I may as well take my share of the responsibility, but I do not remember.

16,200. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you next see the lawyers after this interview you had had with Mr. Vanderbyl?—I only saw them the same night. If I did return I imagine it must have been there. The next morning was Monday. Mr. Cook, who would have to pass my window—I was then living in St. Mary's Street—passed by, and I opened the door, and he said, "Mr. Collins, just one moment to tell you the thing is smooth and all right," and I did not wish to ask——

16,201. Monday morning this was?—No, Sunday; yes, it was Monday morning of course. He merely said, "I have called to tell you, Mr. Collins, it is all right." Of course I knew what he meant by that, and so he left. I do not know whether the Commissioners remember, but this morning, when Mr. Henry Nicholls wished to make a retractation of something which he had said with regard to the expression, "It is humbug, gentlemen, you want money," there appeared to me to be a deal of confusion and twisting in putting that matter. What I objected to was not simply the word "humbug," or anything of the sort, but in that sentence, "Gentlemen, then you mean money"—we four waiting as a deputation. I say if that was the understanding it was a trick of the lawyers. We never meant money, we four who were there; at least, speaking for myself, I did not.

(Mr. Coleridge.) But it was Mr. Fennelly who said it.

16,202. (Mr. Price.) The position was this: Mr. Fennelly knew what the lawyers were trying to do. You gentlemen, no doubt, came there with an honest intention to see whether Mr. Vanderbyl would conduct it on pure principles, or retire?—Yes.

16,203. Or Mr. Fennelly may have thought, "Well, you are only acting a part," and had the same views as the lawyers, and therefore may well have said to you, "Gentlemen, it is all nonsense," or "humbug." "What you mean is money." It may have not been what you meant, but Mr. Fennelly may have said so; and I think he would have been most excusable in saying so myself. I do not mean as to you gentlemen, but after all that past with the lawyers, he thought you came with the same view?—You would be correct in your view, but then Mr. Fennelly has not stated in this box to give any evidence. What he was supposed to have said has come through the medium of Mr. Cook, the lawyer, in evidence.

16,204. Mr. Cook's evidence is to this effect, that Mr. Fennelly said to the deputation "It is all hum-"bug," or "nonsense." "What you mean is money;" and Mr. Cook represented that to us as having been said to him by Mr. Fennelly, and Mr. Fennelly said that he had said so to you gentlemen; and the only thing we want to have is whether he said so, and not whether you were humbugging him?—I shall make my case clear if you will allow me to qualify this.

16,205. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are in contest here with one of your own party; therefore it is very material you should tell us exactly what transpired. Mr. Nicholls says he cannot recollect anything of the sort, though he does not doubt it was said?—The learned Chairman this morning stated that the deputation had stated in Mr. Nicholls' house that night, after they had left Mr. Vanderbyl, that Mr. Fennelly said it was all humbug.

16,206. (Mr. Price.) No, I never said so. You quite misunderstood me. What I said was read from the shorthand note. It was not my own statement; but I read it from Mr. Cook's evidence, that he said to you, "Gentlemen, it is all humbug, money is what you want." — That is perfectly correct as you state it now. I merely wish to put it in that form.

16,207. What do you say to that; Mr. Cook's evidence is that Mr. Fennelly said that to him?—I do not believe that Mr. Fennelly could have put it in that form.

16,208. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have already said something to that effect?—I object to Mr. Fennelly's "you" meaning "us."

16,209. (Mr. Anstey.) We cannot help that. What Mr. Fennelly said may have been well deserved or may have been most unjust, may have been true or may have been untrue. The question is not as to that, but whether or not he said it, or anything like it?—He made reference to money, and it amounted to it.

16,210. Then he says no answer was made to that?—We did not answer many things he said.

16,211. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Fennelly, according to Mr. Cook, made that remark, and no answer was made to him; that is Mr. Cook's account of what Mr. Fennelly said. Is that true? Was any answer made to such an observation?—That justifies my insinuation that he never was present. He did not refer to us, and how could that apply to us? He used the word "lawyers."

16,212. Then he did not say, "It is money you want"?—No, that is what I want to put right. I have stated what Mr. Fennelly said, making use of the names of lawyers just as Mr. Vanderbyl had done before, but he made no insinuation.

16,213. (Mr. Coleridge.) The point is, whether he said anything about money?—The point is whether I am implicated as one of the deputation.

16,214. (Mr. Price.) Then he did say that, not imputing it to you, as you understood, but imputing it to the lawyers?—Yes, most distinctly. Then the polling took place. I was applied to to propose Mr. Vanderbyl. I declined to do it. I was at the hustings the morning of the election, and recorded my vote early. I moved about until 10 or half-past 10, or 11. I saw things were looking very queer, and could not understand it. I put a question to Mr. Lovibond, "How are things going on?" I think about 9 o'clock. Mr. Lovibond said, "Well, we cannot find "that the Tories are spending any money at all." "Oh, indeed; well, it is all right;" and he says, "I have got my information from a very good "source." "What is your source?" "Bussell," he said, "the bailiff at the county court." "Well," I said, "Do you call that a good source?" "Well, "look you, Collins, it is not every man who will take "Bussell's word, but I can take his word; Bussell "would not deceive me. He assures me nothing has "passed." That is the only conversation I had with regard to how things were going on, until I found many parties were polling; Liberals getting behind, and the Tories getting ahead, and I went into my room and never came out until 2 or half-past 2. Then things were turned; the election was accomplished. I began to feel exultant with triumph. I felt sure all was pure, and I did not know to the contrary at the time.

16,215. (Mr. Price.) I should rather think not. Mr. Cook had called on you, and you knew what that meant?—Yes, I understood afterwards—"no money "passed."

16,216. On the Conservative side?—And on the other side also. That is the position of things, and there the matter ended as far as I am concerned.

16,217. Is there anything else you wish to say to us about the last election?—No, nothing at all; but many things may occur, and I shall be most happy, if you call me again, if I can discover anything.

16,218. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you ever seen anything of Mr. Kinglake since?—No, not since the election, to speak to. I have seen them of course. I shook hands with Mr. Vanderbyl, but made no reference to the election, nor he to me.

16,219. Nor either of them?—Nor either of them.

16,220. No conversation with either of them on the subject of the election business?—No conversation on the election that I am aware of.

16,221. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know anything about the election before, Mr. Vanderbyl's single-handed election?—That is the first election?

16,222. Yes?—Nothing whatever, more than it was a corrupt affair.

16,223. Nothing to your personal knowledge?—No.

16,224. Nor Mr. Bagehot's election?—No; I believed it was one of the purest elections imaginable, though it turned out corrupt. I believe Sir John Shelley's was a corrupt one, although I have heard it stated here that he intended to fight it purely. I never heard the expression, but he gave the electors to understand that he was coming down to win, and I know the impression was among the electors that he did intend to bribe, and they were thrown on their backs on the morning of polling at no money being spent.

16,225. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you heard of the alleged honourable obligation with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond that Sir John Shelley is stated to have entered into with him before he came down from London, that no bribery should be used?—I have heard of it.

16,226. Did you believe it to be sincerely intended, or only a blind, or not?—I believe it myself sincerely.

16,227. Then you do not contradict what you have heard about its being intended to be a pure election by Sir John Shelley?—It was said that Sir John Shelley, in an election speech, had said so much; he never did.

16,228. It has not been stated so at all?—Then I am mistaken.

16,229. (Mr. Price.) But you understood, and the people in Bridgwater, that Sir John Shelley having used the expression "I intend to win," gathered from that that any person coming to Bridgwater intending to win meant to spend money?—That is how they understood it—the meaning in Bridgwater.

16,230. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you do anything at the election before that in 1859, Colonel Tynte and Mr. Kinglake?—Nothing of any consequence whatever.

16,231. We know that Mr. Kinglake spent 100*l.* besides his legal expenses?—I believe it was corrupt.

16,232. When was the first election you ever voted?—I think the first I ever voted at was Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett's.

16,233. Not at Leader's?—No, that was before my time.

16,234. From the time of Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett, have you ever known a pure election by repute?—Comparatively pure. Sir John Shelley's was, all but the treating.

16,235. But comparatively pure?—That was the purest. There was a coalition, I believe, between Mr. Broadwood and Colonel Tynte. I did not vote. It was before I came to Bridgwater.

16,236. You cannot tell us about the elections between 1835 and 1840?—No, 1841 was when I first came here.

Mr. G. Wilton.

Mr. George Wilton sworn.

16,237. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A general merchant.

16,238. Carrying on business at Bridgwater?—Yes.

16,239. We have heard that you were one of the deputation that waited upon Mr. Vanderbyl?—I was.

16,240. Just tell us as shortly as you can what is your recollection of what took place at the interview? —Shall I repeat to you what took place before?

16,241. Yes?—About 3 o'clock on the Sunday afternoon, or half-past 3, Mr. Henry Nicholls called on me and said that Mr. Henry Lovibond had seen him, and he wished to make a communication to a few of the leaders of the Liberal party respecting the position of the Liberal candidates for the forthcoming election. Without entering into details as to what he had heard, I walked away with him, he having asked me to go and see Mr. James Wood Sully on the same subject, for it was Mr. Lovibond's wish that a few friends should get together about half-past 4 or 5 on Sunday afternoon. We went to Mr. Sully, and he consented to be there at the appointed time. We met at Mr. Nicholls' about half-past 4 or 5. There I found Mr. Henry Lovibond, Mr. Francis Thompson, Mr. James Wood Sully, Mr. Henry Nicholls and myself.

16,242. (Mr. Price.) Were Messrs. Reed and Cook there?—No, they were not. Those were the only persons there to the best of my belief. For the first time I then learnt that both seats of the Liberal party were in jeopardy. I was never more astonished at anything in my life, seeing the acclamation with which Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl had been received in this hall from time to time, and the various demonstrations that had been made in their favour by the people of Bridgwater. Mr. Lovibond assigned as his reason for coming to that conclusion that we were going to fight a pure election, and, so far as he could gather from persons outside, the Tories were bent on spending money, and moreover that a great many of our men, not only the old balance men, but some of the new voters, were also tainted with the desire for money, and that it would be utterly impossible under the then existing circumstances to retain even one seat if that state of things continued. I should have mentioned to you before that I attended a meeting on the Saturday night I had been off for a journey, and on my return was informed by my wife that there was to be a public meeting held at this hall that evening, and after a cup of tea I hastened here to the meeting, and the meeting had just broken up. After the meeting, Mr. Sully touched me on the shoulder and said, "Will you come to Mr. Sealy's presently to hear a letter read." I did not know what the subject was at all, for I had been busy on my journey that week, and to tell you the truth I had not heard to that moment of these scandals in the papers about Mr. Vanderbyl. I wish to explain that to bring me up to the point. Mr. Lovibond began speaking of this in Mr. Nicholls' house. He recapitulated these things, and said they had a very damaging effect upon the minds of very many of Vanderbyl's supporters, and he cited as an instance, that Mr. Hammill, who had personally consented either to nominate or second his nomination, had withdrawn from his bargain, and Mr. Vanderbyl at that moment was adrift, so far as proposer or seconder were concerned. Those were the two reasons urged by Mr. Lovibond why either one or the other of the members should be called upon to resign. This was at the first meeting. Mr. Thompson, I must say that for him, steadily set his face against either of the members being called upon to resign. He said, I think, to use his own words, that he would have no shilly-shally, so far as he was personally concerned; and up to that point Mr. James Sully, I think, was along with him, if not quite so far, still that was the bent of Mr. Sully s mind so far as I could gather. And the whole of that meeting ended in this, that we could not agree on anything, and it was decided we should have another meeting in the evening at 8 o'clock, when a larger number of gentlemen should be called together for the purpose of going more fully into the matter.

16,243. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that at the meeting at which, according to some evidence we have had, a conclusion, not a resolution exactly, was arrived at with regard to the charges against Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, there was a smaller meeting previously to that. I had forgotten one thing. Mr. Henry Lovibond urged as another reason, and I can bear out the words of Mr. Collins respecting the difference that existed between the lawyers; Mr. Lovibond urged as another reason that he had some suspicion that Mr. Vanderbyl was coquetting with Mr. Westropp in order to effect a coalition, and that in all probability the result would be that Mr. Kinglake would at last be thrown overboard. There is another reason. I remember I inquired where Messrs. Reed and Cook were. I wanted to know how it was they were not at this meeting. Mr. Lovibond said he had sent a letter to Messrs. Reed and Cook during the day, and he could not tell why they were not present at this meeting; and I suggested to him whether I should wait on Cook and invite him to come to that meeting at 8 o'clock, which I did. Mr. Lovibond also asked me if I would wait on Mr. John Smith, and desire him to come, which I did, and he came. I think those were the only two persons I invited to come there. Being anxious myself to form a pretty correct opinion of how things stood as to what I ought to do, I made up my mind without saying a word to anyone else, that I would consult Mr. George Sully. I therefore did not go to the 8 o'clock meeting when the others went, but I waited first of all in the street near to the Independent Chapel, trying to intercept Mr. Sully when he came from his place of worship, but I could not find him. I met Mr. Thomas Ware, and told him there was a meeting to be held at 8 o'clock, and asked him if he would go, being a man of considerable weight. He declined to go. I then walked to Wembdon, and got there I should think some time after 8 o'clock, perhaps pretty well half-past 8. I had a consultation with Mr. Sully. I told him that Mr. Henry Lovibond thought that Mr. Vanderbyl should be called upon to retire, for the reason I have just assigned to you. Mr. Sully was very straightforward and explicit in his answer to me on that subject. He said, "Mr. Wilton, I tell you candidly I do not think "the Tories will spend money. I think, looking "at the stringent Bribery Act which is now just "passed, that they will not spend money."

16,244. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who said that?—Mr. Sully.

16,245. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the mayor?—Yes.

16,246. He was at this time mayor, was he not?—Yes. "Well, I think they will not spend money, and "my advice is that Mr. Vanderbyl should proceed "with his election." I remained there until I do not know what time, I suppose a little past 9, and returned to Bridgwater to the meeting. When I came back to the meeting I found the gentlemen there who have been described to you before. I think 11 or 12 persons. I think the statement given to you was about correct. I got back to the meeting about half-past 9 or a quarter to 10.

16,247. (Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us as shortly as you can?—I hope you will not break the thread of my thoughts, otherwise I shall not be able to get them back again.

16,248. Only be as short as possible?—When I got to the meeting I found there was then going on a general kind of conversation. People were speaking about it in twos and threes, and presently, when I had an opportunity, I delivered my speech in respect of what Mr. Sully's advice was about the position of things; and the whole of that ended in our being—I can speak for myself that I did not volunteer to go, but was asked by some one, I do not know who, and I consented to go with three other gentlemen to the "Globe," to see Mr. Vanderbyl.

16,249. Before that had you heard Mr. Lovibond say anything about "Damn it, how can we do that with dirty hands"?—No, I was not present. Mr. James Sully was then invited to go, if my memory is right, but he declined. He said, "I will go, but I shall go before you," and he went before us.

16,250. (Mr. Price.) He went down about seconding or nominating the candidate?—Yes, he went to say he should decline to nominate him. When we got into the

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. Wilton.

9 Sept. 1869.

room I commenced the conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl by saying that we had come to him upon unpleasant business. I then related to him how Mr. Lovibond had called us together in the way I have described to you. I told him it was the opinion of Mr. Lovibond that the Tories would spend money, and that some of our men were disaffected. Moreover, I related to him those circumstances about his position with the Lundy Granite Company and the National Bank, and then Mr. Vanderbyl, as Mr. Collins has described, flew into a bit of a temper and rage, and was so much excited that for ever so long he could scarcely deliver himself in a proper manner. He said in respect to the Lundy Granite Company as Mr. Collins has said, I cannot remember the exact words, but blamed Sir Joseph McKenna for these rumours and reports circulated respecting him, and he said it was all done out of spite and ill-feeling towards him, and he accused some person in the bank, who had been the means of surreptitiously, as he said, getting this information and sending it to the papers. He also spoke, and here I wish to be very particular about what I say; Mr. Vanderbyl did say that his friends in London had urged on him the necessity of not spending any money at the forthcoming election, and he waxed so warm about it until I had to pull Mr. Vanderbyl up, for he really talked as though we were there to make him spend money; he did not say that in words, but the tenor of his remarks was so strong that I had to pull him up, and I said, "We are not here for the purpose of asking you to "spend money, but we are come here for the express "purpose of asking you, under all the circumstances, to "be good enough to resign in favour of Mr. Kinglake." I had forgotten one little circumstance which that brings to my recollection. Previously to going so far as that, when I said it was thought needful that one member should retire, Mr. Vanderbyl jumped instantly at the remark, and said he thought it would be a very good and proper thing, but when he was told he himself was called upon to resign, he did not see it in that light, and then he began to raise objections.

16,251. (Mr. Price.) Naturally, after spending 5,000*l.* ?—He referred to the 5,000*l.*

16,252. (Mr. Anstey.) When you said this to him, which you have just mentioned, "You mistake, we "are not here to ask you to spend money, we are to ask "you to retire," had you heard what Mr. Lovibond had but a few hours before stated at the meeting at which you were present, and which Mr. Collins has detailed to us, namely, that Mr. Vanderbyl was not going to spend money, but is determined not to spend money; and, as we see he afterwards stated that Mr. Kinglake was prepared with the money ?—I did not hear that.

16,253. Did you know that ?—I did not know that, but I must tell you that I understood it most distinctly at that meeting that Mr. Vanderbyl was not going to spend money.

16,254. And that Mr. Kinglake—— ?—No, I did not.

16,255. Nothing about Kinglake ?—No, I was not present when that was said.

16,256. If you had known it when you had made that repartee to Mr. Vanderbyl, "We are not here to ask you to spend money, but to ask you to retire," it would have lost all its point, because it would have meant this, "Do you retire in favour of the man who is prepared to spend money" ?—But I did not know it. In respect of what Mr. Vanderbyl had to say respecting the lawyers, he abused them in pretty good round terms. He said they were putting a tremendous pressure upon him in order to get him to spend money and he would not do it, and I think it was just about that point of conversation where Mr. Fennelly joined in and said, "It is not the case of the Lundy Granite Company," or words to that effect. He might have said those words, I do not know, "But it is money they want." It was most decidedly in that way, "It is money they want."

16,257. Was any answer made to that remark by the deputation ?—Yes, I think even to that remark, although it was not spoken to by Mr. Nicholls; whether I made a similar rejoinder to what I have just related to you I do not know, but either the one or the other of us did.

16,258. Mr. Collins said, "It was left unanswered; what answer could we make ?" Mr. Nicholls says no answer was made, and Mr. Cook says in his, Mr. Fennelly's, account of it that night to him at his house he laid stress on the fact that there was no reply ?—Well, sir, I will not undertake to swear what reply was made to that, but the reply which I gave previously, which I have stated, was correct.

16,259. Was this just before the deputation left ?—No, it was at the commencement of the meeting.

16,260. No, no, this remark to which, according to these three witnesses, there was no reply; was this just at the close of the deputation ?—It was at the commencement. It was almost the first thing which Mr. Fennelly said after he began to speak.

16,261. That was the commencement ?—Yes.

16,262. Did Mr. Fennelly speak often and long after that ?—He spoke several times, he joined more especially in regard to the conversation respecting the lawyers, and respecting the promise which Mr. Vanderbyl had made his friends in London, that he would not spend money. I should think we were there half an hour, and did not leave until possibly 10 minutes or a quarter past 11, but I am not quite sure about that.

16,263. Now, I want to ask you a question, which probably you will answer more satisfactorily than any other witness. Frequent allusion was made by Fennelly and Vanderbyl, you say, to the opinion of friends in London, and one or two of the witnesses have said his partners in London were the persons who had expressed their opinion that he ought not to spend money. Did Mr. Fennelly or Mr. Vanderbyl, in making those representations, state whether the objection of the partners and friends in London was to the imprudence of so large an expenditure of money as would be necessary in Bridgwater, particularly at that time, the crisis in the money market; or did they object to the impurity and the wickedness of the thing ?—I understood it in the latter sense.

16,264. (Mr. Price.) I understood you to say they objected to the peril he was going to put himself in by the Act of Parliament ?—Most decidedly.

16,265. Not a question of extent, but what a serious thing it would be to bribe at all under the existing circumstances ?—Yes, that is the fact. I wish to refer to these words, because a great deal has been made of that respecting the word "lawyer" being used.

16,266. "Are you a lawyer ?"—"Are you a lawyer." I cannot improve on the words which Mr. Collins has said, because he said them, but they are strictly true.

16,267. We understand it now. The way it was used was, that when Mr. Fennelly first broke into the conversation it was with a view to know whether he was the legal adviser of Mr. Vanderbyl that the question was put ?—Yes; and more, I say this with some feeling, that if Mr. Fennelly had not stepped between us and Mr. Vanderbyl, I believe we should have taken his resignation back in our hands. Mr. Fennelly was the man, when Mr. Vanderbyl said he would retire, who stopped him and said, "No, no, do not do it."

16,268. (Mr. Anstey.) What did Vanberbyl say to that when he said "No, no ?"—Mr. Fennelly added, "It is a very important thing to decide on, and I advise "you to take time until the morning to consider it."

16,269. Did Mr. Vanderbyl say anything to that ?—He said he would take time.

16,270. And that was the time the deputation left ?—That was the time.

16,271. (Mr. Price.) You do not deny that it was a very important thing for Mr. Vanderbyl to consider ?—I do not deny it.

16,272. And was worth a night's consideration surely to a gentleman who believed that he had gone through a most successful canvass, and honestly, we will suppose at that time, intended to fight it on purity principles. He is suddenly called on to resign. Surely it was not bad advice on the part of Mr. Fennelly, without referring to spending money at all, to say take a little time to consider it?—Perhaps not.

16,273. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the alternative?—The alternative was, I know of no alternative.

16,274. At that time you had been labouring to convince Mr. Vanderbyl that he had no chance if both stood, that one of the candidates, it was not himself, might have a chance, but that two would not. You had satisfied him, had not you, at that time that his canvass was not a successful one, and he was deceived in that?—I do not know whether he was himself satisfied; I suppose he was.

16,275. (Mr. Price.) Did he say so, or did he say, "Gentlemen, I have had a very successful canvass?"—Yes, he did; I had forgotten that he said this, "I "have been through the whole canvass myself, and "have made it up, and I think I know my position "there as well as the lawyers." He did say it.

16,276. (Mr. Anstey.) I only want to have your statement intelligible and plain. No doubt that was said at the proper time, but I am taking you to the last moment of the deputation; by that time he must surely have been satisfied that his canvass had not been successful, when you had undeceived him, because he said to you, taking your statement, that he would resign?—Yes.

16,277. He would retire. Do you think, at that moment, when he came to that resolution to retire, he was of opinion that he had a majority of votes?—I cannot say.

16,278. You think that if he believed himself in the possession of a majority of votes at that time he would have consented to retire?—No, I should think not.

16,279. You think not?—Well, I should think possibly the view you take of it might have influenced him, but I cannot say.

16,280. Supposing that were so, what other alternative was there, in case he should not retire, to be considered during the night?—Either to fight the election purely, or to fight it impurely. There was no other alternative.

16,281. (Mr. Price.) You did not argue the question of the canvass with him at all, I understand?—No.

16,282. What you put to him was that which you thought the argument of most weight, whether he had the interest of the Liberal party at heart?—It was.

16,283. Then he said he had. Then you said, "Under all the circumstances we respectfully desire "to press on you, in the interest of the Liberal party, "that you shall retire"?—Yes.

16,284. And that was the whole amount of pressure which you put on him?—Yes.

16,285. You never argued his canvass, or went into the question, it was only a canvass, or he had a chance of success, but thought the way he could best show his regard for the Liberal party was to accede to your wishes to retire?—Yes, I did.

16,286. (Mr. Anstey.) Then I have misunderstood the whole of your evidence from beginning to end, because, if so, I am mistaken in supposing that you yourself believed, and that you had communicated your belief to Mr. Vanderbyl, that the Tories would bribe so extensively as to destroy altogether the effect of the nominal majority which the Liberals had; and therefore not one but two must fall if they were to go to the poll on purity principles?—If I have not said that in my evidence I should have said it. I ought, instead of describing it generally, to have said particularly what we said to Mr. Vanderbyl at the commencement. We told Mr. Vanderbyl precisely what we had received from Mr. Lovibond. We told Mr. Vanderbyl that in Mr. Lovibond's opinion the Tories would bribe, and that moreover a great portion of the electors on our own side were tainted with the desire for money.

16,287. (Mr. Price.) As I understood, Mr. Vanderbyl still persisted in saying he thought he knew as much about the borough as the lawyers; that he had gone carefully through his canvass, and believed if he fought it on pure principles he would succeed?—He certainly said that.

16,288. (Mr. Anstey.) When?—At the commencement.

16,289. I am asking about the end?—He did not say it then.

16,290. (Mr. Price.) Because you put it to him whether he should retire for the interests of the Liberal party?—Exactly.

16,291. (Mr. Anstey.) But in what way could it be to the interest of the Liberal party that he should retire, if he was sure of getting in?—Ah, I was not so sure of that. We thought he would not get in.

16,292. And he did too, I suppose, by that time?—Perhaps he did.

16,293. (Mr. Price.) What did you say to convince him?—Just these very statements I have named.

16,294. That there would be money spent?—Not at all; on the Tory side?

16,295. Yes?—Yes.

16,296. How would it secure the success of one of your candidates unless you had entered into a compromise with the Tories?—That was suggested by Mr. Lovibond.

16,296*a*. Therefore it was a question who should be the person to be sacrificed of the two?—Of course it was.

16,297. And the result of it would be that a compromise would have to be effected on their side?—Exactly so; and this question was asked of Mr. Henry Lovibond by some one, I do not know who, "How do you know Mr. Gray will retire?" And Mr. Lovibond said he thought from the part Mr. Gray had taken in the general business of the election he was only a catspaw, and that he thought he should be able to arrange; he did say he was not sure about it, but he thought he should be able to arrange that with the Conservative party.

16,298. Was not Mr. Vanderbyl indignant at the notion first, knowing he had spent this large sum of money at the last election, and believed that he would be a successful candidate, that he should be the one to be sacrificed?—I do not know that he was very indignant about it. He certainly, when it came to his knowledge that he was the one of the two to be sacrificed, he certainly did not like it, I must confess.

16,299. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand you to say at that meeting it was known before you went up to him that he had been attempting a coalition against Mr. Kinglake?—I had only heard it in the most indirect manner.

16,300. Indirectly or directly?—I heard it from Mr. Lovibond as I have stated in my evidence.

16,301. Supposing Mr. Vanderbyl had expressed very considerable indignation against the proposal that Mr. Kinglake should coalesce with Mr. Westropp, would it have been retorted by you upon him: "It is "no more than you were doing this very day with "Mr. Westropp against Mr. Kinglake"?—I cannot say that.

16,302. Therefore would not the knowledge of that intrigue in Mr. Vanderbyl's mind have prevented him expressing much indignation; the counterpart proposal for a coalition between Kinglake and Westropp?

16,303. (Mr. Price.) You cannot answer?—I cannot answer.

16,304. It was diamond cut diamond?—Yes, it was.

16,305. (Mr. Coleridge.) After you came away from Mr. Vanderbyl did you go back to Nicholls' house?—I did not.

16,306. You know nothing about that?—No. Going back to Mr. Nicholls' house the deputation passed my door, and I wished them good night.

16,307. (Mr. Anstey.) The last words said at that meeting were those you mention; "Take time to consider," said by Mr. Fennelly, and "I will do so" by Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. Wilton.

9 Sept. 1869.

16,308. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you first vote?—I do not know. I came in 1846.

16,309. Probably in 1847?—No, I had no vote in the first year.

16,310. Has there been a pure election in your belief since here?—I believe the only pure election was Sir John Shelley's.

16,311. And that we know was not, because large bills were paid for treating.

16,312. (Mr. Price.) And there was bribery on the other side?—I did not mean that.

16,313. As far as money on your side went?—Yes.

16,314. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know anything particular about other elections?—I do not. I can tell you honestly I deeply regret having been called to that meeting on Sunday night, but it was the first time, if I may call it a secret meeting, which it was not, but the first private meeting of that kind I was ever called on in my life to attend. I have known, as Mr. Collins has described, that the borough is corrupt and most corrupt, and we have been powerless, with lots of others, to do anything to remedy the evil.

16,315. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you anything more to tell about this election of 1868? Do you know anything that took place on the polling day?—Yes.

16,316. You are one of the most active members of the Liberal party?—Well, I have taken an active part.

16,317. We have it in evidence that on the nomination day Mr. Vanderbyl's intention to bribe was well known; did that intention reach your ears?—It did.

16,318. On that day?—Yes, Mr. Cook came to my house about 9 o'clock in the morning.

(Mr. Price.) We will adjourn your examination until to-morrow.

J. Bunter.

JOHN BUNTER sworn.

16,319. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A plumber and painter.

16,320. A voter?—Yes.

16,321. Did you take a part in the election of 1868 in getting up voters; had you a list given to you?—I had.

16,322. Of voters you were to look after?—Yes, parties I had to see.

16,323. Was a man named Lee one of them?—Yes, George Lee.

16,324. Did you see him?—I did.

16,325. Did you canvass him?—No.

16,326. What did you see him about; did you ask if he would go and vote?—No, I never asked him to vote at all.

16,327. What did you see him for; about a pair of shoes?—Well, we are neighbours.

16,328. Was he one of the persons you were looking after?—Yes, he was.

16,329. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who told you to look after him?—It came about in this way——

16,330. Who told you?—It came about that there was a meeting previous to the polling day at Andrew Allan's house.

16,331. Did Andrew Allan tell you to look after him?—No.

16,332. Who did then?—I do not know that anyone particular did. I will explain how it came about. There was a public meeting at Mr. Bagehot's election. I think it came about in this way——

16,333. We are talking of the last election; who told you to look after George Lee?—No one.

16,334. (Mr. Price.) Then why did you?—Because I looked after him before.

16,335. What did you say to him?—I did not see him the last election.

16,336. You said just now you looked after him at the last election because you had before?—No, it was just in this way——

16,337. Did you pay him any money at the last election?—No.

16,338. Did you promise him any?—No.

16,339. Had you any money to pay anybody?—No.

16,340. None at all?—No.

16,341. Did you not get anything yourself?—No.

16,342. At the last election before Vanderbyl's?—Yes.

16,343. You gave him 10*l.*?—I did.

16,344. Who told you?—I received it from Andrew Allan.

16,345. When did you give it to him?—It would be three or four days after the election.

16,346. Had you told him when you polled him that he should have it after the election?—No; he spoke to me on the nomination night, and said, "How "is it, Mr. Bunter? I do not want to go against my "party, but I have been promised at a previous elec- "tion and been disappointed;" and I said, "If you "go to the poll like a man, if there is anything going "on our side I will see you shall get something."

16,347. You told him that, and three or four days afterwards gave him 10*l.*?—Just so; on the faith of my word he went to poll.

16,348. Who else did you bribe?—Two others.

16,349. Who were they?—Cavill, a man in my own employ; and also another man in my employ named Richard Glanville.

16,350. Did you do it in that way by promising something to them?—Yes.

16,351. At Bagehot's election you also gave Lee 10*l.*?—I did after the election, perhaps three or four days. I said, "No, I will not give it you until you "go to poll; they shall not say I bribed you until you "go to poll."

16,352. That is the distinction you drew?—I did; I said, "Go to poll first."

16,353. Who else did you bribe at that election?—No one.

16,354. What did you get yourself?—Nothing at all.

16,355. At neither election?—Never in my life.

16,356. Did you bribe anybody at Mr. Kinglake's election?—That was Mr. Kinglake's election.

16,357. No; we are not talking of 1865. Old Lee says you bribed him at Vanderbyl's in 1866, and Bagehot's election in 1866?—Yes.

16,358. In 1865, Kinglake and Shelley's, did you bribe him then?—No.

16,359. Did you have any money from anybody?—No.

16,360. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you promise him any thing?—No.

16,361. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1859 did you bribe anybody?—No.

16,362. Did you promise anybody?—No.

16,363. (Mr. Price.) How did Allan get hold of you as his bribe agent?—When Mr. Bagehot came early in 1866 there was a public meeting in the public rooms, George Lane; after that meeting was over, I cannot say who it was, but some one tapped me on the shoulder and said, "Come into Allan's; there are "about a dozen of us who are going through the "voters' list." I, of course, being mixed up with my party, went in, and we went and sat down, and went through the list, and the object of going through that list was to see what parties would be likely to require money; when they came to this name they said, "That man is in your employ, will you take him?" "Well," I said, "it is a thing I do not like to do; it is a thing I have not mixed myself up with before." They said, "Everyone must put their shoulders to the "wheel, and do what they can for the party; it will "be a tight run." At last I consented to see those parties.

16,364. How many?—Three.

16,365. Those are all you ever had on your list?—Those are all.

16,366. Now at the last election, you said at first you did go and look after Lee, did you or not?—No, I never looked after Lee.

16,367. But you said you did, because you looked after him on former occasions?—I made a mistake as to the election.

16,368. Did you see him that polling day?—I might have seen him in the morning time at his door.

16,369. Did you say anything to him; "Have you voted?" or "Are you going to vote?"—I think not.

16,370. But he would know you to be a man from whom money would be likely to come?—Yes.

16,371. Did you say anything to him during the day, "Have you voted," or "Are you going to vote?" or any thing of that kind?—It is quite likely I may have said in the morning, "There is no money going, Lee; you must go and poll which way you like." It is quite possible I may have said that.

16,372. Did he say anything about it?—I think not.

16,373. Later in the day did you ask him whether he had voted?—No.

16,374. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he ever tell you about having been promised 20*l.* and not getting it?—No; he told me he had been offered money at Mr. Westropp's election in 1865.

16,375. For the Tories?—Yes.

16,376. Who did he say offered it to him?—He did not say.

16,377. How much?—I cannot say.

16,378. Did he say anything about Murlis's in 1847 promising money and his not getting it?—No; I cannot go back so far as that.

16,379. (Mr. Anstey.) George Lee says you called upon him and saw him that morning at 8 o'clock?—That I called upon him?

16,380. Yes?—Well, it is quite possible I did, because we are opposite neighbours.

16,381. Are you the only John Bunter in the town, plumber, &c.?—Yes.

16,382. Then you bribed both in June and July 1866, after having signed on the last week in May preceding the celebrated petition of 80 to the House of Commons?—I did.

SIXTEENTH DAY.

J. Bunter.

9 Sept. 1869.

Mr. Henry Frederick Nicholls recalled.

Mr. H. F. Nicholl

16,383. (Mr. Price.) You dragged a subject in this morning, we did not ask you about it. I do not think it very material, but still as you have mentioned it I should like to hear you explain it?—I cannot explain anything more than I have stated this morning; it occurred just as I have stated it.

16,384. It must be a mistake somehow or other?—It is no mistake on my part, having known Canon Rooker, seeing Bussell speaking with him, and my going with him to the bottom of the stairs, and he speaking to some other man on that matter; there is no mistake about it.

16,385. You cannot tell us who that man was?—I cannot; in fact I have tried again and again to see the man, but I have never seen him in the town.

16,386. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not understand the sequel of the story; why should you go away having been beckoned to go out, merely because of the hundreds of people who were then about who saw Bussell talking to a man whom you did not know, and to whom he might be talking about a thousand other subjects than the one in question?—There was no person directly in the way except Bussell and this man.

16,387. But the way was open to the Queen's subjects?—It was not out in the street.

16,388. Where was it?—In the "Globe" yard.

16,389. But hundreds might be going that way?—But there were not hundreds in sight.

16,390. Not at that moment, but they might have been coming in on some other business?—Just so; I may be deceived, but I speak of the thing as it occurred.

Adjourned to to-morrow at half-past 10 o'clock.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Friday, 10th September 1869.

Present:

Edwin Plumer Price, Esq., Q.C.
Thomas Chisholm Anstey, Esq.
Charles Edward Coleridge, Esq.
Henry Francis Purcell, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. Robert Ambrose Steele recalled.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. R. A. Steele.

10 Sept. 1869.

16,391. (Mr. Anstey.) You hold a paper in your hand; what is it?—A brown paper in which a parcel of minutes of evidence and other papers in connexion with the Bridgwater election petition of 1866 were contained and forwarded by Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton.

16,392. What is written on the label?—"Bridgwater election petition, 1866; all the papers."

16,393. Were the briefs on either side amongst those papers?—No.

16,394. Or any drafts or memoranda?—None.

(Mr. Price.) I wish to state that we shall require to be satisfied, and shall be glad to receive information as to the state of health of Mr. Richard Smith. No doubt we had his medical man here the other day, but we understand that he is seen about, and can go about wherever he likes and when he likes, and if it is proved to us that he cannot come here we shall most undoubtedly go down and see him, and we shall arrange with our secretary to fix some day next week on which we shall pay him a visit. In the meantime, if anybody can give any information as to his state, and whether he is able to go about and converse, we shall be glad to have it. There are two other matters which I wish to mention. I have had a letter from Mr. Baxter, who was the chairman of the committee which sat in 1865 in the House of Commons, and it is due to Mr. Baxter, as no doubt some observations were made by some of us as to whether it was the right course for the committee to have pursued, not to move for a commission, as it showed a certain amount of supineness on their part, that this letter should be read in which he has explained very satisfactorily his reasons for not moving. (Mr. Baxter's letter was read.) Then another letter I have had, containing a personal explanation from Mr. Morley; and perhaps the correspondent of the "Times" will have the goodness to take notice of what I am going to say. Mr. Morley, who is a member for Bristol, and who was represented to us by Mr. Cook the other day as a gentleman who had been asked to stand, or had been mentioned as probable candidate for Bridgwater; and upon that being mentioned I made the observation, "That is the same gentleman who was unseated for direct bribery." Mr. Morley is afraid that that expression of mine will give rise to the idea that he was guilty of personal bribery. I should be quite unjustified in saying that, and I did not intend to convey it by any words I used. I had the best reason for knowing the decision of the committee, which, although he was unseated for, I still say, direct bribery, acquitted him of any personal implication in it, but my observation was not made with reference to Mr. Morley personally, but it seemed to me that the great qualification for any other candidate for a seat here to possess was that he should have been unseated on a former occasion for bribery, or was in some way or other tainted with bribery. That seemed to be the great qualification for a candidate amongst those who recommended him in London.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. W. L. Winterbotham.

Mr. Washington Lafayette Winterbotham recalled.

16,395. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say with regard to Mr. Sully?—Mr. James Sully met with an accident last Saturday fortnight by falling over some steps and breaking a rib and bruising his side very much. He has been confined to his bed till Monday last. Since then he has been able to come down to his drawing room. He certainly is not able to be examined just yet, though he is very anxious to be, and I have very great difficulty indeed in keeping him at home, but I told him that I could not let him come here. Talking is as bad for a broken rib as walking is for a broken leg, and therefore talking either here or there would be very detrimental to him. I think on an early day next week, I cannot say the day, but before the middle of the week, he will be in a fit state.

16,396. You think that talking is dangerous to him?—It is just the part that is broken which would be moved by talking. Perhaps, as I am here, you will allow me to say something as to the state of health of Mr. John Brown and Mr. Edward Murch, neither of whom are in a state in which they could appear here, but either of them is in a state in which he could with safety be examined at his own house. Mr. John Brown's health has been failing for the last five years. He has been suffering a great deal from congestion of the brain, and rupture, and so on.

16,397. What difference is there between an examination here and at home?—That the excitement of coming here and being examined in public, with the excitement which a court always causes, would tend to produce that congestion of the brain, which might be detrimental to him, in fact fatal. Sitting quietly in his own room, I do not think that is to be feared, and no harm would accrue to him. I may mention that his memory is almost gone. He is almost imbecile as regards the recollection of dates.

16,398. (Mr. Anstey.) When you tell us this you merely say what you have understood from himself?—What I have observed myself from long attendance. I have been almost daily in attendance upon him for the last six years, I think. I do not think there would be any harm, although I confess in my own mind there would be a little risk, in examining him in his own house. Then as to Mr. Murch, he has been suffering from what is called shaking palsy for something like eight years. He is incapable of walking or moving. I think he has lost all power over the legs except just to totter along, but his intellect and mind are perfectly free and clear.

16,399. Does not he go about at all?—I do not think so. I have not seen him out for years.

16,400. Does not he drive out?—I will not be sure about that; I have never met him out.

16,401. I understand that he has merely lost the use of his legs. His mind is as fresh as ever it was?—His mind is fresh, but a long standing disease of that nature makes people exceedingly fidgetty. I can only say medically that I think it would do him harm to come here, although I do not think it would if his examination were taken in his own arm chair.

16,402. (Mr. Price.) I think, under those circumstances, if we find it necessary to examine Mr. Murch or Mr. Brown, we will communicate with them or examine them in their own houses; and with regard to Mr. Sully, perhaps some day next week you will come and tell us in what state he is?—I have a great difficulty in keeping him at home. He was anxious to come to-day. I could not recommend him; indeed I forbade him as far as I could.

16,403. I understand you to say that in all probability you think some day next week he will be able to attend?—Certainly; I should say positively.

16,404. (Mr. Anstey.) We are very anxious that he should come?—Yes, and I think I may say that he is equally anxious.

16,405. For my part I am very anxious that what he has to say should be said in the hearing of the public?—Yes, and that is a point which, if I may be allowed to mention, that he especially mentioned to me this morning. He said, "If consistent with your "opinion, I leave it to you, but do not if you can help "it suggest that I should be examined at home. I "should very much prefer to be examined in court."

(Mr. Price.) That being so, if you tell us how he is on Monday that will be satisfactory. The probability is we should like to examine him as early next week as possible, because we hope to have concluded the Liberal case, and shall then go into the case of the Conservatives. Therefore we would rather take him before we begin the Conservative side than have to break into it.

16,406. (Mr. Anstey.) I may as well ask you, have you seen Mr. Smith about whom we were asking questions; the ex-solicitor, brother to Mr. Smith the paralytic; have you seen him about in the streets?—Oh, I have in his carriage. I do not know that I have lately.

16,407. How lately?—Within the last few weeks I have certainly.

16,408. On week days?—Yes.

16,409. Have you spoken to him at all?—No, I have seen him go past my house. He lives almost next door to me.

16,410. Have you seen him frequently out in his carriage?—Well, I should think I must have seen him; I do not recollect the last week or two, but certainly within two or three weeks' time I have seen him two or three times a week.

16,411. Being of opposite political opinions probably you are not intimate?—Well, we are not, but I do not think it is that.

J. Deacon.

Jesse Deacon sworn.

16,412. (Mr. Price.) You are a sailor?—A master mariner.

16,413. And want to go to sea?—To-morrow evening.

16,414. Are you a voter for this borough?—I am.

16,415. Did you vote in 1865?—I voted in 1865. Kinglake and Shelley.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

J. Deacon.

10 Sept. 1869.

16,416. Did you receive any money for it?—None.

16,417. Were you promised any?—Nothing.

16,418. Neither before nor after?—No, neither before nor after.

16,419. In any shape whatever?—In any shape or kind whatever.

16,420. Either money, or in any other form?—No.

16,421. Treating, or anything of that sort?—No.

16,422. (Mr. Coleridge.) Nor expenses?—No.

16,423. (Mr. Price.) In 1866 whom did you vote for?—Bagehot.

16,424. Did you receive any money then?—I received about 5*l.* a month or six weeks afterwards.

16,425. Who from?—Bussell.

16,426. Perhaps Bussell will wish me to put the same question to you which I did the other day with another witness. Had you any idea that Bussell had kept back 5*l.* when he ought to have given you 10*l.*?—Not the slightest.

16,427. You were under no impression of that kind?—No.

16,428. In 1866, the second election, whom did you vote for?—Vanderbyl.

16,429. What did you get?—10*l.*

16,430. Who from?—Bussell.

16,431. Where did you get it?—As I was going to poll, in the morning about 10 o'clock.

16,432. Before you voted?—Just.

16,433. In 1868, did you vote?—Yes.

16,434. Who for?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

16,435. Did you get anything then?—Nothing.

16,436. Were you promised anything?—Nothing at all.

16,437. Did you expect to get anything?—No.

16,438. Was anything said to you about it would be all right, there is money going?—Not a word.

16,439. Did you say anything to anybody of that kind?—No.

16,440. How was it you went and voted without money in 1868?—Because I had seen in a public print and I thought I should be committing a guilty action. That is the reason I did not do it.

16,441. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you offered anything?—No, nothing at all.

16,442. How did you get the 10*l.*?—I was going on my way to the poll, and he asked me and gave me a parcel which contained 10*l.*

16,443. What did he say?—He asked me if I had been to the poll, nnd I told him I had not.

16,444. What then?—I do not believe scarce a word passed besides.

16,445. Did you get that 10*l.* to vote for Vanderbyl?—Undoubtedly that is what it was intended for.

16,446, And the 5*l.* before, what was that for?—For my expenses, I suppose, coming from Cardiff.

16,447. It cost you 5*l.* to come across by the 1*s.* 6*d.* boat?—No, it did not cost me that.

16,448. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear at the last election on the polling day that there was going to be money?—I did not.

16,449. (Mr. Price.) What time did you poll?—Between 10 and half-past.

16,450. Before there was a change in the poll at all?—Yes.

16,451. (Mr. Anstey.) Afterwards did you not hear that there had been a change?—I did not until I heard Mr. Palmer had delivered 10*l.*

16,452. Did you hear that those who had voted were also to have their share?—No, I did not, anything of the kind before.

16,453. Did you think that they would according to former practices?—I could not form any idea myself. I never had anything to do with the election, but merely to record my vote.

Mr. James Cook recalled.

Mr. J. Cook.

16,454. (Mr. Anstey.) Did I understand you to say the other day that there were no split votes, and no plumpers at the last election?—I did not understand you to put it to me at the last election, speaking of the last hour at which money was spent.

16,455. If it was not from you it was from some one?—Not from me.

James Press sworn.

J. Press.

16,456. (Mr. Price.) Are you a pilot?—At present.

16,457. It is a loss to you to stay here any longer?—Yes.

16,458. You were formerly captain of the steamer Vanderbyl?—I was.

16,459. Trading between Highbridge, and the Lundy Island?—Yes.

16,460. Employed by the Lundy Granite Company?—Yes.

16,461. Are you a voter?—No.

16,462. Did you take any part in the election when Vanderbyl first came out, in 1866? Were you then in his employment?—I was.

16,463. On the steamer at Highbridge?—I was.

16,464. Did you come down to meet Mr. Vanderbyl at Bridgwater station?—I did.

16,465. Were you the only person that knew him at that time?—I do not expect he knew many.

16,466. Did you point him out to people?—I met him at the carriage door; no doubt they knew who it was.

16,467. Did you canvass for him?—I went round about to the shipping men, captains and so on.

16,468. Were you frequently asked by the voters if any sugar was going?—No.

16,469. Not at all?—No.

16,470. Were you asked by them anything?—I asked them to favour my own employer.

16,471. Did you say anything about money?—No.

16,472. Nothing about anything of the kind?—No.

16,473. (Mr. Coleridge.) Never told them that Mr. Vanderbyl was a very rich man, a good man for the borough?—I knew that.

16,474. Did you tell them so?—No doubt I told them he was a gentleman.

16,475. (Mr. Price.) Did you tell them he was a rich man, and could spend a great deal?—Well, I could not tell them very much, because I was only here one day.

16,476. But you can tell a great deal in a day, I have no doubt, though you do not tell us much. But did you say anything about Mr. Vanderbyl being a rich man?—I did.

16,477. Did you say he would be likely to spend money? Did you say he was rich?—Yes.

16,478. Did you say he was a charitable man?—I cannot say that I did say that.

16,479. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or that you did not?—Or that I did not.

16,480. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you said? Did they say they would not promise to vote until they knew something about it?—No.

16,481. Have you made a statement to our secretary?—Yes.

16,482. Then just recollect that, you are come to ask a favour to be set at liberty, and then distinctly deny what you have told our secretary?—If the chairman would allow me to make a statement I would give it.

16,483. It will depend on your answer to this question whether we allow you to go away. Were you asked by the voters frequently whether any sugar was going?—No.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

J. Press.

10 Sept. 1869.

16,484. Did you state that to our secretary?—Not that I am aware of.

(Mr. Anstey.) You had better come again.

16,485. (Mr. Coleridge.) Tell us what you know about the matter?—When I head that Mr. Vanderbyl was about to put up for Bridgwater (my vessel was then lying at Highbridge) I came into Bridgwater expecting to see Mr. Vanderbyl here. When I came here I heard he was about to come by the 4 o'clock train. I met him at the station with various gentlemen, and when I saw him pass by in the carriage I went to the carriage door and spoke to him, and no doubt when the gentlemen saw me speak to him they knew it was Mr. Vanderbyl. We came from there to the Cornhill in his carriage, I did not get into the carriage but some other gentlemen did, and on the following day I remained at Bridgwater, but the day of the nomination I left it, and so I was not in Bridgwater on the day of the nomination, neither was I on the polling day on the first election, but I say I did do my utmost with customers.

16,486. (Mr. Price.) You say you did not come here on the nomination day?—I did not, I left it by the 9 o'clock train.

16,487. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are speaking of Vanderbyl's first election?—Yes.

16,488. We were asking you as to the last election in 1868?—That is where the mistake is.

16,489. Go on in your own way?—I left Bridgwater on the nomination morning by the 9 o'clock train in 1866, and I saw Mr. Vanderbyl no more from that time for some years, it might be one or two years. That is all I know about that election.

16,490. (Mr. Price.) Then it is not true that you were canvassing for him and were frequently asked by the voters whether there was any "sugar" going, and you replied you could not answer for that, and they then said they could not say they would vote?—Yes.

16,491. Did that take place?—I could not say anything about sugar.

16,492. Did you say "money"?—Well, it might have been that.

16,493. Were you frequently asked by the voters if there was any money going?—I told them I knew nothing about money.

16,494. Were you asked by them?—Yes, I was.

16,495. Did you reply that you could not answer to that, and did they then say they would not promise you to vote?—Yes.

16,496. Who are those to whom you said it?—Various.

16,497. (Mr. Price.) Seafaring men you know?—Yes.

16,498. (Mr. Coleridge.) Can you give their names?—I really could not give the names.

16,499. Of some?—I could not.

16,500. Not one?—No.

16,501. (Mr. Anstey.) Why should you not?—Because I knew them by merely passing; that is all.

16,502. Do you mean to say that you did not know their names?—Yes.

16,503. Do you mean to say that everybody you spoke to that day was a person whose name you did not know?—Well, I might have ascertained at the time, but I did not know.

16,504. (Mr. Price.) You cannot recollect the names?—No, I really cannot.

16,505. Now we come to the election of 1868, what did you do?—On the Monday morning, the nomination day, I came to Bridgwater of my own free will.

16,506. Where did you go?—I was walking through Eastover towards the bridge and saw a lot of flags, and said, "Is there no band?" and someone said, "No, we have not engaged one." "Well," I says, "I will not allow my own master to have the flags "carried through the town without a band if I pay "for it myself." I went into Mr. Smith's,

16,507. John Smith's?—Yes; and says, "Is no band engaged?" He says, "No." I says, "Well, I will engage one." I went out and engaged one, and I met what they pointed out to me as a bandmaster. I engaged him for 42*l.* for two days; and as to payment he wanted one day's pay in advance, and I told him "No, I would pay the first day's bill as soon as they had done playing." In the evening I paid him 21*l.*

16,508. Out of your own pocket?—No.

16,509. Where from?—I had it from John Smith, and the next night I did not see the bandmaster, but the following morning as I was going to the station he met me, and he says, "How about my money?" I says, "I have made arrangements for you to go to Mr. Smith's, and there you will get your money." That made the 42*l.*

16,510. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you did not pay anything yourself?—Not out of my own pocket.

16,511. Did the bandmaster give you anything back?—No.

16,512. (Mr. Price.) What did you do on the polling day?—Well, I exerted myself as much as I could.

16,513. Did you see the men hanging about on the bridge?—I did.

16,514. What were they waiting for?—I do not know what they were waiting for; leaders I imagined.

16,515. Or to be paid; which?—I did not know there was any money out.

16,516. Did you urge them to go to the poll?—I did.

16,517. Did you see men you knew to be old voters as well as those who were new?—I knew the town pretty well, being born in it, and knew they were old electors.

16,518. Did you see any new amongst those old ones?—I could not tell who were electors that day; I saw a great many who I supposed were.

16,519. Did you know the new were kept back by the old?—I believe they were.

16,520. Did you go to the "Globe"?—I did.

16,521. Did you see anybody there?—I saw a great many there.

16,522. What did you say?—I got on the table and told them it was disgraceful to see a lot of men outside, about 300 or 400, between that and what we commonly call the jail, that is, each side of the bridge, waiting, and I thought it was merely for merchants or gentlemen of influence to take them in to the poll, and I told them so then.

16,523. What did they say?—They consulted amongst themselves quietly.

16,524. Did they say anything to you?—No.

16,525. Did they say you were not to dictate to them; that you had no right to dictate to the men of Bridgwater?—That is about it.

16,526. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean that a Bridgwater voter cannot go to the poll without being taken?—Sometimes they do not know how.

16,527. (Mr. Price.) Do they care so little about it that they wait?—Yes. I waited until half-past 1 or thereabouts, and got the captain of a vessel who was very ill in bed, by the assistance of his doctor, to the place in a carriage.

16,528. Who paid for it?—I do not know.

16,529. Where did you get the carriage from?—I really cannot say.

16,530. Did you hire the carriage?—I think Honyball was in the carriage, but where he got it from I cannot say.

16,531. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that the servant of Mr. John Browne?—It is.

16,532. Who was very active in the election?—Yes.

16,533. And was accused himself of having bribed a man named Harwood at the last election?—I cannot say that.

16,534. Did you afterwards hear that money was going?—Not till about half-past 3, or somewhere about that.

16,535. What did you do?—I went from there to the "Anchor," and while I was there with various others I met Bussell in the passage, and he says, "Call out Crocker." I held my finger up to him; he came out. I asked him who he was going to vote for, and he told me Vanderbyl and Westropp, and I says, 'You may as well vote for the two." After that Bussell called him away, and that is all I know about that, not knowing then there was any money going.

16,536. (Mr. Coleridge.) But shrewdly suspecting it?—Well, I did then, when he was called from us.

16,537. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell?—That is all.

Mr. George Wilton recalled.

Mr. G. Wilton.

16,538. (Mr. Anstey.) You are a partner, I believe, in the firm of Browne & Co.?—I am.

16,539. Were you examined as a witness before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—I was not.

16,540. A question was raised before Mr. Justice Blackburn as to that form of corrupt practices called undue influence, said to have been exercised by your firm over some voters?—I do not remember the circumstance.

16,541. At all events there was such a question raised before the committee of the House of Commons in 1866. Do you remember that?—Not as referring to my firm, as I understood it.

16,542. How many voters had you in the employment of your firm this last election?—We have 68 men in the various yards, three clerks in the office, myself, Mr. Brown, and Mr. Holland; altogether 74. I have prepared a list of them, as I thought you might like it (handing it in).

16,543. (Mr Coleridge.) I observe that, with three exceptions, they all voted for Liberals?—I do not know what the exceptions are exactly, but I think you will find more than three. It is not a great number though.

16,544. (Mr. Anstey.) I find none in the first page, two in the second, one in the third page with a cross before it, the meaning of which I do not know, and none in the fourth page?—I mean that as a man who stated to have been bribed; that is the reason I put that cross there.

16,545. Was he bribed by the Conservatives?—No, by the Liberals.

16,546. And who voted, nevertheless, for the Conservatives?—No, I think he voted Liberal.

16,547. The cross is against Dyke?—Yes, the one is Hobbs. If you will give me the paper, I think I can point it out.

16,548. The two names on the second page are J. Gratton, sawyer, and A. Cousens, ditto, with this note, "These two men are only occasionally employed," and they voted for the Conservatives; and then on the third page there is, "Charles Hobbs, old voter, still at work at Hamp," who voted for the Conservatives. There is not a single entry in the other column. Any other name?—But I think you will find on another page three names not in a column.

16,549. I see. "Alfred Yard, voted Conservative; "is still at work. Nathaniel Evans, Conservative; "left Dunwear in May. Joseph Letheby, Conser- "vative; left for insulting foreman; has asked to "come back again, and most likely will do so; is now "in our Paulet yard." All that I have read to you is true?—Yes.

16,550. Why did Evans leave Dunwear?—I suppose for the reason assigned.

16,551. In May last?—Yes.

16,552. That is since the election?—Yes.

16,553. What was the reason for his leaving; no reason assigned?—I cannot tell you.

16,554. Anything in connexion with his vote?—I should say certainly not; most decidedly not.

16,555. (Mr. Anstey.) So much for intimidation. With regard to persuasion, did you canvass the remaining voters in your employment?—No. If you will permit me to make a statement——

16,556, Will you answer the question?—Decidedly not; I never canvassed one.

16,557. Did any of your firm canvass them?—They did not.

16,558. Did anyone in your employment canvass them?—We gave instructions that the men should not be pressed to vote either one way or the other, and to my belief they were not.

16,559. I am separating you from people in your employment. You say to the best of your belief nobody in your employment canvassed. Is it not the fact that at the last election two persons in the employment of your firm, or one of the partners in the firm, were accused of bribery at the last election, one of them, Badger; was he not in your employment?—Yes.

16,560. And was he not accused of bribery before Mr. Justice Blackburn with regard to one Hayward?—I believe he was, but the circumstances did not occur to me at the moment.

16,561. You know that Mr. Justice Blackburn found that one James Hayward was found guilty of bribery for accepting the sum of 10*l.* for his vote. Is that the man whom Badger, in your employment, bribed or attempted to bribe?—I really cannot tell. I think he is not working for us.

16,562. I am asking you about one not only working for you, but a clerk in your employment?—Badger is the man referred to, beyond all question.

16,563. Is the person so described in the evidence the same person as the one with regard to whom Mr. Justice Blackburn found that he was guilty of taking 10*l.* for his vote?—I think so.

16,564. Do you remember Honeyball? Mrs. Langdon, if you recollect, was the first witness, and said that he offered to bargain for a bribe with a person unknown. Do you know who that person unknown was?—No, I do not.

16,565. Was not it that same Hayward? Do you remember Mrs. Langdon being threatened with personal violence of a very serious description if she ever gave evidence against Hayward?—I did not hear the evidence given; I believe it was given.

16,566. Did you hear also that her husband was obliged to make complaint on the subject to Mr. Justice Blackburn, which Mr. Justice Blackburn has reported?—I did not know that.

16,567. Is that Honeyball the coachman of your senior partner, Mr. John Brown?—He was our stableman.

16,568. He is now Mr. Browne's coachman?—He has gone to Mr. Brown since then.

16,569. We have it in evidence that he was Mr. Browne's coachman at the election of 1865 also?—He was not; he was in the employ of the firm as stableman, looking after two horses and carriages.

16,570. Did he drive carriages?—Beyond all question, for the firm and its partners.

16,571. You do not know that he was in the habit at the election of 1865, and also, as now appears, in the election of 1868, of driving persons about who were active on the side of the Liberals?—It was so.

16,572. Having drawn your attention particularly to those two, and not troubled you particularly with the rest, have you still reason to believe that two such persons as these, Honeyball and Badger, did obey your very proper injunctions, and did abstain from corruptly influencing persons under them in your employ to vote for the Liberals?—I cannot answer the question. I have not the slightest idea whether they did or not.

16,573. That is sufficient, because just now you had no doubt that nobody in your employ used corrupt influence. Now you properly state that you have no means of answering the question. Now, with regard to the election of 1865, I merely wish to give you an opportunity, in justice to yourself. I must not say that I have formed any opinion of it one way or the other; but do you remember a man of the name of Roberts?—I do.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. Wilton.

10 Sept. 1869.

16,574. Who was examined before a committee of the House of Commons ?—Yes.

16,575. With reference to the election of 1865?—Yes.

16,576. Is it true or not true that he had been in the employment of your firm 16 years?—Yes.

16,577. And you knew him well ?—Yes.

16,578. Did you meet him on the poll day of 1865?—I did.

16,579. In the Cornhill ?—I did.

16,580. Did you ask him whom he was going to vote for ?—I did.

16,581. Did you say to him, "Do not leave the old "party" (that is, your party), "vote for them. I "have been speaking to your brother about you. "You know I am awkwardly situated at present, but "I will look round this afternoon, and see what "arrangement I can make. In the meantime, go "home. Rest satisfied; there is work for you"?—I told him words to that effect.

16,582. He was then out of your employment ?—He was.

16,583. Did he after that vote for the old party, that is, your party ?—He did.

16,584. Are you aware that he had previously to that promised Mr. Westropp ?—I was not.

16,585. It is not very material, but I suppose you are aware of it now, because the poll book would show that ?—I was not aware of it.

16,586. You are not aware now ?—I really do not know now. I thought he had voted entirely Liberal.

16,587. He voted then for Kinglake and Shelley ?—Yes, I think so.

16,588. About six weeks or two months after that, did you telegraph with reference to your promise of work that you had no chance of giving him any work yet ?—Yes, I did.

16,589. In the following month of January did you get a note from him ?—I did.

16,590. Have you the note ?—No.

16,591. Are you aware it was proved before the committee of the House of Commons ?—I was.

16,592. What have you done with the note ?—The note I received from Roberts ?

16,593. Yes ?—I really cannot tell you ; destroyed it, most likely.

16,594. Listen to this. Is this the nature of it ?

"Dear sir, January 5th, 1866.

"I have taken the liberty of writing to you. I "beg to remind you of your promise at the last election, "when I had an interview with you on the Cornhill. "You asked how I was going to vote ; I told you I had "not made up my mind, but did not like to leave the "old party ; if I voted blue I thought I should be able "to obtain work. You said my brother had been "speaking to you about me ; that you was awkwardly "situated then, but you would look round, and make "arrangements for me. I have spoken to you twice "since then, but up to the present nothing have "offered itself. I cannot ask with boldness at the "carriage sheds or the foundry, consequently I am "done out of a job.

"Your humble servant,

"Mr. George Wilton. JAMES ROBERTS."

Is that correct ?—That is.

16,595. Why should not he ask with boldness either at the carriage sheds or the firm of the foundry ?—The only difference between Roberts's statement and mine——

16,596. No, I want you to answer the question ?—Because he had told me they had promised him a situation if he would vote for them.

16,597. For Westropp ?—Yes.

16,598. Did you write a letter to Roberts in reply:

"Dear sir,

"If you will come to the office at 3 to-day, I "will see if I can give you a job.

"Yours truly,

"G. WILTON.

"Perhaps you had better come up at half-past 5."—Yes.

16,599. Did you see him in consequence of that note ?—I did.

16,600. Did you ask him about some work you had to remove from one of the brickyards ?—Yes.

16,601. And did you thereupon give him to understand if he came to you he would receive employment?—I did.

16,602. He did come to you, I believe, and worked five days for you, but left you, because the wages you gave him were insufficient?—Yes, and because he wanted to go back to his old situation, which I had already filled with another man.

16,603. The situation being a higher one than the one to which you had thus appointed him?—Yes.

16,604. Which, of course, was of less emolument?—I think the wages were about the same, but it was better work.

16,605. I have taken you through that vote. It appears from the poll books that he voted for Kinglake and Shelley. He said on oath before the House of Commons that he had previously promised Westropp. He stated that he broke his promise and changed his vote in consequence of your promising work to him. Have you any remark to make on that?—I was desirous of getting on my legs to ask permission of the chairman to modify a statement.

16,606. Will you answer this, if you please, first? Have you any remark to make on the evidence I have shown you ?—That is the very thing I am coming to. I had a remark to make on it. I confess I offered Roberts a situation. I was not able to give him a situation until the time when he wrote, and then I wrote to him what you have already described ; that the difference between Roberts and me is this—that Roberts did tell me he would not forsake his old party, and then I did say, and I intended to ask permission to say that on this morning, "I will give you "a situation ;" there is no question about it.

16,607. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had not he told you at that time that he had not made up his mind how he should vote ?—He had ; he told me he had not made up his mind how he should vote, but he thought he would not forsake his old party.

16,608. The reason you promised him a situation was because he had not made up his mind ?—No, I did not so understand, but I am free to confess this, that if he had put the other alternative I should not have given him the situation.

16,609. (Mr. Anstey.) You had previously got rid of him out of your employment ?—That was on the score of wages.

16,610. You had anyhow ?—Yes.

16,611. It is not likely that you would take him back unless he gave you a promise of his vote, is it?—(No answer.)

16,612. Tell me another case. I believe you had a foreman at or shortly before that time named George Berry ?—Yes.

16,613. Do you remember his leaving your employment or being about to, about that time or it being contemplated that he should leave ?—Mr. Berry contemplated leaving.

16,614. Do you remember it?—I do not know whether about that time.

16,115. I will refresh your memory. It was quite an amicable arrangement by which Berry was to leave you ?—Yes.

16,116. Just about the time do you remember telling George Berry, or any of your firm telling him to go to a man named George Hooper, and speak to him about taking George Berry's place when George Berry left ?—Yes.

16,117. You are aware that George Hooper was examined before the committee of the House of Commons ?—I believe he was, but the circumstance does not strike me now.

16,118. He stated that one Berry came to him, in consequence of what you have just admitted, you told him about going to take the situation, and he said this: "I was sent to tell you if that was the case," that is to say, if the screw was put upon him, "there "was a situation waiting for you. As I am going to "leave my place, there is a situation you can have if "you like to vote for our party." That is Kinglake and Shelley. Were you the person to whom he refers, when he says, "I was sent to tell you"?—I was not.

16,619. Which of the partners did he mean?—I believe neither of them ever said any such word or intended to.

16,620. But which did he mean?—I do not know.

16,621. You mean to say that if anybody sent him it was none of you?—We might have sent him to tell Hooper possibly; I really do not know whether myself or Mr. Holland.

16,622. What was it you told him to tell Hooper?—I cannot charge my memory that either I or Mr. Holland sent him, but this I swear, that if he was sent to tell him neither of us suggested or hinted or thought, I speak for myself, of ever inducing Hooper to leave on such pretences.

16,623. At all events he voted Liberal?—I really do not know.

16,624. Do you know a man named William Onion, whose name we have had largely connected with bribery?—I do.

16,625. Did you ever authorize Onion at that election or before it to promise voters that there should be something for them if they voted for the Liberal cause?—I never did.

16,626. Do you remember his coming to you after the Speaker's warrant was served upon here?—Onion coming to me?

16,627. Yes?—I do not remember. Possibly he did, but I do not remember the circumstance just now. Did you mean the Speaker's warrant with reference to this Commission?

16,628. There has been no Speaker's warrant with reference to this Commission, but in 1866 with reference to the election of 1865, you know there was an inquiry into all these things?—Yes.

16,629. Do you remember the Speaker's warrant being served here to bring up Onion and the others as witnesses?—Yes.

16,630. Do you remember his speaking to you about that?—Possibly he might, but the circumstance does not strike me now.

16,631. Do you remember a conversation taking place in which this point was proposed to be raised by Onion, that he was able to say with truth, "I never "bribed any person, I only promised to get the "money"?—I have no recollection of such circumstances.

16,632. Do you remember his saying to you, when called upon to say anything he should say it was you who sent him, but it was a sham and not intended to be carried out?—That might have been the fact, and I believe it was so.

16,633. Did he tell you so?—I think he did.

16,634. What did you say to him when he said that?—I told him it was a vile thing that he should ever have gone there. I understood he went there and got chalking on the table.

16,635. When was it he told you that, that he was going to say that you sent him, but that it was a sham and not intended to be carried out?—I really do not know what I said to him. I could not charge my memory.

16,636. Did you ever before authorize or, which is the same thing, connive at his going to voters to tell them this by way of sham?—I never did.

16,637. You are aware, I suppose, that Sir John Shelley was stated by Mr. Lovibond to have obtained from him a declaration on honour, that there should be no practices of that kind at the election?—It was so, I believe.

16,638. And you have heard, I dare say, that notwithstanding that the principal bribe agent of the Liberal party thought it better to conceal that fact from the knowledge of the bribable voters, and tell them to wait to the day of the election, and it would be all right?—I have heard of that.

16,639. Recalling those facts, is not this a similar transaction? Onion goes and tells them that money will be going, and goes as he says himself merely to induce them to vote, and leaves to himself the right afterwards of saying "It was all a sham, it was Mr. "Wilton who sent me; I should never have done it "if it had not been for him, and it was a sham"?—I really cannot be answerable for what Onion said.

16,640. But he saw you about it and told you afterwards, and you cannot recollect his telling you a word on the subject?—I do recollect his telling me I did send him for the purpose, and I did send him there, but not with the intention, purpose, or desire of asking him to speak to Poole, who is the man you refer to.

16,641. I am speaking of voters generally?—I swear I did not.

16,642. Send him to voters?—I swear I did not, except Poole.

16,643. But Poole, unfortunately, is the only man whose name you disclosed?—That is the only man I sent him to.

16,644. Are you sure that you did not tell him to pick up any other voter?—I swear I did not.

16,645. Did he come back to you after he had seen Poole?—He did not.

16,646. Did you, when you sent him to Poole, tell him what he was to do with Poole?—I did.

16,647. What was that?—I am glad you asked me that question. I was on the bridge with three or four persons, and someone said——

16,648. Never mind that. What did you tell him to say to Poole? I must have an answer to my question; you can explain it afterwards?—That is what I am coming to.

16,649. I only want the words to be used to Poole?—"Onion, you know Poole very well, do try to get him to alter his mind and set it right with him."

16,650. What is the meaning of "altering his mind"?—Poole was vexed with the Liberal magistrates of this borough, because they would not grant him a spirit licence when he applied for it, and therefore Poole said, I understand out of pure spite, he would vote for the Conservative party.

16,651. He had promised to vote for the Conservative party?—Yes.

16,652. You knowing that, said to Onion, "For goodness sake go and get him to alter his mind"?—Exactly.

16,653. Onion was, I believe, at the time known to be on former occasions a participant in bribery, in giving bribes?—Well, I was not aware of it.

16,654. How came he, Onion, to be the person you selected out of all those present?—Because Onion did business with him; that was my sole reason.

16,655. Had Onion an influence over him?—I do not know.

16,656. You must surely have had some better reason for the selection. It could not have been accidental for a bribe agent to ask a man who had promised his vote to the other side to change his vote?—I knew nothing at all at that time about Onion being a bribe agent, and the only reason I selected him to go, was, I supposed that he was on good terms with Onion.

16,657. (Mr. Price.) What was Onion?—He travels for Mr. Knight, the brewer.

16,658. And therefore would be a person brought into contact with him?—Yes.

16,659. (Mr. Anstey.) You yourself frequently went to electors' houses canvassing during that election?—I did.

16,660. And accompanying the Liberal candidates?—I did. I accompanied them one afternoon only for, I suppose, about one hour.

16,661. Have you anything to add to what you yourself or your firm did at that election?—Yes.

16,662. What was it?—I intimidated a man early

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. Wilton.

10 Sept. 1869.

in the morning, and I confess it with a great deal of pain of mind. I went early to the poll, and when I got there I found the Conservatives were in possession of one of the polling booths, that is to say, they were taking care to get their own men polled very early, and to prevent those of the other party getting in, and there is one gentleman in particular, whose name I will not mention unless obliged, was standing pretty much in the way, and it led to a severe altercation.

16,663. I should like his name?—Mr. Lilly, the auctioneer. We had a severe altercation for a minute or two about what I considered his blocking up the way, and he thought he had a right to be there. I went away in a perfect fury and temper about this, and as I stepped down over the steps, I saw a batch of men who had been brought up from the celebrated "Golden Lion" to vote for Westropp. They looked like men who had been up all night, and one was Captain Rees. I said, which I regretted afterwards, "Well Rees, is that you;" he looked up and said, "Yes." "I suppose you will want another freight some day or other." He was a master mariner. I did it and deeply regretted it five minutes after having said it.

16,664. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he vote for you in consequence of that?—No.

16,665. Then you did not succeed in intimidating him?—I did not do it with that view.

16,666. Did you succeed in doing it?—No.

16,667. Did he vote for you?—No.

16,668. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Poole vote for you?—I cannot say; I think not. I think he voted Conservative.

16,669. (Mr. Price.) Who commands the freights here in this borough, your house and the mayors?—The mayor does not command any freights in that capacity. He is a shipbroker only.

16,670. He fixes freights?—Certainly; he is the man who fixes freights, that is to say, he engages vessels.

16,671. But he and another house have the real control. He fixes the rate of freight in this borough?—Not absolutely so, but generally so it is.

16,672. Who is the other firm, yours?—No.

16,673. Who are the other firm of shipbrokers?—Hunt and Son.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You are customers.

16,674. (Mr. Price.) You go to them to engage vessels. If you want a rate of freight you go to the shipbrokers?—Yes.

16,675. (Mr. Anstey.) You have a captain named Turner, I believe?—No, we are not shipowners at all; we are merchants.

16,676. (Mr Price.) What did you mean by this man would want a freight some day or other?—That he would require a freight, he was a man continually working for us.

16,677. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you nothing to do for ships then?—I own a quarter of a vessel called the "Onward."

16,678. Is that the entire name?—The "Onward" is the entire name.

16,679. Is that commanded by a Captain Turner?—I think not. I really could not give you the name; Chenning is the name I understand.

16,680. There was a question about a mariner on board that vessel; do you recollect anything about that being raised with regard to your firm?—Yes; not with regard to our firm, I think.

16,681. Have you anything else to tell about any of these elections?

16,682. You are speaking of 1865?—Yes.

16,683. Any of the former elections?—Yes; you read a paper one day which I signed, containing an accoun of expenses at Colonel Tynte's election of 1858 or 1859. I should say on that occasion I was asked by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond if I would audit the account for Colonel Tynte (I believe it was 1858 or 1859), and I did so. I believe the accounts, to the best of my recollection, were brought to me by Mr. Lovibond, his agent.

16,684. You were election auditor?—Yes.

16,685. You speak of it with reference to being accustomed to return certain expenses and not others?—Yes.

16,686. (Mr. Anstey.) When you signed that, were you aware there were other expenses not mentioned in that paper?—I was aware there were, acccording to best of my belief. I had no knowleege of any bribery, no guilty knowledge of any bribery; but still everybody knew that money had been spent.

16,687. Not specified in that account?—Not specified in that account, most certainly.

16,688. Now, did you read the declaration accompanying that account? I will read it to you. Was this declaration true at the time you signed it, according to the best of your conscience and belief: "I have "not knowingly made, authorized, or sanctioned, and "I will not knowingly make, authorize, or sanction, "any payment on account of this election otherwise "than through the election auditor," I see you were not the election auditor, you were the election agent; "save as excepted and allowed by the Corrupt "Practices Prevention Act, 1854." That you signed, you know, and declared before a justice of the peace, your own partner Mr. Browne, on the 3rd May 1859?—I did.

16,689. Now that your attention has been called to this declaration, and having regard to your last answers, that it did not contain certain expenses, which nevertheless were provided for, or would have to be provided for, was this stautory declaration of yours made according to what was actually the case?—I believe it contained all and every expense, so far as I know, that was incurred, excepting those expenses that were incurred for bribery, which I knew nothing at all about.

16,690. You did not mean to authorize, nor did you mean to allow——?—I do mean to say so.

16,691. Nor to "sanction," not "allow," to sanction any payment on account of them?—Yes.

16,692. But payments were made on account of them at that election?—I believe they were, but not by me.

16,693, (Mr. Price.) All that you authorized and sanctioned were those which you have stated?—They were.

16,694. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you purposely avoid knowing anything about the others?—Well, I must confess to you that I did not take the trouble to inquire.

16,695. And you took care not to inquire or know anything about it?—Well, I did not inquire. I was quite ignorant in those days of those things.

16,696. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were not so much enlightened in those days as you are now?—When I say I was ignorant of them, everybody knew that corrupt practices prevailed, but I never knew what was done.

16,697. (Mr. Anstey.) Did any attorney draw up that document for you? I suppose he did?—If you will allow to look at it for a moment, I dare say I shall be able to tell you. It is a great many years ago; the thing has almost gone from my mind now. (The declaration was handed to the witness.) No. I think that is in Mr. Foster's handwriting.

16,698. Mr. Lovibond's clerk?—Yes.

16,699. Is there anything which you recollect about any election prior to the last election?—No.

16,700. I will ask you generally; at any of those elections has your firm, besides the cases which I have specified already to you, been accused either of promising employment as an inducement to vote, or, which is the same thing, using threats or undue influence to deter from voting?—We have often been accused of undue influence.

16,701. At all the elections?—Yes. Well, the thing has been spoken of at public meetings, as though the men themselves had not the right, and——

16,702. I will ask you this next question. Have you as a matter of fact ever used either influence to persuade people to vote by promises, or to induce people not to vote against you by threats?—Most certainly not. You will have an opportunity of bringing our men before you, I dare say.

16,703. At any election ?—At any election. I defy any living man to say I did.

16,704. (Mr. Coleridge.) There is an extraordinary unanimity in the way in which 68 out of 71 all vote for the Liberals ?—Yes. I handed in this paper this morning on purpose that you might have an opportunity of testing this.

16,705. (Mr. Price.) Before you engage men, do you inquire of them which way they have voted or are going to vote ?—No.

16,706. How do you account for the feeling so strongly influencing your men ?—Well, I suppose it is from the fact that they vote our way so many of them. I must tell you first of all that we do not engage the men ourselves. The engagement of the men in the brickyards is left to the foreman of the yards.

16,707. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who is the Bussell of your establishment ?—I do not understand you.

16,708. Who is the man who does the paying of the money to the men for their votes ?—Nobody. I do not believe there has ever been anything of the kind.

16,709. I suppose you do not mean to say that your men do not get paid for your votes ?—Well, I did not know it before I heard it here, and I was very much astonished at it.

16,710. Who is the man in your establishment who pays ?—I do not know. I do not know whether he is in my employ.

16,711. I do not ask you whether he is in your employ. I ask you who is the man who principally acts in your establishment ?—I really cannot tell you.

16,712. (Mr. Anstey.). You told us of one, at least I told you one, and you admitted it, the man Badger, who bribed at the last election ?—This man, Hayward, that he bribed is a master mariner.

16,713. Listen to this. It is a remarkable thing that when you first appeared this morning, and were asked the question whether you have ever influenced the men in your employ, you answered generally, as you do now, "Most certainly not ; we never influenced anybody ;" and when I drew your attention to the few particulars which my humble industry has enabled me to collect, of the names, dates, and places, and so on, you did remember every one of them ; and then you are asked again by my learned colleague, Mr. Coleridge, following a question of mine much to the same effect, as to what your general practice is, and how it is all your men go with you, you again say, "Most certainly not ; none of us ever did anything of the sort." Why, you admit the case of Poole, and the man who had been in your employment, I forget the name ?—I admit that case.

16,714. That was the only name I could give you in detail. There were letters to prove it ?—I wanted to get on my legs this morning to tell you that fact.

16,715. I do not require to be told that, because it is all in print. It has been printed by order of the House of Commons, and I daresay you went over it at night or had seen that document ?—I had not, I confess to you.

16,716. You have given a universal denial, which is shown to be untrue, at least in that one particular. Is there any other instance in which you have not acted upon that rule of yours not to interfere ?—I think not.

16,717. Do you mean to say that is the only one ?—It is.

16,718. You did not tell me even of that one when you were first asked the general question. You handed in that list, on the contrary, to show that the Conservatives were free to vote ?—I thought you would have allowed me to make the admission fully and perfectly, and of that fact you have asked me about, this morning.

16,719. You were asked the question, and when you were asked the question you denied it ?—I am sorry ; I did not understand you.

16,720. You are aware that Messrs. Reed and Cook took an active part with you in the different meetings and so forth on behalf of your and their candidates, Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, at the last election ?—Yes.

16,721. Now, I am reading from a paper which they prepared themselves and adopted. I want to ask you if you can say that it contains anything other than the truth. It is the brief of their counsel at the last election. "The extension of the franchise added "something like 1,000 new voters to the previous "list of about 600. Out of this number nearly 200 "were struck out by reason of nonpayment of poor "rates, for which they had been summoned and re-"lieved on the ground of poverty, so that the total "polling strength of the town was about 1,400 to "1,500. There can be no doubt whatever that "Bridgwater is essentially a Liberal place, as the "following observations will conclusively prove : "The staple trades of the town are brick and tile "manufactories. The manufacturers are Messrs. "Browne and Company (the firm consisting "of Mr. John Browne, an old gentleman who is "an alderman of the borough, and has been mayor "on several occasions), Mr. William Thomas Holland, "Mr. George Wilton, the latter being a member of "the town council." Then follow similar observations with regard to the firm of Colthurst, Symmons, and Co., Mr. John Baptiste Hammill, and Messrs. J. and H. Major, and so on. "The whole of the manufac-"turers are Liberal, with the exception of Mr. "Charles Major, who does not influence a single voter "in the employ of the firm, but on the contrary the "employés usually vote Liberal. Those employers "employ a large number of voters, whose politics "are Liberal, and invariably vote for the Liberal "candidates." Do you agree in that statement ?—I do.

16,722. Now you will perhaps tell me if you see any reason to alter your answer to the Chief Commissioner's question, which was, "Are your men selected with reference to their politics ?"—They are not.

16,723. Then how is it they invariably vote for the Liberal candidates, not at one election, but at all elections ?—Well, I suppose that they preferred them.

16,724. At all events you agree that this is a true statement ?—I do.

16,725. (Mr. Price.) There are Conservative brickmakers in Bridgwater, I presume ?—I think not.

16,726. Not any ?—No.

16,727. You cannot get any such thing as a Conservative brickmaker in Bridgewater ?—Only with the exception of Mr. Major.

16,728. I mean a brickworker, a man who works at making bricks ?—No.

16,729. That is what I want to know. Is there such a thing in Bridgwater as a man who make bricks and who also is a Conservative ?—There just happened to be two or three mentioned in this paper. I do not know what Messrs. Major and Messrs. Colthurst have got.

16,730. Is there anything in the labour of a brickmaker which tends to make a man Liberal in politics ?—I do not know.

16,731. Mr. Coleridge.) Can you account at all for these two or three men voting Conservative ? For instance, how did Mr. Gratton, a sawyer, come to vote Conservative ?—I do not know.

16,732. Do you know of any influence brought to bear upon him by the Conservatives ?—It is supposed that they had promised, but I cannot tell.

16,733. There is a report to that effect ?—Yes.

16,734. And then A. Cousens, also a sawyer ?—The same thing was said about him.

16,735. Then there is Charles Hobbs ?—I believe that man is a consistent Conservative, and has been for a number of years.

16,736. He is an old voter ?—Yes.

16,737. And he has always voted Conservative ?—Yes.

16,738. At every election ?—Yes.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. G. Wilton.

10 Sept. 1869.

16,739. (Mr. Price.) Would not any person reading that statement in that brief conclude that because the great employers of labour were Liberals, therefore the men whom they employed were Liberals?—Well, I daresay it would be.

16,740. Is not that the construction that any person on reading that, and being at all acquainted with the English language, would put upon it?—I think they would.

16,741. (Mr. Anstey.) And that is a statement in which you concur?—That is the statement, that they are Liberals, and they have voted.

16,742. (Mr. Price.) That is the conclusion which is arrived at by the lawyers who drew that brief, instructing counsel, that the employers of labour are Liberal, therefore all the workmen are Liberals, and consequently that makes it a Liberal borough?—I should like to ask the Chief Commissioner to permit me to say what we did at the last election in that respect.

16,743. (Mr. Price.) I have not the least objection. —About a fortnight before the election Mr. Holland and I made a point of getting the respective foremen of the yards to our office, and we solemnly pledged them that they should not use their influence with the men, directly or indirectly, to dissuade them from exercising their franchise contrary to their wishes and desires. I say that on my oath, and I meant it when I said it.

16,744. (Mr. Anstey.) Yes, but Mr. Wilton, you have also admitted that a clerk having influence in your firm then, and now in your employment, was accused, and according to your statement was found by Mr. Justice Blackburn not only to have influenced a vote, but to have done so in the corruptest form, the vulgar form of giving a bribe?—I was not aware of Badger's having done so until the sitting of the petition here.

16,745. But you did not immediately remove him from your employment, where he has so much influence over your men?—No, he is the son of a very old and faithful foreman of ours.

16,746. (Mr. Coleridge.) And you have not thought any of the worse of him?—No, I do not think we have.

16,747. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, supposing an election took place (a great supposition) for this borough again, what earthly confidence would your unfortunate men have in any notification of that kind addressed to them with the knowledge that the text of it was to be interpreted to them with the gloss and comment of a man like Mr. Badger, to whom they looked and not to you?—Mr. Badger has no control over the men. I give you my word he has no control over the men in the world; he is a young man in the office.

16,748. (Mr. Price.) And coupled with the fact that you influenced a man of the name of Poole at the last election, and you also admit that you threatened and intimidated a voter if he used his vote against you, do you not think that in commenting on the text preached by you, they would say what is often said of preachers, "They do not practise what they preach." Is not that the inference to be drawn, and would be drawn?—I am sorry you think that is the inference to be drawn.

(Mr. Anstey.) There is a very old story which is probably well known to you, it is a matter of history; I dare say you have heard of the mob orator who, wishing Lord Castlereagh's windows to be broken, therefore asked the mob not to do it.

Mr. J. Cook.

Mr. James Cook recalled.

16,749. (Mr. Anstey.) There is a question which I may as well put to you now, as I did not interrupt you at the time when you were making your statement. You said that Mr. Kinglake, in a conversation which you had with him in London, gave you to understand that he did not hold himself responsible for your acts, Mr. Lovibond's acts, and the other corrupt acts done in the borough at any time after the minute at which he quitted the town by train that day for London?—I do not remember having said so to you, as having been stated by Mr. Kinglake upon that occasion. I do not remember that I did.

16,750. You said something about it?—What I said about it was this, that Mr. Kinglake was present on the 4th December in London, when Mr. Westropp was present, and on which occasion one seat was offered, and then it was that Mr. Westropp said he would have it communicated to the association, and he raised a question as to whether, if it fell to Mr. Vanderbyl's lot to retire, it would be kept, upon which Mr. Kinglake expressed his willingness to place a letter undertaking that it should be carried out in the hands of Mr. Gore Langton or any other person that should be selected; but I have no recollection that Mr. Kinglake did state that; I have no recollection of it at all.

16,751. The point is this: Do you remember anything being said by anybody about Mr. Kinglake's not considering himself as being responsible for corrupt acts done after he left Bridgewater?—I do not remember it; but I have heard it over and over again that Mr. Kinglake did so consider.

16,752. At what period did you first hear it?—I cannot fix the first date. I did hear it but very shortly after the intention to petition. Oh yes, very shortly afterwards.

16,753. Before the petition was presented?—I would not be positive of it.

16,754. Before you went to London?—On the very eve of it.

16,755. Before you went to London?—Oh, yes.

16,756. And you know that must have been bruited about in Bridgwater?—Oh, certainly, and some comments are made by me in the brief about it.

16,757. Do you remember whether they are at the end of the brief or the beginning?—I cannot remember, but if you will kindly allow me I can put my hand upon them.

16,758. Now, did you have any conversation at any time with Mr. Kinglake about that?—That was the only conversation which I remember having with Mr. Kinglake in reference to the last election since the election, except that on one occasion I remember meeting him in Parliament Street, and shaking hands, and saying just a word or two, "Good morning," or something of that sort; but with those two exceptions, I have no recollection of having any conversation with Mr. Kinglake.

16,759. Do you remember his saying anything to that effect?—Not to me.

16,760. Certainly another witness, a witness who followed Mr. Barham, said something about that. I understood him to say it was said to you?—I do not think it was said to me. As I said before, there are remarks in the brief about it. It was bruited about that Mr. Kinglake took up that position, and there were some comments made about it in the brief. If you will permit me, I dare say I shall be able to find it in a short time.

16,761. Very well. (The brief was handed to the witness.) Had you any conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl about it?—I have no doubt that in one of my interviews I mentioned it.

16,762. Not he to you, but you to him?—I have no doubt that I mentioned it to him.

16,763. Have you any reason to believe that Mr. Kinglake left the borough with that thought in his mind, that "if anything is going to happen now, I shall not be responsible for it"?—Well, I confess to you, sir, that when I heard Mr. Kinglake had gone, and knowing the preliminary arrangements made with regard to it, I had the suspicion in my mind; I am bound to confess it.

16,764. On what was that founded?—It was founded upon the knowledge which I then had that there had been a proposition made that the sum of 1,500*l.* should be provided by Mr. Vanderbyl, as there would be 1,500*l.* provided by Mr. Kinglake's friends.

16,765. Knowing that Mr. Kinglake was prepared to bribe, you thought his going out of town at that critical moment was done for the purpose of avoiding responsibility?—Whether rightly or wrongly, I confess I had the suspicion.

16,766. Did you communicate that suspicion to Mr. Lovibond at any time?—I do not know that I did. I know that I have spoken to my partner about it.

16,767. I will put the converse case to you, not as to what Mr. Kinglake's intention was, but have you any reason to believe that Mr. Lovibond, at all events, delayed bribing until Mr. Kinglake should be out of the town?—Well, I never viewed it in that light at all.

16,768. (Mr. Price.) Taking the other alternative, what led you to suppose that he possibly had gone away intending to get away in case corrupt practices should be had recourse to?—Well, as I say, whether rightly or wrongly, I founded the notion upon the knowledge I had of the proposal which had been made.

16,769. Was it this, that you could not otherwise account for his running away?—Yes. I thought, as he was a man who had been connected with the borough for so many years, that it was strange he should have run away, and I could not account for it except in that way

16,770. It does seem strange that he should turn round and run away?—Yes.

16,771. Do you know of any reason why Mr. Kinglake should depart North, while his brother Dr. Kinglake went South?—I do not know. I have no notion.

16,772. But as a fact they did depart within five minutes of each other?—Oh certainly, I heard so. I find these are the words in which it appears to be treated: "It now becomes necessary to call counsel's "attention to some facts as respects Mr. Kinglake's "movements on the day of election. The brother of "Mr. Kinglake, who is a doctor residing at Taunton, "was at Bridgwater on the morning of the poll, and "stayed with Mr. A. W. Kinglake the member, at "Allan's, during a part of the morning. Both Kinglakes had interviews no doubt from time to time "with Mr. Henry Lovibond, but they had none with "Messrs. Reed and Cook. It is reported that about "1 o'clock. in the day that Mr. Kinglake was advised "by his friends that his election was lost, and that "in consequence, Mr. Kinglake, the member, made "up his mind to return to London by the express "which left Bridgwater at half-past 1, and which he "did, and Dr. Kinglake returned to Taunton by the "down express, which leaves Bridgwater a few "minutes after the up express; in fact, both Mr. "Kinglake and Dr. Kinglake were upon the platform "together, waiting for their respective trains. No "previous intimation had been given by Mr. Kinglake to Mr. Vanderbyl of his intention to leave, "nor to anyone else who had been acting for Mr. "Kinglake, except no doubt that Mr. Henry Lovi-"bond and Mr. J. L. Sealy knew it." That was a surmise of our own. We had no positive instructions on which to state that. "It is understood that "Mr. Kinglake will take up a position that having "regarded his election as lost and left the town, "he cannot be responsible for what afterwards occurred, if there was anything wrong. It is submitted that this proposition cannot hold water "(assuming there was anything wrong), as he gave no "previous notice, except as before-mentioned, and "the very next day, the 18th, he returned to Bridgwater from London by mid-day express, and was "received in a triumphant manner by the Liberal "party. There is no necessity here to enter into "the question as to whether Mr. Kinglake's going "away was bonâ fide or not, as it must be contended, "if really necessary, so as to place Mr. Vanderbyl in "his proper position, that the law knows no part of "a day for agency, that the agency, if any, had not "been determined, and that therefore Mr. Kinglake "was responsible for the acts of those who were really "his agents. No imputation is intended by these "remarks to be made on Mr. Kinglake personally; "but there are reasons, and special ones too, why "this distinction should not be drawn."

16,773. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that passage prepared under your direction at the time you were drawing the brief?—It was.

16,774. And of course you read the draft before it was copied?—The draft of this was in my own handwriting.

16,775. And then it was copied and delivered to counsel?—And then it was copied and delivered to counsel.

16,776. And you adhere to that statement?—Certainly.

16,777. How long before the trial was that brief delivered, do you suppose?—This is Mr. Serjeant Sargood's brief. This is a copy. I should think within a week before.

16,778. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Edlin would have one?—Mr. Edlin had one.

16,779. I believe you have told us, or somebody has told us, that Mr. Edlin was thoroughly aware of everything that had taken place?—I was told this on the day on which Mr. Edlin arrived in Bridgwater. We said to him, "This is an exceedingly unpleasant "matter for us; we have used every possible effort "in our power to avoid this inquiry, and were "anxious to make any terms we could, as we are "placed personally in a very awkward position;" and other things were then mentioned, and I then remember——

16,780. I really do not care about these details with respect to what passed between you and Mr. Edlin. It is so, is it not, that Mr. Edlin was thoroughly informed; you gave him the fullest information?—We gave him certainly the information. Will you allow me to say this, that on the Monday, at all events, in the evening, when Mr. James arrived, I remember his coming to the house where Mr. Edlin and Mr. Serjeant Sargood had got their lodgings, and in consequence of something which Mr. James said to Mr. Serjeant Sargood he asked, in fact, if we had made a full disclosure, and if not he advised the serjeant to ask us what we knew; and after that there was a consultation as between ourselves and the counsel, in which we did state our knowledge that money had been spent upon that occasion. I do not know that it was gone into, not into detail, but at all events we said sufficient——

16,781. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that the occasion on which Mr. James said he thought he was brought down to fight a good case, but found he had been deceived?—No. He did not say so in my hearing.

16,782. (Mr. Price.) That was not a joint consultation?—No.

16,783. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you state in Mr. James's hearing that Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly had, between the Sunday night and the Monday morning, or at all events before the election, themselves procured the money with which to bribe?—I forget the exact words in which I stated it, but at all events I did state on that occasion that money had been procured by Mr. Vanderbyl's partner, Mr. Fennelly and that I knew it, and in fact was a party to it. That is the substance of it.

16,784. And no doubt Mr. Vanderbyl's name was mentioned?—I could not say now. It was mentioned in this way, "Mr. Vanderbyl's partner, Mr. Fennelly."

16,785. You have no doubt that either Mr. Vanderbyl or his partner Mr. Fennelly was named by you to counsel?—Yes, in that way, his partner.

16,786. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Vanderbyl know that Mr. Fennelly was going to town that day?—That is what I was going to state.

16,787. (Mr. Price.) I do not know whether you have seen the proceedings which have taken place here. I understood you to say the other day, it is on our shorthand writer's notes, that you gathered from what Mr. Fennelly said to you, that he said to the deputation, I do not give you the exact words, "It is "all humbug; it is money you want." Did you understand Mr. Fennelly to say that?—Mr. Fennelly did say to me, when he saw me that Sunday evening and asked me if I knew that the deputation had been down to the "Globe" and had talked about the Lundy Island Granite Company, that he had said in reply to them, "It is all humbug about the Lundy "Granite Company; be honest, gentlemen, you mean "money."

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

10 Sept. 1869.

16,788. That is the fact. Not that the lawyers meant money, but "you mean money"?—Yes.

16,789. (Mr. Anstey.) If he said "you," he could not have meant the lawyers, because no lawyers were then present?—No; no lawyers.

16,790. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Vanderbyl know that Mr. Fennelly went to town on the Monday?—I was coming to that. That Sunday evening or night it was arranged that I should go and have breakfast with Mr. Fennelly the next morning at the "Globe Hotel," where he was then staying, at half-past seven, and I went at half-past seven, and I said, before going to Mr. Fennelly, "What excuse are you going to make about being absent," and he said, "We do business in Bristol," and I believe he mentioned some other place; and he said arrangements should be made to send to the post office to know if there was any letter to prevent the necessity of his journey, knowing, in fact, that there would be no letter. That was to be the excuse for his journey. I went to Mr. Vanderbyl's bed-room) he had been in a weak state), and we had breakfast together; and Mr. Fennelly left Bridgwater by the train about eight or a quarter past.

16,791. In the morning?—Yes.

16,792. Which would get to town at two?—Yes.

16,793. (Mr. Anstey.) Was anything said about money matters?—No.

16,794. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know that Mr. Fennelly had written the letter to Mr. Redfern, which has been spoken of?—I had no knowledge whatever that Mr. Fennelly had written Mr. Redfern the letter which Mr. Redfern spoke of in this box as having been written to him; and I should think that that letter in order to reach London by Monday morning, it must have been posted in Bridgwater at the latest at 10 o'clock.

16,795. Then Mr. Fennelly must have made up his mind to spend money before the deputation came to him?—Well, I have no knowledge of that letter having been sent, as I have said.

16,796. Is that the latest time you can post a letter with two stamps?—Yes, 10 o'clock.

16,797. Then it is quite clear that Mr. Fennelly must have written that letter before 10?—Yes.

16,798. So that at the time that Mr. Fennelly threw it in the teeth of the deputation that all they wanted was money he had already prepared to get the money?—That was the inference.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Undoubtedly it was.

16,799. (Mr. Price.) If it went as a parcel by the mail train, could it have gone so as to have been delivered the next morning?—Yes.

16,800. How could it go by parcel, by what train?—A quarter after 11. The mail train is due at a quarter after 11.

16,801. What time do you believe the deputation left him?—The deputation must have been nearly 12.

16,802. Before they left him?—I think so.

16,803. Then it might have gone by the early post the next morning?—There is no post from here early in the morning. There would be a mail up by the same train by which Mr. Fennelly left. There is no train till quarter after 11.

16,804. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Redfern's statement is that he received that letter on Monday morning, the nomination day, and also a telegram. The letter he believes came first, and that it was in that letter that he was told to keep the secret of the word "bales," that was to be used in future communications?—Yes; I remember his evidence.

16,805. The writer therefore of that letter must not only have made up his mind to obtain money, but must have made up his mind how to spend it, having used the word "bales," and told his correspondent in London to use it too; and this must have been posted by 10 o'clock if received on the Monday morning?—If posted.

16,806. Not if posted. If received in London on Monday morning it must have been posted either on Saturday or Sunday?—Yes.

16,807. (Mr. Price.) Or sent by parcel?—Yes.

16,808. There was no other way of its getting up to London except by post or as a parcel?—Certainly not.

16,809. (Mr. Anstey.) I think it right to tell you that I have received a suggestion, which I will state to you for what it is worth. I must not, of course, say from whom it comes. The suggesion is this, that Mr. Vanderbyl means to say, or it is said for him, that all that he meant to do with that 1,500*l.* was to raise that money under your pressure and that of the other lawyers, and then to hand it over to you, not knowing what you were going to do with it, leaving it to you to spend it for legal and for proper purposes; but if you chose on your own responsibility, and at your own peril, to do otherwise, he had left it to you to do so, and leaving him entirely ignorant from first to last of what was to become of that money, and that you and your firm and the other lawyers accepted that arrangement. Is that suggestion according to the facts or contrary to the facts?—I would certainly say that from that moment——

16,810. Is it contrary to the facts?—We never had any idea——

16,811. Will you answer the question? Is it according to the facts or contrary to the facts?—Contrary.

16,812. Then why not say so at once, and add your explanation afterwards?—It is contrary to the facts for this reason, that on the Sunday evening it was spoken, and it occurs to me to remind you what Mr. Lomas himself said, that prior to Mr. Fennelly's leaving town he said there was a possibility of his requiring him down here, and on the Sunday night he said he had got a very shrewd man in his office, who would do what was necessary, and act under his instructions. That was on the Sunday night.

16,813. (Mr. Price.) Who said that?—Mr. Fennelly.

16,814. You say it is contrary to the facts, that is to say, it is contrary to what you understood the arrangement to be?—Certainly.

16,815. But whether Mr. Vanderbyl meant that of course you cannot say?—No, I cannot say.

16,816. You did not gather from him anything of the kind?—No.

16,817. Nor from Mr. Fennelly, nor from anybody?—I had no idea that the letter was sent.

(Mr. Anstey.) You understand what the Chief Comissioner is asking you. You say "No" before you hear the question. The Chief Commissioner asks you whether from Mr. Fennelly or anybody else you gathered anything of the kind.

16,818. (Mr. Price.) Resembling the statement made?—No.

16,819. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you had told us the other day that Lomas was present when the conversation passed about tying up the money into 10*l.* packages for the purpose of distribution among the voters?—He was present.

16,820. Then how can you say you did not learn from Lomas or Mr. Fennelly, or anybody, that they were perfectly aware of the distribution of the money, and that they did not mean to shirk their share in the bribery, in what was going on but on the contrary, were willing to assist you in tying it up in 10*l.* packages?—I understood the Chief Commissioner to say whether I had not heard.

16,821. You do not listen to the questions?—I am sorry if I have misunderstood the question.

16,822. (Mr. Price.) When you said it was contrary to the facts, I wanted to know if you knew of any fact which you relied upon as contrary to it, or whether you relied upon anything that fell from Mr. Fennelly or Mr. Vanderbyl which conveyed the impression to your own mind that it was contrary to the facts?—Exactly. What I heard from Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl on that Sunday night gave me the impression.

16,823. There was nothing thrown out which would give you the idea that Mr. Vanderbyl never meant to spend this money, or meant to have the responsibility?—No.

16,824. (Mr. Anstey.) Would you have done it on those terms?—No: I do not believe I should.

16,825. (Mr. Price.) There is one link wanting; that is always assuming that Mr. Vanderbyl really did know that Mr. Fennelly had gone. That Mr. Fennelly went nobody doubts?—Yes.

16,826. Then the only question would be whether Mr. Fennelly did it on his own hook, or whether he did it after consultation with Mr. Vanderbyl. If he did the latter, then it would be absurd to say anything about Mr. Vanderbyl's ignorance. If Mr. Fennelly did it without anything being said to Mr. Vanderbyl, or any hint being given to him, or any consultation with him, then it is a different matter.

16,827. (Mr. Anstey.) You say you saw Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl after Mr. Fennelly's return here?—On the night of the Monday here.

16,828. No matter when it was?—No; it was Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Lomas.

16,829. Did you ever hear that Mr. Vanderbyl expressed the slightest disapprobation of Mr. Fennelly's going to town, or his return?—Never.

16,830. Did you hear it at all referred to with approbation?—No.

16,831. Neither with approbation or disapprobation?—No.

16,832. Was there anything in Mr. Vanderbyl's conduct after Mr. Fennelly's return at all inconsistent with the theory that he went up to town in concert and with the knowledge of Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

16,833. Then have you the slightest doubt about it, that it was with Mr. Vanderbyl's knowledge and to promote Mr. Vanderbyl's interest, and not his own, that he went up to London that morning?—Well, I cannot say what communication he made. He was at the breakfast there, and no doubt the circumstances were very suspicious.

16,834. You cannot say you did not form any belief then?—I say it was suspicious.

16,835. Do you mean you were going to act upon this as being Mr. Fennelly's authority, and not Mr. Vanderbyl's authority?—I cannot say that he knew it, but at the same time the circumstances were suspicious.

16,836. You were going to incur all these penalties, without, after all, having Mr. Vanderbyl's authority to rely upon?—No doubt at the moment we were placing reliance on Mr. Vanderbyl. Undoubtedly that is so.

16,837. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever hear Mr. Vanderbyl refer to this visit of Mr. Fennelly's to town on any occasion?—Never.

16,838. (Mr. Price.) Judging in some degree by Mr. Vanderbyl's shutting himself up in that extraordinary manner the whole day, did you not come to the conclusion from that that it was a wilful blindness, that he would not appear to be knowing anything of the thing?—There is one thing I should state. One, two, or three occasions on that day, I think I stated when I was here last, that I communicated with Mr. Fennelly from time to time, and I remember now I went and knocked at the door where Mr. Vanderbyl was staying, and on two or three occasions Mr. Fennelly answered me, in the same room where Mr. Vanderbyl was.

16,839. (Mr. Coleridge.) They were occupying a joint room?—Yes; this room at the "Globe," I may state, is a very large one, immediately over the porch, the main entrance to the "Globe," and in that room is a very large window, which gives you a view of everything which goes on in the street below.

16,840. (Mr. Price.) You can see away over the bridge?—Yes.

16,841. Into the street as well?—Yes; you can see everything that is going on. There are two other things I forgot to mention, and that is that I called on that day upon Mr. Nicholls, and asked him to nominate Mr. Vanderbyl, and I also remember calling upon Mr. Nicholls, Mr. Wilton, and Mr. Collins, being three members of the deputation which had gone down the night before, and stated it was all right. I remember very well that I did that on the morning. I had entirely forgotten that when I was here on the Monday; I see on looking at the report of the evidence—so anxious am I to give everything I know on this matter—on looking at the evidence which was given before Mr. Justice Blackburn on the election inquiry, I find Mr. Halliday stated that as he was coming up the stairs he saw me in company with Dr. Kinglake. Now, I cannot undertake to deny that. I have no recollection of being in company with Dr. Kinglake in the way he describes. Then, sir, I find that we made a payment of 3*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.* to Mr. Hodge, at the "Railway Hotel," for carriage hire upon that occasion, and the payment was made on the 17th March last, through a Mr. George Dyment, who was requested to hire them.

16,842. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that for taking voters to the poll?—Yes.

16,843. Then you did not care about the law as to not providing carriages?—No; I am afraid it has been broken in many respects, no doubt about it. That is not the only one.

16,844. The system was to borrow carriages from friends, and not to hire them, thinking in that way to evade the Act of Parliament?—Well, it was done more boldly than that, I am afraid. That was not thought much of. There is another thing which Mr. Halliday spoke of, and that is, his having seen me in the stable of the "Globe Hotel" that day with Mr. Nicholls and Mr. Mogg. I certainly remember seeing those two gentlemen there, but I cannot fix the hour; it might have been between 11 and 12 that day. A discussion took place as to what the meaning was of the Conservatives being in the state in which they then were, and asking me to express my opinion as to how it could have been done, and I said, "I have no doubt it must be by money," and I also said, "I have no doubt the election is gone." That was the conversation with them on that occasion.

16,845. Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl appeared separately on that petition?—Yes.

16,846. Who appeared for Mr. Kinglake?—Mr. James.

16,847. And for whom did Mr. Edlin and Mr. Serjeant Sargood appear?—For Mr. Vanderbyl.

16,848. Have the costs of the last petition been paid yet?—No; they have been taxed only three weeks, and there was a letter from Messrs. Travers with reference to it; and we find that Mr. Kinglake has paid his moiety within the last three days, and the other moiety is not yet paid.

16,849. And the other moiety is to come from Mr. Vanderbyl?—Clearly.

16,850. (Mr. Price.) I want to ask you this: We had a bill before us of Mr. Nicholls', which we had some discussion about, which was paid in 1866, of Sir John Shelley's. Now, amongst other papers which you have given in to our secretary is a bill of 27*l.* 8*s.* 3*d.*, which appears to be an account which originally stood to the debit of Messrs. Kinglake and Shelley. It is headed "Payments made by Messrs. "Reed and Cook in reference to Messrs. Kinglake "and Shelley's election." Now, the first item is, "June 26th, 1865. Paid for telegrams to London, "3*s.* 6*d.* Expenses to Dunwear, 5*s.* 6*d.*" Then, "June "30th. Paid for telegrams 3*s.* 6*d.*" Then, "Paid Mr. "Thomas Searle amount of his account for 1857 and "1859, arranged to be paid on canvass, 11*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.*"?—Yes.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

10 Sept. 1869.

16,851. Does that mean you arranged to pay that on the canvass for Sir John Shelley?—Well, sir, I do not know. I remember this, that Mr. Searle——

16,852. "Amount of his account for 1857 and 1859"?—Yes, I was going to explain that. To the best of my recollection, it was in 1865 that Mr. Searle said there was an outstanding account of his, amounting to between 11*l.* and 12*l.*, with respect to previous elections which had not been paid. As I understood, it was for payments which had been made up in different ways. I think the amount is 11*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* My attention has been recently called to it, and I intended to mention it to you. It was made up in different ways, and, as far as I remember, it was mentioned to the solicitors, and it was paid by us, I believe, by a cheque to Searle.

16,853. Who would that be debited to?—I think at the time it was debited to Mr. Kinglake and Sir John Shelley. I cannot tell at the moment.

16,854. Can you tell us whether it was paid out of money of Mr. Kinglake's and Sir John Shelley's?—No, it was not. That account was sent once or twice to Mr. Bate as representing Mr. Kinglake in the year 1868 I think, and was paid, so far as that portion of the account is concerned, I think, in the month of October last year. I think so.

16,855. By Mr. Kinglake?—By Mr. Kinglake.

16,856. The whole lot?—Yes. There are several items there.

16,857. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Vanderbyl pay any portion of it?—No.

16,858. Or you on his behalf?—No.

16,859. Have you been asked to pay it?—No.

16,860. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Kinglake had been the member both in 1857 and 1859?—Yes.

16,861. And so part of it might have been incurred by him?

16,862. (Mr. Price.) "Paid amount of Lott's account "for 1859, and arranged to be paid by Mr. Henry "Lovibond, through Messrs. Symmons, 7*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.*"?—That occurs to me in this way, that there was an account outstanding for ribbons and things of that sort, due by Mr. Symmons and some of his men in the 1859 election which had been unpaid, and there had been some other payments——

16,863. (Mr. Anstey.) What is this Mr. Searle?—He is a builder in the town.

16,864. Thomas Searle?—Yes.

16,865. He is one of the 80 petitioners for purity?—He is.

16,866. (Mr. Price.) Then I see, "Paid fees, &c. on "initiation as a forester at the 'Lamb,' 2*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*"?—Yes.

16,867. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was it that was initiated?—I do not know. It is the general thing.

16,868. Is it the general thing for members to pay for the initiation fees of these masonic bodies?—Not the masonic bodies, the forester bodies.

16,869. Then I find this curious item, "Paid for "use of Mrs. Cooze in accordance with arrangement "on her giving up 10*l.* received from the Conservatives, 3*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.*"?—Yes, I remember that very well. She was seen on several occasions with regard to the evidence which was given. She was a very blunt sort of person, and this was after the election, and she asked for a hogshead of beer as she considered she was entitled to it for what she had done, and she received that amount, 3*l.* 6*s.* 6*d.* That was after the election.

16,870. "To sundry accounts for drink, ribbons, "and cash paid to men at 1857, as per accounts "rendered at the time, 5*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*"?—What is that?

16,871. This is "Received by cash," but there is no person's name to it to show by whom it was received.—I do not know anything of the last item you have mentioned.

16,872. It comes amongst your papers?—I do not know anything of that. Perhaps you will allow me to see it?

(Mr. Price.) I am told it is not one of your papers.

16,873. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that Mrs. Cooze the same lady who, in 1865, sold 10 sovereigns for that sum, or a larger amount, to Mr. Kinglake, or rather to Mr. Kinglake's committee, she having received the money which she sold from her husband, upon a statement of his own, made to her, that he had received the 10 sovereigns from Mr. Westropp?—It is the same person.

16,874. And there was a good deal of discussion, was not there; a good deal of difficulty on the question of whether or not Mrs. Cooze, or those who contradicted Mrs. Cooze on that occasion, told the truth?—Yes, I think so.

16,875. And do you remember what the finding of the committee was on that subject? Do you know with regard to Mr. Cooze whether he was found to have had the offer of a bribe, or not?—He was found as having had money.

16,876. Yes. I see it was proved to the committee that he was bribed.—Yes.

16,877. (Mr. Price.) Will you go on with your statement?—At this moment, I do not know that there is anything more particularly, with reference to the election of 1868, that I want to draw your attention to, except that I will state that the letter books and what correspondence we have we shall be very happy to place before the Commissioners.

16,878. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now, Vanderbyl's election we come to?—Yes, sir, if you please. Then with regard to Mr. Vanderbyl's election, which was in the month of July 1866, I cannot at this moment charge my memory as to whether, prior to Mr. Lovibond's going to London and asking Mr. Barham to meet him there, as Mr. Barham has related, there was any communication made to me, but I think there was not. At all events, on the Saturday prior to Mr. Barham's reaching Bridgwater there was a report that Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham had gone in search of a candidate, and on the Monday morning my partner saw Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham, or one of them, and I remember he made a report to me that Mr. Vanderbyl had been selected, and he had been informed by Mr. Lovibond that Mr. Vanderbyl was a rich man. Mr. Vanderbyl, as you have heard before, arrived in Bridgwater on that Monday afternoon, and was received in the way in which Liberal candidates are usually received in Bridgwater, as you have heard, with banners and a large number of people going down to meet them.

16,879. Was there a band on that occasion?—Well, I have forgotten it. It would not be perfect without it, according to Bridgwater ideas. At all events I have forgotten it.

16,880. At all events one of the witnesses here has told us that he was not going to see his old master go without a band?—I cannot say whether there was a band or not. Mr. Vanderbyl came down on the Monday, and I cannot charge my memory with any circumstance prior to the day of the election, except I remember writing a letter to a Mr. Bottomley. We wrote a letter on that occasion to a Mr. Bottomley, in July 1866, who had previously been living at Bridg water, but had left. He had a vote for the borough, and had previously been up to vote at Mr. Bagehot's election. Not receiving an answer from him, I think it was upon the day of the nomination, that Mr. Haviland, a solicitor in the town, was asked to go down and bring him up. I believe I asked Mr. Haviland myself to go down and bring him up; and I believe I told him also to pay his expenses.

16,881. Mr. Haviland was not one of the regular company of lawyers engaged upon the election, but he was an outsider?—No, he was not. This is the letter to Bottomley:

"Dear sir, Bridgwater, 9th July 1861.

"Mr. Patton having accepted office under "Lord Derby, a vacancy has occurred in the repre- "sentation of the borough, and Mr. Philip Vanderbyl "is the candidate in the Liberal interest. We send "you a print of his address. The polling day is fixed "for Thursday next, and, if you can consistently do so,

" we shall be glad if you will record your vote as " early as possible on that day. Please let us hear " from you per return as to your movements.

" Yours truly,

" Mr. Jonas Bottomley, " REED & COOK.

" Draper, Tiverton."

A previous communication had been made as to Mr. Bagehot's election. I will refer to it. We received no reply.

16,882. Was he under any pecuniary obligations to you?—He was under pecuniary obligations to me personally at that time; there is no doubt about it. I do not remember any reply coming from him. On the nomination day, I believe it was, Mr. Haviland was asked to go down, or on the morning of the polling day, I do not know which, and pay his expenses, and I have no doubt Mr. Haviland did do so, and then he came up to poll; and then I cannot charge my memory, in every way I have tried to refresh my memory on the point, but I cannot remember seeing Mr. Bottomley on the morning of the polling day. That he came up I know, because I have heard a statement in this witness box that he was sent to Allan, that Mr. Hurman took him, and that he polled. I cannot remember any interview with him on that occasion; if I could I would be pleased to place before you the nature of that interview with him; but I do not remember having any conversation with him. He was the only person who was written to on that occasion. Another circumstance I remember connected with that election was this, a Mr. William Rookley, a baker, a highly respectable man in Bridgwater, was at Wimbledon.

16,883. On the rifle business?—Yes, with the rifle corps; and a Mr. William Dyment, whose name I have mentioned before, who was an old friend of his, was asked if he would go to Wimbledon, to ask him if he would come down and vote for Mr. Vanderbyl, knowing he was a consistent Liberal; and Mr. Dyment went for him.

16,884. Why was it necessary to send anybody for him if he was a consistent Liberal, and was willing to come? Why not have written to him to come down, and have sent him a post office order?—Well, whether it was expected he would not come without being sent for, and they sent for him at the last moment to ensure his coming, I do not remember.

16,885. (Mr. Anstey.) Was not Mr. Dyment at that time known to have been a bribery agent?—No.

16,886. His name has been mentioned very frequently in connexion with these elections?—Yes.

16,887. D Y M E N T, is it not?—Yes. I have no recollection of how it was that Rookley was sent for at that time. Mr. Dyment was sent for him. It was known that Rookley was a very intimate friend of Dyment's, and he went for him, and he had to post off in a cab or hansom to Wimbledon to get him. Rookley was suffering from the effects of the heat of the sun, and I believe he was taken exceedingly ill. He came back with Dyment from Wimbledon to London, but he could not get on to Bridgwater, and Dyment had to go without him. An account was made out by Dyment of the expenses he had incurred, which he was paid, and he also made out an account for services he had rendered in preparing cards and things of that sort, and Dyment was paid a sum of 7*l.* by us for that. That is the only thing which occurs to me with reference to that election, with the exception of Mr. Symmons, which I have mentioned previously.

16,888. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did you hear that Mr. Vanderbyl was coming down? Had you anything to do in connexion with the arrangements for bringing him down, and also with the money arrangements?—No, I took no part in them. I had not the slightest knowledge of any kind with respect to any money arrangements. I took no part in them, nor was I consulted with reference to them.

16,889. When were you first introduced to Mr. Brogden on that occasion?—I do not remember. I remember his coming down with Mr. Vanderbyl on the afternoon of the Monday, and taking a part in the address to the public. He came down on the Monday, and I believe the nomination was on the Wednesday.

16,890. And the election on the Thursday?—And the election on the Thursday. I was not consulted in any shape or way about money matters on that election. Mr. Barham had the management of them.

16,891. (Mr. Price.) With regard to the money matters in the election of 1868, in which election I understand you took an active part, have you any reason to believe that Allan, or any of those persons who were entrusted with the distribution of money, have kept back any portion of it?—I have no reason to believe it. I was not present on the occasion of any accounts being made up, and I do not know they were made up between them.

16,892. As far as your impression is concerned, you have no reason to believe that Allan, and Bussell, and others have stuck to any money?—No.

16,893. With the exception of the 130*l.* we have heard of. Are you the private solicitor of Mr. Allan?—No; I am not professionally connected with him in any way. Then upon that election of Mr. Vanderbyl's I do not remember any other feature. I should mention to you, as I before mentioned to you, that we received on the 22nd August 1866, six weeks after the election, the sum of 50*l.* each for the services we had rendered, making together 100*l.*; and there was 12*l.* for payments made by us, and which we received through the election agent, in respect of that election; but I do not at this moment remember any other feature in connexion with that election.

16,894. (Mr. Price.) Has Mr. Vanderbyl anything to do with Stuckey's Banking Company?—Not the slightest that I am aware of.

(Mr. Anstey.) Was not Mr. Kinglake a partner in that bank?

16,895. (Mr. Price.) I made a mistake. It was Mr. Kinglake I meant to ask you about, and not Mr. Vanderbyl?—It is unknown to me if he is.

16,896. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not believe it?—It is unknown to me if he was a partner.

16,897. If he was at any time?—If he was at any time. I never knew that he was in any way interested in Stuckey's bank. That brings me back, I think, to Mr. Bagehot's election, which was a month before.

16,898. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean to say, you knew nothing at all in connexion with Mr. Vanderbyl?—As I said before, I knew money was going, but I had no part or connexion with procuring it.

16,899. It was all managed by Mr. Barham?—It was all managed by Mr. Barham. I have here a large number of papers with reference to Mr. Bagehot's candidature to represent this borough; and one which I have here, and which bears date May 7th, 1866, contains a list of persons at a meeting.

16,900. (Mr. Price.) Just let me ask you this first of all. Did you or your firm on any occasion get retainers from any of the candidates, or were you called in to act jointly with Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham?—Just so.

16,901. There was never anything like a retainer?—No. Then, as I say, the first document I have here is dated May 7th, 1866, and contains the names of persons who were present at a meeting at the house of Mr. George Bryant Sully in reference to election matters. There is a list of them here. It contains the names of 40 persons. At that meeting, I have also here in the handwriting of the mayor ——

16,902. Who was the mayor at that time?—The mayor of 1866.

16,903. (Mr. Coleridge.) By "the mayor" you meant the present mayor?—I mean the present mayor. There is some document in his handwriting in which he speaks of the election of 1865, and that " the Liberal party at Bridgwater were so fully con- " vinced of the return of Mr. H. Westropp having been " secured by grossly corrupt bribing, that they at " once took steps to procure the needful funds for

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

10 Sept. 1869.

" obtaining information thereon with a view to move " the House of Commons for a commission of in- " quiry." There seems to have been reasons which were urged upon them by Sir Harry Verney, for previous to this meeting he, Mr. George Bryant Sully, and Mr. Francis Thompson had been to London, and had seen Sir Harry Verney, and had seen the report of the evidence on the trial of the election petition against Mr. Westropp ; and I find also a document here, in the handwriting of Mr. Thompson himself, which is the same thing in an abbreviated form as that of Mr. George Bryant Sully's which I have just alluded to ; and I have also an original letter of Sir Harry Verney's, and addressed to Mr. George Bryant Sully and Mr. Francis Thompson:

" 5, Tilney Street, Park Lane,
" Gentlemen, London, May 4, 6 p.m.

" I have just been informed that Colonel Taylor " will not move the writ for Bridgwater to-night. I " shall give notice to-night that on Monday I shall move " thatthe evidence be laid on the table of the House, and " that no writ be issued until the House has had the " opportunity to consider it. I understand that a " petition from the most respectable inhabitants of " Bridgwater is in course of preparation to the same " effect, and I take the liberty of suggesting that it " should be sent to me at the House of Commons (if " the petitioners will do me the honour of entrusting " their petition to me) early enough to enable me to " present it on Monday.

" I am your faithful and obedient servant,
" HARRY VERNEY."

Then I find here an original petition to the House of Commons, no doubt prepared, so far as I can now charge my memory, by Mr. Sully and by Mr. Thompson, when in town for presentation there ; but I suppose it was considered that it should be drawn up in a more formal manner, and so it was not used. " To the " Honourable the Commons of Great Britain and Ire- " land in Parliament assembled." It is upon this half sheet of paper, the form being the usual sort of thing.

16,904. In whose handwriting is it ?—Mr. Francis Thompson's. " To the Honourable the Commons of " Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled. " The humble petitition of the undersigned electors of " the borough of Bridgwater, Sheweth that your " petitioners deplore the corrupt and illegal practices " which have notoriously prevailed in Bridgwater at " the last and at previous elections of members to " serve in your Honourable House. Your petitioners " therefore pray that no new writ be issued for " Bridgwater, but that a commission be appointed to " inquire into the corrupt practices that have pre- " vailed. And your petitioners will ever pray." And it is signed " Francis James Thompson, George B. " Sully." Those papers were produced at the meeting to which I referred ; and I remember perfectly well that the persons present requested Mr. Lovibond, myself, Mr. John Lovell Sealey and Mr. Barham to draw up a more formal document than this, but to embody the views expressed in that document, and to embody the views expressed in the document in the handwriting of Mr. Sully.

16,905. (Mr. Price.) Did you understand that the object of those present was to have a commission of inquiry, which might result in the disfranchisement of the place, or that it was merely to have a sufficient inquiry, and that the writ might be suspended, as it was done in the case of Gloucester? Was the disfranchisement ever present to their minds as the possible result of the commission of inquiry ?—Not so far as I can charge my memory.

16,906. Was it the question whether, if they got a commission of inquiry, that it might be for the suspension of the writ, as in the case of Gloucester ? —I cannot remember. I remember on the production of the documents, it was considered it should be in a more formal shape; and at last we four were asked to prepare one.

16,907. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not the real reason that you wanted to get time to counteract the corruption which the Conservatives had practised at the former election ?—I am not aware of that.

16,908. Because several witnesses have said that it was with a view of getting time ; that the Conservative element should die out by effluxion of time ?—I do not think it was ; but there are some circumstances confirmatory of that view, because a few days afterwards there was a meeting held with respect to the election of Mr. Bagehot. No doubt that was a suspicious circumstance. But I believe the people who took part in that meeting were honest and sincere in their view.

16,909. Mr. George Bryant Sully was present?—Yes.

16,910. That is the mayor ?—Yes. I remember Mr. Sully being there, and we said we would act up to whatever they wanted us to do ; and we retired to Mr. Barham's offices, with Mr. John Lovell Sealey and myself; and I hold in my hand the original prayer of the petition, which has been referred to by Mr. Anstey several times during this inquiry. It is in my handwriting, and I remember sitting at Mr. Barham's desk on that occasion, and it was written from dictation. At first it got into one form and then into another, as you will see when you look at it. This is the original draft of the petitition to which reference has been so constantly made (producing the document).

16,911. (Mr. Anstey.) It is not only the draft, but the form in which the petition was originally presented ?—As originally presented.

16,912. As you know all about this, how is it that, perhaps with one exception, I do not think more, that every person that has hitherto been called before us whose name is to that petition has either declared utter ignorance of the facts to which the petition refers, or, as it has been suggested by my colleague, Mr. Coleridge, has stated that the real object of the petitition was to prevent an election going on, so that the Conservatives should not have the benefit of the past bribery ; or else that he merely signed it because Mr. Benjamin Lovibond had told him so-and-so, that that was the ground on which he went ; how is it that nearly everyone seeks to get rid of the responsibility of the very serious allegations as far as he himself is concerned to which he gave his adherence in signing his name to that petition ?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond ?

16,913. No ; every witness we have had before us. Everybody tries to get rid of it, and says, " I know nothing," and will not give us any information with regard to what he avers in that petition. What is the meaning of that ?—I cannot give you the reason, I can only explain the course I took in it.

16,914. (Mr. Price.) Surely when you were asked to put this in a more formal shape there must have been some discussion as to the view on which this petition was to be presented to the House ?—I say there was nothing from which to infer insincerity on their part with respect to what they were doing ; but I say there was something suspicious, confirmatory of the suggestion of Mr. Coleridge.

16,915. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, Mr. Sealy in this place has stated, and repeatedly stated, with respect to this petition, first of all, that it was not his drawing ; and secondly, that he was not a promoter of it ; that he did not promote it in any way ; the term " promoter " was used to him. It has since appeared, on the distinct evidence of Mr. Barham, that he not only was a promoter, but that he was one of the committee who drafted it. How can you account for Mr. Sealy's desire to disown it ?—I cannot account for it. After that petition was drawn up in the way which I have described, on the 7th May, there was a meeting at Mr. James Wood Sully's house or Mr. George Bryant Sully's house (my impression is that it was at Mr. James Wood Sully's house), and at which meeting this resolution was proposed by R. O. Backwell, seconded by J. Rossiter, " That a committee, consisting " of the following gentlemen, Messrs. Bate, Rossiter, " Barham, Lovibond, Reed and Cook, J. L. Sealy, " F. Thompson, G. B. Sully, Hammill, be formed for " the purpose of ascertaining the political opinions of " Mr. W. Bagehot and Lord Bury, and any other " gentlemen who may be willing to become candidate " on Liberal principles for the representation of the " borough, and report thereon to a larger meeting of " the party." I remember, sir, at this meeting, that Mr. Lovibond stated that he had been in town a day or two previously, and had heard from a friend of his of Lord Bury's name, and in the course of the discussion Mr. Bagehot's name was mentioned. On the 7th May, when that meeting was held, a letter was written to Mr. Bagehot, a copy of which I have here, or rather the draft from which the fair copy was made.

16,916. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long would that be after the unseating of Mr. Westropp?—I forget the date that he was unseated, but this was after the unseating. This is the letter:

" Dear sir, Bridgwater, 7th May, 1866.

" There has been a meeting this afternoon of " several of the Liberal electors of this borough, at " which a resolution was passed appointing a com- " mittee, and requesting them to ascertain from you " your political opinions upon the various questions " of the day. We were afterwards deputed to convey " to you the substance of the resolution. We shall " therefore feel much obliged if you will have the " kindness to send us per return such a statement as " we may lay before the committee at an adjourned " meeting to be held on Wednesday next. We need " scarcely add that it would have been premature on " the part of the meeting to have adopted you as a " candidate for the representation of this borough " without first knowing your political views, and " whether the same were acceptable to the Liberal " electors generally; but the information, when " received, will be laid before the committee for their " consideration. We trust we have made ourselves " intelligible, and remain,

" Yours truly,

" W. Bagehot, Esq. Reed & Cook."

16,917. How many of the 600 electors do you suppose cared anything about politics at that time; about the same number as were reputed to be pure on that side?—Yes, about that.

16,918. (Mr. Anstey.) It was the last Russell administration, about two months before the Russell administration went out?—No, Lord Derby's administration.

16,919. No; that was not till two months afterwards?—You are quite right. I remember that Lord Palmerston died shortly after the assembling of Parliament in 1865.

16,920. This was Lord Russell's administration?—Yes.

16,921. Was not that a period of great political deadness, as far as your party were concerned?—Oh yes.

16,922. And is it not the fact (we have had it already in evidence) that in selecting candidates for the last previous election, certainly a previous election, Mr. Travers Smith sent to Mr. Lovibond the list which has been read of rich and available candidates, all to be proposed by the Liberals, one who is described as " very moderate," one as very Radical, one as Palmerstonian, and two without any declared opinion at all, but all agreeing in this, that they were rich and in a good position?—Yes. I was not aware of that letter which was read till I heard it in this room.

16,923. Having that in your mind, and taking into consideration the political deadness of the Liberals as it is called in this borough, I ask you what was the object of the little salvo about the " great body of opinion being Liberal" here?—It was in accordance with the petition as proposed.

16,924. Was it not to give a decent cloak to the whole thing?—No, I do not think it was, not with the persons who attended that meeting, as far as they were concerned. Then on the 8th of May there is a reply from Mr. Bagehot, it is rather a long one; and then on the 8th of May there is another letter from him; in fact, there are three letters from him bearing that date; and on the 9th of May I find there was a meeting of the committee held at Messrs. Reed and Cook's offices: " Present, Messrs. H. Lovibond, E. " Barham, P. O. H. Reed, F. J. Thompson, J .Cook, " jun., G. B. Sully; and Mr. J. B. Hammill, Mr. T. " Collins, and Mr. H. F. Nicholls were also present."

16,925. (Mr. Price.) We really want to spare your time, and the time of the public. What is all this to tend to? We see you are prepared to give us every document you have got there. You know well enough that what we have to inquire into is only with respect to corrupt practices of the borough at elections. Do those documents which you have now in your hands tend to throw any light on the manner in which elections have been conducted?—No.

16,926. You know best. We do not want to weary you by reading through all those documents, nor is it worth while having them upon the notes, unless they have a bearing upon what we are here to inquire into, that is, not only as to how the last election was conducted, but also as to how former elections were conducted with respect to corrupt practices. You know best, and we leave it to your judgment to refer only to those documents which throw light upon the subject in hand?—I observe that Mr. Anstey has asked repeatedly as to the cause of the division of the Liberal party as to the issuing of the writ on that occasion; there are one or two letters among these documents which we received, and which, with your permission, I will read, as they will explain themselves. There is one of the 30th May, addressed to Mr. Kinglake:

" Dear sir, " Bridgwater, 30th May 1866.

" It was rumoured here to-day that Col. " Taylor had given notice of his intention to move " that a writ may issue for Bridgwater to-morrow " night, and hence the reason of our sending you the " telegram." That was a telegram (which I shall find) asking if there was any truth in it. " Should " Col. Taylor do so, and be successful, we should have " very little time indeed to make arrangements, and " therefore it is very desirable that we have the earliest " intimation of his movements, and, if not troubling " you too much, we shall feel obliged if you will " kindly send us a telegram directly the notice of " motion is given, if not already done.

" We are, dear sir, yours faithfully,

" Reed & Cook."

There was a similar letter to Mr. Bagehot, and I find this telegram from Mr. Bagehot, and it says, " I expect the writ will go." That is dated 31st May 1866; and then this one from Mr. Kinglake on the 31st May, saying, " Writ will be moved about midnight, and will probably issue." Then there is another one from Mr. Kinglake, dated June 1st, saying, " The writ will issue."

16,927. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was on the Friday?—I believe so.

16,928. (Mr. Anstey.) All those documents confirm your statement that Mr. Bagehot was the candidate selected for the contest, before the debate began on the important question as to whether there was to be a writ or not?—Clearly; because there is a telegram bearing date June 1st, saying, " The writ will issue," and all the rest follows.

16,929. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Lord Bury suggested as a candidate?—I was at a meeting at which Mr. Lovibond reported that he had heard through a friend that he thought it likely that Lord Bury would not object to become a representative, and that Mr. Bagehot would not object also. Mr. Bagehot is living in the neighbourhood, some 12 miles off.

16,930. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose you are aware that his celebrated work on the Constitution was not published for two years after that?—Certainly, a year ago.

16,931. It could not have been on that account that he was selected as a candidate?—No.

16,932. Is he a wealthy man?—I believe he is.

16,933. (Mr. Price.) He married a daughter of Sir James Wilson, at that time Finance Minister in India, and who was at that time proprietor of the Economist?—Yes.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

10 Sept. 1869.

16,934. He was dead then, but Mr. Bagehot probably was known, as he married the daughter of Sir James Wilson, and was connected with the Economist newspaper?—Yes, that he was connected with it.

16,935. (Mr. Anstey.) You have also said that it was in contemplation of the election of 1865, if not before, that he was named as one of the five men of "wealth and position," and Sir John Shelley, who was selected in preference, was another man of wealth?—Yes; Mr. Wilson's name.

(Mr. Price.) No; Mr. Bagehot's name was mentioned in the letter of Mr. Travers Smith as a person likely to be a candidate, on account of his being an able man and good candidate, and also on account of his wealth.

16,936. (Mr. Anstey.) I will read it to you: "Sir "John Shelley, a rich country baronet, advanced "Liberal, &c.; Sir Frederick Halliday, late Governor "of Bengal, very moderate, rich, and good candi- "date; Mr. Walter Bagehot, an able man and good "candidate; Lord Milton, eldest son of Earl Fitz- "william, intelligent young candidate, but not expe- "rienced, highest social and family position. All the "above are men of wealth and position, and would do "credit to almost any constituency."—I remember it now.

16,937. Have you any doubt that that last suggestion, a man of "wealth and position," was the real reason why Bridgwater selected Mr. Bagehot?—I have no doubt that a man of wealth has a far better chance in Bridgwater than a man who is not wealthy.

16,938. Supposing he had been a poor man, would he have had any hope of success? In accordance with the views of the Liberal party in Bridgwater would they not have said, "We will put his communications at once in the waste paper basket"?—I believe so.

16,939. (Mr. Coleridge.) I do not believe any barristers or lawyers have represented this borough of Bridgwater?—Not in my recollection.

16,940. Except Mr. Kinglake?—Mr. Kinglake.

(Mr. Anstey.) Just refresh your memory about this; I will not read this letter all over again: "Sir John Villiers Shelley, advanced Liberal, a can- "didate for the abolition of church rates," and so on; "rich country baronet, advanced Liberal," &c., &c. And then, "Sir Frederick Halliday, late Governor of "Bengal, very moderate, Palmerstonian, rich and "good candidate." Then "Walter Bagehot, able man," not stating what his principles are. "Lord "Milton, intelligent young candidate, but not expe- "rienced;" all of them men of "wealth and position, "and would do credit to any constituency."

(Mr. Coleridge.) This is Mr. Travers Smith's letter.

16,941. (Mr. Anstey.) This is called Mr. Travers Smith's paper; and out of this list Sir John Shelley had been selected the year before; have you any doubt that his being a rich country baronet had more to do with it than his being an advanced Liberal, and a candidate for the abolition of church rates; and that Sir Frederick Halliday was named more because of his wealth than his being a Palmerstonian in politics; have you any doubt of that?—No doubt at all.

16,942. You know that a Palmerstonian was something less Liberal than a Liberal of the present day?—Yes.

16,943. "An advanced Liberal," we know what that meant?—Yes.

16,944. And they were equally acceptable to the voters of this borough, provided they were men of wealth?—Yes. On June 2nd, in anticipation of this election of Mr. Bagehot's, I find we wrote four letters to voters; the four being, James Wood, Esq., who formerly resided here, and is now living at Clifton; Mr. Callow, who also lived here, but has now left the town; the same Mr. Bottomley I mentioned just now, and I shall have something more to say about him; and a Mr. Samuel Freeman, who also lived in the borough, but has gone away. "The election is fixed "for Thursday next, and if you can consistently do "so, we shall be glad if you will record your vote as "early as possible on that day. Please let us hear "from you per return." I think on that occasion Mr. Freeman did not return any answer, and I think it was on that occasion or another occasion that he was sent for by Mr. Tamlin, and was paid a guinea for his trouble. This same Mr. Bottomley was sent for upon this occasion to vote, and I remember during the day, he came to me and he asked if his expenses coming up ought not to be paid. Some little conversation took place between us on the subject, and I remember very well asking him, "Well, what are your expenses?" And he said, "Well, I think they should be paid on a very liberal scale." And some conversation took place between us on the subject, and whether he mentioned the sum or not I will not be sure, but at all events there was some suggestion which he made which made me rather angry at the moment, and he said, "I shall have nothing to do with you." Whether he voted then I cannot say, but I remember afterwards meeting a Mr. Dyment, and telling him what had taken place, and I said, "Well, "you had better see him, and offer him a couple of "guineas for his expenses."

16,945. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where did he come from?—From Tiverton.

16,946. Those expenses would be no more than 5*s.*?—More than that.

16,947. (Mr. Anstey.) It is about 20 miles?—I cannot say that. Perhaps 25 miles.

16,948. (Mr. Coleridge.) He could have come up and voted and have gone back in about three or four hours?—No doubt about it. And I remember Mr. Dyment afterwards going to offer him the two guineas, and he refused to accept it, and he was very much annoyed about it. Then Mr. Callow was present on that occasion, and Mr. Bull. I do not remember anything in connexion with either of those two names that I think it necessary to call your attention to. On June 2nd, I think it was, that my partner told me he was going to London. He had seen Mr. Barham, and he told me he was going to London about making some arrangements respecting the election.

16,949. (Mr. Coleridge.) What sort of arrangements?—Money, I understood. He returned on the 4th, and he told me that he had not succeeded in making any arrangements. I, of course, understood perfectly well what he meant. The explanation as far as I remember did not come out to me then; I have entirely forgotten, but I am quite sure it was drawn to my attention. I do not think my partner told me that he had done this, that, and the other, but merely gave me the result of his journey there. But on the 5th there was this letter, which I do not recollect seeing at the time, nor can I tell the time when I did, from Mr. Travers Smith to Mr. Reed:

"The bearer is the person to whom I alluded on "Sunday; I wrote last night under cover to Mr. "C.," (I have asked Mr. Reed who that means, and he thinks that alludes to Mr. Carslake,) "who will "explain the fact of no letter from me having been "received.

"I am, dear sir, yours very truly,

"J. Travers Smith."

"The bearer," as I understand from my partner, which I was not aware of until recently, if I ever knew it I had forgotten it, was sent down by Mr. Travers Smith according to an arrangement with my partner to watch the doings of the Conservative party. I have no recollection of any conversation with him.

16,950. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know the individual's name?—I have not the slightest idea.

16,951. Or what sort of looking man he was?—I do not know, and I do not think I saw this letter at the time.

16,952. This was before Bagehot's election?—In anticipation of Bagehot's election, my partner having returned from town on the 4th, on that occasion Dyment was paid for his expenses. I had forgotten that Dyment went down for Bottomley, and did not bring him up, or whether he did I forget, but he was paid

4*l.*, and that sum was afterwards paid us by the election agent for that election, and 12*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.* we received on the 13th of August respecting payments made at Mr. Bagehot's election. I find it was on February the 5th, 1867, when we received, through Mr. Barham or Mr. Lovibond, I forget which, the sum of 50*l.* for services rendered by us the previous June, at Mr. Bagehot's election.

16,953. 50*l.* each ?—No, 50*l.* together.

16,954. It seems that what Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond received was always, I think, double or four times as much as you ?—Well, it was so. There has just at this moment crossed my mind, whether at that election or Mr. Vanderbyl's first election I am not sure, but I remember well a thing which I will explain to you. A man of the name of Abbott was reported as not having polled. I knew him very well, and I remember going down Eastover way, the precise point at which I met him I do not know, and said, "Why, Abbott, you have not polled." "No." "Why do not you go to poll?" He had been drinking, but was not tipsy.

16,955. (Mr. Price.) Nobody ever yet got a correct definition of what was tipsiness.—I am afraid I am not in a position to give it, but he certainly was not what I should call drunk, but from the man's manner he had been drinking.

16,956. (Mr. Coleridge.) He knew what he was about ?—He knew what he was about. I said, "Why not go to the poll," and so on. He said, "I will follow you." I said, "Then come along;" and I walked a long distance, and I may not have seen him, being in advance of him, and every now and then persons would meet him, and he would stop, and I would call out, "Come along, Abbott," and then we came right on to the Cornhill. They saw what was going on, that he was following me to the poll, and at last a mob gathered round, and in fact completely pushed me towards the "Clarence," that being regarded as the head quarters at the time of the Conservatives. I certainly felt annoyed at being followed by them, and I recollect in the tussle I had my coat torn off on the occasion. I certainly tried to get him to the poll, but if I had promised him money I should now tell it unhesitatingly, but I have not the slightest recollection of it, nor did I intend that he should have any.

16,957. Is he living here still ?—He is living here still.

16,958. What is he ?—James Abbott, a plasterer, living in St. John Street in this borough. There is another feature it occurs to me to mention, that Mr. Nicholls stated here yesterday that he had sent to our office some two or three times an account of some things had at Bagehot's election.

16,959. (Mr. Price.) Yes, 2*l.* 12*s.* 4½*d.* and 12*s.* 9*d.* were the items ?—I have no recollection of ever receiving such accounts. I could not undertake to deny it, because if he says he sent it I imagine it must have come, and if received, as we had nothing to do with the accounts, the possibility is that it was sent on to Mr. Lovibond.

16,960. It has been produced before us, but I do not know by whom ?—I have no recollection of it.

16,961. Would it have been sent to you as solicitors for or agents of Mr. Bagehot, or as agents afterwards for Mr. Vanderbyl, because the object of our examination about it was to show whether this account, which is debited apparently to Bagehot, which does not appear to have been paid, for there is no receipt on the bill, was sent to you at the time of Mr. Bagehot's candidature here, or whether it was sent to you at a subsequent period, when Mr. Vanderbyl was standing, with a view of your liquidating it for him ?—I have no recollection of any account having been received either before or after.

16,962. Would you know the bill if it was shown to you ?—There are some initials, if you will permit me to look at it. (Referring to the bill) I do not recognize any initials at all.

16,963. We know what the initials are now ?—I do not recognize it.

16,964. It is endorsed at the back ?—There is an endorsement on the back; I do not recognize that writing. I have no recollection of giving any order myself on that occasion.

16,965. (Mr. Anstey.) Have some bills come in to you incurred at former elections, but not presented until after the canvass of Mr. Vanderbyl had commenced ?—I do not remember any bills.

16,966. Phelps, for instance ?—I was coming to Phelps directly.

16,967. Did any of those come in ?—I remember Phelps coming up and seeing us about it, and I remember that was arranged after Mr. Vanderbyl's election, when, as Mr. Barham said, the bills were put down and divided into proportions.

16,968. That is a bill ejusdem generis with this ?—Yes.

16,969. If this did come into you then from Mr. Nicholls, it would be no more than any other unpaid claim which Sir John Shelley, the previous candidate, was prepared to meet, and which you on behalf of the then candidate were prepared to consider and satisfy ?—No doubt they came. As we really have nothing to do with making up the accounts, if they came the possibility is they would be sent under cover to Mr. Henry Lovibond, but I have no recollection of doing it.

16,970. (Mr. Price.) John Abbott is on the register as voting for a house in Polden Lane ?—But he now lives in St. John Street. I do not know, as far as the best of my recollection goes, that there is anything with reference to Bagehot's election I need trouble you with.

16,971. Do you remember anything of this kind, any statement made on the Sunday night at the election of 1868 to the effect that the money was to be left with the lawyers by Mr. Fennelly, and that nothing was said at all about any distribution amongst the voters ?—No, it was not so. On the contrary, on the Sunday Mr. Fennelley arranged to bring down this Mr. Lomas, who he said was a very shrewd man in his employ, for him to distribute the money.

16,972. Is this at all in accordance with your recollection, that the 1,500*l.* was offered to be given if you and the other lawyers would fight a pure election; not in distribution amongst the public, but literally to be given for the lawyers ?—No, I do not remember that, but I remember this what Mr. Fennelly said; I have answered that question. I think that Mr. Vanderbyl did not mind money, and that he would rather have fought a pure election, and if it had been fought he would have paid the lawyers very handsomely for it.

16,973. (Mr. Anstey.) That is all ?—That is all.

16,974. (Mr. Price.) It was not said that he would rather give or offered to give 1,500*l.* amongst the lawyers if they would only fight a pure election ?—No.

16,975. You are sure of that ?—Yes.

16,976 Still you say the substance of it was that Mr. Vanderbyl would pay the lawyers handsomely if they would fight a pure election ?—Yes, he would. He said if the election had been fought purely he would have remunerated the lawyers handsomely.

16,977. On what occasion did he say that ?—That is on the Sunday night.

16,978. There were several important interviews on that day, at which of them was it ?—That was at night.

16,979. (Mr. Price.) The last thing ?—The last thing.

16,980. (Mr. Anstey.) Before the deputation went up ?—No, after.

16,981. This was at that nocturnal meeting at your house ?—Yes.

16,982. You have conjugated the verb "to give" two or three ways, and I could not make out what he said, was it "If you lawyers will manage to fight a "pure election I shall pay you handsomely," or whether he said it in the past tense ?—It was.

16,983. If you had agreed to fight a pure election he would have paid you handsomely ?—I believe it was the past tense.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

10 Sept. 1869.

16,984. Treating it as an affair past and gone ?—I believe so.

16,985. (Mr. Price.) Now try and recollect. Do you believe it was at any of the previous interviews which you have spoken of, in which he said he would undertake to pay the lawyers handsomely if they would fight a pure election; he gave you the option; that is the question I want you to speak to, whether your recollection is clear that night that Mr. Fennelly, on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl, gave you an option as it were: "Mr. Vanderbyl is perfectly prepared to " pay the lawyers handsomely if they will fight a pure " election "?—If they did it must have been on the Friday before.

16,986. On the Saturday you think he did say something to that effect ?—On the Sunday.

16,987. If the lawyers had agreed to fight a pure election Mr. Vanderbyl would have paid them handsomely ?—Yes.

16,988. What was the reply ?—The reply was that " You see there was a very strong opinion of the " probability of the Conservatives resorting to money, " and it was impossible to fight."

16,989. Was not Mr. Fennelly distinctly given to understand, in answer to that observation of his on Sunday night, that that was a thing which would not be entertained at all, and that it was no use his saying so, or he might have been left under the impression still, that the 1,500*l.*, or whatever was the sum, the lawyers would take it, and not spend it in bribery? —He could not have been left under that impression.

16,990. Could not possibly ?—No.

16,991. Then something must have been said to disabuse his mind. Suppose he put it in the past tense, "If you lawyers had only agreed to fight a pure " election Mr. Vanderbyl would have paid you hand- " somely "?—To the best of my recollection the reply was, "You see there is a very strong opinion on the " probability of the Conservatives spending money; " if they do our chance is hopeless." I believe that was the substance of the reply.

16,992. Mr. Fennelly did not give any of you to understand that if they got the money down the lawyers were to have the keeping of it, and either to put it in their pockets or distribute it ?—No.

16,993. No alternative given to them that the 1,500*l.* was to be at the disposal of the lawyers ?—No, except what I have before referred to.

16,994. Amongst the electors ?—Yes.

16,995. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose Mr. Vanderbyl's credit was good in the borough at this time ?—Yes.

16,996. If Mr. Fennelly wanted to spend 1,500*l.* amongst the lawyers, there was no need for him to go to town and bring down this gold ?—No.

16,997. If he had promised his cheque three months afterwards, you would just as soon have had it as cash ?—Quite so.

16,998. Therefore it was quite impossible that his object was to get 1,500*l.* to distribute amongst the lawyers ?—It could not have been so.

16,999. (Mr. Anstey.) At the time he said this to you, "If you lawyers had agreed to it Mr. Vanderbyl " would have," &c. &c. &c. At that time he must unquestionably, either by parcel or post, have despatched to town his instructions, or forwarded telegrams. " When you refer to money, describe the " money under the name of bales for hundreds "?— Certainly.

17,000. Would he have done that if it had been merely for the purpose of raising funds to pay lawyers for their professional services ?—No.

17,001. (Mr. Price.) Therefore there would be no reason for supposing that the money was brought down to be given over to you, with an impression on Mr. Fennelly's mind that the money was distinctly for the lawyers, and not to be given to the public ?—No.

17,001*a*. (Mr. Anstey.) On the following day, the Monday I think it was, but on the day when the 10*l.* packages were made up and described as tea, could that possibly be with the intention that the lawyers were to divide that as they pleased on the condition that they were to fight a pure election ?—(No answer.)

17,002. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had Mr. Fennelley been down at Mr. Vanderbyl's first election ?—Not to my recollection.

17,003. (Mr. Price.) You mentioned Mr. Drake in connexion with this matter the other day, was he a person with whom you were in communication at all? —I had seen Mr. Drake.

17,004. Was it as to the election of a candidate when Mr. Bagehot would not stand ?—No, this was whilst the negotiation was going on for the settlement of this thing, the compromise.

17,005. (Mr. Coleridge.) This very last one ?— Yes.

17,006. Mr. Drake interfered in that ?—No. I said I happened to be in his office after the last election here, whether before the presentation of the petition or afterwards I will not be sure.

17,007. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Drake has recently had a signal mark of Her Majesty's commendation for his services presented to him. I want to know what is the proof of his service to the party, was it in connexion with that compromise about the retiring of both candidates previous to Mr. Justice Blackburn coming down ?—He was consulted about it.

17,008. Therefore, so far as you know, that is the last act of his in connexion with the Liberal party ?— It was.

17,009. Effecting a compromise by which the election inquiry should be stifled would be the effect of it, and this Commission not issued, both seats to be given up to the Conservatives, Kinglake and Vanderbyl to retire, rather than have any inquiry into the matter. That was the subject on which he was consulted, was not it ?—I was in his office; Mr. Kinglake came in with Mr. Lovibond. What the nature of their conversation was I do not know.

17,010. But that was the subject of discussion amongst you at that time, was not it ?—I had not a conversation with him in the presence of Mr. King- and Mr. Lovibond.

17,011. The object of your visiting London was with reference to such a compromise ?—We had several visits for the express purpose.

17,012. And amongst others you consulted was Mr. Drake ?—I saw Mr. Drake once.

17,013. (Mr. Anstey.) What passed between you and Mr. Drake on that occasion; state shortly as near as you can recollect ?—It was about the desirability of coming to an understanding about it.

17,014. What did he say; did he say it would be desirable ?—His answer was, " I do not see what can be done;" something of that kind.

17,015. What did he mean by that?

17,016. (Mr. Price.) What could be done except giving up the seats, or what ?—Whether it was told to him at the time there had been an offer made of the seats. I imagine that to be so.

17,017. The whole tendency of the thing was, was it possible to stave off inquiry by way of election petition and the possible results of an election petition ?—Certainly.

17,018. (Mr. Anstey.) First of all distinguish between the consultations you had amongst yourselves during that period, and then the consultation at which some of the Conservatives were present, Mr. Trevor frequently, Mr. Westropp once. On those occasions was one of the materials of judgment which you had before you, the danger that if the election trial took place, that would be followed up by an address, which would lead to a commission, and that to an inquiry, and that to disfranchisement ?—It was repeatedly said in the course of negotiation, that a commission would more than probable be the result.

17,019. First among yourselves, secondly at the meeting at which Mr. Trevor was present ?—Yes.

17,020. Mr. Westropp or anybody connected with the Conservative party; was it urged on them at all or not in this way, " What shall we gain by it supposing

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

10 Sept. 1869.

"you unseat our members; the result will be the "suspension of the writ and a commission." Was that ever suggested?—I believe it was certainly.

17,021. And therefore was one of the materials of judgment common to you and to them, that there would be no advantage to either party from the election trial proceeding, but probably the borough being incapacitated for all time to come from indulging in these practices?—It certainly was talked about.

17,022. (Mr. Price.) And this rich and fruitful pasture would be turned into a dry and barren desert?—Speaking for myself, whatever the consequences might be, I should be exceedingly pleased that it should be so.

JAMES ABBOTT sworn.

J. Abbott.

17,023. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A plasterer.

17,024. Are you a voter for the borough?—I did.

17,025. At the last election?—Yes.

17,026. Did you get anything for voting at the last election?—No.

17,027. Nothing at all?—No, not a farthing.

17,028. Any promises?—No.

17,029. From anybody?—No.

17,030. No offer and no promise?—No one at all; no offer and no promise.

17,031. (Mr. Coleridge.) By neither side?—By neither side.

17,032. Either before or after?—Either before or after.

17,033. (Mr. Price.) And you voted for whom?—Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

17,034. What time of the day did you vote?—About 10 in the morning.

17,035. Did you vote in 1866 at the second election, when Mr. Vanderbyl stood first here?—I believe I did.

17,036. Who for?—I voted then, I believe, for Mr. Westropp.

17,037. No, this time Mr. Vanderbyl stood against Mr. Patton?—I do not think I had voted at all then.

17,038. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you a vote?—Yes.

17,039. Then why did not you vote?—Because I was not able to go. I was not very well, I think; I am not certain.

17,040. Did you get paid anything for not voting?—No.

17,041. (Mr. Price.) Did anybody say if you would not go and vote as you happened to be ill that you would be paid to stay away?—At that second election?

17,042. Yes, of 1866?—That was 1865, was not it?

17,043. (Mr. Coleridge.) No, 1866, the last election; the first time Mr. Vanderbyl came?—I am not sure.

17,044. Did you get anything for not voting; did anybody pay you any money at all at that election?—Yes.

17,045. Who?—Mr. Jarman.

17,046. (Mr. Anstey.) Frederick or Henry?—He keeps a baker's shop.

17,047. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did he pay you?—He sent 10*l.* to my house.

17,048. When did you get it?—I got it on the morning of the polling day.

17,049. Did you vote after you got it, or abstain from voting?—I did not vote at all.

17,050. And was not in order that you might not vote?—No.

17,051. Had not you voted for Mr. Westropp before?—I had voted for Mr. Westropp before that.

17,052. Then you were Conservative at the time of Mr. Westropp's election, and was not this 10*l.* given to you to prevent your voting against the Liberals on the present occasion?—I do not know.

17,053. Why did you get it?—He brought it to my house.

17,054. (Mr. Price.) Was it the 10*l.* made you ill?—No, 20*l.* would not.

17,055. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who gave it you?—Jarman brought it there, I believe.

17,056. But who gave it to you, your wife?—Yes.

17,057. Had Jarman been to you and arranged to pay you before this?—No.

17,058. Do you mean you did not expect to get it at all?—I did not expect to get it all, it was brought to my house.

17,059. On the day of the poll?—On the day of the poll I believe it was.

17,060. Is that the only 10*l.* you got?—No.

17,061. What other one?—I had 10*l.* before that, at Mr. Westropp's election

17,062. That is 1865; but the other election in 1866, when Patton and Bagehot stood, what did you get then?—I do not think I got another.

17,063. How did you vote for Bagehot or Patton?—I think it was Mr. Bagehot. I am not sure.

17,064. Which was the election which you went with Mr. Cook, and Mr. Cook tried to take you up to the poll, and the Tories got hold of you?—He did not take me up at all. I would not be taken up by anybody.

17,065. Did you walk a good way with Mr. Cook, and when by the "Clarence" you were taken in to the "Clarence"?—I went to the "Clarence."

17,066. What election was that, Mr. Westropp's?—I think it was.

17,067. What did you get then?—At Mr. Westropp's I had 10*l.*

17,068. Who gave it you?—Jarman.

17,069. (Mr. Price.) Were you ill then?—No.

17,070. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the same Jarman, the baker?—Yes.

17,071. You got 10*l.* from Jarman the baker for voting for Mr. Westropp?—Yes, that is the first time he put up.

17,072. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is the first time you told Mr. Cook you would go and vote for him?—No, I do not recollect. I recollect that he came up to me, but did not catch hold of me to lead me.

17,073. What did take place?—Nothing.

17,074. Did he ask you to go to the poll?—No.

17,075. What took place?—Nothing.

17,076. Did he speak to you?—No.

17,077. Will you swear that he did not?—I will swear I cannot remember he did.

17,078. You cannot recollect?—I am sure he did not.

17,079. Did he take you by the arm?—I think he may have just taken me by here.

17,080. Did you follow him?—No.

17,081. How far did you go with him?—I cannot say how far.

17,082. Did you walk up the street with him?—I did not walk but a few yards.

17,083. Who took you away?—Not anyone, I consider.

17,084. Who was it who stopped you?—No one took me away at all.

17,085. Who was it spoke to you, and so on, who induced you not to follow Mr. Cook?—Nobody at all.

17,086. None of the Tory party?—No.

17,087. Do you swear that?—I do.

17,088. How came you to leave Mr. Cook after going with him?—I went a few yards with him and then left; there was no difference in my walking with Mr. Cook or anybody else.

17,089. Do you mean that nobody induced you to leave him?—No.

17,090. You went of your own accord?—Yes.

17,091. Had you made up your mind how to vote?—Yes.

17,092. How long before?—Perhaps a few hours, perhaps a day.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

J. Abbott.

10 Sept. 1869.

17,093. Who persuaded you to vote for Mr. Westropp?—Nobody.

17,094. Had not you been canvassed?—I had been canvassed.

17,095. Had Jarman been to you?—No, he never came to me at all.

17,096. Who canvassed you?—Mr. Westropp came to my house.

17,097. Did you promise him at once?—I did.

17,098. Did you tell any of his agents afterwards that you wanted some money?—I did not see his agents afterwards.

17,099. When were you told first that you would get 10*l.*?—I was not told at all, it was brought to my house four or five days after the election.

17,100. (Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps if you wait here until the end of the day your memory will be refreshed. You wanted to go to Cannington?—Yes.

17,101. Perhaps you had better defer that until you have told the truth. When did you vote before this? Did you vote in 1859 for Kinglake and Tynte?—(No answer.)

(Mr. Price.) I do not know whether you appreciate the position you are in, but you are called here as a witness, and if you do not answer the questions which are put to you by the Commissioners, which are intelligible questions, and which you do not say you do not understand, then you will be in this position, that you will receive no certificate, and be liable to be prosecuted by the Attorney General, and also probably prosecuted for perjury as well. Understand that and take care what you are about.

17,102. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have to tell everything you know, not only what we ask?—I will what I know about the election.

17,103. Did you vote in 1859 for Mr. Kinglake and Tynte, the election at which Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp were the other two?—Yes.

17,104. How often did you vote for Mr. Westropp altogether?—I think twice.

17,105. What did you get for voting for him the first time, 10*l.*?—That is what I said.

17,106. No, that is the last time; how many 10*l.* had you had altogether in your life?—I cannot say that.

17,107. Have you ever voted at an election in your life without being paid?—Yes, the last election I did.

17,108. Is that the only one which you voted at?—No, a good many before.

17,109. Without being paid?—Yes.

17,110. You have told us that you were paid in 1866, 1865, and 1859, and you voted for Mr. Westropp and got 10*l.* then, did not you?—I think three times I have had 10*l.*

17,111. Who did you get the 10*l.* from in 1859? You have told us twice from Mr. Jarman, was he your friend then?—It was from the Tories I got it.

17,112. But who paid you?—Jarman, no one but Jarman.

17,113. Has Jarman always paid you whenever you have been bribed?—Yes, he has.

17,114. Did you vote in 1847?—I cannot say. In 1847?

17,115. Yes?—No, I cannot say.

17,116. How long have you had a vote? When did you first vote?—I have had a vote, I suppose, 20 years or more.

17,117. The first time you ever voted what did you get?—Nothing, I believe.

17,118. What did you get?—I did not have anything the first time.

17,119. Very well. What did you have the second time?—Upon my word, it is so long ago, I could not be answerable to say, if I was to swear it.

17,120. How many times have you been paid on the whole?—I think about four times.

17,121. You have only told us of three. When was the fourth? Was it 1847?—Upon my word, I do not recollect the year. I am no scholar.

17,122. Mr. Kinglake's first election; do you recollect that?—Yes.

17,123. Did you have a vote then?—I cannot recollect.

17,124. Well, Mr. Kinglake is not a Tory. You have been paid three times, you have told us, for voting for the Tories. Tell us when you were paid for voting for the Whigs. The same person cannot have paid you for voting for the Tories who paid you for voting for the Whigs?—Upon my word I cannot say.

17,125. But you are not always getting 10*l.*, are you?—No.

17,126. (Mr. Price.) Was it Bussell or Jarman?—No, never any of them.

17,127. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who paid you for voting for the Whigs when you were paid?—It is some years ago, is not it?

17,128. I know it is, but who paid you then? It was not Jarman, you know, who paid you for voting for the Whigs?—No, no.

17,129. You are clearly a balance man?—I think it was Mr. Thomas Ford.

17,130. What Ford is that?—A solicitor, I think he is. He is dead now.

17,131. What year was it?—Oh, I cannot say what year.

17,132. What did he pay you? How much?—I think it was 15*l.*

17,133. Is 15*l.* the most you ever got?—I believe it was; I am sure it was.

17,134. Did not you once get 20*l.*?—I do not believe I did; never 20*l.*

17,135. How often have you had 15*l.*?—Never but that once.

17,136. You have told us of three tens?—Yes, Mr. Jarman brought me three tens.

17,137. You have had probably seven elections, and you have only told us about four. You say you were not paid at the last one?—No, not a farthing.

17,138. You were not paid at the first one. Have not you received money five times? Was not there another time when you were paid?—I do not believe I was but three times.

17,139. Four times you have told us of, three tens and fifteen; 45*l.* you have received. Is that all you have received?—That is all I have received to the best of my knowledge.

17,140. Have you ever been promised anything you did not get?—Not to my knowledge.

17,141. Murlis, did he ever promise you anything?—No.

17,142. Did Heal ever pay you anything?—No.

17,143. Did he ever promise you anything?—He never promised me anything.

17,144. Then Ford and Jarman have been your chief friends in these matters?—Mr. Jarman brought it to my house. He never asked me for my vote, and I never asked him for money.

17,145. How did you vote at the last election?—Liberal.

17,146. How came you round? You voted first Liberal, then Tory three times running, then you came round to the Liberals. How came you to come round?—Because I picked up more work from the Liberals.

17,147. (Mr. Price.) Is there more work going amongst the Liberals, more employers of labour than amongst the Conservatives?—No, not more work in particular, but the Liberals knew me. I had more work from them.

17,148. I suppose you would lay a brick for a Tory as well as for a Liberal?—I am a carpenter.

17,149. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Cook promise you anything if you had voted that time, if you would go to the poll?—He never promised me anything.

17,150. Did he offer you anything?—Never.

17,151. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that he put his hand upon your arm and said nothing?—He asked me to go to the poll.

17,152. Tell us what he said to ou?—I believe he said, "Jim, are you going to poll?" something like that. I said, "No, I am not going to poll," and away I walked right up towards the town, and went into the "Clarence."

17,153. (Mr. Price.) Had you heard anything about money going at the "Clarence"?—No.

17,154. Why did you go into the "Clarence"?—Well, I did go in as I often do.

17,155. Is it a house that you frequent? Is the "Clarence" your house where you go to?—No, it is not.

17,156. Then why did you go into the "Clarence"?—I do not think I had any particular use for it.

(Mr. Price.) You do know why you went in, only you won't tell us. You went in there because you thought you would hear something about Conservative money.

(Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps you will remember better at the end of two hours' time; perhaps you will recollect then.

17,157. (Mr. Price.) Was not it because you heard that was the place to inquire if money was going on the Conservative side?—At the "Clarence"?

17,158. Yes?—That is the time that Jarman brought the 10*l.*

17,159. No, no; when you parted from Mr. Cook, when Mr. Cook asked you if you were going to poll, and you said "No." You said you left him and went into the "Clarence"?—Yes, I did.

17,160. Why did you go into the "Clarence"? Was it because you had had money from the Conservatives, or expected to get it?—Oh, dear no. I had it in the morning. Mr. Jarman brought it.

17,161. Therefore you went in there. What for, just to pass away the time?—Just to pass away the time.

17,162. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you had plenty of drink?—No, I can swear I never drank a shilling's worth of drink from any party in my life, never. I never used to go to any party for anything of the sort.

17,163. (Mr. Price.) What was the illness you were labouring under?—I caught cold.

17,164. (Mr. Coleridge.) Too bad a cold to enable you to vote?—Yes.

17,165. (Mr. Price.) Did any doctor tell you that he would send you some stuff that would keep you at home?—Not to my knowledge.

17,166. (Mr. Anstey.) It did not prevent you from going to the "Clarence," but from going to the poll?—No, it did not prevent me.

17,167. Speak the truth.—I am speaking the truth now.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Speaking it now?

17,168. (Mr. Anstey.) It did not prevent you going to the "Clarence," where you say you had nothing to do, but it did prevent you going to the poll where you had a great deal to do?—I did not go to the poll.

17,169. (Mr. Price.) Did you take any medicine?—No.

17,170. What was the cold you had?—Only a cold caught by getting wet.

17,171. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not the 10*l.* given you that you might not go and vote for the Liberals?—No.

17,172. Was it given you to vote for the Tories?—I considered so.

17,173. Yet you did not go?—No.

17,174. (Mr. Price.) Did they get you at the "Clarence" and say, "You have got a bad cold," and then get you to bed?—No.

17,175. Were you ever bottled up?—No, never locked up.

17,176. Were you put to bed on account of your cold, and had a posset?—No.

17,177. Were you put in the beer cellar with the tap left in the cask?—If I were it would be a long time before I should touch it.

17,178. But were you?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) If we are going on with Mr. Cook's examination I daresay this man's memory will come back to him. (To the witness.) If you want to reap a good character you had better wait here for a time and try and recollect.

17,179. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you ever voted at the municipal elections for the town council?—No.

17,180. Never voted at all?—I do not believe that I did.

17,181. Never in your life?—I do not believe that ever I did.

17,182. Have you ever got anything for voting or not voting there?—Never.

17,183. Not half a crown and a breakfast, or anything?—No, not half a crown or a breakfast. I never voted like that in my life.

17,184. (Mr. Price.) We do not consider that you have told us the whole truth about this 10*l.* that you got not to vote. You are keeping back something, because it is perfectly certain that you could tell us why you got the 10*l.*?—Please, your honour, I have not kept anything back.

17,185. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the time you got the 10*l.* from Mr. Jarman to vote for the Tories you promised him you would vote?—I never see him.

17,186. Who did see him?—My wife.

17,187. Did she promise for you?—Very likely she did.

17,188. Did somebody on the Liberal side come and give you anything not to vote at all?—No.

17,189. Was not there one election when you were paid by both sides?—I don't believe there was.

17,190. Was not there an election when you were paid by both sides, and that was the reason why you did not vote at all? Was it the last election? The last election you say you were not bribed at all?—No, I was not.

17,191. Was not there one election at which you were paid by both sides, and did not vote in consequence?—I cannot recollect. I do not think there was.

17,192. Is there not an election in which you were paid by both sides, and therefore you did not vote?—I do not believe I was.

17,193. (Mr. Anstey.) What did your wife tell you when she gave you the 10*l.*?—When I came home my wife told me that Mr. Jarman had been there and left 10*l.*

17,194. Had left a message for you?—Left a message? No, left no message.

17,195. You say "left a message," and "did not leave a message?"

(Mr. Coleridge.) In the meantime, whilst we go on, go and wait and just try if you cannot recollect the circumstances under which you were paid on both sides.

17,196. (Mr. Price.) You could not go and vote because you had a bad cold, and yet you were walking about the town, according to your own account?—I walked up through the town.

17,197. And you had a bad cold, and could not go the poll? Well, go down now.

(Mr. Anstey.) You are not to go away; you are to remain till your memory comes back. You are not to go out of the court; you are to remain here.

Mr. James Cook recalled.

Mr J. Cook.

17,198. (Mr. Price.) I only want just merely to ask you this question. How many interviews had you with Mr. Drake?—I only remember one or two. That is the most.

17,199. How was it that you went to Mr. Drake at all; do you remember that?—I do not remember how I went first to him.

17,200. I mean how was it you were brought into communication with Mr. Drake? That is what I want to know. Had you known anything of Mr.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

10 Sept. 1869.

Drake in connexion with Bridgwater elections before you went to town?—Nothing whatever.

17,201. So I understood?—None whatever.

17,202. How was it you were put into communication with Mr. Drake; was it through Mr. Henry Lovibond, or how was it?—I really forget how it was at this moment.

17,203. But at all events, in some sort of way you were put into communication with Mr. Drake as a person who ought to be consulted in the matter?—Yes.

17,204. And who was the person to be consulted?—Yes.

17,205. And you so understood in seeing him?—Yes.

17,206. And he heard all that had to be said, and there was some considerable discussion about it?—Very little indeed.

17,207. Did he appear to have been informed before you were there of the position in which matters stood with regard to Bridgwater?—He appeared to have a knowledge of it. He appeared to have a knowledge, certainly.

17,208. Then would you concur, or would you be surprised to hear, that Mr. Drake should state that he had no connexion whatever with Bridgwater election. Having been put in communication with him upon this very delicate topic of the compromise of this petition, the last petition, and having had a discussion in which he appeared to know all about it, would you be surprised to hear Mr. Drake said he had no connexion with Bridgwater elections?—I should. As I say, I don't believe I saw him then but for a short time, and once.

17,209. You understood from what he said and what transpired that he had been consulted before about the Bridgwater election?—He appeared to have a knowledge of it.

17,210. Therefore you would be surprised to hear that he said he had no connexion whatever with Bridgwater elections?—Yes.

17,211. I think, Mr. Cook, that really is all.

(The witness.) There are two or three things in connexion with 1865. I have not gone back into that.

17,212. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you engaged in the 1865 election?—Professionally, we were.

17,213. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you go to that, I have a question to ask you. At the last two elections for Bridgwater, the election of 1868 and the election of 1866, I believe your firm had the assistance of Thomas Boys, commonly called "Tom Boys," who had formerly been one of your most active dangerous foes?—Mr. Boys came into our office.

17,214. Is not that the fact?—But not in electioneering matters.

17,215. Cannot you answer the question and then make the explanation? I am obliged every time to say that?—I am sorry for it. It is not the fact that he has been engaged in electioneering matters at all. Then I will follow up the explanation by saying that in the month of August 1866, after the elections were over, we were then badly in want of a clerk; and I may say at once there is a great difficulty in getting a clerk in this part of the country. We have recently experienced that again. He then applied to us, knowing we wanted a clerk, asking if we had any objection to take him, alleging as his reason for leaving Messrs. Smith and Boyle (as I think the firm then was) the increase in his family and the increase in wages which he required, and that they did not feel disposed to comply with it; therefore it was his duty to better himself if he could.

17,216. Have you heard, either from him, from them, or from any other quarter, that there was a charge affecting his honesty regarding a sum of money, which was the cause of his separation from their office?—I had not heard it.

17,217. (Mr. Price.) Respecting 400*l.*; as large a sum as 400*l.*?—No, I had not.

17,218. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you heard of it since?—I have heard of it in this court, but never before.

17,219. (Mr. Price.) Here for the first time?—For the first time.

17,220. (Mr. Anstey.) By "this court" you mean this inquiry?—This inquiry.

17,221. Havs you ever heard there was any question affecting his honesty in pecuniary matters until you heard it mentioned the other day in the course of the inquiry before us?—That is the first time.

17,222. Are you quite clear that he has not helped you in electioneering matters?—Quite clear. If he has, it is certainly contrary to our direction, contrary to our expressed wish and desire in every respect.

17,223. Had he seen any of the witnesses that had to be marshalled, or the persons who were to be spoken to, with a view of seeing whether they would become witnesses or no in defence of the late petition?—No doubt during that time, in his capacity as clerk, he would assist in taking the proofs, and in various ways.

17,224. And you know taking of proofs means getting up that part of the case; as an attorney, you know that?—Clearly. For instance, if he was in office, and a person came in and wanted a proof taken——

17,225. On the former occasion, when he was in the office of Smith and Boyle, or whatever it was, there were imputations upon him, as we know from the evidence given before us as well as the evidence given before the House of Commons, to the effect that he had been putting forward, and the person who got up the evidence then persons as witnesses to swear to statements which were not true, and which he had extorted from them by getting their signature to the so-called proof, and then saying, "If "you do not support this on oath, you know, I shall "show your signature, your autograph, and so con-"vict you." Had you heard of it when you employed him or allowed him to be employed in getting up the proofs in support of Mr. Kinglake's and Mr. Vanderbyl's seat?—We were entirely, completely ignorant of it.

17,226. You have heard William Heal's statement, that when he went up to perjure himself, as he declared that he did deliberately do, at the bar of the House of Commons, "Tom Boys," as he calls him, was the cause of it, having procured his signature to an unsworn statement to the same effect, which he brandished in his hand, and said, "If you do not go and "swear to it, this will be produced against you "before the House of Commons, and you will be "convicted?"—I heard that Heal has said so. I was not in the court at the time.

17,227. Had you not heard of anything of that kind? I do not say of that particular incident, nor of that incident as he told it, but anything like it, having occurred before in the course of Mr. Boys' employment as lawyer's clerk, either with you or any other firm of solicitors?—Nothing with reference to the evidence or anything of that kind.

17,228. You know that refers to anything?—Certainly, in connexion with the election of 1865.

17,229. What had you heard?—This about his bribing the man Cooze.

17,230. I am talking about his getting up evidence?—Not about that.

17,231. You know he was examined as a witness before that committee?—I do.

17,232. You were one of the attorneys or agents employed?—We were, but took very little part.

17,233. Was it not part of the instructions which you gave to counsel on that occasion that Boys' evidence which he was expected to give, more particularly with reference to the case of the Osborne family, an old man of the name of Osborne with two daughters, that that story, which he was prepared to support on his oath, was a false story; that his oath if given would be given falsely. Now, was that the case you instructed your counsel to make?—I may say we gave no instructions to counsel excepting so far as our names were formally indorsed on the brief in conjunction with Mr. Benjamin Lovibond and Mr.

Henry Lovibond. We took very little part except at the beginning.

17,234. Now that was part of the case made against Boys on that occasion?—I heard it was.

17,235. And you heard that on that occasion Miss Osborne and Mr. Osborne were contradicted as completely as one oath can contradict another by Boys as to what took place at his house when Osborne said and Boys denied that he went to bribe?—I have no doubt it was on that occasion.

17,236. Then having heard in 1866 that Boys was a gentleman who was not particular in tampering with truth, whether sworn or unsworn, how came you to allow him to have anything to do with the getting up or the marshalling of proofs in support of Mr. Vanderbyl's seat at the late election? Did you think he had become reformed of that vice?—I do not know whether he had become reformed. He had never taken any part, and sheer necessity compelled us, as it were, to have his assistance.

17,237. Do you mean the sheer necessity of supporting a thoroughly rotten case by any evidence, right or wrong?—No.

17,238. What is the sheer necessity then?—The necessity of taking down and arranging the thing as a clerk in the office. It became necessary to employ him.

17,239. Was there no other person?—There is only one law stationer here, and the great difficulty is to get assistance.

17,240. I am speaking about talking to the witnesses and saying to A. and B., "What will you "swear if you go before Mr. Justice Blackburn? Can you go up to this mark or beyond it? Cannot you go further than that?"—It is unknown to me that he did so.

17,241. You know that is what is meant by "getting up proofs." You have drawn briefs yourself?—Many.

17,242. As a matter of fact, you know that in drawing your brief you proceed upon a number of raw materials collected in the form of little bits of paper of different shapes and sizes stuck together which contain the notes put down at the time by the clerk who has been talking to the witness. Well then, supposing in talking with the witnesses he tampers with the witnesses and gets this down, and then gives it to his master, his master has no means, has he, except his confidence in the personal integrity of the clerk, no means whatever to incline him to decide whether he shall incorporate these notes with the draft brief or not?—No; that is the principle.

17,243. Therefore you see the grave importance of the act you committed when you authorized this man, Tom Boys, stained with all these former practices of his own, authorized him to get up the defence of a case which you yourself declare to be so thoroughly hollow, a case that the counsel when they came down, even with these proofs before them, found that it was impossible to defend it. Do you not see that now?—Oh no doubt.

17,244. (Mr. Price.) What were the stains that you knew upon Mr. Boys' character?—All that we knew of was the report of the committee about his examination in April 1866.

17,245. Was it that it was supposed that Osborne was telling the truth and Boys was telling a lie?—Yes, and that Cooze was bribed.

17,246. That was all?—That was all.

17,247. Therefore you did not form a judgment excepting what you learned at that time. Your party were instructed that Boys was going to perjure himself?—Yes.

17,248. But you had no means of testing whether he had perjured himself or not?—No.

17,249. Did the committee believe him or not?—They could not have believed him, at I least infer from the fact that evidence was given to the effect that Boys bribed Cooze, and the committee reported Cooze as having been bribed.

17,250. (Mr. Anstey.) Now I want to know this; it appears to me very material. When you took a young man, or whatever he may be, into a confidential employment, which every attorney's clerk is more or less, did you make any inquiry as to how he left his former employer?—I did, and I went and saw Mr. Bealy Smith upon it, and asked him, and he corroborated what Boys himself had told me of the reasons of his leaving—the increase of family, and the increase of expenditure, and a desire for larger salary. They were giving him 30*s.* a week, and we have been giving him 2*l.* ever since.

17,251. (Mr. Price.) You understood that he had discharged himself from Mr. Smith's service?—Certainly.

17,252. And had not been a discharged clerk?—Certainly.

17,253–4. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Cook, you must not dispose of this so lightly. I thought you said you were perfectly familiar with the whole conduct of Boys before the committee? The Chief Commissioner mentioned one case; I will give you another?—There is the case of Cooze which I have quoted.

17,255. You remember that in answer 2832, Boys on that occasion distinctly denied upon oath John Cooze's statement that he had received 3*l.* from that witness as a bribe to vote for Westropp, and the committee disbelieving Boys found the fact of Cooze's having been so bribed?—Yes.

17,256. That is another case. The same day he denied having accompanied Cooze to the poll. He stated that John Staples, who was another witness, and who declared on oath that he had been bribed, had told him that the money had been received for freight, and not for a bribe. "The committee find John Staples was bribed by the payment of 10*l.*;" again discrediting Boys. Then there is a question as to which there is a conflict of testimony. William Gilbert, that is the case of conflict of testimony. Therefore I shall not trouble you with it. Now there are three clear cases, you see, and not one, of an oath taken to a fact within Mr. Boys' knowledge on that occasion, and taken falsely, not to speak of what William Heal, who is another witness on the occasion, and who states that he perjured himself under compulsion of the arrangement made with Boys as stated before us. That makes four; therefore you see you answered very lightly when you said that there was only that one case about the Osborne family?—I beg your pardon. I think I did to the learned Chief Commissioner say that the report of the committee was that Cooze was bribed.

(Mr. Price.) Oh yes.

17,257. (Mr. Anstey.) That makes two only?—Yes.

17,258. Therefore it is more than that. Therefore you had all this knowledge of the man in the first instance when you took him?—Yes.

17,259. (Mr. Coleridge.) As I understand, there is very great difficulty in getting clerks?—Yes.

17,260. I suppose you have not much pick and choice?—No; and we have recently experienced a like difficulty.

17,261. Do you mean you wanted a clerk lately?—Some two or three months ago we were advertising for a long time, and during the time Boys was with us, which was at least three or four years. We had clerks coming down from a distance, and stopping a short time and going.

17,262. What is the reason of the great difficulty? Are the wages particularly low?—No, I do not know what it is. In the first place I found their habits of life objectionable. In one instance a man was a drunkard.

17,263. Is there the same difficulty in Bristol, for instance?—I do not know.

17,264. (Mr. Price.) You have other establishments besides the one you have here?—We have one at Taunton.

17,265. Is that conducted by a clerk or a partner?—That is conducted by myself. We keep no clerk there.

17,266. I mean do you live at Taunton?—No.

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

10 Sept. 1869.

17,267. You go over from time to time?—The practice is to go over twice or three times a week.

17,268. How many clerks do you keep?—We have five, as well as an articled clerk.

17,269. Do the other solicitors in large practice here keep about the same number?—Yes.

17,270. Therefore you absorb all the ability there is in the way of clerks?—Yes, and as far as I know there is only one law stationer here, and he has no clerk.

17,271. (Mr. Coleridge.) In these five do you include office boys?—Yes, they sit down the same as the other clerks, and do copying.

17,272. (Mr. Price.) As far as I understand, you understood that Mr. Boys would not have left Mr. Smith's employment unless he had required increased salary?—Yes.

17,273. Mr. Smith would have kept him in his employment if he had not wanted more money?—Yes.

17,274. (Mr. Anstey.) You ascertained that from Mr. Smith—from Mr. Richard Bealy Smith—he told you so?—He told me so. Perhaps I should follow it up by saying that before this Commission sat Mr. Boys made a communication to me, which is the first time he ever made a communication to me upon this subject of his knowledge of electioneering matters before he reached us, upon which I eventually said, after hearing a very few words from him, "Whatever "you know, you had better go and immediately communicate to Mr. Purcell, the secretary." I believe he did act upon that, but what his communication is I do not know.

17,275. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now you are going on with 1865?—Yes, 1865; that took place in July.

17,276. (Mr. Price.) In reference to 1865 you will bear in mind, Mr. Cook, we really only want to know whether you can throw any light upon the question of corrupt practices; we do not want to go into a mere professional connexion with it. You have exhausted those payments of Searle, and Lott, and Forester, and Cooze?—That you have got.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Yes.

(The witness.) These are matters more within the acquaintance of my partner than myself. After the election on July 20th, there was a payment of 5*l.* 10*s.* to a man of the name of Charles Day; and on November 6th Kerle had of Mr. Reed two guineas. What I understand that to be is, that it is the same man Kerle to whom I referred in reference to the Bagehot election of 1866. He came down upon that occasion and voted, and afterwards, in the month of November, my partner remitted him two guineas for the expenses attending his coming to vote upon that occasion.

17,277. Were you in partnership in 1865?—This election was in July, and I had joined my partner on the previous 1st of May—two or three months. On the 1st of November a man of the name of Hobbs had a sum of 5*l.* paid to him.

17,278. What was that for?—It was a loan or advance to him at the time, and all these three sums, 5*l.* 10*s.*, 2*l.* 2*s.*, and 5*l.*, representing the amount given to the Chief Commissioner this morning, have at length been charged to Mr. Kinglake, and paid by him.

17,279. Charged to his party as election expenses?—Yes. I find that on July the 4th, 1865, a letter was written to Mr. George Reed, who was then living in Burnham, as to his canvassing two voters then in the employ of the Somersetshire and Dorsetshire Company at Highbridge.

17,280. Who is Mr. George Reed?—He has recently died.

17,281. Is he any relation to your partner?—Not that I am aware of.

17,282. A letter was then written to Mr. George Reed?—It is dated "4th of July." I will read it:—

"Dear sir, 4th July 1865.

"Bridgwater election.

"We enclose you the names and addresses of two "voters in this borough who are at present in the "employ of the Somerset and Dorset Railway Com-"pany, and if not asking you too much we shall feel "very much obliged if you would endeavour to get "them to vote in favour of the Liberal candidates, "Mr. Kinglake and Sir John V. Shelley. The elec-"tion will take place on Wednesday next. We have "reason to think that Mr. Westropp, the Conservative "candidate, and Mr. Lilly have been to Highbridge "to solicit the votes of the two men. An answer "will be esteemed a favour.

"Yours truly

"George Reed, Esq. Reed & Co."

There was no answer from that, and two days afterwards he was again written to on the subject, and it was those two men that Sir John Shelley, Mr. Kinglake, and myself afterwards went to canvass, and I think there are two or three other letters upon the same. There is a letter to Mr. Mole, and, curiously enough, Mr. Barham has referred to him in his evidence, and I find I wrote to him a letter on the occasion.

17,283. Did you promise to pay his expenses?—No. He wrote back in reply a letter which was in effect to say he had promised his vote. This is the answer of Mr. Mole:—"Dear sir, I was away on "Saturday from business, and in consequence did not "get your letter till this morning. I was written to "yesterday asking me to redeem a promise made "some months since to vote for Mr. W., and if I can "get away I can do no other than vote for him now. "I beg to thank you for your good wishes, and "should have been happy to have done as you solicit "had it not been for the reason above given." So that, as far as I know, was the——

17,284. He promised to vote for Westropp?—Yes. Then upon that occasion this man Kerle lived at Chard. He had recently removed from Bridgwater, and not having heard from him I was uncertain as to whether he would come. I asked Mr. George Rowe, who is a grocer in this borough, to go for him, and I believe on that occasion, in fact I have no doubt, I said, "You pay his expenses;" but when Mr. Rowe got up there he found that he had taken his ticket, and he did not pay his expenses. Then in the month of November my partner remitted the two guineas for the expenses. Then I find on September 7th we received 26*l.* 5*s.* each for our professional services.

17,285. For Kinglake's election?—For Kinglake and Sir John Shelley. Then there were some other expenses paid to us for money paid to bill posters, and other things. I have no doubt on my own mind that on that occasion I called at Messrs. Nicholls's establishment and gave orders for some colours; I am not quite sure, but I believe I did the same at Mr. William Hurman's, the draper. At election times there is no doubt there are on the part of captains of vessels many who are anxious to show colours, and there are people who are anxious to hang colours out of their windows, and they come and ask, "Why may I not have some colours?" and the consequence is that two or three weeks before, wherever there is an opportunity, a colour is exhibited showing which way the people will go. Therefore I say I did give an order at Nicholls's for colours, and also at Mr. Hurman's; and there was another draper in the town at the time, Mr. W. C. Simmons——

17,286. Were you ever met on that occasion by a tradesman who said he would not vote till he had a bill paid?—I do not know.

17,287. Or any other election?—I do not know.

17,288. Were you aware of any sums of money expended in corrupt practices other than treating at the election of 1865?—No.

17,289. (Mr. Price.) Any bribery on the part of the Liberal party?—No.

17,290. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you one of those four who had entered into the guarantee for 1,000*l.*?—No.

17,291. At the subsequent election, Bagehot's?—No, I was not.

17,292. Who were they?—My partner, Mr. Bate, Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Barham.

17,293. You do not know of any actual bribery on the Liberal side?—No.

17,294. Was it your opinion at the time there was bribery on the Conservative side?—Yes.

17,295. At the election time?—Yes. The impression, no doubt, was that money was going.

17,296. Was there no attempt made to stamp out all bribing on your side?—No. That brings me to a meeting that was held at the house of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, very late on the evening of the nomination day.

17,297. If there has been no attempt to pretend purity on the Liberal side, it is hard to understand why they let the election slip in the way they did as regards one seat?—Perhaps it is; and perhaps what I am going to say will in some way answer it. I remember very late on the evening of the nomination day of the election of 1865, a meeting took place at the house of Mr. Benjamin Lovibond. I know that my partner, myself, Mr. Henry Lovibond, and many others were present. I cannot enumerate them. It was in his dining room it was held, and perhaps 20 or 25 people were there; and they were then going through the lists, as is usual at election times, for the purpose of taking them out into districts, to give A. half a dozen names, and B. half a dozen, and so on. I remember well being there, and I should think it was till midnight; and then when that work was apparently finished, I think the question was raised (that is my impression as far as I can charge my memory) as to money matters. Who raised it at this precise moment I cannot venture to tell you; but I know this, that Mr. Lovibond said, "Well now, gentlemen, it is right "I should tell you that it is intended to fight this "election purely." Now, as far as I know, money matters, either in one shape or the other, had not been discussed at that election until that announcement was made, as late as midnight on the eve of the election; and then there had been from 20 to 25 people in his room for some two hours at least taking out these lists in the way which I have described. Now, speaking of that election of 1865, I have spoken of those orders for colours, and so on.

17,298. (Mr. Price.) Then was there no money spent either for Kinglake or Shelley?—None that I am aware of.

17,299. There would be no object in spending money for Kinglake in a one and one election of that kind?—Not that I am aware of.

17,300. It would only have been a struggle for one candidate?—As far as I know. There was only one Conservative candidate.

17,301. That is what I say. Therefore the struggle would be for the second seat?—Yes. Then in 1865 there are two accounts to which I beg to call your attention, and about which I was examined before the House of Commons in the month of April 1866. One was in reference to Mr. George Heal.

(Mr. Price.) The man we have had.

(Mr Anstey.) No, another.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It is William Heal we have had.

(Mr. Anstey.) It is the other brother on the opposite side.

(Witness.) I said then, and I say now, that I never gave that man any order for drink of any sort or kind. He was examined before the committee, and I heard nothing more of him as respects any account which he had in respect to that election until the month of January 1868, when his wife came to me some two or three times in great trouble, and alleged, and it was no doubt the fact, that Messrs. Carslake and Barham had then been pressing them for payment of a bill of about 16*l.*, which had been standing for some years against Heal in their books, for professional services rendered by them to him; and I may state that I had known Heal for some years, and he had not this money. His wife alleged that he had two or three cows die, and pigs. He was a dairyman in a small way, and it was impossible for him to get the money. Then they sent in that election account for 15*l.* 10*s.*, and then I inquired how it was incurred, and I found this—that a Mr. George Berry, who was at that time living upon the Bath Road, and near the "Bath Bridge" Inn, kept by Heal, and who was a man of some means (he lived not 100 yards from the "Bath Inn,") was in the habit, as I found from Mrs. Heal, of visiting Heal's house and acting as chairman when persons were present at night times at meetings held there, and he gave orders for drink from time to time, and promised to see them paid. Now, when Mrs. Heal made that statement to me, I said, "Well "then, if that is the case, the very best person you "can apply to is Mr. George Berry," upon which she left to see him. Or I should tell you this, that she told me that she had seen him once or twice before, and he said, "It cannot be paid now, you shall be "paid by-and-by with interest." I said, "You had "better tell him the trouble you are in with Messrs. "Carslake and Barham wanting this long outstanding "account paid." She saw him again, I think twice, and he said, "I have no money out of which it can be "paid." At length she induced me to pay this 15*l.* 10*s.* Now, if I am asked what I should have done with that, this particular item would have been charged in the account.

17,302. You are out of pocket at present?—Yes, I am.

17,303. Personally, or the firm?—Personally. I had known Heal, and I knew that his representations of trouble were correct. And then there is another thing in reference to that same election—Phelps's account. Upon that I still adhere to the evidence which I gave before the committee on that occasion. Phelps's account came, I think, to us, or he brought it, I believe, after Mr. Vanderbyl's first election, when there was a gathering of outstanding accounts for the purpose of their being liquidated, and there was a negotiation between ourselves and Mr. Henry Lovibond upon the subject, and as far as I can now charge my memory that account, part of which had been paid before, was struck out. I cannot tell what it was then. At all events, whatever his then claim was, it was liquidated by the payment of 10*l.* I believe that was the sum, for which sum we had a cheque from Mr. Lovibond, and that was paid over to Phelps in satisfaction, and afterwards the receipt was sent to Mr. Lovibond for it. Well, these are two things in particular arising out of that election.

17,304. (Mr. Anstey.) You have nothing further to add about that election?—No, I do not think so.

17,305. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything to do with 1859?—Nothing whatever. I was then a clerk in Messrs. Carslake and Barham's office.

17,306. (Mr. Anstey.) If you have finished your account about that election of 1865, I will ask you this. You say that Kinglake was safe, that the contest was between Westropp and Shelley?—No, I said there was only one Conservative candidate.

17,307. Then I will alter my question. You have said on a former occasion that Kinglake was safe at 10 or 11 o'clock that day—on the former occasion, not here?—Oh, I beg your pardon.

17,308. That the contest was between Westropp and Shelley?—Yes.

17,309. You told the House of Commons that, you know, several times; the contest was over as far as Kinglake was concerned as early as 10 or 11?—Yes.

17,310. Soon after that hour you received an application, did not you, from George Heal, of whom you spoke just now?—Yes.

17,311. For a bribe?—There was a message from him.

17,312. Just so. A message or an application is the same thing, and I believe you have several times mentioned it, three or four times, in examination-in-chief, cross-examination, and re-examination. You have mentioned, there is no doubt about it, that you sent him back this message: "Tell him if he wants "money he had better vote for Mr. Westropp, as the "Liberals cannot think of anything of that kind"?—Yes, I believe that was the message.

17,313. Now, why did you advise this man who

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

10 Sept. 1869.

was going to vote, or pretended that he was going to vote, for Sir John Shelley for a consideration, to go and vote for Westropp for one?—Well, the application or message, whichever it may be called, which I had to my mind no doubt showed that he wanted money.

17,314. Yes, but why? because your attention was drawn repeatedly and at length by the honorable election committee itself to these words, and you very properly, that being the truth of the case, adhered to your statement; you were asked again and again, why tell him not merely that you were not going to give money, but that he had better go and get money from Westropp? Why tell him that, and why tell him to go and vote for Westropp?—The message was, if he wanted money he had better vote for Westropp, for the Liberals would not think of giving it him.

17,315. Remembering the kind of man to whom you gave the message or to whom the message was to be delivered, and the air of the place, can you have any doubt that that would have been interpreted by this man Heal when it reached him into a positive recommendation on the part of Kinglake or on the part of Shelley to go and vote for the single Tory candidate, and to split his vote with the other Liberal?—Well, I do not know. I cannot answer for what impression it might have made upon his mind.

17,316. Would not it naturally produce that impression, "Go and vote for Westropp," or "Go and "vote for Westropp and Shelley, or Westropp and "Kinglake?"—It is possible that a man in his station of life might so understand it.

17,317. That is not what you meant to convey?—Oh, no.

17,318. (Mr. Coleridge.) What I understand is, "If "he wants money he must go to Westropp. We won't "give any?"—Yes.

17,319. It was not meant as a trap?—No.

17,320. You believe that to the best of your knowledge, on the part of the Liberals, the election of 1865 was a pure election?—To the best of my knowledge.

17,321. Did you claim the seat on the petition?—Yes.

17,322. Why did not you go into it if there was nothing against yourselves?—I cannot tell.

17,323. What was the majority?—A very large one; I suppose 90 or more.

17,324. It would be a tremendous expense for a scrutiny, and you had got a large number of bad votes?—Yes.

17,325. You did intend a scrutiny?—Yes.

17,326. Did you begin a scrutiny?—No.

17,327. (Mr. Anstey.) Now I will call your attention back to the first meeting at which you and your partner, Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Barham were together?—Yes.

17,328. When objection was taken by Mr. Barham to any corrupt practices, and when something was said about a determination, if possible, to have an election without corrupt practices, I will fix it on your mind by reminding you that you admitted, when you were asked the question, that Mr. Reed, your partner, in taking an opposite view expressed himself very warmly. I asked you whether he was not angry, and you said he certainly was warm?—Yes.

17,329. That was the first meeting you had. That was the meeting at Mr. Lovibond's, the meeting on Friday. There were only you four present?—Yes.

17,330. Very well, now just fix your thoughts upon that time, not upon the present time. Remembering what Mr. Barham said; what you were prepared to do and say, if Mr. Reed had not taken that strong line of opposition, is it your opinion or is it not your opinion that the result of that day's deliberation would have been, at all events for the time, a determination not to avail yourselves of Mr. Lovibond's provision of 1,500*l.* from Dr. Kinglake, but to fight the battle upon purity principles?—I do not think it would.

17,331. You do not think that if he had not been warm upon that occasion —— ?—I do not think it would have stayed the course. I do not think that if he had not been warm upon that occasion it would have had any other effect.

17,332. Supposing Mr. Reed had acquiesced in the proposal to fight upon purity principles. For instance, Mr. Barham would have been one vote, Mr. Reed would have been another. Which way would you have gone, supposing Mr. Reed had said, "I will agree"?—Indeed I confess I cannot tell which way I should have gone, but I had before my mind a firm conviction that the Convervatives would spend money, and it would have been a hopeless contest, and I certainly should have been unwilling to go in for purity of election, subject to no qualification as to what the Conservatives would do, believing, of course, that the Conservatives would have got in and we should have been thrown and scattered to the winds.

17,333. What effect would Mr. Reed's acquiescing in Mr. Barham's proposal have had upon Mr. Lovibond?—I do not think Mr. Reed's statement would influence Mr. Lovibond very much, because he has had much more experience, and he is a man of strong mind in that respect.

17,334. But I put it to you in this way. Mr. Barham was a kind of neutral, a friend of both candidates, or the representative of both candidates?—Yes.

17,335. Between Mr. Lovibond representing Mr. Kinglake, and your firm representing Mr. Vanderbyl, there was a coldness; and Mr. Barham was the bridge of communication between you. Supposing Mr. Reed, the senior partner in your firm, had acquiesced in Mr. Barham's view, and said, "Well, I quite "agree with what Mr. Barham says; I do not agree "to the proposal that Mr. Vanderbyl shall raise a "farthing to be spent in corrupt practices;" would that have influenced Mr. Lovibond, do you think, and induced him to give up the proposal to bribe on Kinglake's side, from what you remember of that interview?—I do not think it would. Perhaps Mr. Lovibond would have succeeded in a suggestion which he made of having a coalition between Westropp and Kinglake; and as far as I could judge from his mind at the moment he might have succeeded in bringing about a coalition between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake.

17,336. You think if Mr. Reed and Mr. Barham had stood firm, there would have still been a coalition on Mr. Kinglake's part?—Speaking from recollection.

17,337. You think that Mr. Kinglake's friends would have spent that money in bribing?—If his seat rendered it absolutely necessary.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Cook, I do not know that there is anything more we have to ask you; but, of course, as I have said to other witnesses, if anything occurs in the course of this inquiry we shall be glad to hear it from you. At present I am bound to say, speaking for myself, and I believe for my brethren, we are very much indebted to you for the statement you have made.

(Mr. Anstey.) I quite concur in that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) So do I, thoroughly.

17,338. You said that at the time of the election of 1859 you were a clerk in the office of Barham and Carslake?—Yes.

17,339. Did you take no part in the election as their clerk?—No. I was the chief assistant to Mr. Carslake, who acted in his capacity of town clerk, and his practice was to take no part in the elections.

17,340. But did you not attend to the registers?—No, except as regards the notices in respect to the revising barrister. I remember on one occasion, whether in 1859 or 1857 I cannot say, I showed my colour in the shape of having a green and purple necktie on the day of the election.

17,341. What colours were they?—That was indicative of being a Liberal. I remember Mr. Carslake in a very gentle way rebuking me for showing my colours, as I was with him assisting the mayor on the hustings. On that occasion I thought it was a rather severe rebuke from Mr. Carslake.

17,342. How did you vote yourself?—Liberal. It is just possible that other things will occur to my mind. There is one thing which occurs to my own mind which I should mention. There has been a great deal of inquiry during these proceedings about municipal matters. Some papers just caught my eye as I passed out of the box. I have put them together for the purpose of showing them to you. For the last four years we have aided and assisted in the election of town councillors on the 1st of November in each year, and I have here the four sets of accounts relating to the election of town councillors from the year 1865 up to and including the last. They are the original accounts. I find that in November 1865, there was a total expenditure of 5*l.* 17*s.* That was made up of Farmer's bill for printing 1*l.* 14*s.*, Palmer's bill for use of room 4*l.* 3*s.*, total 5*l.* 17*s.* That was divided between the three candidates, Mr. Nicholls, Mr. Rossitter, and Mr. John Smith, 1*l.* 19*s.* each. That was how it was made up.

17,343. Do you know of any corrupt practices at municipal elections?—I have known of none except on the last occasion.

17,344. That immediately preceded the parliamentary election, and I have no doubt was extensively used in connexion with it in many places?—The last time, one way and the other, I find that innkeepers' bills and other expenses are over 50*l.*

17,345. (Mr. Price.) Is that in one ward?—No, the entire election.

17,346. (Mr. Coleridge.) As against 5*l.* at the previous election?—As against 5*l.* in 1865, as against 7*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* in 1866, and as against 13*l.* 12*s.* in 1867.

17,347. (Mr. Price.) But, Mr. Cook, do you know of any practice—I do not know whether it is the habit, or whether it has been practised at only one election—of putting voting papers under men's doors with half a crown rolled up in them, with the name of the man for whom they are going to vote?—No.

17,348. And the presiding alderman rejecting a vote because they had got this paper with the name of a Mr. Somebody with half a crown, the man handing in a voting paper apparently intending to vote for Mr. Jones, and declaring that he wants to vote for somebody quite different, and the presiding alderman rejecting a vote under such circumstances?—I have never heard of such a practice.

17,349. We may attribute that rise in the cost at the last municipal election to the imminence of a general election?—Yes, there was great excitement.

17,350. Do you remember any case at the last municipal election of a vote having been secured by promises, or presents, or treating, or what not, with a view to the getting of the same vote at the then approaching parliamentary election?—No, I do not know of anything of the sort.

JAMES ABBOTT recalled.

J. Abbott.

17,351. (Mr. Price.) Is your wife here, Mr. Abbott?—No.

17,352. Where is she?—At home.

17,353. We have sent for her. How is it she does not come?

(Mr. Anstey.) We will send again. We must send a policeman for her.

17,354. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you recollected anything more since you went down about being bribed on both sides and not voting at all?—Yes, I have.

17,355. Do speak out and tell the truth?—I am speaking the truth.

17,356. Did you not on the last occasion get bribed on both sides?—No.

17,357. Did you not on one occasion get paid on both sides?—I believe I had 10*l.* from Mr. Henry Cook. I was a little drunk at the time.

17,358. And 10*l.* from Mr. Jarman?—10*l.* from Mr. Jarman.

17,359. Ten pounds from Mr. Cook?—From Mr. Henry Cook.

17,360. Then you were bribed on both sides?—On both sides.

17,361. Why did you not tell us that?—I was in liquor.

17,362. (Mr. Price.) You were not in liquor when you were in the box before?—I was when I had the money.

17,363. You did not recollect it?—No.

17,364. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is only since you have sat down under a threat that you have remembered this?—I would not speak of it if I did not know it.

17,365. (Mr. Anstey.) When Mr. James Cook laid his hand on your arm what did he say to you?—He said "Jim, are you going to poll?" I do not know exactly what, I was tipsy at the time. I believe that was all.

17,366. (Mr. Price.) Where had you got drunk?—Down at Gilbert's.

17,367. Did you get drunk at your own expense that day?—I did.

17,368. (Mr. Anstey.) Go on with what you were going to say. He laid his hand upon your arm and said, "Jim," or whatever it was, "are you going to poll?—I said I should not go to vote for no one. I had had money on both sides, and I would not go and vote for no one.

17,369. You told that to Mr. Cook?—I do not know whether it was Mr. Cook.

17,370. But this last witness?—This last gentleman.

17,371. What did he say to that?—I cannot make answer. There were so many round me.

17,372. You then went to the "Clarence"?—The "Clarence" Hotel.

17,373. What room did you go to, the taproom?—No.

17,374. Or the bar?—I went upstairs to the dining room or the drawing room, and sat there nearly an hour.

17,375. (Mr. Price.) "Sat" or "soaked" there nearly an hour, which did you say?—No, I did not.

17,376. Have you been drinking to-day?—No, I don't drink at all.

17,377. (Mr. Anstey.) You were drunk that day?—I was drunk that day, at election time.

(Mr. Anstey.) Very well, you must have been drinking that day.

17,378. (Mr. Coleridge.) Now just let us understand for the simplicity of our report, you got nothing last time, you swear?—I swear.

17,379. At Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866 you had got 10*l.* from Mr. Jarman?—I had three tens from Mr. Jarman.

17,380. Twice in 1866, and also in 1865, you had 10*l.* That was the Conservative side?—Yes.

17,381. Who gave it to you then, Mr. Jarman?—No, Henry Cook gave me 10*l.*

17,382. He gave it to you the same time that Jarman did? That was in 1866. But in 1865 you had 10*l.* from Jarman too, and voted for Westropp?—Yes.

17,383. Then you have told us there was another time before that when you had 15*l.* Who were the candidates?—I cannot tell, it is so long ago.

17,384. Who did you vote for, Mr. Kinglake I think you said?—I do not know.

(Mr. Anstey.) Yes, he did say that.

17,385. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who sent it to you?—Mr. Tom Ford, the attorney.

17,386. That makes altogether three tens and one fifteen, 45*l.* for your vote; is that all you have had?—I do not know.

17,387. Cannot you recollect?—I am no scholar at book.

17,388. Try and recollect whether there was not another election at which you were paid, some time between 1841 and 1859. At Mr. Kinglake's first election, which was in 1857, you got 15*l.* Between that time, 1857 and 1841, which I think is the time

SEVENTEENTH DAY.

J. Abbott.

you say you first had a vote, did you never receive anything?—I know it is a great many years that I never received nothing.

17,389. Was the 15*l.* you received to vote for Kinglake from Mr. Ford the first bribe you ever received?—I believe it was.

17,390. Are you sure about that?—I would not swear it.

17,391. What will you swear? Will you swear it was not?—No, I would not swear it was not.

17,392. What do you think about it, because receiving ten or fifteen pounds is not such a very common thing?—No, it is not.

17,393. Try and recollect whether you had not besides that 15*l.* received something else?—I do not think I did.

17,394. (Mr. Price.) Did you ever vote without getting money?—Yes.

17,395. (Mr. Coleridge.) When?—The last time.

17,396. Did you ever before?—Yes, I believe I have.

17,397. How often have you voted without getting money?—I believe I have only got three tens from Mr. Jarman, and 15*l.* from Mr. Ford.

17,398. (Mr. Price.) And it was that double dose that made you so ill you could not get to the poll?—I do not know about the double dose. I was in liquor on that day.

17,399. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the message which your wife delivered on that morning from Mr. Jarman when he left the money?—I did not see my wife that morning when he brought the money.

17,400. I did not ask you anything about seeing your wife. You told me that she gave you the money and said Mr. Jarman had left it?—Yes.

17,401. What message did you get with it?—That Mr. Jarman brought the money and said, "I suppose he is going to vote for Westropp?"

17,402. The loss of your journey to Cannington has been very helpful to your memory. You did not recollect that 10*l.* until we spoke about it?—No.

17,403. You believe that 15*l.* was the first thing you received?—I believe it was. I cannot recollect any before.

Mrs. Mary Abbott sworn.

Mrs. Abbott.

17,404. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long have you been married?—Nearly 35 years.

17,405. When your husband got bribed at elections used he to give you the money?—I generally used to take it.

17,406. How often have you taken it?—I cannot say that.

17,407. About?—Perhaps I have so many as three or four times.

17,408. More than that?—Sometimes we have been promised and never had it.

17,409. When were you promised and did not get it?—I cannot remember that; it is so long ago. I have got different things in my mind.

17,410. Was it a Mr. Murlis who promised you?—Mr. Murlis? No, never.

17,411. Who promised you and did not pay you?—I cannot say.

17,412. Try and recollect?—I cannot recollect, because I do not know who it was. There were several people came to my house. We expected to have it after the election was over, and did not have it.

17,413. What did you get at the last election?—Nothing.

17,414. Were you promised anything?—No, never; neither fee nor reward.

17,415. In 1866, when Mr. Vanderbyl came in, what did you get?—10*l.*

17,416. Who from?—Frederick Jarman.

17,417. Did you get another 10*l.* from Mr. Cook?—No, never.

17,418. At the election before, Bagehot's election, what did you get from Mr. Jarman then?—10*l.*

17,419. What did you get from Mr. Cook?—Not a farthing.

17,420. Your husband has sworn that he got 10*l.* from him too?—Never, never. Mr. Cook has never promised us fee nor reward.

17,421. Your husband has sworn to it to-day that in Bagehot's election he got 10*l.* from Mr. Jarman, and 10*l.* from Mr. Cook. Is that so or not?—Then he has said wrong.

17,422. It was the election he did not vote at all at?—I do not think he had anything that election from either side.

17,423. That was in Bagehot's election of 1866?—Yes.

17,424. He has told us that he was poorly and did not vote?—He did not.

17,425. And he has told us that he told people that he had got money on both sides, and that was the reason?—If he has said so it is not true.

17,426. If he did get it he did not give it to you?—No.

17,427. He has sworn on his oath to-day that he was bribed on both sides, and that he did not vote?—That is a mistake. It is no such thing. I have generally had command of the money, and generally had the conversation with the gentlemen when they came; but as to Mr. Cook coming he did not.

17,428. Did your husband ever get a mysterious 10*l.* from Mr. Cook?—No, he never got it; or if he did he squandered it away.

17,429. He only gave you the 10*l.* from Mr. Jarman?—I took that myself.

17,430. Then if he took the other he never gave it to you?—I don't think he did.

17,431. In 1865 what did he get?—Nothing.

17,432. He has told us that he got 10*l.* at Shelley's?—Yes, he had 10*l.* from Mr. Westropp's election when he was defeated; the next when Mr. Bagehot came, then he had it from Mr. Jarman for Mr. Patton, and 10*l.* from Mr. Jarman at the next election, and he did not vote at all; and I don't believe he had any more.

17,433. Then he has told us that at some former election, he cannot exactly fix what, he got 15*l.* to vote for Mr. Kinglake. When was that?—I do not know. Some years ago. I cannot remember anything of that. I cannot tax my memory as far back as that.

17,434. As far as you can tax your memory, how much has he received altogether to your knowledge for his vote since you have been married to him?—I could not pretend to count.

17,435. Cannot you recollect anything about 15*l.*?—No. I am sure he has not had 15*l.*

17,436. He swears he has?—Well, then he tells wrong.

17,437. You do not believe he ever got 15*l.* What is the most?—If he did he kept it back; he did not give it to me.

17,438. What is the most he ever got for any election?—10*l.* That is the most to the best of my knowledge he ever got.

17,439. What was the first time he was ever bribed? How long ago?—That I cannot tell.

17,440. Was it 20 years ago? Do you recollect about 20 years ago his having a bribe?—That I cannot recollect. He has had a vote 40 years.

17,441. But a bribe?—He has not been bribed every time.

17,442. How long has he been bribed?—I cannot recollect his being bribed except at those elections.

17,443. Don't you recollect the time he got 15*l.*?—No, not to my knowledge.

17,444. He said Mr. Ford the attorney gave him 15*l.* in 1857 to vote for Kinglake?—Well, I believe he has told wrong. He is a gentleman I never spoke to in my life.

17,445. Who has ever bribed you besides Mr.

Jarman that you know of?—I do not believe anybody ever did.

17,446. How much has he got altogether? Has he got 100*l.* for bribes altogether?—No.

17,447. Not much less?—I do not know.

17,448. He has told us of 45*l.* himself?—Then I know nothing about it.

17,449. Did you ever get anything without telling him?—I was for the Liberals. I was very angry with him. I knew money was very brisk, and I thought I might as well take it. I do not think Mr. Jarman solicited him for his vote.

17,450. You cannot recollect about the 15*l.* from Mr. Ford?—No, I cannot.

17,451. Or any promise?—No.

17,452. How long ago was it when he first got money?—I do not know.

17,453. Was it 20 years ago?—No, I should not say it was.

17,454. Who was it that promised him when he did not get it?—That I cannot tell.

17,455. How much was promised? You can tell that?—I do not know whether it was 10*l.* or 15*l.* I cannot tell.

17,456. Was it 10 or 15 or more?—I do not know that he ever got it. It is useless for me to try and go back to any further elections, because I cannot remember the time when he was promised and did not get it.

17,457. Did you go and try and get it for him?—Oh no!

17,458. Who promised you?—He has been obliged to vote for interest both sides because of his business, to please different parties. I do not say that he has ever been compelled to do so, but still he has a desire to do so, to please his employers.

17,459. Unfortunately when there was only one member to be returned, and he got bribed on both sides, he did not vote either way, to please both parties?—I do not remember only one member being returned, without it was at the last election.

17,460. Do not you remember when Mr. Patton was returned, there was only one member returned?—No, I know there was not.

17,461. You know he has said that he got 10*l.* on each side. Do you know any other time when he was bribed on both sides?—No, I do not.

17,462. (Mr. Anstey.) Mrs. Abbott, you said that when the gentlemen came to you about your husband's vote you generally have spoken to them?—Yes, I have.

17,463. Who were the gentlemen that came to you?—I cannot say anyone that came when they came for the purpose of getting the vote. It was in the canvass.

17,464. We were talking about the bribes, you know. You were asked what was the amount paid for his vote at this and that election, and then you said you settled about his vote, and you saw the gentlemen who came. Tell us who they were that settled with you how much money he was to have for his vote?—No one but Mr. Jarman.

17,465. That was only on that side?—On that side.

17,466. On the Liberal side who came?—No person at all. No one ever came at all.

17,467. Not Mr. Henry Cook?—No, never, never.

17,468. But Mr. Jarman used to come and settle with you, did he, and say, "Your husband shall have "10*l.* if he votes?"—Mr. Jarman has been a neighbour by us a great many years, and he may have come and given it to me, and perhaps the first he gave me two or three days after the election was over.

17,469. Did Mr. Westropp ever come to you?—No more than when he canvassed.

17,470. Did Mr. Veysey the lawyer?—Oh yes, Mr. Veysey came.

17,471. Did Mr. Veysey the lawyer ever say anything to you about paying for your husband's vote?—Oh no, never.

17,472. Are you sure?—Sure. Never, to the best of my knowledge.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Abbott, you may go. You may settle that difference with your wife about that other 10*l.* You may go now.

Mr. Joseph Palmer sworn.

Mr. J. Palmer.

17,473. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Palmer?—An agent.

17,474. You are a voter for the borough?—I am.

17,475. What part did you take in the last election, 1868?—The only part that I took was attending a meeting at Mr. Nicholls's on the Sunday evening.

17,476. That is the meeting of 12?—Well, it was the meeting that was held about half-past 11 or 12.

17,477. But it was a meeting of about 12 of you?—I think it was. I may state here that Mr. Barham has stated in evidence that I was present at the afternoon meeting; I was not at that meeting in the evening. Mr. Nicholls left word for me to go to his house, and I had no knowledge what the meeting was for. I had no knowledge that it was a meeting at all, nothing more than a private interview with him; but when I got there I found a number of gentlemen assembled.

17,478. Was that all the part you took, being at this meeting?—That was the only part I took.

17,479. Had you anything to do with the bribing or distributing money, or the knowledge it was going to be distributed?—Nothing whatever at that or any previous election.

17,480. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you go to Mr. Vanderbyl on that night?—Yes.

17,481. You were one of the deputation?—I was one of the four.

17,482. (Mr. Price.) You have heard the account which has been given?—Yes.

17,483. Do you agree with that?—Yes.

17,484. (Mr. Anstey.) Whose account?—Mr. Wilton's, and Mr. Collins's.

17,485. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did Mr. Fennelly say to you about money matters; that is the important part of it?—Mr. Vanderbyl commenced it, and said he had been pressed very much by the lawyers to spend money, and he had declined to do so; and he said there was one honourable exception. He mentioned that.

17,486. Who was the honourable exception?—I do not know.

17,487. (Mr. Price.) He did not give you the name at all?—I can only form my own opinion.

17,488. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who do you imagine it was?—I thought it was Mr. Barham.

17,489. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you going to say something about Mr. Fennelly?—Mr. Fennelly did make a remark, but I do not remember exactly the words of it.

17,490. Do you recollect some conversation about the Lundy Island Granite Company?—I do.

17,491. Do you recollect his saying something about its being not the Lundy Island Granite Company but money that you wanted?—I did not understand that it was applied to the deputation.

17,492. No, no, but what did he say about it?—He said, "Well, gentlemen, is not it money that you want?" or something of that sort, a remark of that kind.

17,493. There was certainly a remark of that kind?—Yes.

17,494. After the deputation was over you went back to the others?—I did.

17,495. Did the deputation relate what had taken place?—They did.

17,496. And, amongst other things, did they relate this remark of Mr. Fennelly, "Well, gentlemen, is not it money you want"?—I do not remember whether they made that remark, but I remember perfectly well that Mr. Vanderbyl had given the lawyers a pretty good character, and said they had put a great deal of pressure upon him to induce him to spend money, and we told him it was not to get him to spend money but to retire.

17,497. Leaving Mr. Kinglake, who would spend money, to stand?—No, it was not with that view. Our wish was that Mr. Kinglake would stand, in conjunction with Mr. Westropp, and avoid the expenditure of money at all.

17,498. Without troubling you to give an account of your views, I wish to know what took place when Mr. Fennelly made the observation, "Well, gentlemen, is not it money you want?" Did any of you make any answer to that?—I was under the impression, till I heard the evidence of former witnesses, that it was again stated that we did not go with a view of putting a pressure upon Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money, and we discarded the idea of money altogether.

17,499. It is clear what Mr. Fennelly the same night told Mr. Cook, the solicitor, that there was no reply to that. Mr. Cook has sworn to that. Does that consist with your impression?—That was not my impression, but I am not prepared to swear.

17,500. You are quite right. Well now, the only reply made to Mr. Fennelly, at all events, was what you mentioned that it was not a question about spending money, but about Mr. Vanderbyl's retiring?—Yes, but we were anxious to secure one of the seats at least for the Liberals.

17,501. That was on the assumption that no money was to be spent?—On the assumption that no money was to be spent.

17,502. But if money was spent, did you then persist in calling upon Mr. Vanderbyl to retire?—Well, we wished to get him to retire altogether.

17,503. That was on the assumption that no money was to be spent; but supposing money was going to be spent?—We still wished him to retire.

17,504. It has been stated positively by one of the witnesses, if not two, that the alternative was presented to him at one of the meetings, "Either you "must go on and spend money, or else one of the "candidates must retire;" and that that was the alternative, and that next morning you were to have met him again to receive his determination?—Certainly not. That was not my impression in the least.

17,505. One of the witnesses has distinctly sworn that he was prepared to have gone to him on the following morning at 10 o'clock, only Mr. Cook said to him, "It is all right," by which he knew that Mr. Vanderbyl was going to spend money?—I can only speak for myself that I had no such idea.

17,506. Was not the whole conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly on the assumption which you have mentioned, that there was to be no money spent. Was not it put in this way, "If we are to "have an election contest on purity principles we "shall lose it altogether, if there is to be a contest; "therefore we had better have an election of one and "one?"—Certainly.

17,507. "Otherwise we shall lose both?"—Certainly.

17,508. But the other alternative, what was to be done if money was to be spent, had that occurred to your mind. I am speaking of you?—Certainly not.

17,509. (Mr. Price.) Was that ever discussed?—It was not discussed.

17,510. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it mentioned, if not discussed; was there any mention made of that as an alternative?—No.

17,511. Then what do you say now to the witness, I forget his name, I forget which witness it was, but I have a distinct recollection of his evidence, that next morning—I think it was Mr. Nicholls himself—that next morning when Mr. Cook came to him and said, "It is all right," he knew by that that Mr. Vanderbyl was prepared to accept the other alternative, and was prepared to spend money?—We never went there with that view at all.

17,512. You did not?—I did not, and I am sure that none of the others of the deputation did.

17,513. You did not hear Mr. Nicholls's evidence?—I did not.

A djourned to Monday, September 13th, 1869, at 12 o'clock.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

Monday, 13th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

13 Sept. 1869.

Mr. JAMES COOK recalled.

17,514. (Mr. Anstey.) You and other witnesses have spoken so strongly to your opinion that this borough is essentially a Liberal borough, assuming purity of election on both sides, that I will ask you to refresh your memory by reading over that portion of the brief prepared by you on the late election which relates to that matter, and having refreshed your memory I will ask you now, keeping the brief by you to assist you, in fewer words of course than you have used there, the points which you have there stated, in proof of your assertion that this was then a Liberal borough?—One of the allegations contained in the brief is, "That the staple trades of the town are brick and tile manufactories," and that "all the merchants en- "gaged in the manufacturing and selling of those "articles are Liberal in politics, with one exception, "namely, Mr. Charles Major, of the firm of Henry, "Charles, and James Major," he is also in the same trade, but he takes little or no part in political matters in the town, I believe. Then, in addition to that fact, there is also, as I have always understood, the larger proportion of the owners and masters of ships belonging to and frequenting the port, as well as the principal tradesmen of the town, and it is from the belief that those persons, particularly the brick and tile manufacturers, employ a large number of persons, that that sort of influence which no doubt the fact of the employers being Liberal indirectly exercises over the employés, would to a certain extent induce them to vote in the same manner in which the employers invariably do.

17,515. Can you state, first of all, with respect to Liberal manufacturers, what votes in the present constituency would be likely to be affected by that indirect influence that you speak of, in their case?—You are confining it to the manufacturers?

17,516. Yes?—In round figures I should have thought a couple of hundred votes.

17,517. And next with regard to the seafaring and shipowning interest?—I scarcely can form an estimate of that; but I believe it to be the fact, at all events it is generally believed now in the town, that a large proportion of the owners and of the captains of sailing vessels are liberally inclined, in the way in which I have indicated.

17,518. And then, when you speak of that indirect influence exercised by employers, whether manufacturers or shipowners, ship masters or ship agents, and so forth, do you mean that kind of indirect influence which is called in the statute of the 31st and 32nd Victoria, "corrupt practices," "undue influence"?—No, I did not mean it in that sense.

17,519. But is it open to that, is it open to be abused in that way?—No doubt, if the employers chose, there is a power which could be abused, no doubt.

17,520. Does it go to this extent, do you think, whether direct or indirect, that it interferes practically with the independent exercise of the franchise?—I should think it is very likely that it did.

17,521. There is another thing I wanted to ask you about, with respect to another matter which I had forgotten to ask you when you were examined before. Mr. Lomas has told the Commission that he kept the money which he had by him during the whole of the forenoon after receiving it, in vain expecting someone to come to him with the password, "Eureka," and not being applied to by anybody with that password, he gave it up to Mr. Fennelly, who came for it himself early in the afternoon. Now, was any arrangement made of which you know anything touching the use of that password "Eureka"?—No; the word was not mine; but the communication which was made by Mr. Fennelly to Mr. Lomas at about perhaps 11, or something of that sort, in the morning of the polling day, was the result of my communication to him, by which I said, "Well, we look upon this thing "as gone, and we had better communicate with Mr. "Lomas where he is, to let no money go to anybody." Then the word "Eureka" was not mine, but it must have been Mr. Fennelly's; but I must say this, I did not understand Mr. Lomas, I might have misunderstood him, I did not understand him to say that Mr. Fennelly had the money at half-past two. What was done was, that Mr. Fennelly, by a suggestion of mine, sent or went to Mr. Lomas, who was still at that time at the "Railway" hotel, and had him up at the "Globe."

17,522. Well, it is the same thing?—Yes, that was the thing.

17,523. He got the money at all events?—Yes.

17,524. Out of Mr. Lomas' hands?—Yes.

17,525. Nobody using the password "Eureka" having come for it?—Oh, no. While I am here I may say that there are two or three matters which, between my last examination and to-day, I have thought of, and which I should like to refer to.

17,526. One point I want to ask you about first. Mr. Hennet appears in evidence to have been a principal agent or go-between in connexion with Mr. Vanderbyl's proposal of the Saturday and Sunday to coalesce against Kinglake and with Westropp?—Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp.

17,527. Yes?—Yes.

17,528. Well, you acted for Mr. Vanderbyl, you know?—Yes.

17,529. Did you have any communication about that with Mr. Hennet?—Not one single word.

17,530. Therefore, if Mr. Hennet received any authority it was not from the firm of Messrs. Reed and Cook?—Clearly not.

17,531. It was unknown to Messrs. Reed & Cook?—It was unknown to Messrs. Reed & Cook until Mr. Fennelly himself made a communication at midnight on Sunday.

17,532. Stating that it had taken place?—Stating that an interview had taken place that evening.

17,533. Did Vanderbyl ever say anything to you afterwards about it?—I have not the slightest recollection.

17,534. I mean by "afterwards," at any time after his interview with Mr. Westropp took place?—I have no recollection of his doing so.

17,535. (Mr. Price.) It was mentioned the other day, I think by Mr. Wilton and Mr. Collins, that either you, or somebody had said in your presence, that when the change of determination was announced by Mr. Lovibond that Mr. Vanderbyl was ready, or Mr. Fennelly was ready to spend money, that somebody said, "Then the meeting last night has not been without its effect"?—Yes.

17,536. That was Mr. Lovibond?—That was Mr. Lovibond.

17,537. Then did you understand Mr. Lovibond by that to refer to the meeting of the deputation with Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl?—No; the meeting which had taken place at Nicholls' house.

(Mr. Price.) That is what I wanted to know.

17,538. (Mr. Anstey.) You mean the meeting which sent the deputation?—I mean the meeting which sent the deputation.

17,539. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Wilton and Mr. Collins repudiated very strongly the idea that they said anything about money matters to Mr. Vanderbyl, or in Mr. Vanderbyl's presence, and it struck me that that part of your evidence was ambiguous; it might refer to the meeting of the deputation or it might refer to the other, but you now say that you understood Mr. Lovibond to refer to Mr. Nicholls' meeting?—To Mr. Nicholls' meeting; and that view was confirmed, because, as I before told you, I did not tell Mr. Lovibond when I met him that morning of the meeting between Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Hennet, for the reason that I was bound not to do so. Up to the moment when Mr. Lovibond made the observation that "last night's meeting was not without influence," I had not communicated to him the fact of the meeting between Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Hennet on the Sunday evening. As I said before, he referred to masonic matters which I was bound not to communicate. There is something else I wish to state. I omitted to state on my last examination that I was one of the persons who was initiated as a Forester a few days prior to the election, at the Mansion House here in this town. It was a few days prior to the election. It was upon the election of Mr. Kinglake—Mr. Vanderbyl, Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Barham, Mr. Reed, and myself. We were all initiated at one time; some few days prior to the election. I cannot fix the day now, and the initiation fee was, I think, a guinea, which we each of us paid; and there is no doubt, after the initiation took place, there was refreshment or rather grogs supplied. There was a large attendance of the members of the order there, and there was a free supply of grog I think for at least an hour after the initiation took place. I forgot to state that fact the other day, and it is the fact; and either the next day or a day or two after a bill was sent down to us for, I think, 10*l.*, as representing the cost of what had been had at the time of the initiation; but as I felt we had not been giving any orders, I stated, "We did not give any "orders, and therefore you must not look to us for "any payment of any money." I think that was also prior to the election. I will not be sure of it.

17,540. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know anything of the "Shepherds"?—Oh, I beg your pardon, I think it was the "Shepherds." I misquoted the order—that was the order—the "Shepherds."

17,541. They all voted for the Liberals?—I do not know how they did vote.

17,542. They had voted at former elections for the

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Cook.

18 Sept. 1869.

Liberals?—I do not know, it is very likely that they did, but it was at this meeting that this Palmer was present that Bussell mentioned.

17,543. Palmer alias Fackerell?—Yes.

17,544. What was he doing there?—He was in some office in the order, and he was taking a part. I do not remember anything more, except this, I remember after the initiation took place he was one of the first called upon by the chairman to sing a song, and he did so. Then I find I omitted to state in my evidence the fact of my having called upon Mr. John Smith on the Friday to ask him to assist in the way in which Mr. John Smith has stated in getting out the list, as we were behind in our work, and it is true what he said with respect to the conversation he had with me about money matters, because we had had two or three meetings before, as far as I remember, and it was agreed with Mr. Vanderbyl that there should be no money.

17,545. (Mr. Price.) As to Mr. John Smith, were any of your party aware that Mr. John Smith had had any communication with Mr. Westropp of the character I have read to you?—No, I was not certainly aware of it myself.

17,546. And as far as you know, none of the party were aware of it?—No, not as far as I know.

17,547. That Mr. John Smith had been begging favours of Mr. Westropp?—No.

17,548. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you not heard that some people here read out his letter from a window in a public street, his letter to Mr. Westropp?—No, but I have heard it said so since.

17,549. That must have been pretty well known in the town?—I should have thought so, but I did not hear of it at the time. As far as I can charge my memory the first time I heard of it was on the 4th December, in London, at the interview that I had with Mr. Westropp, when he referred to it. I believe that was the first time I heard of it.

17,550. What did he say about it?—That Mr. John Smith, had been asking him about some favours, or something of that sort, and he did not think he had acted quite fair about it; he rather complained of the way in which Mr. John Smith had acted towards him. I believe that was the first time I heard it.

17,551. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you find Mr. John Smith, when you went to him on the Friday, or sometime afterwards, showed a reluctance to take an active part in the election?—Well, he certainly was reluctant, and as I understood had made an appointment to go away.

17,552. And not to be at the election?—And not to be at the election.

17,553. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know anything about a disputed account between Mr. Kinglake and Mr. John Smith, in which Mr. Kinglake thought he had been very ill-used, and wrote afterwards to say that he thought it was a blackguard claim, but he thought it had better be paid, at the prior election?—No.

17,554. You do not know anything about that?—No, we had very little to do with what I call subsequent accounts after the election. I omitted to state in my evidence given with reference to municipal matters——

17,555. (Mr. Price.) I was going to ask you a question about that?—I said when I was in the box on Friday that there had not been treating during the time I have been in partnership with Mr. Reed, but before that, four or five years ago, there was an election in which Mr. Clifford Symons got in as a member of the town council, and there was a good deal of treating at the time, and I believe there was an expenditure of about 20*l.* to secure his election.

17,556. The only question is, whether you believe that that expenditure was done in any way to influence the election of borough members?—No.

17,557. Has it ever been thought worth while in this borough to get a majority (it is so in many boroughs), as tending to create a majority also on the burgess roll?—I never heard of that in that light, but there is a fact existing in Bridgwater for some years; there is an arrangement that there should be 14 Liberals. As you know, the corporation consists of 24 members, and it has been considered better (in answer to the question put to me by Mr. Anstey just now as to the borough being a Liberal one) that there should be 14 Liberals in the town council and 10 Conservatives, and to a certain extent there should be one mayor one year, and that on every alternate year there should be a change, and that has been acted on for many years past.

17,558. (Mr. Anstey.) Has there been any contest between the Liberals and the Conservatives as such at the municipal elections, or only between persons who want to get in, without reference to Liberal or Conservative politics?—There has been a contest between both parties.

17,559. How do you mean there has been an arrangement that they should be 14 to 10?—There has been that arrangement, and parties on both sides have complained of the arrangement, and attempts have been made every now and then to break through it.

17,560. Do you know any instance, at any time, of a consistent Liberal supporting a prominent Conservative in the town council?—Politics are not much brought into play at the elections for the town council.

17,561. Since the franchise has been extended under Mr. Disraeli's Act, have you seen any tendency to work the municipal elections with a view to the working of future parliamentary elections?—No, I have not.

17,562. (Mr. Price.) I forgot to ask you this: do you know of any transaction of a sum of money being put in a paper and put under the doors of the electors at the municipal elections, and their being asked in the paper to vote for a particular individual?—No, you asked me that question, but I was not aware of it. I propose to make copies of any correspondence I have, and to place it in the hands of the Commissioners. That shall be done at once.

17,563. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you been able to tax your memory as to whether Mr. Kinglake was ever a partner in Stuckey's bank?—I have not made any inquiries; nothing has transpired since my last examination, to make me give a different answer.

Dr. W. L. Winterbotham.

Dr. Washington Lafayette Winterbotham recalled.

17,564. (Mr. Price.) You wish to state something about Mr. Sully's state of health?—He will be able to be here on Wednesday, I think, if you will kindly take him first, so as not to keep him long about.

(Mr. Price.) Oh yes, we appoint him for 11 o'clock.

Mr. G. Wilton.

Mr. George Wilton recalled.

17,565. (Mr. Price.) Mr. George Wilton, you have written us a letter in which you say you wish to make an explanation to save time. I have no objection to that, but you say that you thought you were confined to answering the questions. In point of fact you were not asked hardly any questions. You were asked to make your statement; however, there is no reason that you should not be allowed to add to your statement. Both you and Mr. Collins were told to make statements; you were asked at the end whether you had said all you had to say. There is no objection to your adding to what you have already stated?—Well, sir, I have more particularly referred to my examination on Friday morning. It will be in your recollection that I made one or two attempts to say something which you did not catch perhaps. That is what I want to say. I wanted to commence with the Monday morning, and go through the Monday and the Tuesday. I am sorry if I have misunderstood.

17,566. I thought you had told us all. Tell us about the Monday and the Tuesday. I thought you said that on the polling day, you said to a man, "You will "want some freight some day?"—Yes, that referred to the election of 1865.

17,567. What do you say about the Monday and Tuesday, the last election?—With respect to the Monday, I wish to state that just before going from the Town Hall to the hustings, Mr. Vanderbyl spoke to me in this hall, and he took me on one side, which is just on this spot, and said, "I have arranged to pro-"ceed with my election. Are you going to nominate "me?" I said, "I am not, but I understand that "your nomination is arranged." He then asked me if I would support him, and I said I would.

17,568. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not he ask you why you would not nominate him?—He did not, but I should say that I told Mr. Vanderbyl on the Sunday evening that I would not nominate him, when we were present together in the "Globe" hotel.

17,569. Did he ask you the reason then?—Well, I think Mr. Vanderbyl ought to have concluded why I would not nominate him.

17,570. But did he ask you?—No, he did not.

17,571. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell him why?—No, I did not tell him why; I told him I could not nominate him.

17,572. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why?—I will tell you. In the first place I am not accustomed to public speaking, and secondly, I must confess to you I did not like the look of things. I did not like it at all. Things were not going on all right. That is the reason.

17,573. You did not want to nominate a losing man?—No, I did not, and when I speak now of the words used by Mr. Vanderbyl, I could not swear whether those were positively the exact words that he used, but that is the sense that I believe he intended to convey. Then on the polling day, I do not know whether there is any point of interest particular, I met Mr. Lovibond in the High Street, I should think between 9 and 10 o'clock in the morning, and he asked me if I could tell what the Tories were doing. I said I had been told that they were polling men whom I had been informed never went to poll without being bribed, and the fair conclusion was that they were spending money. Mr. Lovibond left me, and I did not see him again until about 12 o'clock, and that was the first time that I had entered the large room at the "Globe" hotel. I entered the room, and I said to Mr. Lovibond, "The election is lost; I hope our hands have been clean." Mr. Lovibond asked me if I could tell what could be done to bring the men to poll, if I could give him any advice. I said, "I can give you none," and I parted from him, and to the best of my belief I did not speak to Mr. Lovibond again on that day.

17,574. (Mr. Anstey.) Can you give me the names of those persons who, having been reported to you as voting for the Tory candidate, were immediately identified by you as persons who never voted without being bribed?—I cannot give you the names. It was in the mouths of 20 people, I think.

17,575. Cannot you give us the names?—I cannot. I would not hesitate for a moment if I could tell you.

17,576. (Mr. Price.) Are they any of them men in your employment?—They might have been; I cannot say.

17,577. Did Mr. Lovibond say anything to you to that effect, "Why some of them are in your employment; cannot you get some of them up to vote"?—He did not.

17,578. (Mr. Anstey.) I am speaking of those who had voted, you understand?—Yes.

17,579. I am not talking of those you were to bring up. You say that you informed Mr. Lovibond that, it being reported to you that certain persons had voted for the borough candidates, you immediately knew that the Tories must have taken to bribing, because such was the character of those persons who had voted. I want their names?—No. What I reported to Mr. Lovibond was the information that I had received that the Conservatives were polling men who were supposed never to go to the poll without money. It was not to my own knowledge that they never went to the poll without money, but it was that which was commonly reported, that they were men of that description.

17,580. Cannot you tell us of any person who gave you that material information?—I cannot; I would give that information to you with the greatest of pleasure if I could.

17,581. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you wish to say?—No. At 12 o'clock I returned home, and did not leave my house again until a quarter-past 3. I then went into the street, and found it in the greatest possible state of excitement and uproar, and I heard several persons say that the election had turned, and I think there was only a difference of from 10 to 20, or somewhere between 10 and 20; there was only that difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives, and I then went a second time into the large room at the "Globe," and as I was passing I came near to Henry Bussell. I asked him if he could tell me how this state of things had been brought about, and if any money had been spent in order to accomplish it, and he said no, to the best of his ability not a penny had been spent.

17,582. (Mr. Anstey.) What o'clock was that?—I should think it was about a quarter to 3, but I am not certain to a few minutes either one way or the other. I then looked over the poll sheet—I forget which it was, there were two there—I looked over the poll sheet and I saw that John Bouchier had not polled, and I said as much to Mr. Samuel Perrett, a grocer, who was standing near me, and we both went to John Bouchier to ask him to go to poll. He hesitated for some time, and then he said he would go presently, and we left him.

17,583. Did he say anything else?—No, he did not, not a syllable.

17,584. You say he hesitated?—He hesitated to give a reply whether he would or not. I also went to see Mr. Charles Torr in company with Mr. Robert Hayman. Torr's reply was, when we asked him if he would go to the poll, that he had made up his mind in the morning that he would not poll, and we left him.

17,585. (Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Torr?—Yes.

17,586. That was the man who was bribed on the former occasion?—Well, I do not know whether he was bribed.

17,587. Who is reported to have been bribed?—Yes, that is the same man.

17,588. Did he vote, do you know?—He did not, my belief is that he did not. When I returned to the "Globe" hotel for a third time I again saw Henry Chapman Bussell standing near to the "Globe," and I asked him how the poll stood then.

17,589. What o'clock was that?—Well, it was past 3 I should think it was then, pretty nearly a quarter past 3, for I had to go three quarters of a mile between the time when I had first seen him and then, and he gave me the state of the poll, and said, "50*l.* will win the election."

17,590. (Mr. Price.) Who did?—Henry Chapman Bussell; he said 50*l.* would secure the election, and he said to me also that Mr. Lovibond was then going to see somebody about money. My reply to him was this, as near as I can recollect, "Bussell, don't "you say a word to me about money, and my serious "advice to you is not to touch it." I then left the room and wended my way through the streets as well as I could towards the polling booth up in this quarter. As I was passing the bridge a man was thrust in my way, or rather by seven or eight others, and he said, "Master, here is a man who has not polled." And my reply to him was, "I think if he has not polled he had better do so." I quite believe that that man was put in my way as a trap, or that he intended to ask for money.

17,591. (Mr. Anstey.) Who was he?—I do not know. The man was a perfect stranger to me, as were those who were around him. I then came into the High Street, this street here, and someone told me that Mr. Tilley the barber had not polled, and Mr. Rookley the baker said he would go and see Mr. Tilley. We both did so; Mr. Tilley's reply was he was with us heart and soul. I think those were his words, but he had had an intimation that if he voted against the Conservative party he must leave his house.

17,592. From whom?—He would not say from whom.

17,593. Of whom does he hold his house?—Mr. Joseph Richard Smith.

17,594. Mr. Joseph Richard Smith?—I think so.

17,595. The late retired pawnbroker?—I think so. He said that his house was his bread and cheese, and my reply to him was that under the circumstances I could not ask him to vote. That, sir, was the statement I was desirous of making to you this morning.

17,596. (Mr. Price.) The John Bouchier you speak of is the boot and shoe maker in Eastover?—Yes, he is.

17,597. Did he tell you he would not go to the poll on account of previous charges made against him?—No, he did not.

17,598. Did he say, "I will not go to the poll again, "except in the case of an emergency or a very near "run"?—No, he did not.

17,599. He did not say anything to you?—No, nothing more except that after hesitating he said he would go.

17,600. He said he would go?—He said he would go.

17,601. What time was that?—Well, I should think that must have been within a few minutes of 3 o'clock.

17,602. Did you see him leave his house?—I did not.

17,603. Did you hear him say before us that he left about half-past 3, and that Mr. Reed had called upon him in the meantime?—I was not present in court when he said it.

17,604. He was not quite sure whether it was Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Reed, and he afterwards got 10*l.* from the "Globe"?—I saw it printed in evidence, but I did not hear him say that.

17,605. It was before he saw Mr. Reed or Mr. Lovibond that you saw him, I suppose?—I cannot say that; I saw him about a few minutes to 3 o'clock.

17,606. Mr. Reed said he called upon him and asked him to poll, and he said it was getting a "near run." It was about half-past 3 he voted, or 20 minutes to 4. Did you know that he had been bribed on a former occasion by Mr. White?—I did not; I did not know it till I heard the evidence come out in this court.

17,607. What influence had you with Bouchier, any?—I had none.

17,608. Did he make boots and shoes for you?—He did five or six years ago; he has not done so for five or six years.

17,609. And you merely asked him to vote?—I did.

17,610. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that all?—That is all.

Mr. F. C. Hennet.

Mr. Follett Charles Hennet called and sworn.

17,611. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—An engineer and ironfounder.

17,612. Where do you carry on your business or employment?—Near Bridgwater.

17,613. On your own account?—Yes, on my own account.

17,614. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have no partner?—In partnership with Mr. Daniel Spink.

17,615. (Mr. Price.) A gentleman of whom we have heard in the course of this inquiry?—Yes.

17,616. What are you by politics?—Well, I am a Liberal-Conservative.

17,617. Which way do you generally vote?—Conservative; I always have voted Conservative.

17,618. Did you vote at the last election?—Yes.

17,619. For the Conservative candidates?—Yes, for one.

17,620. Which?—Mr. Westropp.

17,621. Not for Mr. Gray?—Not for Mr. Gray.

17,622. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who else did you vote for?—No one.

17,623. You plumped for Mr. Westropp?—I plumped for Mr. Westropp.

17,624. (Mr. Price.) Had you voted for Mr. Westropp before?—I had voted for Mr. Westropp before.

17,625. We are informed you took some part in trying to effect a compromise at the last election, as between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

17,626. Tell us what you did do?—I will tell you what I know about it. On the Sunday afternoon I got home about 5 o'clock, and I found Mr. Spink at my house, and he told me that he had come to see if we could not arrange——

17,627. Is Mr. Spink of the same politics as yourself?—Well, he used to be, but he was not at the last election.

17,628. He was on the other side on the last election?—Yes; he came to me and told me that he thought it would be a very good thing, or words to that effect, at least, if we could effect a compromise between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Vanderbyl, because Mr. Vanderbyl was a friend of ours, and so was Mr. Westropp. We thought that would avoid a great deal of trouble and annoyance in the town if there could be a compromise effected.

17,629. Did Mr. Spink give you in any way to understand that he was in any way authorized by Mr. Vanderbyl's friends, by his legal advisers, or any of the prominent members of his party, to make that overture?—I do not quite recollect that, but I think he said it was Mr. Fennelly who told him about it.

17,630. Not anybody in Bridgwater?—Not anybody in Bridgwater that I know of.

17,631. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you not further informed about that same matter by Mr. Westropp himself?—When I agreed with Mr. Spink that we would go and find Mr. Westropp, we went into Mr. William Brice's, and there we saw Mr. Westropp, and we arranged with him that he should meet Mr. Fennelly.

17,632. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what day that was?—That was on the Sunday.

17,633. You arranged with him, as I understand?—We arranged with Mr. Westropp that he and Mr. Fennelly should meet and try to effect a compromise.

17,634. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Westropp on that occasion tell you that he had already had a communication from Mr. Fennelly himself on behalf of Mr. Vanderbyl, stating that Mr. Vanderbyl had put himself in his hands, and had had a row with his agents, Messrs. Reed and Cook, and offered Mr. Westropp to meet him half way, from which Mr. Westropp inferred that Mr. Vanderbyl would join him in bribery?—No.

17,635. Did Mr. Westropp tell you that?—No.

17,636. (Mr. Price.) Just tell us what passed?—Well, I cannot recollect all the words,

17,637. Well, but as near as possible give us the substance of what took place when you had arranged with Mr. Westropp that he should meet Mr. Fennelly. Did Mr. Westropp say anything about it? What did he say?—Well, he agreed to do so; and then Mr. Spink went off to see Mr. Fennelly to arrange.

17,638. Is that all that you recollect that passed between Mr. Westropp and you and Mr. Spink, before the interview with Mr. Fennelly?—That is all of any importance that I recollect.

17,639. We must judge of the importance. If there is anything else tell us what it was?—Well, myself, Mr. Spink, and Mr. Westropp were talking over the matter together.

17,640. Tell us what was said?—I cannot recollect the exact words he said.

17,641. Tell us the substance of what Mr. Westropp said, when you suggested to him that he should meet Mr. Fennelly?—I believe Mr. Westropp was very much against having any bribery.

17,642. Tell us what he said?—He explained himself so in my house previously, that it was a very serious thing under the new law having any bribery, and everybody had better keep out of it.

17,643. What did he say about this proposed meeting with Mr. Fennelly?

17,644. (Mr. Anstey.) How did he connect that about the bribery with the proposed meeting with Mr. Fennelly?—I do not think anything was mentioned about bribery in our conversation with Mr. Westropp.

17,645. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what Mr. Westropp said, when you had arranged with him to meet Mr. Fennelly. Tell us as nearly as you recollect the substance of what he said. What was the inducement you held out to him in the first place that he should do so?—Well, I do not think we held out any inducement.

17,646. (Mr. Anstey.) Do tell us what took place. You must surely recollect the substance of what you said and what he said. You went in and spoke to him first, I suppose?—Yes, I went in and spoke to him and asked him if he had any objection to meet Mr. Fennelly.

17,647. (Mr. Price.) For what object?—For the object of effecting a compromise.

17,648. Did you mention that it was for the purpose of getting rid of bribery that you were desirous of effecting a compromise, or anything of that sort?—I do not know. I think it is very likely we did. I think it is very likely we said that the compromise would get rid of bribery, and that kind of thing, and would have saved any election petition, and would have saved this inquiry as well.

17,649. Go on. What did Mr. Westropp say to that?—Mr. Westropp fell in with our plans, and arranged to meet Mr. Fennelly at a later hour in the evening at my house. About half-past 8 or 9, Mr. Westropp and Mr. Fennelly, I forget which came first, at any rate they met, and myself and Mr. Spink left them in the dining room, and we went into another room, and what passed between them I do not know at all.

17,650. Unless either of them alluded to it afterwards in your presence. Was that Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl?—We left Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Vanderbyl together in a room by themselves.

17,651. I thought you said Mr. Westropp and Mr. Fennelly?—I beg your pardon. I mean we left Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Westropp by themselves.

17,652. Mr. Vanderbyl was not there?—No. It was understood Mr. Fennelly came there as Mr. Vanderbyl's representative.

17,653. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he tell you so?—Yes.

17,654. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what passed after the interview. Did you see them again? Did Mr. Westropp tell you anything of what passed?—It was agreed that they should not both leave the house together because we thought people might be looking about.

17,655. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not they tell you what had been agreed upon?—They did not tell me what had been agreed upon.

17,656. (Mr. Price.) Neither of them?—No; but Mr. Westropp said he thought that from what had passed there might be a chance of the compromise being made.

17,657. Did he tell you that?—Yes, to that effect.

17,658. (Mr. Anstey.) Did Mr. Westropp tell you then, or afterwards, anything to the effect of that which I have read to you from this brief, namely, that Mr. Fennelly had told him that Mr. Vanderbyl had put himself in his hands; that Mr. Vanderbyl had had a row with his agents, Messrs. Reed and Cook, and that he offered Mr. Westropp to meet him half way, from which Mr. Westropp inferred a proposal to join in bribery?—No.

17,659. Did you never hear the whole or any part of that from Mr. Westropp?—It is very likely that Mr. Fennelly might have stated that he was authorized by Mr. Vanderbyl to act for him.

17,660. (Mr. Price.) But did Mr. Westropp tell you that? The question is, when Mr. Westropp came back to you, after parting from Mr. Fennelly, did he say that anything of the kind had passed between him and Mr. Fennelly?—He did not tell us what had passed.

17,661. He did not?—No, he did not.

17,662. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he say at any time after that, that he understood from Mr. Fennelly that Mr. Vanderbyl had put himself in his hands?—Not that I know of.

17,663. Did he tell you at any time that Mr. Fennelly had told him that Mr. Vanderbyl had had a row with his agents, Messrs. Reed and Cook?—Not that I know of.

17,664. Did he at any time tell you that Mr. Fennelly had offered him, Mr. Westropp, to meet him half way, or words to that effect?—I cannot recollect that he did.

17,665. (Mr. Price.) Now, then, tell us what he said to you about it?—The substance of what Mr. Westropp told us was that he thought the matter might be effected.

17,666. (Mr. Coleridge.) But how?—By himself and Mr. Vanderbyl coalescing.

17,667. And letting Mr. Gray go to the wall?—Leaving Mr. Gray and Mr. Kinglake out in the cold.

17,668. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there anything like animosity or feeling expressed by Mr. Fennelly with regard to Mr. Kinglake?—By Mr. Fennelly? Not that I am aware of.

17,669. (Mr. Price.) As I understand you, you saw Mr. Fennelly, but had no communication with him?—I saw him, but had no communication with him.

17,670. You saw him?—Yes.

17,671. You never saw Mr. Fennelly afterwards?—No, except on that occasion I have told you.

17,672. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure you did not promise to vote for Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Westropp?—No. I had promised Mr. Vanderbyl to vote for him before that.

17,673. When had you seen Mr. Vanderbyl before this?—I should think a week before this.

17,674. What did Mr. Vanderbyl say to you when you saw him then?—I think the last occasion I saw Mr. Vanderbyl was at the "Globe" hotel.

17,675. That is no answer to my question. I want to know what did Mr. Vanderbyl say to you when he saw you about this?—About voting?

17,676. About anything connected with the election. I do not want to confine you to the voting?—He asked me not to attend a meeting of the Conservatives, or not to go on the platform at least.

17,677. Did he ask you to vote for him?—I do not know whether it was on that occasion or not. I had promised on a previous occasion.

17,678. Tell us when you first promised to vote for him. What took place then? That is what I want to know. What took place then; where was it, for instance?—I do not recollect. I know I promised to vote for him.

17,679. Did you promise to vote for him alone, or him and Mr. Westropp?—For him and Mr. Westropp. I said I could not vote against Mr. Westropp. I told him all through I could not vote against Mr. Westropp.

17,680. Did he ask you to vote for him and Mr. Westropp?—He rather pressed me to vote for Mr. Kinglake as well. I refused to vote for Mr. Kinglake, and I promised to vote. I intended to vote for Mr. Westropp and for Mr. Vanderbyl.

17,681. And did he then tell you that he was going to coalesce or wished to coalesce with Mr. Westropp?—Not at that time, no.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

Mr. F. C. Hennet.

13 Sept. 1869.

17,682. When did he first after that tell you of his wish to coalesce with Mr. Westropp?—He did not tell me. I had it from Mr. Spink.

17,683. You never heard it till Mr. Spink mentioned it?—No.

17,684. Then had Mr. Vanderbyl seen Mr. Spink?—I believe he had.

17,685. When?—On the night before, on the Saturday.

17,686. Where is Mr. Spink now?—He is residing at Walton-on-the-Naze.

17,687. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has he left here altogether?—Yes.

17,688. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand you to say from Mr. Vanderbyl himself you heard nothing about this?—No, I did not from Mr. Vanderbyl himself.

17,689. Only from your partner, Mr. Spink?—Only from my partner, Mr. Spink, and Mr. Westropp, and whatever Mr. Fennelly said, when he met at my house.

17,690. (Mr. Price.) Did you understand from Mr. Spink, your partner, that it was with a view to prevent a contest, and to prevent money being spent, that this compromise was suggested?—Yes.

17,691. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you said it was to prevent money being spent, to prevent an election petition, and to prevent a commission of inquiry?—That is the same thing I think.

17,692. (Mr. Price.) It was to prevent a contest, and to prevent bribery?—It was to prevent a contest, and to prevent bribery.

17,693. And that, as you understood, was Mr. Westropp's desire, he having expressed his fear as to the result of any bribery, in consequence of the late statute?—Yes.

17,694. Was that the way in which the thing originated, as far as you know, with regard to a compromise?—Well, so far as I know, it was; but, in fact, Mr. Spink was the active agent in trying to effect this compromise, and I do not know very much about it, except that they had the use of my house.

17,695. And that you saw Mr. Westropp there?—And that I saw Mr. Westropp there, and Mr. Fennelly.

17,696. (Mr. Anstey.) And neither Mr. Westropp nor Mr. Fennelly told you anything about it, except that Mr. Fennelly was acting as Mr. Vanderbyl's agent; that was all they told you?—That was all they told me.

17,697. And you also heard that, to prevent a contest, and to prevent bribery, they were trying to effect a compromise?—That was the understanding.

17,698. How many interviews had Mr. Spink with Mr. Vanderbyl before they came to you?—I cannot tell. As I was on the Conservative side I did not go to Mr. Vanderbyl before the election. I kept away from seeing him. I thought it might do him more harm than good by seeing him.

17,699. Was Mr. Spink's voting on that election in connexion with this treaty which you speak of?—Mr. Spink did not vote for Mr. Vanderbyl.

17,700. I thought you said Mr. Spink had been a Conservative until then, and on that occasion he went with the Liberals?—Yes, he had, so far as supporting the candidates went, so far as his principles went. Mr. Spink had not any vote.

17,701. (Mr. Price.) Why did you not tell us that before, that Mr. Spink had no vote?—No, he has no vote.

17,702. He never had a vote for Bridgwater?—He never had a vote for Bridgwater.

17,703. And he is still your partner?—He is still my partner.

17,704. And when he comes here he comes on business?—Yes.

17,705. (Mr. Anstey.) How long had he been in Bridgwater on that occasion before he saw Mr. Vanderbyl, how many days?—At that time he was residing at Wembdon.

17,706. (Mr. Coleridge.) When will he be here again in the way of business?—I do not know.

17,707. This month?—I do not expect him. He is residing away now, and he does not come down to business at all.

17,708. When did he leave Bridgwater last to go to Walton-on-the-Naze?—I think about the month of March.

17,709. Do you mean to say he has not been in Bridgwater since?—Oh, he has been in Bridgwater since. I think it was in July his family left.

17,710. That was the time that the commission issued, was it in consequence of that?—I think not.

17,711. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has he given up his house at Wembdon?—He has given up his house at Wembdon.

17,712. And gone away altogether?—Yes.

17,713. How many voters have you in your employ?—I cannot say exactly.

17,714. But about?—Well, I should think about 100.

17,715. And how did they vote at the last election? How many of them voted, except in the same way as you did?—I cannot tell.

17,716. Surely you can tell?—I have not looked to see how they voted.

17,717. You do not know at all?—No.

17,718. You do not know whether the greater part voted Liberal or Conservative?—I have heard the greater part voted Conservative.

17,719. How many?—I cannot tell.

17,720. Was there half a dozen out of the whole 100 who voted Liberal?—I cannot tell. I have never inquired, and I have never looked.

17,721. (Mr. Price.) How many voters are there in your employ?—I believe there are about 100 voters.

17,722. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is very desirable that we should know how they voted. I suppose you could tell us from the poll book?—Yes, I could tell you from the poll book.

17,723. Have you a poll book of the last election?—I had one sent me at the last election, I think.

17,724. Will you look over it and tell us how they voted, because we find in another case that the whole voted for their master except three, and we should like to know whether it was the same with your men?—I may say that, previous to the last election, we issued a placard stating that our men were to vote as they liked.

17,725. (Mr. Anstey.) The question is, who are the intermediaries between you and the men?—The foreman.

17,726. What is his name?—Well, we have several foremen.

17,727. Tell us their names?—Walter Shears, Henry Dunn, Matthews.

17,728. What is his christian name?—Thomas.

17,729. Thomas Matthews?—I am not sure of his christian name; and there is John Hooper and Thomas Brawley.

17,730. Anybody else?—There is one called Pearse.

17,731. What is his christian name?—I do not know.

17,732. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you quite sure—be careful—that the placard said they might vote as they liked?—Yes.

17,733. Be careful, because I have seen it; what did it say?—That is as near as I recollect.

17,734. Did it not say they might vote for Mr. Vanderbyl, Mr. Westropp, or Mr. Gray, but leaving out Mr. Kinglake's name altogether?—That was the first placard which was issued. I was away. I came home on the Sunday.

17,735. Who issued the one which left Mr. Kinglake's name out?—Mr. Spink.

17,736. I thought you said Mr. Spink was a Liberal?—Yes.

17,737. Spink was always a Liberal, was he not?—No; he was not always a Liberal. He used to call himself a Conservative; I do not think he was much either way.

17,738. What was his reason for leaving Mr. Kinglake's name out? Do you know of any personal reason that he had for leaving out Mr. Kinglake's name?—No, I do not.

17,739. When you came home did you have that placard altered?—I spoke to Mr. Spink about it, and said I was annoyed at the placard, and I was particularly annoyed, because it seemed to cast a slur on the foremen. It said that "no person in our employ was to use any undue influence."

17,740. Have you one of those placards?—No, I have not.

17,741. Have you one at home?—No. It stated that "no person in our employ was to use any undue influence." Now I thought that cast a slur on our foremen.

17,742. Do you mean it took away from the foremen some of their natural perquisites?—No.

17,743. What do you mean then?—I thought it cast a slur on the foremen. I thought it seemed to insinuate that the foremen would exercise undue influence.

17,744. Well, what was substituted for it?—We substituted a placard stating that the men were at liberty to vote for whom they pleased.

17,745. Without mentioning any names?—I believe so.

17,746. But did it not follow the old form, leaving them the option of voting for Mr. Vanderbyl, Mr. Westropp, and Mr. Gray, and not allowing them to vote for Mr. Kinglake?—No, I do not think it did.

17,747. The first one did, because you acknowledge that Mr. Kinglake's name was omitted?—Yes.

17,748. You say you recollect you altered it, because it cast a slur on your firm. Cannot you recollect whether Mr. Spink said anything about Mr. Kinglake's name being left out?—I do not think he did.

17,749. Because if nothing was said, how did it come not to be inserted in the second placard?—Because we altered it.

17,750. Some conversation must have taken place about the missing name being inserted in the second placard?—The second placard was issued in this manner. When I saw Mr. Spink at our office on the Monday morning we had a conversation about it, and we agreed that we should issue another placard; but Mr. Vanderbyl called on us that morning, and it appeared that he had written out another placard leaving out the part I objected to.

17,751. The undue influence part?—Yes, leaving out that, and I believe putting in all four names. That placard was exactly as I wanted it, and I ordered it to be issued.

17,752. Then you say it was Mr. Vanderbyl that inserted Mr. Kinglake's name, and not Mr. Spink?—I think it was.

17,753. (Mr. Price.) How was it that Mr. Vanderbyl had any control over your placard?—He had not any control over it. We were acting friendly with Mr. Vanderbyl.

17,754. Were you doing any work for Mr. Vanderbyl at that time, were you executing any contract for him?—No, not at the time.

17,755. But had you been under any obligation to Mr. Vanderbyl in giving you employment, or a contract?—Mr. Vanderbyl had given us one contract, one small contract, not a very large contract.

17,756. Connected with the Lundy Granite Company?—Not connected with the Lundy Granite Company. The work we did for the Lundy Granite Company had no connexion, as far as we knew, with Mr. Vanderbyl.

17,757. How long before the election had Mr. Vanderbyl given you this contract, whether it was a large or a small one?—I think I have the particulars now before me. I have just put them down. It was on March 13th 1867 that we completed the contract for some girders for him. He also gave us an order—I think it was after the election—I will not be sure whether it was after or before the election, he also gave us a small order then, about the end of last year.

17,758. Was that the only friendship you had with him? Was that the only thing which had brought you into contact with Mr. Vanderbyl at all?—No. I had met him several times. I had been to his house.

17,759. (Mr. Coleridge.) He knew you were an employer of 100 men?—Yes.

17,760. He knowing you were an employer of 100 men, have you any doubt that he gave you that order to get the interest of your firm?—I believe he did.

17,761. And was not that the reason you added "Liberal" to your previous denomination of "Conservative," and called yourself "Liberal-Conservative"?—No.

17,762. Had you ever voted "Liberal" before in your life?—No, I had been always Liberal-Conservative.

17,763. A sort of epicene gender. (No answer.)

17,764. (Mr. Price.) Had you voted Liberal before?—I had voted three times before.

17,765. And for the first time you called yourself a "Liberal-Conservative"?—The first time I called myself a "Liberal-Conservative" was in 1865, I think.

17,766. (Mr. Coleridge.) Something of an epicene gender?—Yes.

17,767. (Mr. Anstey.) What is Mr. Spink's christian name and address?—Daniel Spink, Lower Farm, Walton-on-the-Naze.

17,768. Is he carrying on business there?—No, he is not carrying on any business.

17,769. (Mr. Price.) Well, he cannot attend much to his business here if he is living at Walton-on-the-Naze?—No. He does not attend to his business here.

17,770. You undertake the whole thing here, do you?—Yes.

17,771. (Mr. Anstey.) That is only since the summer or spring of this year?—He never did attend to it.

17,772. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has he any other business to attend to?—No, he has no other business.

17,773. He does not care for business at all?—No.

17,774. If you can, let us have a list from the poll book of your men who voted. Just tick them off. We can tell for ourselves how they voted at the last election?—Yes; I will send you up a list of the voters at the last election in our employment.

17,775. And the poll book as well. If you will mark off your men on your own poll book, then we can see how they voted?—Yes.

17,776. (Mr. Price.) Just take the poll book you have got and go through the list alphabetically, and tick off the names of those who were in your employ at the last election?—Yes.

17,777. Is there anything more you want to say?—Shall I be examined again?

17,778. (Mr. Anstey.) No, not necessarily?—Then I wish to state one or two circumstances which occurred at previous elections.

17,779. (Mr. Coleridge.) On the Conservative side?—Yes, on the Conservative side.

17,780. (Mr. Price.) We had better postpone that. We shall probably avail ourselves of your assistance on a future occasion. You live here?—Yes. I wish to be away to-morrow.

17,781. Yes, you can be away; but you have information to give us which you think will be of importance to us as to former elections?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) Then you can communicate to our secretary the information.

(Mr. Anstey.) He says he is going away.

17,782. (Mr. Price.) But you are coming back again?—I am coming back to-morrow evening.

(Mr. Price.) We shall be able to hear you in the course of next week, I suppose.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

C. Bulpin.

13 Sept. 1869.

CHARLES BULPIN called and sworn.

17,783. (Mr. Price.) Are you traveller for Brown & Co.?—I am.

17,784. How long have you been their traveller?—About six years their traveller.

17,785. You have a paper there before you. Perhaps you had better answer my questions, or if you wish to make a statement in preference you may make it, and I may have to ask you some questions upon it. Which do you prefer?—To make a statement.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Beginning at the last election, 1868.

17,786. (Mr. Price.) Beginning at the last election, 1868, and what part you took in it?—The last election in November 1868, I returned from my journey a day or two before the election, and Mr. Barham called at my house. He talked to me about the coming election; he said a few words about the coming election, and appointed for me to meet him at his house on the Sunday afternoon.

17,787. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was this on the Saturday?—Either the Friday or Saturday, I am not sure. I called on the Sunday afternoon. Mr. Barham was out. I called again in the evening and saw him, and we had a cup of tea together, tea or coffee, I do not know which. I saw Mr. Barham Sunday evening, and we had a cup of tea together.

17,788. (Mr. Price.) You have told us that before?—And had a talk about the election. He told me that it was quite decided that no money would be spent on the Liberal side, and I told him that I was very glad of it. That is all I recollect that evening. On the morning of the poll——

17,789. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did nothing take place on the nomination day?—Not between me and him, nor anybody that I know, for in fact I had only just come from my journey; the thing is quite new to me.

17,790. (Mr. Price.) On the polling day what occurred?—On the morning of the poll, about 9 o'clock, I saw that the town looked very quiet. I met Mr. Badger and Mr. Bussell, and we went to poll together, and recorded our votes. I saw Mr. Barham during the morning, but no interview took place whatever.

17,791. Did you see several voters that morning?—I did.

17,792. Did they say anything to you?—Yes.

17,793. Now tell us what they said?—Several of them asked me if any money was going to be spent.

17,794. Tell us their names if you can?—I cannot.

17,795. Were there any of them in the employment of Messrs. Browne & Co.?—Possibly there may have been, I do not know.

17,796. (Mr. Anstey.) Had they previously known you to be a reputed Liberal?—They might have been aware of it, they might or might not have been.

17,797. I can answer you precisely the same question in precisely the same sensible manner, without knowing anything about it, "they might or might not," but were they aware of it?—I cannot tell you.

17,798. Then why not tell us so, without making an evasive answer of that sort?—I mean to tell you the truth.

17,799. Did they say that they were sure money was going, and that they ought to have their share?—Some of them considered there was money going.

17,800. Did they say that they were sure money was going, and that they ought to have their shares?—I believe there was such a statement made.

17,801. You have made a statement to our secretary—what an extraordinary thing it is that a man in your position cannot recollect. Did you go then to the "Globe" in consequence of that to see if it was so?—Yes.

17,802. Who did you see?—Mr. Smith, Mr. Bussell, and several others were there.

17,803. Did you see Mr. Lovibond?—Yes, I did.

17,804. Then why did you leave his name out? What was said when you saw Mr. Smith, Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Bussell?—We went into a little inner committee room, and it was mentioned about a sum of money which would win the election.

17,805. Who spoke?—I do not know whether it was Bussell or Smith.

17,806. What did they say?—There was some conversation about 2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.*

17,807. Did someone say the election could be still won with about 3,000*l.*?—I believe so.

17,808. Was that between 12 and 1 o'clock?—Yes.

17,809. Who said it, Bussell?—I do not know whether it was Bussell or not.

17,810. What did Mr. Lovibond say?—That he would go and see the lawyers.

17,811. "Wait a few minutes. I will go and see the lawyers?"—Yes.

17,812. Did he return again in about half-an-hour?—He returned again in about half-an-hour.

17,813. What did he say then?—It was quite decided that no money was to be spent, and the Tories might win as they liked.

17,814. Then did you then go away?—Just afterwards.

17,815. Did you then tell persons who had spoken to you about money what you had heard?—Yes.

17,816. Did any of them go and vote then?—I believe it was just after that time that the change took place on the Liberal side.

17,817. Just after that?—Just after that.

17,818. Did you hear anything later in the day about money?—Yes, somewhere about half-past 3 I heard that one of the voters had taken money to the "Clarence" hotel.

17,819. Did you hear about that time that Palmer had taken money to the "Clarence"?—Yes.

17,820. Which it was said he had got from Bussell?—Yes.

17,821. Did several voters come to you and ask you for money?—During the morning.

17,822. After that?—I do not remember after that.

17,823. Do you know whether some of those who had asked you had not yet voted for the Tories?—I do not.

17,824. Were those any of them men who never went without money. You have made a statement to that effect; recollect yourself?—Will you repeat the question?

17,825. Those men not getting it, did they go and vote to your knowledge for the Tories?—I do not know.

17,826. Why did you ever say so then. Were those men who you know never went to vote without money—were there any that day?—Yes. During the day I saw people who came and asked if money was going. There were several who came to me in the morning and asked if money was going, and after that I found by the list that they had voted for the Conservatives.

17,827. After you heard that Palmer had taken money to the "Clarence" which he got from Bussell, what else did you do, or say, or hear?—I had nothing more to do with it after that.

17,828. Nothing at all?—Nothing more to do with that election.

17,829. Did you receive anything?—Not a penny.

17,830. Note for your vote, but to spend?—Not a penny.

17,831. Is that all you have to tell us?—That is all I have to tell you.

17,832. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there no arrangement or promise of your having money which you were to spend in the expenses of the election?—Not at all.

17,833. When did you see our secretary, do you recollect, and make your statement?—Last Saturday.

17,834. Since you made it have you conversed with anybody upon the subject of the evidence you are to give to-day ?—No.

17,835. Are you quite sure ?—Nor yet before.

17,836. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean neither before nor during the last election you paid any voter money for his vote ?—At the last election ?

17,837. Yes ?—I had not a penny to pay on the last election whatever.

17,838. Neither before nor after ?—No.

17,839. Nor at any time between that and this ?—No, not a penny.

17,840. (Mr. Anstey.) Nor promised any ?—No.

17,841. Nor held out any expectation that money would come ?—No.

17,842. (Mr. Price.) Do you know John Smith ?—Yes.

17,843. Did you know there was a question raised as to whether John Smith had made a claim in 1868 for money which he had spent in 1866 for bands and colours ?—I knew nothing about it.

17,844. Were you present when Smith made any statement of that kind ?—No.

17,845. It has been stated that Allan repeated to the principals his knowledge that there was no previous bargain to pay to his sub-agents 25*l.* each, but Smith mantains that there had been a promise? —You speak of the bands of colours.

17,846. No, in reference to this agreement; did you make a claim of 25*l.* ?—No.

17,847. Then it is not true that you made a statement to that effect in Allan's presence ?—Allan promised 25*l.* I never claimed it. I spoke to him 20 times about it, but I never made a claim.

17,848. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are quibbling on the word "claim"?—No.

17,849. (Mr. Price.) Did he say there had been no previous bargain to pay 25*l.* each ?—No.

17,850. Were you present then ?—No, he did not tell me about there being no previous bargain.

17,851. What did he tell you ; did he refuse to pay you 25*l.* ?—He told me on the day of the election——

17,852. Now answer the question ?—He said he would.

17,853. Did he ever refuse ?—Unless I would have my name down.

17,854. Did he ever refuse ?—Yes.

17,855. Why did he refuse ?—Because I would not have my name put down for it.

17,856. (Mr. Coleridge.) When did he say he would give you 25*l.* ?—On the day of the election.

17,857. What were you to do ?—It was for what I had done.

17,858. When ?—On the day of the election.

17,859. The last election ?—No.

17,860. (Mr. Price.) Did you make a claim in 1868 for 25*l.* for what you had done in 1866 ?—No.

17,861. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ask for it ?—No.

17,862. Did you remind Allan of it ?—No, not in 1868.

17,863. In 1867 did you ?—I do not remember.

17,864. (Mr. Price, to Allan.) When did this man make a claim, or when was this question about the 25*l.* raised by you ?

(Mr. Allan.) The day after Vanderbyl's election; the day after the election was the first time I heard of it.

17,865. In 1868 ?—No, never. I never remember seeing him in 1868.

(Mr. Coleridge, to the witness.) About the 1866 election of Vanderbyl. What was it you did in that ?

17,866. (Mr. Price.) Did Allan ask you in 1866 to assist on the morning of the election ?—He did I believe ; it was the morning of the election.

17,867. Did you have 100*l.* of him ?—I believe I had 100*l.* in the morning. I am not certain I gave Allan my list of what I had of him, and the men I paid.

17,868. How many did you pay ?—About 20, to the best of my recollection.

17,869. How much per head ?—The sums varied 10*l.*, 15*l.*, 20*l.*, and 25*l.*

17,870. Have you their names there ?—Yes.

17,871. You had about 250*l.* altogether, had not you, during the day ?—About that.

17,872. Now give us the names of those you bribed ? —Some I can remember the amounts I paid, some I cannot. John Hellard, Valetta Place, 20*l.*; Charles Mogridge 15*l.*; William Reece, Barclay Street, 15*l.*; Henry Pearce 20*l.*; Joseph Reeves, a veterinary surgeon, 10*l.*; William Snell, West Street, 25*l.* I cannot recollect the others.

17,873. You recollect the other people's names ?—Yes, not the amounts. James Bate, Barclay Street ; Joseph Bidgood, printer ; Edwin Bigwood, St. John Street; John Clavey, Valetta Place; John Davis, dyer, Polden Street ; Philip Headford, Salmon Lane; William Hex, Pig Cross ; Charles Hobbs, St. John Street ; William Hill, St. John Street; Thomas Mogridge, St. Mary Street ; William King, Valetta Place ; Going Murray, Angel Crescent; Charles Wills, a captain, I do not know where he lives ; William Francis, Valetta Place. That is all I can remember.

17,874. How much did you distribute amongst the whole lot you bribed ?—All I received.

17,875. How much was that ?—I consider it was about 250*l.* ; it might be over, I cannot tell now.

17,876. Amongst those you have mentioned not giving any particular sum to, do you know whether you gave any as much as 25*l.* ?—I do not know ; I cannot tell.

17,877. What was the largest you gave ?—25*l.*

17,878. The smallest ?—10*l.*

17,879. Then you must have had a great deal more than 250*l.* ?—It might be a little over ; I cannot tell, because I think I had 100*l.* from Allan in the morning.

17,880. (Mr. Price.) Were several paid twice at that election ?—Some were.

17,881. Not by you ?—No ; they were paid first by one of the other agents, and as they found that more money was given they would not go unless they had more.

17,882. Or perhaps they had 10*l.* or 5*l.* from some one else, and then came and found the price was higher, and got more from you ?—They would not go unless.

17,883. Did you give any of them who had already been paid ?—I did one of them.

17,884. Joseph Reeves is a veterinary surgeon, how much did he get ?—20*l.*

17,885. Did he tell you to give his name in as a person not bribed ?—Yes.

17,886. That he should swear the contrary ?—I saw him going down the street since the Royal Commission has been sitting, and he said, "Do not say you gave me money, because I shall say you did not."

17,887. (Mr. Coleridge.) It is just as well that you should tell us now how and where you gave it to him, because there may be corroborative evidence ?—I paid it to him in Allan's own house.

17,888. Who was present ?—I do not think anybody but myself, but I fetched the money especially for him.

17,889. Did you mention to Allan when you fetched it that it was for him ?—I did.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Is that so ?

(Mr. Allan.) Yes.

17,890. (To the witness.) When do you say that Allan promised you 25*l.* ?—During the afternoon of the election.

17,891. Was it before you had been distributing money ?—I am not sure.

17,892. What time had you been distributing money ?—It might be about 3 o'clock.

17,893. Was it before or after 3 that Allan promised you the 25*l.* ?—I am not sure.

17,894. But you are sure that it was the polling day ?—Yes.

17,895. Before the poll closed ?—I believe it was, but I am not sure.

17,896. (Mr. Price.) Did he say he would give

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

C. Bulpin.

13 Sept. 1869.

you the money if you would allow your name to appear on the list?—He did after the day of the election.

17,897. But on the day of the election he merely said he would give you 25*l.*?—Yes, I believe he said he could get the money for me if I would let my name go on the list.

17,898. That was afterwards?—Yes, and I said I would not do it.

17,899. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you asked for 25*l.* from Allan, and he said he would not do it, because you would not let your name go on the list, did he offer you or anybody besides anything?—Some time after that he said I ought to be remunerated, and he would make me a present of one of his own horses.

17,900. (Mr. Anstey.) How long after that was it?—I cannot tell; some days after.

(Mr. Price.) Was that so?

(Allan.) I had a pony that I had no use for, and I did.

(Mr. Anstey.) Did that pony represent the difference in value, or not?

(Allan.) No, it was worth about 6*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) But if you had not given him that pony should you have returned him as having received 25*l.* in the list?

(Allan.) No, I should not, certainly.

(Mr. Anstey.) I understand you to say that you had no use for the animal?

(Allan.) I had no use for it.

(Mr. Anstey.) It was entirely useless?

(Allan.) No, it was a useful pony, but not to me.

17,901. (Mr. Price, to the witness.) Is that all you have to tell us?—That is all I know of that election.

17,902. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you promise any other voter whom you had not the money to pay at that election?—No, not that I am aware of; I might have paid money, I cannot tell. This is to the best of my recollection. I gave Allan my list.

(Mr. Coleridge.) What sum do you say you gave him, Allan?

(Allan.) The sum would be in the account.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It is 255*l.*, assuming all the unknown figures to be 10*l.* That is what he accounts for. Assuming that the 14 men to be ten pounders it comes to about 255*l.*?

(Allan.) About that.

17,903. (Mr. Anstey, to the witness.) Had you anything to do with the system of treating at the last election, or Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866?—I might have in Vanderbyl's, but not——

17,904. Do answer the question one way or the other. Do not tell me such nonsense that you might have done; did you?—Not at the last election.

17,905. The former election of Vanderbyl first?—I promised at the last election I would have nothing to do with money matters or treating.

17,906. At the first election of Vanderbyl's, in 1866, had you anything to do with treating?—I might have done so, but nothing I can remember now.

17,907. (Mr. Price.) With regard to 1868, did you use any influence to get any of Brown's men to get them to go up and vote?—No.

17,908. (Mr. Anstey.) Or any men?—No, none at all.

17,909. We come to the election in 1866 when Bagehot and Patton stood. Had you any money then?—I believe I had 100*l.* then.

17,910. Did you pay Joseph Reeve, the veterinary surgeon, anything for his own vote on that occasion?—Yes.

17,911. How much?—10*l.*

17,912. You say you had 100*l.* from Allan?—That was about it I believe.

17,913. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did you bribe with it? Was it the day of the election?—No, most of them were paid afterwards.

17,914. (Mr. Anstey.) When did you promise the bribes?—On the day of the election.

17,915. Not before?—No.

17,916. You mean the polling day?—Yes, the polling day.

17,917. Who besides Reeves did you pay?—Henry Pearce, 10*l.*; Thomas Mogridge, of St. Mary's Street, 10*l.*; Joseph Bidgood, printer, 10*l.*; William Hill, St. John Street, 10*l.*; John Hellard, Valetta Place, 10*l.*; William Hex, Pig Cross, 10*l.*; William Snell, West Street, 10*l.*; James Champion, St. John Street, 10*l.*; James Bate, Barclay Street, 5*l.*

17,918. Why did he get less than the others?—I believe I got that for him after the election.

17,919. Was that Henry Pearce the same person mentioned by Mr. Hennet this morning as one of the foreman in his employ?—I think not.

17,920. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are there any others besides, that you can recollect; you have not accounted for all?—I let James Alway, grocer, of Pig Cross, have 20*l.*

17,921. For himself, or to give away?—To give away.

17,922. (Mr. Anstey.) How did you know?—Because I took it to him with that intention.

17,923. Do you know what he did with it?—I forget what he did with it.

17,924. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know who the voters were?—No, I forget.

17,925. (Mr. Price.) Did you get anything for your trouble at that time?—No.

17,926. Were you engaged in treating the voters at the first election in 1866?—I cannot remember; very possibly I may have been, because I was mixed up with it.

17,927. How were you mixed up with it?—By paying them money, and I daresay treating some as well as paying them.

17,928. Did you poll any voters in the employ of Brown & Company?—No.

17,929. Did you never suggest to any of the voters that their masters went Liberal, and they ought to as well?—No.

17,930. Never in your life?—Never in my life.

17,931. Why? What distinction do you draw of corrupt influence of one kind or another?—The reason of my not doing it is that I know very well they would not interfere in any such practices whatever. I mean that Messrs. Brown would not.

17,932. I suppose you were aware, were not you, that in both elections in 1866 they really did interfere?—I do not believe they did.

17,933. And were proved before the committee of the House of Commons to have done so. I suppose you know that at both elections in 1866 their firm, through one of its partners, Mr. Wilton, and one of its clerks, Badger, not only had interfered with the election of 1865, but had been convicted by the committee of the House of Commons for having unduly influenced a vote?—Not to my recollection.

17,934. You did not know it then?—I knew nothing of it.

17,935. Do I understand you to say that if you thought the lawyers would have backed you, and would have interfered, you would have told the voters that in their employment, "Your masters are going to interfere, therefore look out for yourselves"?—I did nothing of the kind.

17,936. Would you have done it if you had thought the masters approved of it?—No. Well, I might have done it then if I thought they approved of it.

17,937. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, going to the election of 1865, had you not in the interval between those two elections, and about a month before this election of Bagehot's, when you bribed to this extent, put your name down Charles Bulpin to the famous petition of 80 for inquiry into impure practices?—I had forgotten that I had signed that until you reminded me the other day.

17,938. Now you remember it?—I really do not now.

17,939. Is not your name Charles Bulpin?—Yes.

17,940. Are you not an accountant?—Yes.

17,941. Is not that a common name for bribers in this borough?—Not now it is not.

17,942. Was there any other Charles Bulpin an accountant, not you, in 1866, in this borough?—Not to my recollection.

17,943. Therefore, if that name appears to the petition presented about a month before your wholesale debauching and bribing of these voters in the contest with Bagehot, do you mean to say that your name has been put down by some one else, and not by yourself?—I do not mean to say that. I mean to tell you this, I forget having done it.

17,944. (Mr. Coleridge.) Before we go to 1865 tell me this. In Vanderbyl's election, in 1866, did you receive money from no one except Allan?—No.

17,945. Did you in 1866, in Bagehot's election, receive any money from anyone besides Allan?—No.

17,946. At Vanderbyl's election, in 1866, at the end of the day, had you any money over besides what you had paid away?—Not to my recollection.

17,947. But you must know whether you were in or out of pocket at the end of the day?—I had not anything left; I know that.

17,948. Had you spent anything out of your own pocket in addition to what Allan gave you?—I cannot tell now.

17,949. Might not you have spent a sum of money Allan gave you in treating on that day?—I do not remember it.

17,950. As a general rule the treating was paid by bill afterwards, so, probably, you did not. But at the end of the day when you had paid away the money at Bagehot's election, which you say was a day or two after the polling day, had you any money in hand then?—No, not that I am aware of.

17,951. Had you paid every farthing entrusted to you?—Yes.

17,952. And any in addition of your own?—I cannot tell now. Allow me to explain this, that the morning of the election I believe I had 100*l.* from Allan, that was to pay voters 10*l.*

17,953. Is this Vanderbyl's election?—Vanderbyl's election. After that the voters would not go but for higher prices. A day or so after the election I made up my account with him.

17,954. When did you get the money from Allan at Bagehot's election?—Some time afterwards.

17,955. Had you no money on the polling day from Allan?—I really forget.

17,956. Had you money at Bagehot's election on the polling day at all?—I believe I had.

17,957. How much?—I cannot tell.

17,958. Who from?—I must have had it from Allan, whatever I had.

17,959. How much afterwards did you have from Allan?—I do not know; I forget.

17,960. How many times at Bagehot's election had you money from Allan?—I believe twice.

17,961. How much altogether?—About 100*l.* to the best of my recollection.

17,962. Cannot you tell the sums which you had it in?—No, I cannot; but Allan had my account of what I paid.

17,963. Was it in gold or notes?—I believe in gold.

17,964. And that you paid away after the election to people you had promised on the election day?—Yes.

17,965. Did not you pay away any of it on the election day?—I should have paid it all away I believe. It was the election day I let Alway have some.

17,966. But you cannot say whether Vanderbyl or Bagehot's election?—I am not sure. I believe it was Bagehot's. I gave my account to Allan, and he knew well that I accounted to him for all that he had let me have, and there was no dispute about it at that time.

17,967. Have you ever made any claim since the time that you had the conversation about the 25*l.* which Allan, you say, promised you in 1866?—No.

17,968. Have you mentioned it to anybody?—No, not the last election.

17,969. At any time between the second election of 1866 and the last?—I believe I mentioned it to Mr. Lovibond, but I saw in Mr. Barham's evidence that he stated I had mentioned it to him, and as he said so I will not contradict but what I may have done.

17,970. Then you may have mentioned to both Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond?—I might have done.

17,971. By way of making a claim for it?—No.

17,972. (Mr. Coleridge.) You felt it a grievance not getting it?—Not at all.

17,973. Then why did you mention it?—Because when people promise anything they ought to perform it.

17,974. Then you did feel it a grievance?—Not at all. I only say, if anybody promises anything they ought to perform it.

17,975. Then you did consider it a grievance that you did not get it?—Not on my part.

17,976. (Mr. Price.) Why did you mention it to Mr. Lovibond?—I just mentioned that such a thing had taken place.

17,977. What?—That 25*l.* had been offered.

17,978. Then why did you mention it to him if it was not in the way of a grievance, and you had a claim?—Because Bussell and Smith had spoken previously that they had been promised, and I think before the election; but I did not expect anything, and I did not get anything, and in fact I am glad I did not.

17,979. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you do anything in 1865?—Yes.

17,980. What?—Voted for the Liberals; that is all.

17,981. When did you first act for the Liberals?—In 1866.

17,982. How came it about?—Mr. Allan came to me through Mr. Lovibond.

17,983. How came he to think that you were a malleable tool?—I cannot tell; I daresay I was spotted by some one or other to do so.

17,984. Did you vote in 1859?—Yes.

17,985. Did you have any money then?—No.

17,986. Neither for yourself or anybody else?—No.

17,987. How did you vote?—Liberal.

17,988. In 1857?—I think 1859 was the first time I had a vote.

17,989. Did you get any money in 1859?—No, not a penny.

17,990. You were not trusted?—1866 was the first time I had anything to do with it, and then I should not unless I had been sought after.

17,991. Were you in the town on the last election?—Yes.

17,992. On the polling day?—On the polling day.

17,993. Were not you asked to do anything yourself?—No.

17,994. By anybody?—No.

17,995. (Mr. Anstey.) Is there any person who calls himself accountant by occupation who has not bribed?—By the same name as myself?

17,996. No, any person who being asked what his occupation is gives for answer "an accountant;" is there a single one on the Liberal side who has not bribed?—No, I cannot tell that.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Is the meaning of "accountant" one who accounts to Allan after the election?

17,997. (Mr. Anstey.) Or one who does not account?—The meaning of accountant to my name is that I have to account to my employers.

17,998. You are not a public accountant, but only to Brown and Company?—No.

18,999. You are not in a general sense called an accountant, to be employed by anybody on his books?—No.

18,000. (Mr. Price.) Then you are a clerk in their employment?—I am.

18,001. Or a traveller?—Traveller now.

18,002. (Mr. Anstey.) You are not in the nature of an actuary, or anything of that sort?—No.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

C. Bulpin.

13 Sept. 1869.

18,003. Nor, I suppose, is any accountant in Bridgwater in that position, but they are all employed by particular persons?—I do not know what the others are.

18,004. Do you know, as a matter of fact, all the others who are in the Liberal interest have been at various times employed as bribe agents?—I do not clearly understand you.

18,005. Have all the accountants like yourself, who are in the Liberal interest in Bridgwater, been to your knowledge at some time or other employed as bribe agents?—I do not know.

18,006. Can you tell whether or not?—I do not know.

18,007. (Mr. Price.) I understand you to accept the position which you have been put in by my learned colleague, that accountant meant the same as bribe agent in Bridgwater?—I do not accept it in that way.

18,008. (Mr. Anstey.) You said "it does not mean that now;" and I asked whether it did mean it, and I understood you to assent to?—I thought you meant by my signing that petition. If I have signed as an accountant my meaning was that I was in employment as I represent.

18,009. Then you do recollect that you signed it?—No.

18,010. If you do not recollect that you did sign it, how can you recollect the animus that caused you to put the word "accountant" to your name?—Because I could not put any other meaning than that.

18,011. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that the way you always describe yourself?—Yes. I have been in their employment many years, and I have had to work my way up, and I call myself so as I rise in their employment.

18,012. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you been a foreman of work?—No.

18,013. Or had anything to do with the employment or dismissal of workmen?—No.

18,014. Or ever had anything to do with reporting men's conduct and behaviour to employers?—Not particularly.

18,015. But generally?—No, I do not know that I have.

18,016. Have you ever been in a position in which your word would have been of service or disservice to a workman in their employ according as you gave it for or against him?—No.

18,017. (Mr. Price.) When you were first engaged in this matter, did you express any repugnance against doing it, or did you accede at once to the suggestion?—I forget now what I did in that respect.

18,018. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not Honyball speak to you about it?—No.

18,019. Or did you speak to him?—No.

18,020. He was a great bribe agent, was he not, in your time?—Not to my recollection.

18,021. In your recollection he has been in the service of that firm, has he not?—He has been in the service many years. I never consulted with him.

18,022. Did not you consult with him as to the best mode of bribing people?—No.

18,023. (Mr. Price.) You cannot give us any reason why he consulted you?—No.

18,024. And you expressed no disinclination to take the office when it was first proposed?—Well, I did not look at it in the light in which it really was at the time. I did not look at it as so much harm at the time.

18,025. You got so indoctrinated with the views of the bribery people here that you thought there was no harm in it?—No. I did not look at it at the time.

18,026. That was the general feeling of people at Bridgwater, that there was no harm in bribery, that it was a perfectly inoffensive thing?—We have not looked upon it so severely as some.

18,027. As not being any offence at all?—Not so much as some.

18,028. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not so much as robbing an apple orchard, I suppose?—Not much more.

18,029. (Mr. Anstey.) In four weeks you had ceased to be anxious to prevent the recurrence of corrupt practices which prevailed in the above borough at the last election of members to serve in Parliament; is that so, had you, or not?—It appears so.

18,030. (Mr. Price.) I suppose that is all you have to tell us?—That is all I have to tell you. If anything more occurs I shall be glad to do it.

J. Alway.

JAMES ALWAY sworn.

18,031. (Mr. Price.) Are you a grocer?—I am.

18,032. And you signed this petition of which mention has been made?—I signed a petition in 1866, I think.

18,033. We come first to the election of 1868; had you heard before the election came off anything from Allan and John Smith as to the spending of money?—I had not.

18,034. Not before the election?—Not before the election.

18,035. Did you on the day of the election?—No. I saw them at the "Globe" hotel the day of the election.

18,036. Did you hear anything from either of them about their being prepared to spend money if the Conservatives should?—Not by them.

18,037. Did you make a statement to our secretary?—I did.

18,038. Is it true that before the election you heard from Allan and Smith that they were prepared if the Conservative side spent money to do the same? It is a strange thing that you should make one statement to him——?—I do not believe that I heard them say so; the only thing I heard was that money was at the "Globe" hotel.

18,039. Tell us what you heard at the "Globe?"—As I was passing over the bridge I saw Mr. Henry Lovibond at the yard gates.

18,040. What time of day?—About 11 in the morning, and he asked me if I had been upstairs. I told him I had not. He told me to do so, and to turn to a room on the right. I went up into the assembly room, and turned into a little room on the right, a back room. There I saw Mr. Cook and Mr. Reed, Mr. John Smith, Mr. Allan, and Mr. Bulpin. I believe that is all.

18,041. What were they doing?—Conversing about money matters.

18,042. Who spoke?—Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook went away just as I came in, and had a consultation by themselves or something else. I do not know where they went; they were away some time, and on returning Mr. Reed said it was decided there would be no money spent at all.

18,043. Was anything said before that about money, before they retired and came back?—No.

18,044. They said it was decided no money should be spent?—Yes, that is, they were too far behind the Tories. Henry Bussell was there too, and they seemed rather upset about it. I walked away after that, and went home.

18,045. Do you mean to say you did not hear that day from anybody (Allan, Smith, or anybody earlier in the day that they were prepared) if the Conservatives should spend they would do the same?—No.

18,046. Or anything of the kind during the day?—No.

18,047. Had you heard it before the polling day? Just recollect.—I had not.

18,048. Did you attend a meeting at Mr. Lovibond's?—I did.

18,049. And another at Mr. Smith's?—Yes.

18,050. When they were going through the list of voters?—Yes.

18,051. And arranging for the candidates?—That is what they were doing.

18,052. When?—That was the Sunday evening previous to the election.

18,053. Did you hear anything then as to the reason why they were going through the list then?—I did not, any more than as they were going through the list one man would say, "I will take so-and-so." It seemed to me that one man would know another the others did not know.

18,054. You never heard anything more said about money than what you have told us?—I did not.

18,055. Namely, that Mr. Reed, after retiring from the room, came back and said it was agreed that no money should be spent?—That is all I heard about it.

18,056. On the nomination day it has been said by Mr. Smith you engaged the band?—I did not.

18,057. What is your version of that story?—Mr. Henry Jarman came to me and told me I was to go to Wembdon to see Mr. Robinson. I went, and Mr. Robinson told me about the band. They wished me to go and see a man named Daly, a bandsman, who had been spoken to respecting the band. I went and saw Daly, and was waiting at Henry Bussell's. He had been told that I was coming by some one, and he said he wanted to play for the Liberals in opposition to a man belonging to the same works, Williams, a bandmaster, and he should like to play in opposition to him. I said I should have nothing at all to do with engaging him. "Oh," he says, "I will get a band." I said, "Mr. Robinson told me to come to you and ask "the number of instruments, and what they would "consist of;" and he gave me the number of instruments, and he guaranteed to get a band himself if he did it at his own expense, and it was by going down to see Mr. Robinson at Mr. Smith's on the Sunday evening respecting this band that I was at that meeting, and these men were waiting for me to bring back an answer of the engagement of him. Mr. Smith and Mr. Robinson kept me in tow until early in the morning, and then they laughed at me and said, "They "will not follow you up now, Jim, they have gone to "bed." I went to the man's house up at the railway station, and rapped at his door, and told him, "No "one has engaged you, remember. I have nothing "to do with it at all, and if you allow an instrument "to be blown it will be at your own cost." He said, "Thank you, sir; I now know what to do." Then after that, on the nomination day, Allan and Smith came to my door, and said, "Get the band down." I said, "I have nothing at all to do with it." It is not very likely I should have anything to do with a band. Afterwards Smith told me a man named Press, of Burnham, had engaged it. He is a sailor or pilot, or something of that sort.

18,058. (Mr. Price.) What Mr. Smith stated about it that you had engaged it is not correct?—It is not correct.

18,059. Did you hear him make that statement?—I did not. I was not here. I saw it in print.

18,060. You voted yourself on the polling day?—I did.

18,061. When you went into the "Globe" and found all these people there, did not you find that the object of the meeting was to know if there was any money before Mr. Reed declared there would not be any spent?—That was the object, not the slightest doubt of it.

18,062. How long were they away before they came back?—I should think they must have been gone from a quarter of an hour to twenty minutes; some considerable time.

18,063. Did they come back and state that?—Mr. Reed came back and said it was decided there should be nothing spent, there was no money. I left to go home, and afterwards went to town by the express.

18,064. Did you do anything more that day?—Nothing at all.

18,065. (Mr. Anstey.) Not the polling day?—Not the polling day.

18,066. Did not you bribe a voter of the name of Vearncombe?—I did not.

18,067. That is untrue then, is it?—It is not true that I bribed him. I did not bribe him.

18,068. (Mr. Price.) Did you promise him anything?—I did not see him that day. I will not swear that I did not pass him in the street. I would not swear I did not or I did.

18,069. Do you know the man?—I do perfectly well.

18,070. Do you know he is a man who would take a bribe if he could get one?—I will not say that, because I do not know sufficient of him for that. I know I never offered to give him or gave him any.

18,071. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you called before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—I was not.

18,072. Were you down to be called?—I was.

18,073. By whose advice were you not called on that occasion?—I do not know that there was any person's advice whatever. I was at the court waiting.

18,074. Outside the court I suppose?—No, inside here.

18,075. You did not hear the witnesses examined, I suppose?—I did.

18,076. Then there was no intention to call you as a witness?—They never attempted to do so.

18,077. There would be no intention to call you if you were allowed to be in court and heard the witnesses?—I believe everyone heard then the same as now what each other said.

18,078. Did you hear John Vearncombe examined?—I did.

18,079. Did you hear him say he had received 30*s.* from you, put it back on your counter, and that you gave it to him, Vearncombe, again?—I heard him say he put 29*s.* on my counter and authorized me to take it up and give it to him, which I did do—29*s.* of my money.

18,080. (Mr. Price.) Explain how it was?—It appears that a man named Harwood was in a public-house and Vearncombe went to have a glass of beer, and he told Vearncombe, more out of joke than anything else, that I had received 10*l.* from the bribery agents on the Liberal side to give to him, and I had only given him 7*l.* Vearncombe knew very well that was untrue. Therefore it appears Vearncombe simply came to my house to carry out this joke, as he calls it.

18,081. Was it part of the joke that he went to swear that before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—It was done to deceive Harwood.

18,082. Who is Harwood?—William Harwood, a master baker and shopkeeper.

18,083. Is he a Conservative?—He is a Conservative; it was a matter of chaff between the two—that is what it was.

18,084. To make Harwood believe that he was being bribed?—It was.

18,085. (Mr. Anstey.) At all events you admit this, that in joke circumstances passed between you and Vearncombe which not in joke would have amounted to bribing?—Never to a bribe.

18,086. I thought you said it was done to satisfy Harwood you had a bribe?—Not to satisfy me.

18,087. (Mr. Price.) I do not see how he would be satisfied if he asked to have the money back again?—He told me that Harwood was looking through the window, and I took up the money and gave it to him back. If he was looking through the window he could see.

18,088. I do not see how it could be playing off a joke upon anyone. Is that all you have to tell us with regard to the last election?—It is.

18,089. Now the election of Mr. Vanderbyl in 1866, what part did you take in that election; were you employed on the polling day?—Yes.

18,090. In what?—On the polling day I was not engaged at all. I was walking through the street and met a man named Bidgood just below the hall here, and he said, "Mr. Alway, here are two men; they "are good Liberals. they have been to poll; see if you

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

J. Alway.

13 Sept. 1869.

"can get something for them." I said, "Who are they?" and he told me.

18,091. What were their names?—James Bowering and Thomas Palmer. I went where I saw Allan, and told him the circumstance, and Allan said, "What "do they want?" and said, "You had better serve "them as you have the rest," and I said, "10*l.*," and he gave me 10*l.* for them.

18,092. What did you do with them?—I took it into Palmer's shop. He is a hairdresser as well as a publican, and I saw a basket in his barber's shop, and I put the money in that basket and left again.

18,093. (Mr. Price.) Did Bowering and Palmer see you put it there?—They saw me in the shop.

18,094. Did they see you put the money in?—I do not believe they did.

18,095. Did you say anything to them?—I asked them whose basket that was. Perhaps they might have known what I meant by that.

18,096. But they heard what Bidgood said to you?—No, they did not. Vearncombe saw me in the street, and they were in Palmer's house.

18,097. Afterwards, were you addressed by Culliford?—I was.

18,098. A cabinet-maker?—Yes.

18,099. What did he say?—"Mr. Alway, I have a "man here who will not go to poll without the "money."

18,100. What was the man's name?—Charles Wilkins.

18,101. Did you go and get money for him from Allan?—I did.

18,102. How much?—I got 14*l.* for him.

18,103. Who gave it to you?—I did not give it to him. I put it between—there was some furniture in Culliford's shop, and Culliford saw me put it there, and gave it to the man.

18,104. Did Wilkins afterwards acknowledge he had had it?—Yes.

18,105. How much did he say?—He told me 14*l.* He asked me for 15*l.*, but it was 14*l.*, and as I received it so I gave it.

18,106. But he said he ought to have 15*l.*?—Yes.

18,107. Is that all you did at the election of 1866?—Yes.

18,108. How was it you happened to be employed in this sort of work?—Being acquainted with Allan.

18,109. You knew that Allan was a bribe agent?—No.

18,110. You must have known, because you went straight to him for the money?—I never knew he was any more than any other man, only that election. I did not know it then until I went to ask him.

18,111. Directly Bidgood asked you, why did you go straight to Allan's?—Because I had been told by some gentlemen before if any voters were looking out to bring them there.

18,112. In 1866, when Mr. Bagehot stood, did you have any money at that time?—I did.

18,113. How much?—I believe it was 70*l.* altogether.

18,114. Who from?—I gave 10*l.* to a man named Charles Scott.

18,115. Whom did you have it from?—From Allan and from Smith.

18,116. Then that is the reason you went to Allan in 1866?—Yes; but that money was given to me in Smith's house. I did not know whether it was his or Smith's.

18,117. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did not know which it came from?—One of the two; they were both together.

18,118. (Mr. Price.) How much did you get?—I believe it was 20*l.* from Allan and Smith, and Ambrose Dyer gave me 10*l.*

18,119. Who did you give the 30*l.* to?—Charles Scott 10*l.*, George Webber 15*l.*, and 5*l.* I spent in treating, and one thing and another.

18,120. Are you sure you gave Webber 15*l.*?—I am; it was given to him twice. I gave him 10*l.* first.

18,121. Have you always been equally sure that you gave him 10*l.*?—I am.

18,122. Did he never say you had only given him 10*l.*?—He did the first time, and he would not go to poll unless he had the rest.

18,123. Your statement is you had 20*l.* from Allan?—Yes.

18,124. And now you say you had 30*l.* The statement I have here, that which you made to our secretary, is that you had 20*l.* from Allan, and gave 10*l.* to Webber and 10*l.* to Scott; now you say you had 30*l.*?—No, 10*l.* Dyer gave me, which made 30*l.* altogether.

18,125. Are you quite sure that you gave 15*l.* to Webber?—I am.

18,126. That would be 15*l.* to Webber and 10*l.* to Scott?—Yes, 25*l.* out of the 30*l.* I did not give Scott the money; he owed me an account, and I gave him credit for the account, and he gave me a receipt for the money.

18,127. You paid yourself with the bribe money?—Yes. I should not have had anything otherwise.

18,128. You paid yourself out of Mr. Bagehot's money?—I did.

18,129. Do you call that honourable and straightforward?—I did it because he told me to do so.

18,130. Who, Mr. Bagehot?—No, Mr. Scott.

18,131. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had a pecuniary interest in getting this money for him?—Yes; because I never should have got it else. He owes me about 6*l.* odd now.

18,132. That transaction puts you in the double category of briber and bribee?—Well, he said I could pay myself with it.

18,133. (Mr. Price.) That gave you a direct interest in the money spent in bribing?—No, not a direct interest, because it was owing by the man before.

18,134. Did you go straight in and offer him 10*l.*, knowing that he owed you money?—No, I went in and asked him who he would poll for; he said he was always a Liberal, and I said if there was anything going I would try and get it for him.

18,135. You went to canvass his vote?—Yes.

18,136. You told him you would get him some money?—I told him I would endeavour to do so.

18,137. And then he said if you do so you may put it to my account?—He did.

18,138. Therefore you had a direct interest in money spent in bribing?—I do not know whether he had a direct interest or not. He received two fifteens from another man afterwards.

18,139. You knew you would never get your account from Charles Scott in any way?—I do not believe it was possible. It was money I spent out of my pocket for him.

18,140. Then you had a direct interest in getting the candidate to spend money?—I did not think it was.

18,141. What do you think of it now; do you think it was a creditable transaction? Would you do it again to-morrow?—No.

18,142. Why would not you?—Because I would have nothing more to do with bribery in any shape or form.

18,143. Why, because you think it discreditable, or for fear of a prosecution from the Attorney-General?—No; I thought it discreditable before this last election, and expressed a desire to have nothing more to do with it.

18,144. (Mr. Coleridge.) But they would not let you?—Oh, yes, they would, there is not the slightest doubt if I had wished.

18,145. (Mr. Price.) Having done this at Mr. Bagehot's election, it did not strike you as being discreditable when Mr. Vanderbyl came to bribe again. Had you any bad debts at Mr. Vanderbyl's election which you paid yourself out of Mr. Vanderbyl's money with?—I did not pay myself with any. I did not keep any money at that time for any debts. Scott owed me money at Vanderbyl's election too. I did not go and look for him then. He owes me money now.

18,146. Did you tell several voters if anything was going they would be sure to have it?—No, I did not.

18,147. Did several voters, whose names you cannot recollect, come to you afterwards, and did you tell them if anything was going they would be sure to have it?—Four men came up afterwards—10 o clock.

18,148. Did you tell them?—I told them I did not believe there was any money going.

18,149. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you tell them if there was any money going you would get it for them?—I did not tell them I would get it for them.

18,150. (Mr. Price.) Did you say, "If there is "anything going you will be sure to have it?"—I did not promise.

18,151. Did you?—I did.

18,152. Did Dyment come to you and tell you not to promise anything, for you would have to pay it yourself?—He did.

18,153. Because your side had put the drag on?—Yes, that is correct.

18,154. And the others were not spending a penny?—Yes, that is correct.

18,155. You did not spend any money out of your own pocket?—No, I did not; not any. When I say not any, perhaps a pound. I know I was out of pocket.

18,156. Did Bulpin come to you and bring you some packets?—He did.

18,157. And tell you to get what men you could, because you were losing?—Yes.

18,158. Did you go and see anybody?—I went and saw if I could see anybody, and could not find any.

18,159. Did you see Mr. Evans?—I saw Mr. Evans.

18,160. Who is Mr. Evans?—A gentleman I believe, and formerly a shopkeeper.

18,161. Did you offer him a bribe?—No.

18,162. Did you ask him to go and vote?—I did.

18,163. Did you say anything about getting anything for it?—No, nothing at all.

18,164. Nothing whatever?—Nothing whatever. I should be sorry to offer a man like that any money.

18,165. Did Charles Hyden go with you?—He did.

18,166. Did you find anybody you could dispose of this money to?—No.

18,167. No one at all?—No one at all.

18,168. Did you make any claim to have anything yourself for what you had done at Bagehot's election?—I did send in a bill.

18,169. How much did you claim?—15*l.*; not Bagehot's election; none at all.

18,170. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which?—Mr. Vanderbyl's.

18,171. Was that for your services?—It was. I did not get anything, but I was recommended to send in my bill by Mr. Haviland the attorney.

18,172. Did you consult Mr. Haviland, the attorney, as to your bribery practices?—No, never in my life.

18,173. How came he to advise you then?—I was asking him about my expenses running about.

18,174. (Mr. Price.) What were your expenses, except shoe leather?—There was my treating and one thing and another.

18,175. How much for treating?—1*l.* is not long going with a band and men about.

18,176. Is this your claim: Philip Vanderbyl to James Alway; to services rendered during the above election, including expenses paid out of pocket, 15*l.* 15*s.* 0*d.*?—It is.

18,177. What expenses do you say you were out of pocket, how many pounds?—I cannot say how many; I never kept account.

18,178. (Mr. Coleridge.) I trust you never got paid that amount?—No, nor expected it if I sent it.

18,179. Then why did you send it?—Because Mr. Haviland recommended me.

18,180. (Mr. Price.) To send that to Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, but to the agent. I believe I sent it to——

18,181. Mr. Lovibond?—I do not know.

18,182. Did you tell them you had already paid yourself a debt of Scott's?—No.

18,183. Did Allan tell you that as Mr. Bagehot's election was lost you must not expect anything?—He did.

18,184. Did you expect anything?—No.

18,185. How came Allan to say it?—Before that he said he would see I was not anything out of pocket.

18,186. How much did you claim then?—Not anything.

18,187. How much did you intend to claim?—I should have left it entirely to Mr. Allan.

18,188. If Mr. Bagehot had won, how much should you have claimed?—I should not have claimed anything at all.

18,189. Would you have sent in a claim for 15 guineas then?—No. I should have had no idea of sending in a bill.

18,190. Do you say if Allan had not said that to you, you should have expected something?—Well, it was Allan told me before of it; he put it in my mouth. If he had not told me I should not have expected anything at all.

18,191. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then Allan made you do it at one time, and Mr. Haviland another. Anybody else?—No, that is all.

18,192. (Mr. Price.) Did you say you had sent that bill in? Did you never ask for it except when you sent in that bill by Mr. Haviland's advice?—No, I did not.

18,193. Do you mean to say that you never asked Mr. Allan what you were to have for your trouble?—No.

18,194. Never?—Never.

18,195. And Mr. Allan replied the thing was not settled?—Was that Mr. Vanderbyl's election?

18,196. Yes?—Yes, I did ask him.

18,197. Why did you?—Because he promised me.

18,198. Did you ask Allan what you were to have for your trouble in Mr. Vanderbyl's time?—Yes.

18,199. Before Mr. Haviland said anything to you?—Yes.

18,200. Did he reply the thing was settled?—He did.

18,201. Did you ask for it several times?—I believe twice.

18,202. Did Allan say, "If you take it for your "vote you shall have it in five minutes?"—He did.

18,203. Had you voted then?—This was six weeks after.

18,204. Did you then indignantly decline to take that?—I did.

18,205. In that form?—I did.

18,206. And you thought it was a great difference whether it was taken for services or for a vote?—I did think it a great difference, and do now.

18,207. Did you ever get anything?—I never did in my life, not a penny.

18,208. (Mr. Price.) Now, with regard to a man named Webber at Bagehot's election, did you give give him 10*l.*?—I did.

18,209. Did you give him another 5*l.*?—I did.

18,210. Did he say he would not vote without another 5*l.*?—He did.

18,211. Had you got that money from Ambrose Dyer?—10*l.* from Ambrose Dyer, and 20*l.* from Allan, down at Mr. Smith's house.

18,212. What was Webber's christian name?—George.

18,213. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did you bribe at Bagehot's election?—James Bowring, 10*l.*, and Thomas Palmer, 10*l.* They had both been to me before, and I fetched the 14*l.* for Wilkins. I fetched it for Culliford for Wilkins.

18,214. Is that all you did?—All in my life.

18,215. Did you give him the whole 14*l.*?—I did.

18,216. That was at Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—Yes.

18,217. You have told us that you bribed Webber

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

J. Alway.

13 Sept. 1869.

at Bagehot's election ?—Yes, I did, not at Vanderbyl's ; those two elections.

18,218. You said they were all you had done in the world ?—Yes, two elections.

18,219. (Mr. Coleridge.) Webber and Scott were at Bagehot's election ?—Yes.

18,220. Is that all you did ?—All in my life.

18,221. Is that all you had from Allan ?—It is all I ever had from Allan.

18,222. (Mr. Price.) Are you quite sure about that, that you gave the money ? Are you quite sure you paid Scott at Bagehot's election ?—Yes.

18,223. Was it at Bagehot's election you paid yourself out of Mr. Bagehot's money ? I thought it was Vanderbyl's ?—No, Bagehot's.

18,224. Did you spend any money besides in bribing ?—No.

18,225. No other money ?—No other money at all.

18,226. Now, do not answer me in too great a hurry. Did you spend any other money that you got in bribing ?—I spent 5*l.* that I got in treating, running about, and one thing and another.

18,227. How do you mean, running about, throwing the money about ?—No, I met with the bandsman and people carrying flags and colours.

18,228. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much did you pocket out of it ?—I do not believe I pocketed a penny.

18,229. Do you mean that you spent every pound of it ?—Yes.

18,230. (Mr. Price.) How much do you consider you spent in treating ?—I consider 5*l.*

18,231. That is what you received from Ambrose Dyer ?—Yes, it was. People were treating in all directions. I recollect standing four glasses of brandy and water at one place, down at Mr. Bussell's.

18,232. Did you not have it put down to the candidate ?—No, I did not. I never had a penny put down to the candidate in my life.

18,233. (Mr. Price.) But the houses were all open for treating at Bagehot's election, were they not ?—I do not think they were.

18,234. Were there plenty of houses opened for treating at Bagehot's election ?—I do not know whether for treating ; I saw a great many open and people going in and out. I did not myself.

18,235. Did you say there were plenty of open houses for treating at Bagehot's election ?—There were a lot of houses open.

18,236. What occasion was there then, if there were plenty of open houses where publicans gave drink away on spec ?—That was the last election ; I believe they were on spec.

18,237. Some houses give it on spec, do they not ?—I do not know.

18,238. And it is put down to the candidate at other houses, is it not ?—I do not know ; I presume it is. I do not remember being at a house where it was put down to the candidate.

18,239. What house did you spend it at ?—Different houses. At the "Commercial Inn" I spent a sovereign.

18,240. What name ?—Phelps. The band was in the street, and there were colours.

18,241. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you buy the colours ?—I did not. It was Mr. Smith who provided the colours.

18,242. Then what was it ?—There were 40 men, I suppose. I went round with them playing.

18,243. You did not throw the money about the streets ?—No ; but 5*l.* would not go far.

18,244. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that you spent 5*l.* in treating ?—Yes.

18,245. Give us the houses ?—I cannot ; it was spent in the streets. Gallons of beer given to the people all round, parties who were following.

18,246. Do you mean to say you put nothing in your own pocket ?—I did not.

18,247. You, a man who paid a debt of your own out of the candidate's money and made a claim for other occasions, did not put a farthing in your own pocket. Is that what you mean to say now ?—I did not.

18,248. Not a farthing ?—Not a penny, or a penny's worth.

18,249. Do you know anything of the election of 1865, Shelley's ?—No. I know that I voted for Shelley.

18,250. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you nothing to do with money ?—No.

18,251. Nor treating ?—No.

18,252. Nor colours ?—No.

18,253. Did you vote at the election of 1859, when Kinglake and Tynte were returned, and Patten and Westropp stood ?—I did vote.

18,254. Had you anything to do with treating ?—No.

18,255. Band ?—No.

18,256. Or colours ?—No.

18,257. Then how came you to be first entrusted with money ?—Because Allen asked me how much I would have.

18,258. How came he to ask you ?—I do not know; we were at Mr. Smith's together.

18,259. (Mr. Price.) What were your antecedents, that he should think you a suitable instrument ?—I have known him since I have been in this town. We were neighbours together, and he was partly in my line of business.

18,260. What business ? — Tea dealer, and china, Allan is.

18,261. He had what he calls a Scotch business ?—Yes ; but he was next door to me.

18,262. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did not he say he would see that you did not lose anything ?—No ; he told me I should not work for nothing if we won the next election.

18,263. That is how you came to have the 15*l.* claim ?—It was.

18,264. (Mr. Anstey.) Is that your first election ?—1857 was my first election.

18,265. Do you know anything about that ?—I voted for Kinglake and Follett.

18,266. Had you anything to do with money ?—No.

18,267. (Mr. Coleridge.) How came you to vote one and one ?—Because I had commenced business, and some of my customers are Liberals, and some Tories.

18,268. You are not like Mr. Smith, who did not gain anything but lost. You got that bad debt ?—It was a bad debt saved, or a portion of it.

18,269. (Mr. Anstey.) In 1857 there were two Liberal candidates, were there not ?—Yes.

18,270. Why not vote for them ?—Because I voted to oblige my customers ; one portion of them Conservatives, good customers, and the other portion of them Liberals. I had just commenced business, and thought that would oblige the two.

18,271. (Mr. Price.) To see which way the wind blew ?—Yes.

18,272. Which side were the best customers you would stick to ?—No, not like that ; I was always a Liberal, and my father before me.

18,273. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that your commencement of electoral life ?—Yes.

18,274. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then your voting for Follett was a backsliding ?—Yes.

18,275. (Mr. Price.) You know others like you are said to have kept money for themselves ?—Yes. I have heard them say that they had 300*l.* at the last election.

18,276. You know best whether you did or not ?—I never saw the colour of a penny.

18,277. (Mr. Coleridge.) Or a promise ?—Or a promise.

18,278. (Mr. Price.) You know best. If it should turn out before us that you had it will be an awkward predicament for you to be in ?—I give you every information in my power.

18,279. If you have done it and have kept it back from us, and it should appear hereafter, the fact of your being examined will not protect you in any way. Therefore do not come to-morrow morning and say, after your conscience has pricked you, something you do not remember to-day ?—My conscience will not prick me for anything I do.

CHARLES BADGER sworn.

18,280. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—Clerk at Brown and Co.'s.

18,281. Are you a voter for Bridgwater ?—Yes.

18,282. Did you vote at the last election ?—I did.

18,283. Besides voting, did you take any active part in the election ?—Not in the way of bribing. I did not take any active part until late in the afternoon, in trying to get men to vote.

18,284. What was the active part you took then ?—Simply seeing men and asking them to go to vote.

18,285. Did you promise them any money ?—No, I did not.

18,286. Whom did you go and see ?—I do not know that I went to anyone.

18,287. Did you see any of Mr. Brown's men ?—I remember seeing one whom I could not get to vote.

18,288. Why not ?—Because he would not go.

18,289. Did he say he wanted money ?—He did not say so ; I understood he did. He said he would not vote.

18,290. Did he vote on the other side ?—I do not know. I think he went.

18,291. What is his name ?—Stuckey.

18,292. What is his christian name ?—I think it is William.

18,293. Now, were you employed by Allan in any way ?—I was not.

18,294. You say you had nothing whatever to do ?—No.

18,295. In any way ? — No, not in the way of bribing.

18,296. Beyond what you have told us ?—No.

18,297. Had you any money entrusted to you ?—No.

18,298. Were you asked to see people and tell them they would have money ?—No, I went voluntarily.

18,299. To whom ? — I spoke to a good many during the day ; I cannot say to whom.

18,300. Did you promise them money ?—I did not.

18,301. What did you say to James Hayward ?—I simply asked him to vote. He said he would not unless his expenses were paid. He came from Swansea or Newport, I don't know which. I told him I could not get his expenses, and he would have to go without it.

18,302. Was that all that took place ?—Yes.

18,303. Did you ever promise him anything ?—No.

18,304. At that time or any other ?—No.

18,305. Did you say you would try and get him some ?—I did not.

18,306. Were you in communication with Allan at all that day ?—No, I did not see Allan all the day. I saw Bussell. I do not know that I spoke to Bussell about the election.

18,307. Are you sure that you did not ?—I cannot say I did not. Of course running about in the excitement all day I might have spoken to him.

18,308. (Mr. Anstey.) Did not you meet James Hayward on the road or bridge that day ?—I met him by the gaol somewhere.

18,309. You saw him ; was it on the road ?—I suppose it was on the road somewhere.

18,310. Did you walk along the road with him ?—I did.

18,311. Did you promise him that if he would vote for your side he should have his expenses ?—I did not.

18,312. Then did he say to you, "Damn your "expenses, I could always pay my own. Could I "not, Harry ?"—He did not.

18,313. You deny the whole of it ?—I do.

18,314. Did you see Hobbs when you were walking with Hayward ?—I did not see Hobbs, but I suppose he was there, from the evidence he gave at the Commission.

18,315. James Hayward, I think, was examined before the Judge ?—He was.

18,316. Do you remember what he said before the Judge ?—I do.

18,317. Did he tell the truth ?—He did not, because he said he had not spoken to me. I know he had spoken to me.

18,318. When you spoke to Hayward, did you ask him for his vote ?—I did.

18,319. Did you then know that he had not only promised to vote for Westropp, but had received a promise of his expenses if he came over from Cardiff, I think it was ?—I did not.

18,320. Eh ?—I did not.

18,321. You know it now, of course ?—I know it now.

18,322. Very well. What did he say to you when you asked him for his vote ?—He said he would not go unless I paid his expenses.

18,323. What else ? What did you say to that ?—I told him I could not pay his expenses.

18,324. What else ?—I told him he would have to go to vote without it.

18,325. Did you tell him where he could get his expenses ?—No.

18,326. Did you say no doubt they would pay his expenses ?—I did not. I told him plainly he would not get it.

18,327. You had canvassed other people at that election, before the day and on the day ?—I had asked some people to go to vote during the day, late in the afternoon.

18,328. I daresay you had no scruple in asking the people in your master's employment to go to vote ?—Most decidedly I should not.

18,329. You would have no objection to it ?—I should have no objection to ask them to go to vote.

18,330. And would you have any objection to tell Hayward that if he applied he would get his expenses ?—I did not tell him so.

18,331. But would you have had any objection to say so ? Is there anything in your mind which would prevent your saying so ?—Simply that I could not pay it, and did not know where he could get it.

18,332. That was all ?—That was all.

18,333. There are two against you, both Henry Hobbs and James Hayward. What would you say then ?—I say the same as I say now. Bussell has said himself that he paid Hayward.

18,334. That has nothing to do with it. It is not that you really bribed Hayward actually, but that you tried to bribe Hayward, and that Bussell was more successful. That is the statement against you ?—I did not. I told him I would not give it.

18,335. You are aware that he was proved guilty of bribery before Mr. Justice Blackburn ?—Yes.

18,336. And by Bussell ?—I did not know it till then.

18,337. What hour of the day was it you saw him ?—It was after dinner. I could not say what hour.

18,338. You knew he had voted on previous occasions for the Conservatives ?—I did not. I always thought he was a Liberal.

18,339. On this occasion he voted for the Liberals ?—Yes, I believe he did.

18,340. Did you hear him say, "Damn your expenses ; I can always pay my own ?"—I did not.

18,341. What did he say ?—I do not know. I cannot undertake to recall all the words.

18,342. Why did he leave you ?—I believe Bussell was coming down the street, and that he left me to go to Bussell. There were several of them there, all of whom I knew.

17,343. Did you say "hush" to him, and tell him not to speak too loud ?—I did not.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

C. Badger.

13 Sept. 1869.

18,344. Did anybody in your presence say "hush?"—I do not know.

18,345. You did not hear it?—I do not remember it.

18,346. This conversation took you right up to the gaol, just opposite the gaol?—It did.

18,347. Very well. When you were just opposite the gaol you met with Bussell?—Yes, I think so. Bussell was coming down Fore Street.

18,348. At that moment was Hobbs along with you and Hayward?—I did not see Hobbs.

18,349. Did you or Bussell say to Hayward, "Here, come here, Hayward, I want you?—I think Bussell held up his finger. That was enough for Hayward, he went off at once.

18,350. Very well, then he left you. Now, perhaps, you can tell me with reference to another point, that of undue influence; why has one of the Conservative voters in your master's employment—why has he left the employment since the election?—I cannot tell. I do not know that any Conservative has left us.

18,351. Wilton has told us that there were some half dozen?—Evans I believe has left. I had nothing to do with him. I suppose he left for some quarrel with the foreman. He voted for the Conservatives, I believe, because he was paid for it.

18,352. You cannot say that he was not dismissed on account of his having voted for the Conservatives?—I had nothing to do with his dismissal.

18,353. Who was the foreman with whom he quarrelled?—I do not know that he had a quarrel; I suppose he had. The foreman takes them on or discharges them at the several yards.

18,354. And you are not the foreman?—No, I was not.

18,355. You had nothing to do with recommending the employment or dismissal of men?—Nothing whatever.

18,356. Who was the foreman? There are a great number of foremen?—Four or five.

18,357. William Dite, I think. That was a man who left. He has a cross to his name?—I do not know him.

18,358. Has he left?—I do not know him.

18,359. Joseph Letherby, do you know him; has he left?—I do not know him, but I believe he has left through a quarrel with the foreman.

18,360. Tell me the name of the foreman?—Samuel Manchip.

18,361. I believe there are some negociations going on for restoring him to the service?—I cannot say; it has nothing to do with me.

18,362. Are you the son of Mrs. Badger who was examined before the election committee in 1866?—I am.

18,363. (Mr. Price.) Is there anything you wish to say now?—I may say I saw Hayward a day or two before the Commission sat, and he asked me if I was subpœnaed. I said I was. He said, "In all "probability you will be examined on my case. I "shall tell the truth as I did last time." I did not make any reply because I knew he had not told the truth, and I heard the following day that he had been to make a statement to your secretary. That is all I know.

18,364. Is there anything else you wish to say?—No.

18,365. If there is you had better say it now, because it will come no doubt now to a conflict of testimony between you and Hayward in all probability?—I cannot help that. I have told you all that I have done with Hayward. I never promised him anything.

18,366. What is the christian name of Manchip?—Samuel.

18,367. Now, was there anything in the connexion between you and Hayward to give you a right to try and influence him in his vote?—Nothing whatever. I had no influence over him; I had never seen the man scarcely.

18,368. Did you point out Bussell to him?—I did not. He saw Bussell before I did.

18,369. You are quite sure?—Oh, I am certain of that.

18,370. (Mr. Anstey.) Where does this man live? What is Manchip's address?—He lives at Dunwear.

W. Dyment.

WILLIAM DYMENT sworn.

18,371. Are you a clerk to Thompson and Collins, cheese factors, Bridgwater?—I am.

18,372. Have you been employed by Mr. Lovibond for some years to attend to the registration of this borough?—I have attended to the registration voluntarily, not as employment.

18,373. Not employed?—No.

18,374. (Mr. Anstey.) You say voluntarily; are you paid for it?—No, I am not.

18,375. (Mr. Price.) Have you been asked by Mr. Lovibond?—More particularly at the last election. There was some meeting called.

18,376. This is about the registration?—Previous to the registration. There was a meeting called, and the town was divided into districts, and I was asked to take one of the districts, in order to get the information as to the claims and objections to the names.

18,377. Were you appointed one of the executive committee to establish the Liberal Working Men's Association in October last?—I was.

18,378. Who asked you to take that office?—Well, I can scarcely reply. I had been on a journey, and I came home, and I found a meeting announced in this hall for a Saturday evening; and during that day I think it was Mr. Thomas Hill told me that my name had been suggested by Mr. Lovibond, in conjunction with him and Mr. Bowden, to form an initiatory committee, who were to form an association. I made objection to it, and went behind that screen and told Mr. Lovibond that my time was so much taken up that I could not take part in anything of the sort. He overruled the objection and said I must give the best assistance I could; and I came down here and——

18,379. Did you act on that committee?—I did.

18,380. Did Mr. Lovibond ask you to make out lists a week before the election, so that he might know the doubtful voters?—Yes; he came to my house and asked for an interview, and we went into a room together, and he was rather guarded in his conversation, but he said that the town was divided, as I knew, and that he wanted some one in each ward to take charge of the lists, and to ascertain how many doubtful voters there were, and make out lists for those who would know the men and converse with them, and get the information; and I asked him who was to do this in the other wards.

18,381. When he told you "doubtful voters," what did you understand by doubtful?—I hope I did him no wrong, but I understood it was men that would have to be bribed if they voted. I asked him who was to do it in the other wards, and he told me in the north ward it would be very likely entrusted to Charles Bulpin, and in the east ward no one had yet undertaken it, but the probabilities were that Mr. John Smith would be asked to do it.

18,382. Did you know at that time that Bulpin had been employed as a bribe agent?—I did.

18,383. And Smith also?—I did.

18,384. And in consequence of that did you decline to do the work that was asked of you?—I did not positively decline then. I said to Mr. Lovibond, "Well, I don't like this, and you must be careful. I "must not be implicated, for I have taken such an "active part in the formation of this Liberal Associa- "tion, and have been so closely in communication "with yourself, that if I am caught in any illegal act "it is my impression, although I am not a legal man, "it would be taken as constructive agency." He said, "I do not wish you to do anything that is illegal." I then consented to make out these lists, and after he was gone—I had been working hard before, and was rather poorly, and perhaps that caused nervousness; about two days afterwards I went to Mr. Lovibond and said I could not have anything more to do with it.

18,385. On the polling day did you see Mr. Lovibond and tell him that the other party were polling their doubtful voters?—I did. Before that I saw him, and I asked him had he made any other arrangements. That was about 11 o'clock.

18,386. Did you understand from him that the Tories were going to fight purely?—I did, about 9 o'clock on the polling day. He had received some information from Robert Bussell and other sources; I do not know where. He said he believed they were going to fight without money, and that was then apparent by the slack way in which they were polling. About 11 o'clock, however, I met him in the High Street, and I said, "They are now polling their doubtful votes," and he said they were.

18,387. Did you ask him about his intentions?—I did. He said, "We mean to win the election." I said, "It is time something should be done."

18,388. What did you mean by that?—That money should be spent; but there was great vacillation through it all. You could not say "Yes" or "No" to anybody.

18,389. What did he say?—He said he would see about it. About 12 o'clock I saw him again, and said, "This is a queer way of going on; you can't answer the men when they come to you." He told me to go to the "Globe."

18,390. And that you would hear something there?—Yes.

18,391. Did you see Bulpin, Allan, and Smith there?—I did. I went into a room and saw some of the solicitors there, and apparently they were undecided as to what course to take.

18,392. Did you see Mr. Lovibond afterwards, and say there was a majority, and the election would not be won?—I did.

18,393. And begged him to do something?—I did.

18,394. Did you tell him to spend money?—I said, "For goodness sake do something."

18,395. He was not spending money at that time?—No; but no positive good could be done without. The men were hanging back in consequence. I said for every four left unpolled, three of them the Tories would not dare to meddle with.

18,396. (Mr. Coleridge.) Would not attempt to bribe them?—For fear of their being found out. They would give up the money, and tell them that they were in favour of the Liberals.

18,397. (Mr. Price.) At 3 o'clock did you hear that men were being got together?—I did.

18,398. And you knew money was going?—I did not go near the place, but I thought so.

18,399. Did you see a man named French, the landlord of the "Rose and Crown"?—I did. There was a committee room at his house. I was in that the greater part of that day. I was engaged in the ward giving information as to who the men were to poll; and about 3 o'clock, when they were running neck and neck, I thought I would ask French to poll. I went down, and I saw him at the front door talking to a gentleman who was urging him to go and poll, and I joined in the conversation and asked him to poll.

18,400. Did he ask if anything was going?—After that gentleman had left.

18,401. Did you say, "I think there is"?—I said, "Judging from how things are going I think there is."

18,402. Did you go to the "Globe" and see Mr. Cook, the solicitor, about it?—I did.

18,403. Did he tell you to make the best terms you could with French?—He did.

18,404. Did he ask you whether the man would go on your promise?—He did.

18,405. Did you say "Yes"?—I was going off, and I stepped back and I said, "Promise him how much"? and Mr. Cook said, "Promise him 10*l.*"

18,406. Did you go afterwards and see French?—I did.

18,407. Did he say he would not take a promise, but he would have the money?—Yes.

18,408. Did he say why?—Because, he said, as times then were he would have the money first.

18,409. Did he say he would not take a promise, because on former occasions he had been promised and had not got his money?—He did not.

18,410. Nor that the agents sometimes stuck to it?—He did not.

18,411. However he would not take your promise?—He would not.

18,412. Did you send your wife for the money?—At the moment I was talking to him on the pavement my wife came in towards my house from the Taunton road with the two children after a walk, and an unfortunate thing it was for me. The thought struck me——

18,413. Never mind your thought. Let us come to your actions. The thoughts do not matter. Did you send your wife for 10*l.* of your own?—I did.

18,414. And pay it to French?—I did.

18,415. Did you speak to Mr. Cook about it afterwards?—About three or four days afterwards I attempted to begin a conversation about it, and he said, "I cannot hear anything about it." I understood what that meant.

18,416. Do you look for your money?—Yes.

18,417. From whom?—From Mr. Cook.

18,418. Would you put him in the County Court for it?—No.

18,419. Was that all you did in the way of bribing that day?—That was all.

18,420. I want to know if you had such a horror of being on the executive committee when you were asked. How was it that you persuaded your wife afterwards to go and get 10*l.* to bribe French?—It was a mad act, but it is a fact. One thing is that my name would be sure to go forth if I was on the committee, and my employers would know it. It was not a matter of purity, I admit, on my part.

18,421. Your employers are Thompson & Co.?—Yes.

18,422. Did they know of this?—Not till Mr. Cook gave his evidence.

18,423. Have they reprehended you or reproved you?—They have not actually done that. They have expressed their sorrow and regret; that is all.

18,424. Are they of the Liberal party?—They are.

18,425. Is that all you have to tell us with regard to the part you took in 1868?—Yes, that is all. I had a great deal to do with the Liberal Association, but there were no illegal acts connected with it. I was at many meetings.

18,426. When you attended to the registration have you ever done anything in the way of paying the rates of people?—Never heard of such a thing.

18,427. Was no such thing done?—No such thing done as I am aware. Mr. Barham in his evidence spoke of some lists that I had prepared. You will allow me to explain that they were not prepared with any intention of being used for bribery purposes. When this association was formed I became an active member of the committee, and the thought entered my mind (it was entirely my own idea) that it would be a good plan to get the members together, as it was a new constituency, and get lists prepared for all the polling districts, and go through the lists, so that some one present might give us information as to how the men were likely to go. I made lists and called different meetings in the different wards of some 60 or 70 belonging to the ward, and no name came up but what some man present knew something about them, and from that information the lists were made. In that interview that I had with Mr. Lovibond I presented him with a paper with a summary of the totals that were given, and I said to him, "If this is put "honestly before Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray, this "return which is not made from a canvass, it is not "at all likely that they will attempt to use illegal "means or money on their side against such a man "as Mr. Vanderbyl."

18,428. Why not?—Because I had heard and knew that Mr. Vanderbyl had spent a great deal of money before; and this list gave us a majority of 120, and if the same means were used on both sides I could not see any chance for the others.

18,429. You thought Vanderbyl would out-trump Westropp and Gray?—Yes.

18,430. He had the longest purse?—I thought so.

18,431. (Mr. Anstey.) This association of which you spoke, Mr. Jones, did it hold its meetings at five public-houses? I will give you the names. The "Globe," the "Mansion House," the "New Inn," the "Rose and Crown," the "Masons' Arms"?—It did at those five houses.

18,432. We have it in evidence that those are amongst the public-houses which were opened for treating at the last election. Do you agree with that or not?—Some of them were.

18,433. How many of these five; all of them, were they not?—No. At the house which I was in, the "Rose and Crown," I do not think there was a drop of beer drawn for the election. The only treating there, was done by myself. I ordered a bottle of sherry and some biscuits for the clerks.

18,434. You did treat?—Yes, the clerks.

18,435. No matter whom. You did treat. Then with this exception were these houses open?—Not according to my own recollection. The "New Inn" and the "Masons' Arms" I believe were.

18,436. And the "Mansion House"?—I am not aware about the "Mansion House."

18,437. Instead of "some of them," then your answer is only two of them?—Yes. That would be some of them.

18,438. You do not contradict the other witnesses, I suppose, if they swear that all these were open for treating?—Well, if they swear that the "Rose and Crown" was where I was. With the exception of that reservation I would not.

18,439. At all events you speak to two. You were in the habit of being there at these meetings at the public-houses?—Yes.

18,440. You were also, I believe, the getter up of the meeting, if it were a meeting, at which Vanderbyl and Kinglake and their patrons, the four lawyers, Lovibond, Barham, Reed, and Cook, subscribed to the funds of the Shepherds' Society, and became members of that body?—No, that is an error.

18,441. Will you swear that you did not yourself ask the candidates to become members of that body?—I will, if you will allow me, explain. My name is not Jones; it is Dyment. You have called me Jones.

18,442. I was under the impression that you were Mr. Stephen Colin Jones?—No; I thought you had made a mistake. I am not a Shepherd, and know nothing of them. I never was.

18,443. What is your christian name?—William.

18,444. (Mr. Price.) I was going to ask you, Mr. Dyment, this, French is the landlord of the inn?—He is.

18,445. Were you not surprised that a man of that kind wanted 10*l.*?—Honestly, I was. I went down with no more intention of talking to him about the 10*l.* than——

18,446. Have you got it back?—No.

18,447. Assuming for a moment that there should ever be a fresh election for Bridgwater, should you think yourself justified in demanding that 10*l.* from any unfortunate candidate who might be deluded into coming here?—No; the only one I should think myself justified in demanding it from is Mr. Cook.

18,448. We have heard of a stipulation being made, or a bargain, for a candidate when he came, to pay claims arising from a former election. Should you think yourself justified in stipulating that your vote and interest should not be given to any unfortunate gentleman who was deluded into coming here unless he would pay your claim?—No; I should think I should deserve to lose it.

18,449. That idea has not crossed your mind?—No.

18,450. You have not had the idea presented to you about another election for Bridgwater?—No.

18,451. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have told us in respect to the election of 1868 the part you took in it yourself?—Yes.

18,452. Tell us anything else you knew or saw in connexion with it?—Two or three circumstances came across me in getting up rebutting evidence as to the other side.

18,453. You got information in that way?—When they talked about a scrutiny I tried to get up rebutting evidence.

18,454. That would be evidence against the petitioners who prayed for the seat?—Yes, they did so at one time.

18,455. That would be after the election?—Yes, after the election.

18,456. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you canvass any of Browne & Company's brickmakers?—No.

18,457. Did you see Honeyball about at that election?—Yes, I saw him about. I saw him the night after, in the evening. I remember a conversation with him after the polling.

18,458. Did you see him bring up a number of voters to poll?—I did not.

18,459. Is that all you have to tell about the election of 1868?—Yes.

18,460. (Mr. Price.) You have something to tell us about the election of 1866?—Yes.

18,461. Now then tell us about the second one, Mr. Vanderbyl's?—I heard Mr. Vanderbyl was coming down on the Monday or on the Tuesday I think it was. I attended a meeting and they asked me if I would see two parties and get them to the poll if I possibly could. Those persons were named James Harrington and James Richards. On the day mentioned Mr. Allan told me that there was money, and if I would promise these two men money to go to the poll he would see me right afterwards. He told me I could promise them 10*l.* each. I consented to do it, and in the evening I saw the two men and told them to go to the poll the next day.

18,462. What were their names?—James Harrington and James Richards. About 9 o'clock I should judge, on the nomination night, Mr. Cook saw me in the Fore Street. He said, "We are in trouble. We "have telegraphed to Mr. Rookley at Wimbledon, "and we can get no reply. You must go." I consented to go. He gave me 5*l.* for my expenses to London. I went up by the mail train at about half-past 11, which arrives at Paddington about 4 o'clock. I then took a cab and drove to Wandsworth Common which is very near Wimbledon. I there found him ill with a slight sunstroke, which he had had two days before, and which prevented him returning the telegram. I tried to get him to come home. I persuaded him very strongly to go to Paddington. He got about half way on the road, and I found him very ill; and I said I would not take the responsibility of advising him to go any further. He went back, and I came to Paddington and telegraphed and said I could not get him home; and, for myself, I came home about 2 o'clock, and took no further part in the election.

18,463. Well, then, what part did you take in the election of May 1866?—That is Bagehot's election. At that election I was asked first by Mr. Reed or Mr. Cook, I do not know which, to go to Tiverton to see a man of the name of Bottomley. He said he was a Liberal. I think it was Mr. Cook, and I was to bring him up. He was a very respectable man, a man I did not know before. I went down there and saw him. He was a schoolmaster here, and a draper, and a draper there; and he agreed to come. I told him I should pay the expenses. I took his and my railway tickets; and on our journey up he was exclaiming very much against bribery, how much he detested bribery, but he did think that people ought to be paid for their time; if they came from their home and left their business he thought they ought to be paid.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

W. Dyment.

13 Sept. 1869.

18,464. (Mr. Coleridge.) A suggestive conversation?—Very. When I came to Bridgwater I took him to the Railway Hotel, and I believe I told Mr. Hodge that I would pay the bill, and I left him, and he promised that he would go to the poll the first thing in the morning, and I said I would pay his expenses and for his time. The next day about 12 o'clock, I should judge between 11 and 12 possibly, Mr. Cook came to me in the room in which they were polling, the public room in St. John Street, and said, "That man Bottom-"ley has been coming to me for his expenses and "insulted me." I went and found him and said, "Why don't you go to the poll?" He said, "I did not see clearly how I should get my expenses." I said, "You go to the poll, and I will pay them." I then went to the bar of the "Anchor," which is kept by Bussell, and I said to Bottomley, "What do you want for your expenses?" He hesitated for some time; then he said he did not think he should be properly repaid unless he had 10*l.* Bad as I was, I was simply disgusted with him. I said I did not anticipate anything of that sort, or I should have had nothing to do with him.

18,465. (Mr. Price.) What is he?—A draper.

18,466. In a good way of business?—I should judge so from the style of shop I saw. I said, "I thought from what you said a guinea would be enough." He said, "Oh no, that won't do." I said, "Well, as you "have gone from what you said, I will give you two "guineas for the day's work." He said he was not satisfied with that, it was not a just recompense, and he would rather take nothing than that. I said, "If "you would rather get nothing than that, you had "better give it to me again, and if I can get more for "you, you shall have it." I then took it away from him, and I have never seen him from that day to this. On the morning of the polling day Mr. Lovibond saw me in the room and said, "I wish you would go down "to Bussell and tell him to stop, either from paying "money or promising; I think the Tories have laid "a trap for him," or something to that effect; and I did so. I went down to Bussell according to his wishes. That takes me to something else. When I came home from Tiverton at night late I went into a room at Mr. John Smith's, where there was Mr. Allan, Mr. Henry Cornelius White, and Mr. John Smith, and some two or three others; and from them I understood that they had 500*l.* to fight the election with, and the other was to be done by promising as much as they could. He asked me whether I would do the same as I did at the other election of 1866. James Harrington I went and saw, and I promised to pay him the next day, and I afterwards paid him the money.

18,467. Is that all you had to do with that election?—That is all I had to do with it.

18,468. Did you pay Harrington afterwards 10*l.*?—I did.

18,469. As to 1865. Did you do anything in 1865?—No, I did not. I met Harrington on the morning of the election. I suppose he wondered why I had not been to him.

18,470. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why should he wonder that you had not been to him? Had you been to him at earlier elections?—One earlier election. He asked me if money was going, and I said, No, if money was his only object, he had better go to the other side and get it.

18,471. (Mr. Anstey.) You did not sign the petition of 1866?—No.

18,472. Why did you not sign it?—I was never asked.

18,473. (Mr. Price.) In 1859 did Bussell tell you to promise Harrington?—Yes.

18,474. And did you promise him 10*l.* and afterwards pay him?—Yes.

18,475. Did you get it from Bussell?—Yes.

18,476. In 1857 did you take any part in the election?—I was merely a check clerk in the polling booth.

18,477. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1859 what did you do?—Promised Harrington.

18,478. Who gave you the money that time?—Bussell. He gave it to me a fortnight after in each case. I promised the men, and Bussell gave me the money a fortnight afterwards.

18,479. That is all you have to tell us?—Yes, except that I have to tell you that these poll sheets of three different wards were used, and the lists were given in for this Working Men's Association, and other papers.

S. C. Jones.

STEPHEN COLIN JONES sworn.

18,480. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor.

18,481. Are you a voter for Bridgwater?—I am.

18,482. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

18,483. Did you take an active part on the Liberal side?—Very.

18,484. Tell us, if you please, what you did either before the election or close upon it, or on the day of election, or on the following day?—Before the election I was active in making claims for the foremen on the other side of the bridge.

18,485. That is the registration you mean?—The registration.

18,486. Never mind about that. We do not care so much about that. Come down to the time of the last election. You know when it was known there was going to be a contest?—On the 29th October I went with Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl, Mr. Reed, and Mr. Lovibond, showing them where the new voters lived.

18,487. Did you go?—Yes, on the 30th and 31st. Some little time after that I rather pressed the gentlemen to join our society of the Shepherds, the Working Classes, and they very kindly promised to do so, and we made them Shepherds I think some time in November.

18,488. Where do you meet?—Our lodge is held at the "Mansion House."

18,489. Did they come there?—Yes.

18,490. Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

18,491. How long before the election?—A week before the election.

18,492. What did they do when they came?—They were made members in the ordinary way; that is all.

18,493. Did they pay their subscription?—Yes.

18,494. And treated you all?—I do not know that they treated us all.

18,495. Did they never at their expense?—We had what I gave the order for.

18,496. Was it at their expense?—It is not paid for yet.

18,497. How much?—I think it must have been more than 10*l.*

18,498. How many Shepherds were there?—200.

18,499. Is that all that was spent?—That is all.

18,500. 10*l.*?—It may be more than that.

18,501. And what was the subscription of the candidates?—They were a guinea each, but the gentlemen gave three guineas. They left it in the hands of me. Sometimes gentlemen will give more than others. Such as you gentlemen, if you were going to be members, if you chose to give more than a guinea we should be glad to receive it.

18,502. Is it a usual thing for the candidate to be taken about to these places and to be made to pay?—They made Mr. Gray and Mr. Forester in the "Albion," and I thought, as I was an active supporter and a Liberal, I had a right.

18,503. Are the Shepherds Liberals or Conservatives?—There are as many Shepherds voting Conservative as Liberal. It was not as a political point that I pressed them to join.

18,504. It is not a political society?—No.

18,505. It is a Friendly Society?—It is a Friendly Registered Society.

18,506. Do the candidates become members of all

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

S. C. Jones.

13 Sept. 1869.

these Friendly Societies?—Generally speaking, I think they do.

18,507. Was Mr. Westropp a member of the Shepherds?—No, but I think he was asked. There is a Shepherds' lodge held at the "Lion," the blue house, and I think he said he would not be until after his return as member for Bridgwater.

18,508. That was the last time?—He has been returned once.

18,509. Was he made a member at that time?—No, he was not.

18,510. As to the 10*l.*, do you know whether the landlord claims it from you?—I do not know whether he has claimed it yet.

18,511. What was his name?—Palmer.

18,512. You ordered it? Do you feel yourselves bound to pay it?—It is to be paid. We shall pay it in the lodge; we are very friendly.

18,513. Is it to come out of the box?—No, out of our own pockets. Mr. Tidd Pratt would not allow us to touch the box.

18,514. How many are there that subscribe?—About 200.

18,515. Is it a society peculiar to this town, or all over England?—All over the world.

18,516. Something like the Freemasons?—Similar to the Freemasons. More like the Freemasons than any society I have heard of.

18,517. Was that all that took place that night?—That was all.

18,518. Now tell us what other acts you did?—Getting men to go to the poll on the following day.

18,519. Promising money?—Oh no, I had no right and no authority to promise money.

18,520. Never mind the authority or the right. Did you?—I did not.

18,521. Did you pay any money?—I did not. I never knew there was any money going till after the election was over.

18,522. You had nothing to do with the spending of money or holding out promises?—No; and I did not know there was any money going.

18,523. On either side?—On either side. I did not know there was a penny going.

18,524. You were not about the town?—Yes, I was, all poll time. I was advising them to go to the poll, and after Mr. Westropp and his friends went round with Mr. Gray returning thanks that they were returned, the men went in droves; there was no keeping them away; the working men felt rather annoyed at it and went up as fast as they could and polled for Kinglake and Vanderbyl. There was no mistake about it; there was one running after the other to see which would poll first.

18,525. They thought there was no money going I suppose?—I suppose that was about it.

18,526. They expected to be paid the same as the others?—Not one.

18,527. Do you know whether afterwards, when the election was over, some of these men said that if money was going they should expect to be paid the same as the others?—No, not one.

18,528. (Mr. Anstey.) Don't you know a man named Francis Dyment?—Yes.

18,529. Did you offer him 9*l.*?—I did not.

18,530. Did you show him some money?—No; I had none to show him, neither my own nor anyone else's.

18,531. Will you swear you did not say anything to him about money?—I will swear I did not see him to speak to him that day or the day before.

18,532. At any other time?—No, no other time.

18,533. Is this the first time you have heard it said that you are accused of offering him money?—No; some of the blues have told me that I was accused of offering money. I never offered any money at elections.

18,534. What account does he give?—I have never spoken to him about it.

18,535. Sure?—Quite sure.

18,536. We shall have him before us.—Very good.

18,537. What is he?—He is a hauler; he has got a horse and cart, and hauls coal about.

18,538. (Mr. Price.) Goes to the quay side I suppose?—Yes, and different places; anyone's house.

18,539. (Mr. Anstey.) You took an active part in the formation of the Liberal Working Men's Association?—I did.

18,540. You heard the question that I put to Dyment in mistake (supposing it was you), as to the places of resort, the public-houses where that association held its meetings?—Yes.

18,541. Have I named those public-houses correctly?—You have.

18,542. Were they not all open——?—They were not.

18,543. I shall rate your answer at its true value. I shall rate your answers at their true value when you contradict without hearing what the question is which you are going to say "No" to. Were they all open for treating during the last election—those houses; I do not mean your rooms, your association rooms, but those particular public-houses?—Well, first of all——

18,544. Yes or no; were they all open?—No, not to my knowledge.

18,545. We have witnesses who have distinctly sworn that it was so?—Very good; then I am not aware of it.

18,546. Will you contradict those witnesses?—To my knowledge they were not open. I cannot say what they have seen, but certainly there was no drinking going on in the room.

18,547. Tell us which of them you know to be open?—I do not know one that was open at our meeting which we had drink in.

18,548. I am not asking you about your meeting; I am asking you a very plain question to an honest man. Which of these public-houses was not open for treating during the last election?—Well, the only one that I know was open was the "New Inn."

18,549. I will take that one; that is in Eastover?—That is in Eastover.

18,550. Did you ever hear of the Eastover tallies?—Yes.

18,551. Do not they consist in the rallying of a number of working men or operatives who have votes at the different rooms or head-quarters of the association, and then marching them off to the poll?—No.

18,552. What is the meaning of it?—The meaning of the Eastover tallies is simply this——. You mean at the last election, of course?

18,553. I said nothing at all about the last election?—Well, the meaning of the Eastover tallies is that the tradesmen generally meet together and go in procession; 30, or perhaps not so many of them, may go to the poll arm in arm, in pairs.

18,554. Do not they go from some place of meeting?—Some from one house and some from another.

18,555. But then they have some place fixed from which they start?—I am not aware that they have a place fixed.

18,556. How can they go together unless they meet?—They meet together in the streets; one time I believe they met at the "Commercial."

18,557. Is it not the fact that these houses which I have named to the last witness, and which you remember the names of distinctly, were all points of rallying for the Eastover tallies at the last election?—Not to my knowledge.

18,558. Was any one of them?—The "New Inn;" some went from there, but I was not aware there was any tally went at this last election.

18,559. Was there a tally went from the "New Inn"?—Not that I know of.

18,560. What did you mean by saying just now the "New Inn" was one?—I was not aware that the tallies went at the last election.

18,561. Then we will change the name of the "tally" altogether, and we will adopt the new-fangled name of Working Men's Association. Did they not go from these houses?—If they did, they did not in my presence.

18,562. Did they not meet at the "New Inn"?—Not in my presence. I will defy anyone to say that they did.

18,563. You did not see on the polling day any voters at the "New Inn"?—I did not see them going in tallies.

18,564. Answer my question as I put it to you. Did you see any voters on that day from the "New Inn"?—I did.

18,565. Did you see them go from the "New Inn" to poll?—Yes, I took some myself, one or two together.

18,566. How many did you take?—I might take six or seven.

18,567. At what o'clock?—Soon after three.

18,568. When did you cease to take them from the "New Inn"?—About half-past three. It may be a little more than that.

18,569. You are aware, of course, that it has been distinctly stated in evidence that it was about that time, and at that very place, that the bribery of the Eastover men began?—I could tell you who I took to poll from the house.

18,570. (Mr. Price.) Did you know that bribery was going on?—I did not.

18,571. (Mr. Anstey.) You know it now?—Yes.

18,572. And that is the only inn from which you took voters that day?—No, it is not the only inn.

18,573. It is the only inn you have stated?—There was a man from the "Queen's Head" that came to poll with me.

18,574. Did you take any others?—Not from public-houses. I am a teetotaller myself.

18,575. You are aware Andrew Allan has stated it was from the "New Inn" you went?—I was not with Andrew Allan.

18,576. Did you know he was there?—I did not see him.

18,577. Did you know he was there?—Not at the time; I have heard it since.

18,578. Did you not inquire at the time who was in the house, and what was going on?—No, I did not.

18,579. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you know about the last election?—Yes.

18,580. You never saw Allan at the "New Inn"?—I was not where Allan was; neither was I aware he was there at all.

18,581. Did you see him go there?—I did not.

18,582. Did you see a great many voters hanging about at the "New Inn"?—Well, there was a great many.

18,583. More than at any other house?—Yes, more than at any other house that side of the bridge.

18,584. Did it excite your astonishment that they were all congregated at the "New Inn"?—I was only there a few minutes.

18,585. How many did you take to the poll?—About six or seven.

18,586. You did not hear from these men that money was going?—I never heard of anything going.

18,587. Did you ask them to go to poll?—They had previously promised me.

18,588. Did they say anything to you?—Not about money; they never asked me for money.

18,589. Did they say they were waiting to see whether money was going?—They never said so to me.

18,590. You had not the slightest suspicion that the "New Inn" was the head-quarters of the bribery of your party?—No, I had not; neither was I aware that any men were there until three o'clock.

18,591. Three o'clock is the critical time. You say there was a number of men there who had abstained from voting at that time?—I was at another part of the district—Polden Street and Church Street.

18,592. But you got there at the critical time?—I was told there were such voters there, and I went in and they came to the poll with me.

18,593. Did they go with you?—Yes.

18,594. Did you poll them all?—I polled seven.

18,595. All you asked?—Yes.

18,596. Where were they?—In the "New Inn;" some in the yard, some in the kitchen.

18,597. You never heard about bribery going on? No, I did not. I did not see Allan there. He was upstairs, I believe.

18,598. Did you do anything at the election of 1866—Vanderbyl's?—I did.

18,599. Did you take any part then?—I did.

18,600. In the way of bribing?—Yes. I bribed one man. He gave it to me back again.

18,601. Who was he?—I had three five pound notes from Mr. Thomas Hill, at Mr. Andrew Allan's house. I had them to give to a man of the name of John Richards, a butcher.

18,602. A master butcher?—A master butcher. I took him these three five pound notes. I had five sovereigns in my pocket of my own. I gave him that, and he took it in his hand.

18,603. That was 20*l.*?—That was 20*l.*

18,604. Had he asked you for 20*l.*?—He had not asked me for anything.

18,605. What made you select him?—He was a friend of mine, an acquaintance, and I thought he was holding back for a little money.

18,606. What made you think he was holding back? Did he say he wanted money?—Not exactly that. People do not speak openly at those times.

18,607. Well, nobody else seems to have been the least ashamed. Did he say he wanted this money?—He did not say so.

18,608. What did he say when you gave him the money?—He looked at it, and gave it me back, and shook his head and said, "That won't do."

18,609. Did you understand from that that it was not enough, or that he rejected the idea of a bribe?—There were two ideas struck me; one was, that he was renting under Mr. Smith.

18,610. What Smith?—I do not know whether it is Mr. Joseph Smith or Mr. Richard Smith. I do not know which Smith it is.

18,611. (Mr. Anstey.) You mean the Tory Mr. Smith?—Oh yes, not the Liberal. He was out behind, in the back part of his house. It is just here in the next street, and when I was in talking to his wife with a few more that was there he went out and polled on the opposite side, and, of course, I kept the money until Andrew Allan called at my house.

18,612. Did you gather from him that it was not enough, or that he did not wish to be bribed?—Well, I took it in two ways; that it was not enough, and another was, that he being an honest man would not keep the money and vote against his conscience.

18,613. Did you give that back to Allan?—I gave part of it back. I gave the three five pound notes back to Mr. Allan, and he said, "Will you keep some for your expenses?"

18,614. What did you keep?—10*l.*

18,615. (Mr. Price.) What do you call your "expenses?"—I suppose he found that I was only a poor man, and it would do me good as well as anybody else. He did not say it was for a bribe.

18,616. What do you mean by expenses?—No particular expenses.

18,617. What expenses had you been at?—Oh nothing.

18,618. (Mr. Anstey.) Consuming ale?—That was the word Mr. Allan made use of.

18,619. You voted at that election for the same party?—Yes.

(Mr. Coleridge to Andrew Allan.) Mr. Allan, you never told us that.

(Andrew Allan.) I did not know until this morning but what Thomas Hill had the money from me. I remember Jones tendering me the 5*l.* and keeping 10*l.* back. The 5*l.* was all I could get of it.

(The witness.) I put it down on the board.

(Mr. Price.) How was it?

(Andrew Allan.) In making up the cash account with Thomas Hill he said Jones had 15*l.* of his money. That is how he accounted for the money he had from me. I went to Jones about it, and he said he would keep 10*l.* for himself and give me 5*l.* of the 15*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) Did you say anything about his expenses?

(Andrew Allan.) I do not know anything about his expenses.

18,620. Did you say anything about his expenses?

(Andrew Allan.) No.

(Mr. Anstey.) Did you know anything of Mr. Jones having had money to bribe with, or for himself, at the last election?

(Allan.) No, he never had any money from me in his life.

18,621. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know anything of it, Mr. Bussell?

(Bussell.) No.

18,622. (Mr. Price, to witness.) You had 5*l.* in your pocket, which you were willing to advance on behalf of your favourite candidate to this man, this butcher?—Yes.

18,623. Then you thought it right to keep back 5*l.*?—I assure you that Mr. Allan asked me if I was going to give it all to him, or have a present for myself.

18,624. (Mr. Coleridge.) What Thomas Hill is it you are speaking of; there are five here?—He is a baker in Back Street.

18,625. (Mr. Price.) You think Richards voted for the Conservatives?—Yes, voted for Mr. Patton.

18,626. Had he been a Liberal voter before?—Some years ago.

18,627. Had he voted for the Conservatives more than once?—Yes, he voted for Patton both times.

18,628. How did he vote in 1865?—For Westropp.

18,629. He was a Conservative then?—Yes.

18,630. How did he vote in 1859?—I was not in Bridgwater then.

18,631. How did he vote at the last election?—Conservative.

18,632. Every time he has voted in your knowledge he has voted Conservative. At the last four elections you say he voted so. You do not know how he voted before?

18,633. (Mr. Coleridge.) When do you recollect his voting Liberal?—I think it was for Mr. Drew and Mr. Robinson.

18,634–5. Were they candidates for the town?—For the borough of Bridgwater.

18,636. How long ago?

(Mr. Price.) Some one says it is 1841.

(The witness.) Yes.

18,637. Do you remember as far back as 1841?—Yes.

18,638. Who were the candidates in 1841?—Drew and Robinson were the Liberals.

18,639. It would be the general election, no doubt.

18,640. (Mr. Anstey.) Who were Drew and Robinson?—They were Liberals.

(Mr. Anstey.) What was Drew's christian name?

(Witness.) I do not know.

(18,641. What was Robinson's christian name?—I do not know his christian name.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Where was Tynte at that time, because he always stood; there was always one of the Tyntes?

(The witness.) No, there could not be at that time.

(Mr. Price.) Is Mr. Carslake here? (To Mr. Carslake.) What do you know about this, Mr. Carslake?

(Mr. Carslake.) The names were Edward Lengrove Drew and Augustine Robinson. Those were the two Liberals.

(Mr. Price.) Both wealthy gentlemen.

(Mr. Carslake.) I believe so.

18,642. (Mr. Price, to the witness.) Well, then, in that election in 1841, you say your friend the butcher voted for the Liberals?—I believe that was the election.

18,643. After that has he gone steadily?—After that I was away for 17 years.

18,644. When you came back to the borough you found him in 1859 voting for the Conservatives, and so on to the last time?—Yes.

18,645. You said about his living in a house of Mr. Smith?—Well, Mr. Smith receives the rent of it. I do not think it is Smith's property. I think it is some of his relatives.

18,646. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that the only case of bribery that you were guilty of in 1866?—The only one.

18,647. No other?—No other.

18,648. Were you asked for money?—No.

18,649. Did you promise any money?—No.

18,650. Had you anything to do with treating at that election?—No.

18,651. (Mr. Coleridge.) At Bagehot's election of 1866, what did you get then?—A fortnight or three weeks afterwards Mr. John Smith gave me 5*l.*

18,652. What for?

(Mr. Price.) For expenses again?

(The witness.) No, voting for Bagehot. The 5*l.* he gave me after that election.

18,653. Had you asked him for it?—Never.

18,654. Had you been promised before you voted?—No.

18,655. Having acknowledged that you got this money on one occasion distinctly for your vote, on another occasion you kept 10*l.* back for your expenses. If there had been money going at the last election you would have done the same thing?—No, I should not.

18,656. Why not?—Because I understood there would be a different law, and a man would have imprisonment if he took it or gave it at the last election.

18,657. Do you know any other cases at Bagehot's election?—Not bribery cases.

18,658. Treating cases?—No.

18,659. Did you promise anyone at that election?—No.

18,660. Did anybody ask you for money?—No one asked me for money.

18,661. You promised none?—I promised none.

18,662. But you kept that money all the same yourself after the election?—Yes.

18,663. You had not, I suppose, any bill against them for clothes?—No.

18,664. You are a tailor, I believe?—I am.

18,665. (Mr. Anstey.) I believe a few weeks before that election, or a few weeks after it, you received this money; so a few weeks before it you put down the name of S. C. Jones, tailor, to the famous petition of 80, praying the House of Commons to inquire into the condition of the borough of Bridgwater?—I put my name down to it, but I understood it was to suspend the writ for a bit. I never read it.

18,666. You did not think it was to put down corrupt practices?—I did not.

18,667. You thought it was a good march to be stolen upon the Tories, so that they should not have the benefit at the next election of their past bribery?—I did not think anything about it.

18,668. What did you want them to suspend the writ for?—To get a man.

18,669. A man with money?—It would not matter to me whether it was a man who had money or who had not money, as long as he was a follower of Mr. Gladstone.

18,670. Do you suppose Mr. Gladstone would approve of practices such as you have deposed to?—I should think not.

18,671. Why do you endeavour to link your reputation with his?—Because I hold his views, and I would support any man that would support him.

18,672. It is pretty clear from your last answer that he does not hold your views?—Yes.

18,673. Had not you got a man in the person of Mr. Bagehot?—No.

18,674. We hear that Mr. Bagehot was brought here before that petition was presented?—We little tradesmen do not know anything of such matters until two or three days beforehand.

18,675. (Mr. Price.) You mean to say that if the law was not altered you would have gone on taking your 5*l.* and your 10*l.* whether Mr. Gladstone or anybody else would be prime minister?—No, I would not.

18,676. (Mr. Coleridge.) In 1865 how did you vote?—I voted for the Liberals.

18,677. What did you get?—Nothing.

18,678. Neither before nor after?—Neither before nor after.

18,679. In 1859?—I was not here in 1859.

18,680. When did you first vote?—In 1865.

18,681. Did you give any money on that occasion?—No.

18,682. Or promise any?—No.

18,683. You had nothing to do with any other?—No; I was subpœnaed on a trial in 1838; a trial for bribery in 1838.

18,684. (Mr. Price.) At Taunton assizes?—Yes. Mr. Richard Smith gave my father 10*l.* I think the election was in 1837 if I am not mistaken.

18,685. You were going to be a witness when Mr. Smith was prosecuted to prove that?—Yes.

18,686. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he give your father 10*l.*?—Yes.

18,687. Were you called as a witness?—I was not called as a witness.

18,688. (Mr. Price.) You were put down to be a witness?—Yes.

18,689. And taken there?—Yes.

18,690. (Mr. Anstey.) You were there to corroborate your father?—My father was called; Isaac Jones.

18,691. And your mother too, I believe, Elizabeth Jones?—Yes.

18,692. I presume you did not hear the evidence given by your father, did you?—No, we were not allowed in court then.

18,693. Perhaps you will tell us how much of that case against Mr. Smith did you yourself know?—Well, my father was coming downstairs. He was too ill for some time to go to poll. He gave Mr. Smith back the money, and I was stood back by the front door, and a tradesman in the street says, "What, have you got him at last?" and Mr. Smith said "No, "he have acted as an honest man. He has give back "the money, and I will support him to the hustings."

18,694. You were not present in Murlis's house, I suppose?—I watched a man there.

18,695. Tell us that part of it?—I was put to watch a man of the name of Bennett go out of Murlis's house the Sunday evening before the election.

18,696. What did you see?—I saw him go in, and when he came out and turned the corner he took out a paper with some money in it, and looked at it.

18,697. (Mr. Coleridge.) How old are you?—Forty-three.

18,698. Then you were a boy at this time?—Between 11 and 12.

18,699. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see anything else?—No.

18,700. Your father was examined. Your mother was examined. Was Mr. Smith the Defendant at that time in Taunton? Did you see him in Taunton that day the trial was going on?—I did not see him in Taunton that I can remember.

18,701. Did you hear the jury give their verdict?—Of course I heard of it.

18,702. Were you present when they gave their verdict?—I was not.

18,703. Your father, of course, is dead?—Yes.

18,704. And your mother, too?—Yes.

18,705. These are the words which are reported to have been used to your father by Mr. Smith. Just attend to them, please, and say whether they are what you recollect. "When I got home I showed the "money to my wife," your father says. "The next "day Mr. Smith again came, about three o'clock, to "my house. I had not polled. I had not gone out. "Smith came alone. I said to him, 'So, Mr. Smith, "I am going to poll. My wife has got your money "to take it up to you again at Murlis's.' Mr. Smith "said, 'Are you going to poll against us?' I told "him I was. He said, 'What is the use of that when "we are so much above the half?' With that my "wife came downstairs, and I said, 'Here's my wife, "she'll give you your money." He said, 'Keep that "money and do not vote at all.' At last Smith said, "'Keep that money, and do not vote at all.' Then your father said, 'I told him I should vote. My "wife handed him the money, and said, 'Let him vote "according to his conscience; I wish it.' He said, "'I know it Mrs. Jones.' My wife gave him the "money; he took it, and said, 'Well, you've acted "like an honest man. I'll go with you to the hust-"ings.' I went and voted for Sheridan." Was that exactly what took place in your presence?—No, that did not take place in my presence.

18,706. I thought you were there?—I was not called to prove that. That did not take place in my presence. What I have stated was outside, and I believe Mr. Ricks heard it.

18,707. I understood you to say in answer to my first question, what you were to be called for, was to prove that Mr. Smith that now is (the defendant in that action), said to your father, "You have acted like "an honest man, and I will support you to the hust-"ings?"—That was outside the door. He was asked a question by a man who is now dead.

18,708. A subsequent conversation took place outside the door?—This was after that. I believe it was Mr. Walls. He is now dead. He said, "Well, have you got him?" Mr. Smith said, "No, he has "acted as an honest man, and I will support him to "the hustings." I believe those were the words. I believe I can be carried out with that.

18,709. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have got to tell us?—That is all I know.

RICHARD GOLD sworn.

18,710. (Mr. Price.) What are you, Mr. Gold?—Smith and founder, brass and iron founder.

18,711. Master?—Yes.

18,712. How many men do you employ?—Nine or ten, and some apprentices.

18,713. Some apprentices?—Yes.

18,714. Are you a voter for the borough?—Yes.

18,715. What part did you take in the last election, 1868?—None.

18,716. None at all?—No.

18,717. In no way?—No way.

18,718. Did you vote?—Yes, just before 9.

18,719. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you at some meeting with Bulpin, and a lot of others?—No.

18,720. Have you got a brother, W. B. Gold?—Yes.

18,721. (Mr Price.) You really have nothing to tell us about the last election?—No, I was away by 1 o'clock.

18,722. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything to do with bribery the day before; the nomination day?—No, nothing.

18,723. (Mr. Price.) In 1866 had you?—In 1866 I had.

18,724. Your own ten men, are they voters?—Three of them.

18,725. How did they vote?—Two of them voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl, and one of them voted for Westropp. He told me in the morning that he had money promised for Westropp, and he was out all night.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

R. Gold.

13 Sept. 1869.

18,726. Just give us those three names?—One of them is James Hunt.

18,727. Which is the one that had money promised him?—John Gooderich.

18,728. Who is the other man?—John Peach.

18,729. (Mr. Price.) Have you anything to tell us about any of the other elections in which you took part yourself?—Yes.

18,730. Mr. Vanderbyl was elected in 1866, did you know anything about bribery then?—Yes, I bribed three men.

18,731. Who were they?—One of them is John Stevens——No, no. I forget; he is a gardener.

18,732. What did you give him?—30*l.*

18,733. Where did you get it from?—10*l.* I got from Mr. Allan, and 10*l.* from his wife, and 10*l.* from Culliford.

18,734. (Mr. Coleridge.) This man had 40*l.*, this gardener?—Not that I am aware of.

18,735. You gave him thirty?—Yes.

18,736. (Mr. Price.) His name is not Powell?—No, Webber is the name.

18,737. And who were the other two you bribed?—The other two? I gave 10*l.* to Mr. Bond, a shoemaker, to give to Wittridge.

18,738. Where did you get it?—From Thomas Searle.

18,739. Who was the third you bribed?—Henry Hobbs.

18,740. How much?—10*l.*

18,741. Where did you get it?—From Thomas Searle.

18,742. Was that all the money you had at that election?—That is all the money.

18,743. Did you claim anything for your own services?—Not a farthing.

18,744. Did you get anything for your expenses?—Not a farthing.

18,745. At the other election in 1866 did you do any bribery?—No.

18,746. Not at Bagehot's?—No.

18,747. 1865?—No other election.

18,748. How came you to be let into it last time?—I felt rather anxious I suppose.

18,749. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were carried away, I suppose?—Yes.

18,750. (Mr. Anstey.) What are you?—Richard Gold.

18,751. You signed this petition against bribery?—If my name is there I did do it, but I have no recollection of it.

18,752. "Richard Gold, smith," is that it?—That's me.

18,753. Are you a blacksmith?—I am black and bright, iron and brass founder.

18,754. Then you see you bribed in July 1866 and in the month of May 1866, not two months before you were praying the House of Commons "to prevent "the recurrence of the corrupt practices which pre- "vailed at the last election"?—If my name is there I suppose I did sign it, but I have no recollection of it.

18,755. Had you any real wish to do what you say here, to put an end to these corrupt practices?—I do wish it was done away with.

18,756. Did you then?—I suppose so.

18,757. And two months after you repeated them yourself?—If my name is there I suppose I did it, but I have no knowledge of it.

18,758. Do you remember anybody coming and asking you to sign it?—No, I have no recollection of it, not the least. I have racked my memory twenty times.

18,759. Do you mean to say that the promoters of this petition put your name to it without authority?—I do not know.

18,760. Because you are described as Richard Gold, smith?—I should not call myself a smith; I call myself black and bright smith.

18,761. You do not say that you did not sign it?—No.

18,762. That is all you have got to tell us?—That is all I have got to tell.

18,763. You have nothing to tell us of any former elections?—No.

18,764. Is your brother here?—Yes.

W. B. Gold.

WILLIAM BRADFORD GOLD sworn.

18,765. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A tailor and draper.

18,766. Were you a voter?—I am.

18,767. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

18,768. Did you get anything for it?—I did not.

18,769. Will you take your hand from your mouth, we shall hear better. Did you bribe anybody?—I did not.

18,770. Did you promise anything?—I did not.

18,771. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

18,772. Did you take any part in the election then, except voting?—I did; I tried to get men to the poll.

18,773. Did you bribe at any former elections?—Yes.

18,774. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you not bribe at the last election?—I did not.

18,775. Nor promise?—Nor promise.

18,776. (Mr. Price.) Those men that you got to go to the poll, did they know you had been employed to bribe at former elections?—No, I do not know hardly who did go to the poll, there were so many of them.

18,777. You say you got them to go and poll at the last election?—I merely walked about and tried to get them to go to the poll, nothing more; that was all.

18,778. What did you do in the way of bribing at the elections previous?—Well, I bribed four men.

18,779. Give me their names?—Thomas Gaine.

18,780. (Mr. Coleridge.) How much?—10*l.* William Morris.

18,781. How much?—10*l.*

18,782. Yes?—Mr. Thomas Redman.

18,783. How much?—10*l.*, and John Denman, that is by Samuel Taylor the younger.

18,784. Where did you get the money from?—I got it from Andrew Allan.

18,785. Did you keep anything for yourself?—I did not

18,786. Did you make a claim for your own services?—I did not.

18,787. Or expenses?—I did not.

18,788. Were any of those men those whom you got to go and poll last time?—No, not one of them.

18,789. Do you know whether they did poll last time?—Oh, I expect they did.

18,790. Not without money, I suppose?—Oh, they did not have money, sir.

18,791. (Mr. Price.) Now, the election before that, did you bribe anybody?—Yes, I took 10*l.* from Thomas Searle and handed it to William Priest for Thomas Gaine. I did not do it myself. It was the same man I mentioned before.

18,792. Did you have anything yourself?—I had not.

18,793. (Mr. Coleridge.). Is that the only one you bribed?—Yes.

18,794. Did you promise any others?—I did not promise anyone.

18,795. In 1865?—I did nothing.

18,796. In 1859?—In 1859 I did nothing.

18,797. In 1857?—In 1857 I did nothing.

18,798. At any other election?—At no other election. I never had a farthing in my life.

18,799. (Mr. Price.) Do you say you never had anything in any way?—Oh, I have had 16*l.* 10*s.* for colours.

18,800. Now, do you mean to say that you have had anything like 16*l.* worth of colours supplied in July 1866?—Well, you know it runs away with money.

18,801. Just answer the question?—I should say it was supplied.

18,802. At fair prices?—At fair prices.

18,803. There are election prices, you know?—No.

18,804. What do you call "out-door expenses"?—Spending among men when you are about. If you go into a public-house where there are a lot of men they will have a bottle of sodawater and brandy.

18,805. I don't believe there is much sodawater drank except on the morning after. How much of the 16*l.* 10*s.* went in treating?—I really cannot tell.

18,806. And how much in colours?—I cannot tell.

18,807. You can tell by your books, can't you?—I do not know that I can.

18,808. (Mr. Anstey.) I suppose the whole of it, except a few shillings, was in every sense of the word a colorable demand?—No, it was not.

18,809. (Mr. Price.) What kind of colours did you supply?—Pocket handkerchiefs and ribbons.

EIGHTEENTH DAY.

W. B. Gold.

13 Sept. 1869.

18,810. 16*l.* worth of handkerchiefs?—And ribbons.

18,811. That is the second election of 1866?—In the first election did you bring in a bill of 9*l.* 10*s.*?—I did.

18,812. And supply colours to the amount of 6*l.* according to your account?—I do not know.

18,813. Then you put down "out-door expenses" at 3*l.* 10*s.* Is that expended in sodawater?—I do not think 3*l.* 10*s.* is put down there.

18,814. You see (pointing to receipt) 3*l.* 10*s.* is put down for out-door expenses?—Oh yes, I might do so.

18,815. You might have spent 100*l.* Do you mean to say you spent 3*l.* 10*s.*?—Yes, I daresay. I have been out for months, and I have nearly ruined myself with electioneering.

18,816. But this is a question of June 7th?—June the 7th it is. It would not last a night, going amongst the men.

18,817. You must have sat up all night to do it?—Not a bit of it. 3*l.* won't last very long when you are out like that.

Adjourned till 11 o'clock to-morrow.

NINETEENTH DAY.

Tuesday, 14th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.

HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

Mr. JOHN PRIOR recalled.

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

14 Sept. 1869.

18,818. (Mr. Price.) You want to make a statement?—I wish to correct a statement that I made the last time I was here. I stated that Mr. Mogg had said that the Liberals were winning, or words to that effect. I believe that is an error on my part. I have considered the thing since, and I cannot bring it home exactly that he said any such thing; and for this reason, that he was not there long enough; directly he wrote the memorandum which I gave you he left.

18,819. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is this your own recollection, or what Mr. Mogg has told you?—My own recollection since.

18,820. (Mr. Price.) Have you seen Mr. Mogg about it?—I told Mr. Mogg the day I gave my evidence that I had said so much; and he said directly it was a lie, or something of that sort, he never said such a thing.

18,821. I hope that a gentleman in your position, because Mr. Mogg, whose truthfulness is a doubtful point with us, happens to tell you that you have told a lie, is not frightened by that to come here and retract an important piece of your evidence. I trust that is not the state of mind to which you have been reduced?—No.

(Mr. Coleridge.) We want the impression of your own mind.

18,822. (Mr. Price.) And not what Mr. Mogg says about it?—I have given my attention to it since, and I cannot remember myself to believe really that it was so. At the time I gave my evidence there was an impression on my mind.

18,823. I think, if I remember right, it was not the first time that you were examined that you made that statement, but the second or third?—The fourth occasion; the last time I was here.

18,824. Therefore it was rather deliberately made, because you had had your attention fully drawn to it on former occasions, particularly the first time you were examined. Now you come after an interval and say that it was not so. I think, if you ask me, the probabilities are that Mogg did say it, and I should judge your recollection is an imperfect one; but it may be imperfect and yet at the same time highly probable that he said something of that kind. You say he was not long enough; what time would it take to write out the paper and say, "The Liberals are winning," because you had to go downstairs and get the bag, and he must have been in the bank long enough for you to go down to the strong room and get it, and give it to him?—I did not give it to him.

18,825. To your son; well, he was there?—No, he did not remain, he was gone.

18,826. (Mr. Coleridge.) Still while he wrote three words he could have said that?—Yes.

18,827. (Mr. Anstey.) You will please recollect that it was in answer to me that you made that statement, and you will please to recollect that in putting my question I fairly and honestly, towards you and towards Mr. Mogg, told you what Mogg had said, and asked you a second time whether you were saying that that had passed; and having your attention called to the fact that you were there to contradict Mogg, you nevertheless for the second time contradicted him deliberately and unequivocally. What more information have you received since than I gave you on that occasion, I should like to know?—At the time I was questioned by you I did not give it a thought what had passed, and I was taken by surprise.

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mr. J. Prior.

14 Sept. 1869.

18,828. You were recalled to answer some questions, and I asked you these questions on another point. Mr. Coleridge put to you some questions after mine, and then I put these questions to you with reference to Mogg's case. "Mr. Mogg states he took his pen "and paper and wrote those words because he did not "want the clerks to hear it?—He may mean my own "son by 'the clerk;' the other clerk was out in the "street at the time. Then you do not agree with "Mogg in his statement?—Mr. Mogg may possibly "make a mistake. Had you any conversation with "Mr. Mogg when he came into the bank at the time? "—I had none with reference to this matter. Had "you any conversation with him at all?—He was "speaking of the state of the election, that the Liberals "were going ahead, and all that sort of thing, but I "cannot charge myself with the exact words. Mr. "Mogg may have said to me——. No, I do not want "that, but was that the substance of what he said?— "Yes. And then he wrote those words down?—I "think he wrote them down previously. Before he "got this money he made this statement to you?— "He says as soon as he delivered the message, "and as soon as he wrote the message, he went "away. Well, he did. Therefore the conversation "with him must have been before he wrote this down? "—Probably whilst he was writing it. Therefore "his communication to you was not, as we understood "from him, a purely written one, but a mixed one, "partly in writing and partly oral. The oral was "this, 'We are getting on; the election is turning,' "and the written portion is, '500*l.* are wanted for "Allan,' whom you knew to be a bribery agent; is "that so?—That is so. Then, of course, there can be "no doubt at all now that it was a perfectly understood "thing between Mr. Mogg and you that that was the "way the money was to go; is not that so?—Yes, I "understood so at the time, certainly." Then I put to you, "It is therefore not true that Mogg came into "the bank, and that the only words said were, 'Give "me paper,' or 'Give me pen and ink,' and that he "spoke not another word, wrote down those words, "handed the paper to you, and without a word more "to you turned and went away?—Oh, that is not "true, because he said, 'The Liberals are winning,' or "something of that kind." And I ask again, "Is Mr. "Mogg in court; it is right he should hear this; I "I do not want to ask him any question about it." Then you pass on to the West of England Bank. Now you see nothing could be more prolix and wearisome even, than my references to the point after point in this statement of yours, and Mr. Mogg's statement in opposition to it, and you see you persisted in it, and at last with a kind of alacrity denoted by your ejaculation "Oh," you say that is not true, because he did say the Liberals were winning. You had, therefore, the fullest information from me of what Mogg says in contradiction of you, and you did not then accept his contradiction; why do you accept it now?—Because I have turned my attention and thoughts to what passed.

(Mr. Price.) You cannot say that your attention was not fully called to it. Look at the series of questions put by my learned colleague, one after the other, directed to the very subject matter, and then, as he says, you yourself say something Mogg said is not true, because he used the expression, "The Liberals are winning." You cannot tell us now that that is not so.

18,829. (Mr. Coleridge.) If Mogg had not seen you between this and that you would not have come here to make this explanation?—My attention was drawn to it.

18,830. You talked it over and made the explanation?—I met him in the street.

18,831. (Mr. Price.) I must say that I ought to express great surprise that a person in your position should allow himself to be turned from, and induced to come here and retract an important statement because the person who is implicated by that chooses to say afterwards, "You have said that which is untrue." I am astonished, quite astonished. Who was in the bank at the time besides yourself?—My son.

(Mr. Price.) I had sent for him to be here, but as he has been in court during your explanation I do not wish to put a father and son in unpleasant conflict. Certainly, if he had not been here and heard your statement, we should have had him in the box, but I do not know that it is worth while to hear his statement now.

(Mr Anstey.) No.

(Mr. Price.) It is not at all a satisfactory state of things.

18,832. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you done anything in the interval between your examination and now to obtain the missing information?—I do not understand you.

18,833. Yes, you were to consider and reflect whether you would not tell us something more to account for your being consulted by Lovibond and Mogg on that occasion, to give 500*l.* without a warrant, or cheque, or security?—As I told you in the first instance, I was taken by surprise, and incautiously did it.

(Mr. Price.) You seem to be a man, and it is especially remarkable in the case of a banker, who is constantly subject to the most unnatural surprises. You are taken by surprise and pay 500*l.* over the counter; and taken by surprise when asked a question about it; and taken by surprise when you make statements over and over again; therefore, no one knows when you will be in any state in which you will not be in a surprise or in a flutter, or really be able to give us some account which we can rely on.

18,834. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know this is not the first election you have had to do with; you have advanced money on former occasions?—No.

18,835. Your bank has?—No.

18,836. On no former election?—No one has advanced money.

18,837. (Mr. Price.) But drawn out of your bank? Those two cheques were cashed.

18,838–9. Two of Mr. Brogden's?—Yes, two of Mr. Brogden's.

18,840. I mean to say you pretty well knew what was up; you were not a novice in the matter.

18,841. (Mr. Anstey.) We have had evidence since you were here showing that your partner, Mr. Sealy, down to the very moment, was taking a most active part in meetings, some of them meetings, we have it in evidence, convened, I do not say anything was said there, but convened for the purpose of carrying into effect the secret combination of the patrons of the borough, to promote bribery, and your partner has told us that he took no particularly leading part; he was a strong Liberal, and so forth, but you told us nothing of that. Then the next fact we have in order of chronology is that which you told us some days ago, namely, that on the day of the election you did this extraordinary business with 500*l.* Of course men of common sense draw their own conclusions; those conclusions may be erroneous, unless persons who know the facts make a frank disclosure of those facts, and tell us which is the most guilty man, and which is the less guilty, and which, if any, is innocent. If you do not choose to do that, I say again you must leave me, as a man of common sense, to draw my own conclusions, both as to you and Mr. Sealy?—With regard to Mr. Sealy's movements, I am no party to them. I know nothing at all of his movements at committees, or anything of the kind.

18,842. (Mr. Coleridge.) But supposing he had been a warm supporter of the Conservative party, would you have cashed that bit of paper?—Well, I cannot say whether I should.

18,843. Think a moment and tell us whether you would. Was not it because it was more likely that he would have overlooked it, if done to further the Liberal cause, that induced you to do so?—I never thought about Mr. Sealy at the time.

18,844. Then what was it, you have told us it was done in a hurry?—It was done in a hurry.

18,845. Then supposing that Mr. Trevor sent some one to get 500*l.* for the Allan of the other side?

(Mr. Price.) Bussell's brother.

18,846 (Mr. Coleridge.) The Conservative Bussell, or Murlis, to get 500*l.*, should you have given it?—I suppose he would have sent his cheque.

18,847. No, supposing that he had sent exactly the same thing as you had; a bit of paper was brought in by a friend of Mr. Trevor's, saying give the Conservative Bussell, whatever his name may be, 500*l.*, should you have cashed it?—Oh no.

18,848. (Mr. Anstey.) And still less it was not "Give Bussell," but "500*l.* for Robert Bussell"?—I should not unless it came from Mr. Lovibond.

18,849. Why not?—Because I had no instructions in the first instance, and I was thrown off my guard by that.

18,850. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was Dr. Kinglake did it?—It threw me off my guard.

18,851. (Mr. Price.) You mean that the Kinglake cheque drawn two or three hours before?—Two or three hours before.

18,852. I should have thought, so far from being thrown off your guard, the thing would have been distinctly on your mind, because you say he came the next morning and told you the matter must be considered cancelled?—Yes.

18,853. Therefore, it must have been as fresh on your mind as the fact that you have had breakfast this morning. He tells you that, and about an hour or two afterwards you are taken in an unguarded moment and hand 500*l.* on account of that very thing which ought to have prevented you doing it.

18,854. (Mr. Anstey.) You told me just now, in answer to my question why not, "Because I had no instructions." That is to say, the context is this, you say, "If the Conservative Bussell had been named in "the instrument instead of Allan, I should not have "paid it." Why not, I ask; "Because I had no instructions." I want to know what instructions had you with reference to the 500*l.*, because here it is admitted that you had instructions; from whom had you instructions?—I had instructions in the first instance from Dr. Kinglake, and I had lost sight of his destroying the cheque at the moment when this 500*l.* was given.

18,855. That is a new statement you see. You never told us before that you had lost sight of the little incident of the destroying of the cheque; when did you recollect that first?—I recollected that very shortly after this transpired.

18,856. No; when did you recollect, for you had not told us that little incident with your forgetfulness?—I think I said as much on my first examination.

18,857. No, no, on the contrary; you said nothing about it. I asked you whether there was any connexion between Dr. Kinglake and that 500*l.*, and you over and over again told me nothing at all; but I have been putting a number of questions to you to find out whether there were any renewed instructions in the interval. It now appears that you mean me to understand, that you did hand over 500*l.* on account of the conversation the night before, having forgotten the more important conversation in the morning. Is that so?—If you would be kind enough to turn to my first examination——

18,858. Now do you mean to say you handed over the 500*l.*, on the face of what passed between you the night before, having forgotten what passed befcre between you only that morning?—I must have been unguarded.

18,859. Did you do it?—I did not do it on the faith of that, but was unguarded when I let the money go.

18,860. From whom did the instructions come that you speak of?—From Mr. Mogg bringing that writing.

18,861. You say, if it had come from anybody with reference to Robert Bussell, the Tory, you would not have attended to that in considering your instructions?—Well, I should not.

18,862. Then I ask you again, on what instructions did you act when you honoured Mogg's oral statement, for it amounted to that?—Well, I honoured Mr. Mogg's instructions, believing it to come from Mr. Lovibond.

18,863. Why did you believe it to come from Mr. Lovibond. You told us distinctly that he did not mention Mr. Lovibond's name?—No, he did not.

18,864. Then why imagine it had come from Lovibond?—Well, I believed him to be Mr. Lovibond's friend, therefore I did it.

18,865. (Mr. Price.) Nonsense, about friend! You could not have believed it on that account. You must be keeping something back with reference to Mr. Lovibond?—Nothing.

18,866. Why did you believe the message to have come from Mr. Lovibond, 500*l.* for bribery, not merely because Mogg was his friend, surely.

18,877. (Mr. Anstey.) You are putting yourself in peril of something yet to come. It is possible, and even probable, that we may find out all about this from another source. I warn you of that; and if you do, you will remember that Mr. Justice Blackburn, in this very case of the Bridgwater election, told a witness who came before him, and stated as you say, "I cannot recollect; I do not remember;" that it was a great mistake for witnesses to suppose that they would escape prosecution for perjury by making answers of that kind; but it would still be a question for a jury to determine, when the fact is proved, whether they told the truth in saying they did not recollect. That was in the case of the man Harwood and his alleged bribe, and the witness who was called to speak to that, the man concerned in the case of the 30*s.* which we heard of yesterday, and the trick which was played with reference to that. Mr. Justice Blackburn so told the witness. I will find the passage for you, because it is right that you should know that. The question put is this: "Will you swear you did not?—I will swear I did not, to my recollection." Mr. Justice Blackburn: "It is a very mistaken idea that you can avoid the "consequences of a falsehood by saying not to your "recollection, such a matter as that cannot be forgot-"ten. I cannot recollect that I did say so. It will "come entirely to the same thing." That is from the judge. "For if there is sufficient evidence to show "that you did say such a thing, and there is an indict-"ment for perjury, no jury would for a moment accept "your statement that you had forgotten it." I think it right to warn you of this. Now please say again whether you mean to persist in your answer, that you cannot tell me on whose instructions you handed over the 500*l.* without Mr. Lovibond's name being mentioned, to a man who was not a customer of the bank, who drew no cheque on the bank, who did not even direct you to give the money to Allan, but merely put a memorandum on paper "500*l.* for Allan"?—Mr. Mogg wrote that, and I took his instructions then certainly.

18,868. (Mr. Price.) Are those all the instructions you got?—Yes, it was.

18,869. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you not a general understanding with Mr. Lovibond at elections that you would honour any bit of paper or anything he sent for money?—I had not.

18,870. At no time whatever before?—At no time.

18,871. (Mr. Anstey.) Nor from Dr. Kinglake?—No, not after that cheque was destroyed.

18,872. But before?—Before he destroyed that cheque I was to abide Mr. Lovibond's instructions.

18,873. He came to destroy the cheque; in destroying the cheque did he give you any instructions?—He gave me no instructions, but simply said, "This is as if nothing of the kind had taken place."

18,874. Do you mean that he said nothing about hearing from Mr. Lovibond, or looking to Mr. Lovi-bond, or Mr. Lovibond would speak, or write, or send to you?—Well, he did not.

18,875. Did he leave you under any impression that you might possibly be applied to in the course of the day, either through Mr. Lovibond, or anybody else?—Well, he did not.

18,876. What were you going to say?—He did not give me any instructions.

18,877. Did he leave you under the impression that you might, could, would, or should expect in the course of the day some application for the money through Mr. Lovibond, or somebody else?—No, he left no such thing; he did not lead me to believe anything of the kind.

18,878. (Mr. Price.) Tell us exactly what Dr. Kinglake said to you. Now, do not be taken by surprise, or off your guard; there is a deliberate question put to you, now give me a deliberate answer?—He asked me for that cheque about 12 o'clock, and he said, "Give it to me," and I gave it to him, and he tore it up, and he said, "Now this is destroyed it is as though nothing had taken place between us," or words to that effect.

18,879. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was your partner in the bank at that time?—No.

18,880. Was he when Dr. Kinglake gave you the cheque?—No, he gave me the cheque the night before.

18,881. (Mr. Price.) You say you were taken by surprise, and did this in an unguarded moment, therefore I conclude that you would not do it if it had to be done again?—Certainly not.

18,882. Then, when did you first recollect after you had given this 500*l.* that Dr. Kinglake had been with you an hour or two before, and, as you say, gave you instructions which should have prevented your paying the 500*l.*?—It occurred to me the next morning.

18,883. Did you then write to Dr. Kinglake to explain what you had done?—I did not, nor have I spoken to him since.

18,884. Why did not you?—I did not believe that I could call upon him for the payment of it.

18,885. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Lovibond, you say, you looked to to pay you?—Well, Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Mogg between them.

18,886. Not to Andrew Allan?—No.

(Mr. Price.) Well, it is not at all a satisfactory statement.

(Mr. Anstey.) You had better, before the Commission leaves the town, find out an answer to my still unanswered question.

18,887. (Mr. Price.) You have nothing more to say?—No.

Mr. W. J. Ford.

Mr. William John Ford recalled.

18,888. (Mr. Anstey.) I forgot to ask you, and I am not sure whether either of my colleagues did; during this period, I mean the time from the commencement of the canvass, or even before that, down to the present moment, are you aware of any arrangement either made or proposed, by which your bank was to come in any way to the assistance either of Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl, or both?—No; I am quite certain there has never been any arrangement whatever made with our bank.

18,889. Nor any instructions as to cashing the cheques drawn on foreign banks—I mean banks out of Bridgwater—Taunton, or Manchester, or the like?—No instructions. Would you like me to explain now?

18,890. If you please?—You examined the cashier, who was then in command of the bank during my absence at Wimbledon. Shall I tell you what induced him to cash those cheques to Mr. Barham, 18,891. (Mr. Price.) Was there any cashing of cheques in like manner as Mr. Brogden's were cashed at Sealy's?—Yes; we cashed two of Mr. Brogden's cheques on that occasion.

18,892. (Mr. Anstey.) Was there anything of the sort done at the last election?—No.

18,893. Before it, or after?—No, nothing before.

18,894. Now make your explanation?—You asked whether any arrangement was ever made with our bank. I am simply going to say to you, before I went away Mr. Reynolds asked me if it was likely our friend Mr. Barham would call upon us again at the coming election. I said, "Really, I have not the least "idea, but if he does you cannot refuse to cash any "cheques for Mr. Barham, as he is a very old "customer of the bank."

18,895. (Mr. Price.) That is with reference to the last election?—No, Mr. Vanderbyl's first election. We had nothing whatever to do with the last.

18,896. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you heard anything that can throw light on this transaction of Mr. Prior and Mr. Mogg?—No, I have not heard a word of anything at all except in this court.

18,897. (Mr. Coleridge.) Should you, under any circumstances whatever, for any customer whatever, give 500*l.* over the counter without a proper cheque?—Certainly not; nor should I, have done so in this matter unless a customer.

18,898. For a customer should you?—Not without his cheque.

18,899. Merely "500*l.* for Allan." You would not for the best customer in the world?—Certainly not. I have no power. You see there is a little difference between Messrs. Prior's bank and myself. I could not cash any cheque without its going through the books immediately. I am responsible.

18,900. (Mr. Coleridge.) Unless you do it on your own private account?—I was not likely to do that.

18,901. (Mr. Anstey.) But how does that differ from Messrs. Sealy's?—Well, if Messrs. Sealy and Prior pay 500*l.*, they have only to account to themselves for it. If I do it I must account to the directors for it.

18,902. Messrs. Prior and Sealy have sworn that the transaction was quite as irregular in their bank as in your bank, and that Mr. Prior had concealed it at his own risk and peril from the other partner?—You see they are responsible to themselves only.

18,903. And to their customers, I hope?—Certainly, to a degree; but I should be to our directors.

18,904. (Mr. Coleridge.) Would there be anybody having access to the strong-room who would know that 500*l.* was missing besides yourself?—The cashier would. He would always know every night.

18,905. Every night he counts the cash?—Every night, and I once a week, and make a declaration, so much on hand.

18,906. Then if you did such a thing as Mr. Prior did, your cashier must have known it?—Undoubtedly, at night.

18,907. If he had done it without telling you, you would have known it at the end of the week?—On Saturday night I should have known it, because I keep it every week, and we have to send in a declaration.

18,908. Supposing, for the sake of hypothesis, that the manager, himself a shareholder and a large depositor and customer also, having withdrawn a sum of 500*l.*, used his official position to enable him to take it, and to conceal the fact for twelve months or thereabouts, and then enter it on the day the discovery took place?—We could not do such a thing as that in our bank; it would be utterly impossible.

18,909. If it were it would end in what?—Instant dismissal of the manager at once. I do not hestitate to say so for a moment, for 1*l.* just as much as for 1,000*l.*

18,910. (Mr. Price.) Is Gold in court?—Gold? Yes.

NINETEENTH DAY.

14 Sept. 1869.

GEORGE BOND sworn.

G. Bond.

18,911. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A bootmaker.

18,912. Are you a voter for Bridgwater?—Yes.

18,913. Gold stated yesterday that he gave you a sum of 10*l.* to give a man of the name of Wittridge; is that true?—No, he never did in his life.

18,914. Did he give you 10*l.* at all?—No, not at any time.

18,914*a*. At the election?—No.

18,915. This is the election of 1866?—I deny it. He never did in his life.

18,916. No such transaction took place?—Never.

18,917. What is Wittridge?—He is a man who works for me, and has done this 30 years.

18,918. Is he in the town?—He is.

18,919. Had you 10*l.* to give him?—Never.

18,920. Did you bribe him with 10*l.*?—Never.

18,921. Did you offer him 10*l.* for his vote, or bribe him?—Never.

18,922. Did you deal with him in any shape or way in bribery for his vote?—Never.

18,923. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you know of his getting 10*l.* from any one at the election?—No.

18,924. Then what Gold has said is absolutely untrue?—That is untrue.

18,925. Did he ever ask you to give him 10*l.*?—On my oath he never did.

18,926. He never suggested to you that you might do it?—No, I never had any conversation with the man. I never spoke of any bribery money.

18,927. Then you mean it is a sheer invention?—It is a scandal, that is what it is.

18,928. What view do you put upon it; that he has kept the money himself, and says he has given it to you?—Yes, he must have kept it. I do not know what he has done with it. I never had it.

18,929. (Mr. Price.) Are you a master shoemaker?—Yes.

18,930. How many hands do you employ?—About 25.

18,931. As your name has been brought up, did you ever receive anything for your votes?—Never in my life, and I have been a voter 35 years. I never received a shilling in my life.

18,932. (Mr. Coleridge.) When you were a younger man, had you anything to do with distributing money at elections?—Never; I always acted on the Liberal side, and was never biassed in any way.

18,933. I suppose you know there was always money going about?—I have understood there was money flying about.

18,934. Ever since you recollect, every election?—Yes, I think always.

18,935. But amongst your men I suppose there are a good many who take bribes?—Some of them. I do not know.

18,936. Tell us Wittridge's christian name, and where he is to be found?—He lives on the Mount.

RICHARD GOLD recalled.

R. Gold.

18,937. (Mr. Price.) What have you to say to that?—That he had the money; and I think I will bear it out by four or five that knowed he had the money to give the men. As to being together, we were 20 times together that day the last election.

18,938. Who is going to support that, that you gave him the 10*l.*?—He was given the 10*l.* over at my own house.

18,939. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who saw it?—I believe my wife did, and I believe Searle can bear all out, and I believe Culliford.

18,940. How can he?—I had some money from him to give.

18,941. (Mr. Price.) It does not follow at all that because you got it from Searle to give it to Bond that therefore you gave it to him. This is a very serious matter. Bond has come forward and begged to be relieved from the scandal of your statement, and he says deliberately it is untrue. I do not know whether your respective positions in life may be any means of judging between one and the other in Bridgwater whether you are speaking the truth or not, but it is incumbent on you when you make a grave charge to come supported, because if we should come to the conclusion that you have told a falsehood, we shall not only refuse you a certificate but shall certainly recommend the Attorney-General to prosecute you for perjury. Decidedly I have no hesitation in saying so—one or the other, of course. You come here to account for a sum of 10*l.* by saying you gave it to Bond to hand over to Wittridge, and he declares positively that it is untrue, that it is an entire fiction and a scandal as he says, and so it is on him if it is untrue. You are bound to bring us some corroboration of your testimony.

(Bond.) This man has had a spleen against me for some time.

18,942. (Mr. Coleridge.) Bond is in a different position from you. He has to prove a negative and you an affirmative, therefore the proof is on you and not Bond?—Very well, sir, I must bring proof that he had it.

(Mr. Anstey.) Your wife and Searle.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You must send for them, but do not go out of court yourself.

(The witness.) I have had no animosity against the man.

18,943. (Mr. Price.) We have nothing to do with animosity, but having heard your statement yesterday, he says he wishes to deny it on his oath, and he has, and it is a question of perjury between you, and we have to find out between you which has committed the perjury?—Then I must have my witnesses to whom I gave the money.

18,944. Will you give us their names?—Thomas Searle, Culliford, and my wife.

18,945. If Searle is only going to say he gave you the money, that has nothing to do with it?—I believe that Searle quite knows that I gave it.

18,946. Did he see it?—I will not swear that he did.

18,947. Unless he saw it, he cannot say?—But as for Bond, he was at my house four or five times.

18,948. (Mr. Anstey.) What are you?—A black and white smith, and iron and brass founder.

18,949. And what is Bond?—A shoemaker.

18,950. And had Bond any business in your house on that day for calling four or five times there?—Only as a friend on electioneering.

18,951. Only electioneering?—Only electioneering; a friend, both of one party, and both about together.

18,952. Before you go I want to ask you, have you a brother-in-law or an uncle of the name of Henry Bradford, who lived in Bridgwater in 1838?—No, an uncle of mine married his sister by the name of Bradford.

18,953. Is he alive?—Well, I think he is at Weston-super-Mare.

18,954. Henry Bradford?—Yes.

18,955. What is he doing at Weston?—I do not know; I have not heard anything of him for these years.

18,956. Do you know what age he is?—He is a man upwards of 70, I should say. He was crippled when I knew him.

18,957. Can you tell me where I should find out his address?—I do not know his address. He is living at Weston, I am told.

18,958. Is he doing anything there?—I do not know.

(Mr. Price.) Now I think that this question having arisen we shall be obliged to examine how you spent the rest of the money; therefore we shall want Culliford and the rest here.

NINETEENTH DAY.

14 Sept. 1869.

R. Gold.

18,959. (Mr. Anstey.) Bradford was a pig jobber?—Yes, a pig jobber.

18,960. Is he now?—I do not know.

18,961. (Mr. Price.) You still stick to it that you gave the 10*l.* to Bond?—Yes.

(Mr. Price.) You must not leave the court, but we must have Culliford and the other persons to say whether you really did spend this money on them.

A. Allen.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

18,962. (Mr. Price.) He says he got 20*l.* from you and 10*l.* from your wife, is that so?—No, he had 20*l.* from me altogether.

18,963. He says, 20*l.* I got from Allan and 10*l.* from his wife?—My wife was present. It was two 10 pounds. That is all he had.

R. Gold.

RICHARD GOLD recalled.

18,964. (Mr. Price.) What do you say?—I had 10*l.* from Culliford out of this 30*l.*

18,965. You had 30*l.*; where did you get it from?—That is the 30*l.*

18,966. "20*l.* I got from Allan and 10*l.* from his wife?"—I think I said 10*l.* from Allan and 10*l.* from his wife and 10*l.* from Culliford.

18,967. Then you had 10*l.* from Allan, 10*l.* from Culliford, and 10*l.* from the wife?—That is it.

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then he gave Wittridge 10*l.*, Hobbs 10*l.*, and Bond 10*l.*

18,968. (Mr. Price.) Whom did you bribe with that 30*l.*?—John Webber.

18,969. The whole 30*l.*?—The whole 30*l.*

(Mr. Coleridge.) Then you have told us you gave 10*l.* to Bond and 10*l.* to Searle.

18,970. (Mr. Price.) You got back 10*l.* from Searle?—Yes.

18,971. And the third man you bribed was Hobbs?—Yes.

18,972. Where did you get that?—From Searle.

18,973. That is all the money you had?—That is all the money I had.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

18,974. (Mr. Price.) Did he account to you for the 20*l.*?—I have seen in the statement of particulars I only charge him 10*l.* I got 10*l.* more than I charged him.

18,975. But he says he got 10*l.* from your wife; did you know that?—No, I did not until I heard him in court yesterday.

(Mr. Coleridge.) I think we must have Mrs. Allan here to ask her about this.

R. Gold.

RICHARD GOLD recalled.

18,976. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say you got 10*l.* from Allan's wife?—Yes, I got 10*l.* from Allan's wife.

18,977. Did you account to anybody for that expenditure?—I told Allan what I had done.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

(The witness.) That must be an omission in my statement.

18,978. (Mr. Price.) Then he may have told you that. Did you inquire of your wife?—She told me this morning he had it not from her, but he had it from me, and that she was present.

19,979. He had two tens?—Yes.

S. C. Jones.

STEPHEN COLIN JONES recalled.

18,980. (Mr. Anstey.) Attend to these names, and tell me if you know whether either of them is now alive. An attorney called Jackson——?—He is in London.

18,981. Pray attend to my question, and do not answer before I have completed it. An attorney called Jackson, who was living in London in the year 1838, and was examined on the part of the plaintiff at the trial at Taunton assizes in that year against Smith?—That was the gentleman that examined me at Taunton.

18,982. Is he alive?—I do not know whether he is or not. I heard some time ago that he was living in London.

18,983. Do you know his christian name?—No, I do not.

18,984. Do you know the name of his firm?—I do not.

18,985. Or where his offices are?—No, I do not.

18,986. He took your evidence, did not he?—He did.

18,987. Where, down here?—At Taunton.

18,988. Your father and mother are both dead. George Fackerell, sawyer, of Bridgwater?—He is dead.

18,989. William Fackerell, his brother?—I do not know where they are. They have left the town.

18,990. Is there any means of finding out their addresses?—Mr. Palmer, who gave evidence of receiving the 10*l.* could tell you. They brought him up.

18,991. William Fackerell brought Palmer up?—Yes; I believe it was William Fackerell. Oh, yes, it was. He was in the employ of Charles Thorne.

18,992. Then Henry Bradford, pig jobber?—I remember him as a pig dealer, that used to live in Gold's Buildings, but I do not know whether he is living there now.

18,993. Thomas Bennett, who kept a beer-house. He is in Wales?—He is dead.

18,994. James Southwood, a brickmaker, here?—I cannot tax my memory at present, but I will try to find out for you.

18,995. Those are the names I should like you to find out?—Southwood you say is the last.

18,996. Southwood, the brickmaker?—I will try and find him out in the course of the day.

18,997. And also those other names?—The pig dealer?

18,998. Bradford, a pig jobber, and William Fackerell, in the employ of Charles Thorne, brother of the George Fackerell who you say is dead.

(Mr. Price.) Did you say yesterday that you got 10*l.* for your expenses?—That is the 10*l.* out of the 15*l.* I received from Thomas Hill for Richards.

18,999. That Allan allowed you to keep for your expenses?—Well, he allowed me 10*l.* Allan says he gave it me for my vote. I do not remember it.

19,000. (Mr. Coleridge). Allan says he could not get it back from you?—That is a mistake.

19,001. You stuck to it?—No, I went upstairs and brought down three five-pound notes.

Mr. James Cook recalled.

19,002. (Mr. Price.) We wish you to understand that we presume you have told us everything that you recollect with regard to the election, and more especially that all the statements that you have made in which your partner's name is mixed up with you in matters are statements which you are prepared to abide by?—Yes.

19,003. I only say that because we are about to proceed afterwards to call your partner, and we shall not think it right, unless there be some very special ground indeed made for it, to allow you to come afterwards, and say that some portion of your statement is incorrect, in consequence of anything that your partner may have divulged?—No.

19,004. Because we think that you have had a sufficient opportunity of making the statement with as much deliberation as you required, and without the interruption of many questions from the court, and therefore you must be prepared to tell us that you abide by that in substance and in fact, the whole of that statement which you have made?—Yes; I mentioned to you yesterday that there is a correspondence which has taken place between ourselves and Mr. Vanderbyl which has now been copied, and is rather lengthy, and upon that, when it is before you, it is possible I may have some further observations to make.

19,005. That is new matter?—Yes. With regard to Bussell Mr. Coleridge asked me if I knew anything more about it than my partner did, and I said I did, and I abide by that.

19,006. (Mr Coleridge.) Although we should like to have the copies of that correspondence, we should also like to have the originals?—Yes, you shall have them.

Mr. Paul Octavius Haythorne Reed sworn.

19,007. (Mr. Price.) It is my duty to inform you that the majority of the Commissioners have, after considerable hesitation and doubt, come to the determination to examine you as a witness. I say that deliberately; the majority have come to that determination, and after considerable deliberation as to whether they should put you in a position which might entitle you, according to the mode in which you gave your evidence, to a certificate. And having told you that, I need not do more, I think, than caution you, and beg you to be explicit, so that we may feel that the majority are justified in having given you an opportunity of telling us all you know about these matters. With that caution, we are ready now to hear you make your statement, with respect to which, of course, those of us who feel inclined to do so will put whatever questions to you we think necessary.

19,008. (Mr. Coleridge.) You can make your statement in whatever form you like, beginning with the first election and ending with the last, or beginning with the last and ending with the first. Our general practice is to begin with the last?—I will begin with the last; and I may state that I commenced business in 1849, and continued in practice alone until the 1st of May 1865, when Mr. Cook, as he in his evidence has said, joined me as my partner, and we have continued together ever since. Mr. Cook has also stated to the court as to the manner in which the eastern district fell to our lot during the registration of 1868 and the last election; and Mr. Cook has also stated the result of our canvass of the eastern division. I agree with that, and I also agree with Mr. Cook's statement as to the figures made up at our office, or at Mr. Lovibond's, when we were all together.

19,009. As to the probability of the election?—Yes, I quite agree with those as facts. Now as to money matters at the last election. The first thing that came under my notice occurred on the Friday before the poll. That morning Mr. Cook and myself were at Mr. Lovibond's office on general matters connected with the election, and Mr. Barham came in; and Mr. Barham stated that he had just seen a friend——

19,010. In Mr. Lovibond's presence?—Yes, we were all there; that he had just seen a friend of Mr. Vanderbyl's, who had stated that Mr. Vanderbyl intended to fight the election on pure principles. That announcement—I am speaking for myself, the rest may speak for themselves—came upon me with surprise; and I do admit that Mr. Barham's statement as to my being warm is perfectly correct. I did speak out at the moment; and my explanation of so doing is this, that it was perfectly clear to my mind, and there was no doubt that it was perfectly clear to all the other Liberal agents, that if money was not used at that election by our side, we should lose the election. We fully believed that Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray would use money, and that we stood no chance without money; and if they spent money we must do so ourselves, or there would be no chance, and I spoke out the words much to the effect spoken to by Mr. Barham. We further discussed the question, if no money was used what would be the result; and we all came to the conclusion that if the Conservatives bribed, that unless we did the same both seats must be gone, and Mr. Barham was requested to take back that message to Mr. Vanderbyl's friend. At that time, as far as I recollect, no name was disclosed as to who that friend was; and I think it is right also to state, that up to that time Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond had made no communication at all to our firm, or to either of us, that they had been endeavouring to raise 3,000*l.* between Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake for the purpose of the election.

19,011. Just for one moment I will ask this question. Did you consider at this time that you were acting more immediately for Mr. Vanderbyl than for Mr. Kinglake?—Certainly not; I never made the slightest distinction between one and the other. Mr. Barham then agreed to go back and place our views before Mr. Vanderbyl's friend, and Barham left for that purpose. Mr. Barham shortly afterwards returned, and stated his having placed those views before Mr. Vanderbyl's friend, but still the friend expressed the same determination that no money should be spent. Well, then it was discussed. I recollect perfectly well a coalition being suggested between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Kinglake, but that was objected to.

19,012. (Mr. Price.) Who suggested that?—As far as I recollect, truthfully, I think it was Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Cook was stoutly opposed to it; he would be no party to it at all. He said it was selling his party behind their backs, and he would be no party to it. It is quite true what Mr. Barham has stated that somebody suggested that we should send to Mr. Trevor, to say to him, "I will tell you what it is, if you are going "to fight at all you must fight on pure principles, or "not fight at all;" and the opinion of the major part of the meeting was this, that it would do no good, but it would be simply putting the Conservatives on their guard, and make them more cautious, and you could not prevent bribery on their side; and it was then suggested that some one else should go back with Mr. Barham, and see this friend, and place all those facts before the friend.

19,013. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was the friend still unnamed?—Still unnamed, and Mr. Barham said, and no doubt Mr. Barham believed it to be the fact, but it was no such thing, that Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond went back to see this gentleman. It was no such thing, the interview was between Mr. Barham and Mr. Cook.

19,014. You say the mistake was as to who went back?—Yes, as to who went back. It was I who

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

14 Sept. 1869.

alone remained with Mr. Lovibond, and I said to Mr. Lovibond, "Is Mr. Kinglake ready?" and Mr. Lovibond's reply was, "Most certainly."

19,015. This was on the Saturday?—On the Friday before the polling day Mr. Cook and Mr. Barham came back and said they had seen the friend, and that he was of the same mind that no money would be spent at all. Then it was suggested that we should all see this friend in the evening, and Mr. Barham was to make an appointment for our being there. That appointment was made and kept. The appointment was at Mr. Barham's office, and we went there, Mr. Cook and myself went there, and found Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Barham about 7 o'clock as far as I recollect. Mr. Vanderbyl's friend soon afterwards came in. No doubt by that time I had been informed by Mr. Cook as to who the friend was, the friend was Mr. Fennelly. I cannot say I did not know Mr. Fennelly, my impression is that I had met him before out at some dinner, but I am not clear about it. When I went there in the evening, soon afterwards, Mr. Vanderbyl, and Mr. Fennelly came in.

19,016. You are still on the same evening, the Friday?—The same evening, the Friday, 7 o'clock, and the matter was discussed, and no doubt it was discussed very warmly. I spoke no doubt very much the same as I had done in the morning. No doubt it is the truth that I spoke much to the same effect that I did in the morning; and it was suggested, I think I was the person who suggested it, that Mr. Vanderbyl had better leave the room, and Mr. Vanderbyl went out I think and went into an adjoining one.

19,017. You suggested that?—Yes.

19,018. Because you wanted to say things you did not want him to hear?—Yes; I spoke warmly again. I said one thing after Mr. Vanderbyl had left the room, and that one thing is this, "I am perfectly clear Mr. "Fennelly that the Conservatives will use money, and "unless you are prepared to do so, I am prepared to "put my head on a block, and it shall come off, if you "get either of the seats." The other solicitors took a part in the debate as far as I know. Mr. Barham said the least. There is no doubt I talked, and the rest talked. Mr. Fennelly was very firm, very determined, very resolute. In fact we were held at a distance, he could quite keep his own ground; and he said Mr. Vanderbyl did not look at the money, it was not the money; that he was prepared to petition if the Conservatives were returned by bribery, and he would spend no money, and at length the meeting ended in this way; we said, "Well, will you consider what has "has passed, and give us your ultimatum in a certain "time"—one hour afterwards. Mr. Fenelly agreed to do so, and we left.

19,019. Just whilst you are there I will ask you this question. Did he not say at that time, or was it at a subsequent time, that he said he would give 1,500*l.* amongst the lawyers, but he would not spend it in bribery?—I never heard that in my life from Mr. Fennelly; never in my life.

19,020. Where was that said?—I have heard it stated in court.

19,021. But any where else?—I have never heard it before.

19,022. (Mr. Price.) It was a question of mine?—Yes; Mr. Fennelly said, "Mr. Vanderbyl does not value money; we will pay the lawyers handsomely;" but there was no mention of the sum he would give as far as I recollect. One hour afterwards was appointed for his reply, and Mr. Barham read us a letter from Mr. Fenelly, still coming to the same conclusion, that no money should be spent.

19,023. Where was that read?—My impression is at Mr. Barham's.

19,024. The first meeting was at Mr. Lovibond's, and the other meeting was at Mr. Barham's?—The first meeting in the morning was at Mr. Lovibond's, and the other two meetings were at Mr. Barham's. The meeting at which the letter was read was at Mr. Barham's, and after that letter was read we left; and I felt fully convinced from that letter that no money would be spent; and I went away fully with that idea. That was the Friday. The next day Mr. Vanderbyl was not very well; he was very weak, and I canvassed slightly in the morning a few people for Mr. Kinglake. In the evening there was a meeting at this hall; it was a very crowded meeting; Mr. Kinglake did the principal part of the talking; he spoke for himself, and he spoke for Mr. Vanderbyl. Mr. Vanderbyl spoke but very little. Mr. Vanderbyl was in a very feeble state.

19,025. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did Mr. Fennelly speak?—No, Mr. Vanderbyl spoke, but very little. Well, it was a very crowded meeting, and there was a unanimous feeling in favour of the two Liberal candidates, and a resolution was come to in their favour. I was about to leave the platform when I was requested to attend a meeting at Mr. Sealy's—who it was told me I cannot tell—and I went, and when I came there—it is in evidence before you as to who the gentlemen were who were at that meeting; and it is also in evidence that a copy of the resolution was read at the meeting, which was passed by the National Bank, as to matters connected with Mr. Vanderbyl and Sir Joseph McKenna, and it was discussed.

19,026. (Mr. Price.) One moment; was that the first time that you had had the matters brought to your notice as to the position in which Mr. Vanderbyl stood with regard to the National Bank, Sir Joseph McKenna, and the Lundy Island Granite Company?—No. As to the National Bank, that was the first time I heard about it, but I remember some days before reading in the paper a report as to the Lundy Island Granite Company, and strips were struck off and put all over the town, and strips were put into your hand.

19,027. Was that discussed before you went to this meeting?—No.

19,028. Not in any way?—No.

19,029. At any meeting?—I attended no meeting before.

19,030. There was the meeting which you have just alluded to?—That was the night before.

19,031. Was that subject alluded to then?—Not a word.

19,032. Therefore the whole conversation you had with Mr. Fennelly was simply confined to the question of whether Mr. Vanderbyl would spend money or not?—Yes, it was, entirely.

19,033. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who printed those slips?—My impression is that Ingram's name was to it.

19,034. Was he the person who did the Conservative printing?—Yes. My impression is that "Ingram, Steam-printing Office, Bridgwater," was on it. I was mentioning that I was at Mr. Sealy's on the Saturday evening, and I had got so far as the resolutions being discussed that had been passed by the National Bank. Then there was a resolution come to that there was no reason why the meeting should depart from that vote of confidence in Mr. Vanderbyl that had previously been arrived at.

19,035. (Mr. Price.) Was there any other subject discussed at that meeting at Mr. Sealy's except the question as to how far this matter of the National Bank should induce anybody to retire from supporting Mr. Vanderbyl?—No.

19,036. No other subject?—No.

19,037. (Mr. Coleridge.) No other question as to the position Mr. Fennelly had taken as to spending no money?—No.

19,038. You are quite sure about that?—Yes.

19,039. (Mr. Price.) Be particular about this, as it is very important?—I am quite sure no such thing took place.

19,040. Are you equally clear that on that occasion nothing of that kind was discussed; nothing about what Mr. Fennelly had told you previously?—I do feel quite clear upon that point. The next day was Sunday; I had been to church in the evening, and in coming out or going I passed Mr. Cook's house, and whether I made the communication to him or he made it to me I do not know. It amounted to this: "There is a meeting at Nicholls' this evening, and "we are requested to attend." We went to that meeting; we went at the same time.

19,041. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were late?—We were late; and I may say the only person I recollect coming in after us was Mr. Wilton, and when we came there it was a quiet meeting; they were discussing the Lundy Island Granite Company, and they were also discussing as to the National Bank. Now, I sat near Mr. Cook. Mr. Collins hesitated. It appeared to me at the time that it was all nonsense and humbug they were discussing, and that it was to lead to something else, and it soon began like a whisper, and then it went all round: "Vanderbyl is going to spend no money."

19,042. (Mr. Price.) To the best of your recollection, was that started by you legal gentlemen, or was that whisper circulated from the mouths of the other members of the Liberal party?—It is my impression, and I am quite certain, that that whisper was started by one of the legal gentlemen.

19,043. You have no doubt about that?—I have no doubt about that.

19,044. You do not know who it was who started it?—No; I was here in court, and heard the evidence of Mr. Collins and Mr. Lovibond, but I have no doubt it was the legal gentlemen; and a discussion then took place as to the determination of Mr. Vanderbyl to spend no money, and it was discussed as to what the result would be.

19,045. By all persons?—Yes.

19,046. By Mr. Nicholls?—I will not say; but there is no doubt Mr. Nicholls must have known what was the real intent and purpose of the meeting, and we all came to the conclusion that if they used money we should have a decided majority, but if they did not, the whole thing would go.

19,047. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have no recollection whether it was the conclusion of that meeting that Mr. Vanderbyl should be asked to retire or not?—Pardon me for a moment; then it was agreed that a deputation should wait upon Mr. Vanderbyl, and ask him to retire, saying, "You have damaged the Liberal "party by the disclosures which have lately come "out about the Lundy Island Granite Company."

19,048. (Mr. (Price.) Was that discussed and that resolution come to with the understanding that that should be made the pretext of getting rid of Mr. Vanderbyl?—I certainly looked upon it in that light.

19,049. Your real object being at the time to get rid of him because he had come to the determination to spend no money?—Yes, I certainly looked upon it in that light; they had passed a resolution the day before expressing confidence in him.

19,050. Which cleared him entirely?—Yes, which cleared him entirely.

19,051. Therefore, as far as you know, the deputation must have gone from that meeting to Mr. Vanderbyl, knowing that they went there with the object of trying to get rid of Mr. Vanderbyl, not on the ground of the disclosures with respect to the Lundy Island Granite Company, but the real object being to get rid of him because he had come to the determination not to spend money?—Certainly, that is my impression. The deputation went down late, and it was very late when they came back; I should think it was midnight, and when they came back all the people composing the original meeting had left. As far as I recollect, when they came back, Mr. Collins and Mr. Nicholls were two out of the four composing the deputation who came back, they found Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Cook and myself there. I believe we were the only three.

19,052. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did either Mr. Collins or Mr. Nicholls tell you anything about Mr. Fennelly's having told them it was all humbug about the Lundy Island Granite Company, and that all they wanted was money?—I will tell you about that. They said when they came back that when they arrived at the "Globe," Mr. James Wood Sully was upstairs with Mr. Vanderbyl, and when he came down they went up and placed before him their views, and they said Mr. Vanderbyl spoke a good deal of the lawyers as to the money which had been spent in the election of 1866, and he said he knew himself that he was the popular candidate of the town, that he knew as much of the town as the lawyers and he would not retire. I do not recollect a word being said that evening about Mr. Fennelly having said, "It is all nonsense and humbug "about the Lundy Granite Company; all you want "is money." They said that the deputation ended like this.

19,053. (Mr. Coleridge.) There were only two of them who came back, Mr. Collins and Mr. Nicholls. Mr. Nicholls has given us a very different account to what you have just given?—Mr. Collins, my impression is, spoke the most; he was the most clear upon it. They said Mr. Vanderbyl retired, and then Mr. Fennelley stood up, and it was then arranged that they should call the following morning for an answer. I left with Mr. Collins; I went some way with him. I live some little distance beyond Mr. Collins. Mr. Collins stopped talking with Mr. Nicholls or somebody else, and I went on. That was the Sunday. The next day, the Monday, that was the nomination day, on coming into town I passed Mr. Cook's house. He came out at that time, and stated to me that on arriving home on the previous evening he found that some one had called, that afterwards the same person called, that it turned out to be Mr. Fennelley. Now I was not present at that meeting, but what Mr. Cook told me at that meeting was as follows, that Mr. Fennelly, having stated that having attended a meeting that evening at Mr. Hennet's, it was suggested that a compromise should be made between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Vanderbyl; that Mr. Westropp, with a view of carrying that out, had gone down to Mr. Brice's house, which was just below, and there found Mr. Brice and Mr. James Trevor, and Mr. Trevor said to Mr. Westropp, "Well, if this is to be done, it is to be "done through the lawyers, and you had better see "Mr. Cook;" and Mr. Cook stated that Mr. Fennelly informed him, "It is in consequence of that I have called upon you;" and Mr. Cook also stated that the communication was received as a masonic communication, as he has stated; and Mr. Cook stated he thereupon said, "That being so, I will be no party to the coalition," that it would split the party to pieces, and in fact it would be a kind of sale. He said that Mr. Fennelly said, "You are aware of the proposition made by Mr. Barham," of which Mr. Cook gave evidence the other day in court; and Mr. Cook said, "I did not say yea or nay." That proposition was that a certain sum should be found, a moiety by each candidate; and Mr. Fennelley said to Mr. Cook, "Do "you think I can depend upon Mr. Barham, or if "Mr. Barham has made such a proposal, that I can "depend upon him?" and Mr. Cook said, "If Mr. "Barham has made such a proposition you can "thoroughly depend upon Mr. Barham."

19,054. (Mr. Price.) Did you understand at all, up to that period, when this compromise with Mr. Westropp was suggested at this meeting at Mr. Hennet's, that anything had been said by Mr. Vanderbyl, which would leave the impression upon Mr. Westropp's mind, that if Mr. Westropp was prepared to coalesce, and would meet him half way, that he would meet Mr. Westropp half way?—Certainly not.

19,055. You did not gather that that was any part of what had transpired?—No.

19,056. You were not at the meeting, you know?—I perfectly follow you.

19,057. You did not understand in any way from what Mr. Cook told you, that that sort of thing had passed between Mr. Westropp and Mr. Vanderbyl?—Certainly not. Well, I was speaking as to Mr. Cook's observation, when Mr. Fennelly said, "May I rely upon Mr. Barham?" and that then Mr. Fennelly said, "You may tell Mr. Barham that I'll accept his proposition," or words to that effect. Mr. Cook also stated, that upon that interview it was, that Mr. Fennelly referred to the deputation the night before, and

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

his saying, "It is all humbug, gentlemen, your coming "down here about the Lundy Granite Company; it "is money you want." Mr. Cook certainly stated that Mr. Fennelly upon that occasion used words to that effect. Mr. Cook also informed me—this was in the morning, I should say about nine—"Mr. Fennelly "is now on his way to London for the money, and it "is arranged he shall bring it down, and that he "shall bring some one with him to arrange it, and "take care of it when it is here."

19,058. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Cook told you this?—He did. Mr. Cook came into town.

19,059. (Mr. Price.) Did he tell you how he had got that information?—Oh, yes, from Mr. Fennelly. I understood there was no other person to give that information.

19,060. Not from Mr. Barham?—Certainly not. Mr. Barham was not mixed up with the matter after that that I am aware of. This was about nine o'clock in the morning. My impression is that I met Mr. Lovibond coming in the town. My impression is, I met Mr. Lovibond when I was going to his office, and I said there would be money; and Mr. Lovibond, my impression is, said, "That comes from last night's meeting," or something like that.

19,061. The meeting which Mr. Lovibond referred to was the meeting at Nicholls'?—Yes. I also saw Mr. Barham on the way to this hall to attend the nomination; I told Mr. Barham of it; and it is fair that I should say that Mr. Barham seemed rather cold about it then. That is all that took place between us. I will go back the same morning to a statement made by Bussell. Bussell's statement is perfectly true. I did meet Bussell, and used the words he stated, "All right," and "There will be money." It arose in consequence of this; a few evenings before, on my way to or from the post, I met Bussell accidentally, and Bussell had been rather grumbling that no arrangement had been made to bring home the master-mariner's, and I made the statement to Bussell that morning, that if money was wanted it would be found. We attended the nomination, and after the nomination—or rather myself and Mr. Cook, saw Mr. Lovibond during the day, and an arrangement was made that Mr. Lovibond should attend at our office in the evening, so as to arrange as to what was to be done the next day with the money, if it became necessary to be used. Mr. Lovibond came to our office at about 7 or 8 o'clock,—something like that, and was accompanied by Mr. George Lovibond, his son. We all went into the room. Mr. George Lovibond is a young man, and I said, "George, I think we will go downstairs, and leave these gentlemen alone." We did so, and we left Mr. Cook and Mr. Lovibond upstairs. When Mr. Lovibond left, Mr. Cook informed me of what had taken place, that is, that they had discussed matters, and they were to await the events of to-morrow; that would govern their movements. That brings me say to about 9 o'clock on the nomination day. After that, I met Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Lomas ——

19,062. (Mr. Coleridge.) Where?—That was at Mr. Cook's house; and they came down by the express; I understood in the evening that the key-word, or key-stone, when a person wanted money, was, "What is tea a pound?" And when Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Lomas attended the meeting, Mr. Fennelly said, "Well, this is Mr. Williams, and he has brought down what was arranged," or words to that effect.

19,063. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who started the word "Eureka"?—We will come to that by-and-by. I never heard it mentioned before I heard it in this court. I will explain that. I never heard it till I heard it here. Mr. Cook said, "Business generally "begins early here, you must be up early in the morn-"ing;" and Mr. Cook suggested it should be made up in "ten ounce parcels."

19,064. Ten pound parcels?—Ten pound parcels. There was nothing more that occurred that night, and Mr. Williams, or Mr. Lomas, left us to go the "Railway Hotel," where he was staying, and where he was to stay the following day to await orders. Mr. Fennelly went soon afterwards, and I went home. The next morning was the poll. The poll commenced at 8. I was, on the opening of the poll, in the return room in Eastover; and, it is in evidence before you as to the eastern district, and as to that room, that it was the room to which three wards made their return. Mr. Lovibond's south ward, merely one booth, and Mr. Barham's, the north ward, one booth there. The polling was very slack indeed for some time. The Liberals were in a majority, I think, until close upon 9, or say half-past 8, or a little after. I saw Mr. Lovibond at the return room at the "Globe" early in the morning, and I walked up through the town with Mr. Lovibond on my way to vote. My booth was in Mr. Lovibond's district; and on the way through the town we passed Robert Bussell, and Robert Bussell said, "Well, sirs, "there will be no occasion for your clerks doing much "to-day; we have found out some flaw in some Act "you have not complied with; you may poll as many "as you can, but it will be a void election."

19,065. What did you suppose that meant?—I cannot tell. My impression is it was to throw us off our guard.

16,066. It was a dodge of Bussell's?—I cannot say I mentioned it to Mr. Barham afterwards. We thought there was perhaps some act of neglect on our part; but we could not think of any act of omission on our part. That was close upon 9; and I went down to the "Globe" again, and soon after 9 the Conservatives not only became on a par, or equal with us, but they began to take a decided lead—a decided majority; and I remember it was said in our room—I cannot say by whom, but I remember at the time it was said by some one—and I could not believe it; I thought it was most improbable, and Mr. Barham has stated that he thought so too, that Mr. Westropp had said, in addressing a meeting at the "Clarence," "Well, gentlemen, we "cannot spend money now. It is a very serious thing. "We should get sent to prison for two years; but if "you go to poll, 14 days afterwards you shall be "paid."

19,067. (Mr. Price.) It seemed so improbable that you could not believe it?—It did. I could not believe it.

19,068. But it is said he went about the town triumphing over you?—Quite so. I saw him out of the window; and saw him shake hands with every man, woman, and child in the town. Shortly after that, Mr. Lovibond, who was in the return room at Eastover—and it is fair to Mr. Barham to say, I do not remember seeing him again till the return of the poll ——

19,069. Are you speaking now of the time when Mr. Barham said he came in, and found the room in a bustling condition?—No; I did not see Mr. Barham till the end of the day, at the hustings.

19,070. He said he saw you before then?—That is a mistake. I am sure Mr. Barham did not come here intentionally to say that which was wrong. It is a mistake. Mr. Lovibond was at the return room at the "Globe," and we talked it over, and we went into an adjoining room, and Smith, Allan, Bussell, Bulpin, and Alway were there, and then it was discussed. We were all convinced that either money was going on the other side, or promises. They came to the same conclusion, and it was inquired, "Well, what will it cost to win the election now?" And some one said "3,000*l*." We went out—when I say "we" I mean Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Cook, and myself—and considered the matter over.

19,071. Now wait a moment. When you went out, did you go and see anybody?—Not a soul.

19,072. Are you quite sure of that?—Oh yes, perfectly.

19,073. You did not see Mr. Vanderbyl?—No. I am telling you. You will find my statement is correct.

19,074. I will take it for granted that it is correct. I am only drawing your attention to it. When you retired out of the room in which Bussell, Allan, and the other men were, you did not retire to see the candidates ?—No.

19,075. (Mr. Coleridge.) Knowing, as you did, from your partner Cook, that Mr. Fennelly was gone up to London in the morning to receive money, knowing that Mr. Fennelly had returned to town, and having seen Lomas, and heard all about the money, how do you account for the fact that no money was spent on the morning of the polling day, when the other side were getting ahead of you ?—I will tell you that. Then we discussed as to the propriety of spending money then.

19,076. What time was this ?—This was about ten as near as I can recollect, and we discussed it, and said "We will wait a bit, and see how things run on;" and the majority still increased, and between 10 and 1 no doubt two or three meetings took place between the other parties in the other room.

19,077. (Mr. Price.) Will you say that up to that time no money had been spent ?—That is my impression.

19,078. And after what you had been told about the sort of men who had gone up to the poll, and seeing that the Conservatives were gaining upon you, why did you not open your pursestrings early in the morning? I ask you, when were you prepared to open the floodgates ?—I will tell you. The Conservatives were in so large a majority that in discussing the matter we said, "If we now commence to spend "money with such a large majority against us, it is "not simply knocking down the majority, but every "man, save and except here and there, afterwards "must be bribed."

19,079. (Mr. Coleridge.) I want to know why you let all the time between 10 and 1 slip by without spending money ?—Because from 10 to 1 the majority grew greater and greater. The majority got so bulky.

19,080. I cannot understand why you did not draw the pursestrings before ?—Because the Conservatives, having once got a majority, having the advantage of that majority, they thrust up every man as fast as they could. My opinion is, that they pushed up every doubtful man as fast as they could in the morning.

19,081-2. (Mr. Price.) Was this the reason that somebody said, "How much will it cost to win the election." And it was replied, "3,000*l.*," and then Bussell, or somebody said, "Three might have done it this morning, but it will take five to do it now" ?—It was. I remember it perfectly.

19,083. Was that the reason, because you were alarmed at the largeness of the sum ?—No doubt the majority had grown so large, that although 3,000*l.* might have done in the morning, a much larger sum would be wanted to alter the facts as they then existed.

19,084. Then you came to the determination, as facts had altered so greatly, not to spend any money ?—I did.

19,085. (Mr. Coleridge.) As I understand, you only spent 740*l.* to win the election ?—No doubt. Mr. Allan has stated in the box that I made this statement, "It is no use to make any bones, here is 3,000*l.*, if "that will do to go in and win with." I solemnly state that no such words came from my lips, or anything to that effect. I remember about 12 o'clock Mr. Lovibond came up again in the return room, and no doubt it was very full, and we went downstairs to talk the matter over.

19,086. (Mr. Price.) Is there any doubt; it may be only a mistake as to the mouth from which the words proceeded, and no more; but did anybody use those words in your presence ?—No.

19,087. There probably would be a great deal of confusion when a number of gentlemen were speaking ?—Yes.

19,088. Are you prepared to say, when Allan was in the room, that that expression was never used by anybody ?—The only expression ever used by anybody at all was something like this, "Will 3,000*l.* do ?" I do not know who said it. My next impression is that Mr. Lovibond said so. I will not say that as a fact, but that is my impression.

19,089. I have not got the exact expression, but was it followed up by an expression like this, "Here is 3,000*l.* for you, if that will be enough" ?—"Will 3,000*l.* do" ?

19,090. Not put in this way, "Here it is" ?—Certainly not.

19,091. "Here is 3,000*l.*, if you can do it" ?—No.

19,092. What is it that Allan said, that you say you deny ?—That what I said was this—"It is no use to "make any bones about it. Here is 3,000*l.*, if that "will do."

19,093. I ask you if anybody else said that, if Allan was under a mistake as to you ?—No doubt it was said, "Will 3,000*l.* do" ?

19,094. But was it put in the other way, "Here is 3,000*l.*" ?—No.

19,095. Merely put interrogatively ?—Yes, will 3,000*l.* do ?

19,096. What time was that ?—That was about the time, I think, Bussell said 4,000*l.*

19,097. (Mr. Coleridge.) It was Bussell said 4,000*l.*?—There were so many people brushing about, that I cannot say who did say it. I come to a little after 12. Mr. Lovibond came into the room, and I went downstairs with Mr. Lovibond; outside the "Globe" I saw Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Mogg. We walked from the front——

19,098. (Mr. Price.) Now just fix that time as near as possible ?—I will fix that time as near as I can.

19,099. What is your lunch time here; about 12 o'clock ?—We took no lunch that time.

19,100. But the ordinary time; Mr. Nicholls went home to lunch, and Mr. Lovibond went with him ?—It was before that.

19,101. Was it before that that you saw Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Mogg ?—Certainly not. I fix that time, because I know Dr. Kinglake would not lunch before half-past 12, and that is the reason I put it between 12 and half-past 12. My impression is that we saw Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Mogg, and we joined them, and we walked round from the front of the house down to Salmon Lane, a kind of angle, and on the way the election was discussed, and we gave an opinion that the election was gone—it could not be saved; and then some question was put as to what money would save it, if it could be saved at all.

19,102. Who put that question ?—My impression is, it was put either by Mr. Lovibond or myself.

19,103. (Mr. Coleridge.) This was said while you were walking with Mr. Mogg and Dr. Kinglake ?—Yes.

19,104. You say that either the one or the other of you put some question as to how much money would be required ?—Yes.

19,105. You did not put that by way of interrogation to Dr. Kinglake, but by way of information ?—It was by way of information going along.

19,106. Because you had discussed the matter before, and had had the amount put to you ?—Yes.

19,107. Therefore you put it by way of information to Dr. Kinglake that that sum was wanted ?—Yes.

19,108. What was said by Dr. Kinglake ?—I knew very little of Dr. Kinglake. I had seen Dr. Kinglake at different times before at Mr. Lovibond's office, and I thought Dr. Kinglake would be more free with one instead of four; and I walked before with Mr. Mogg, so as to leave Mr. Lovibond and Dr. Kinglake to walk behind and talk matters over.

19,109. Has Dr. Kinglake taken an active part in Mr. Kinglake's elections ?—No. I have seen Dr. Kinglake coming from Mr. Lovibond's office from time to time.

19,110. (Mr. Price.) When you made that observation to Dr. Kinglake, did you make it to him because you thought that Dr. Kinglake was in that position towards his brother, that if money was to be found, that he would be the medium of getting it ? No, I cannot say I did.

19,111. Then what was the object of talking it

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

14 Sept. 1869.

over with him?—It was a mere discussion as to how the election stood, and if it was absolutely gone.

19,112. But when you came to money matters, and to specify a sum, it surprises me that you should be so particular in doing that with Dr. Kinglake, unless it was with the knowledge that Dr. Kinglake would attend to the money part of the business for his brother. What makes me think so is the evidence we have before us, that Dr. Kinglake had been to the bank the night before about the 1,000*l.*, and saying it might go to 1,500*l.*, and that about 12, at the time of your meeting, he had been to Prior's bank, and cancelled the transaction. And then we have the evidence you know of Mogg's going afterwards for the 500*l.* That is the reason I press you upon that, whether that must not be the reason for discussing the amount of money with Dr. Kinglake?—I cannot say it was, because all that is new to me. I never heard of it till I heard it in this court the other day. I had no idea where the money came from.

19,113. Therefore you would not have the same reason to mention that to Dr. Kinglake, because you did not know those facts?—No; it was all new to me. I heard it in court the other day for the first time.

19,114. At all events, somebody mentioned the sum to Dr. Kinglake?—Yes, certainly.

19,115. Was anything said about a lesser sum than the sum that was mentioned?—No.

19,116. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there anybody who knew where that came from? Does Mr. Lovibond know everything about the matter?—Mr. Lovibond has always declared from first to last that he never knew anything about the money, and nothing of Allan's money. He has declared that over and over again.

19,117. Nothing of Mr. Fennelly's money?—Yes; over and over again he has informed me, and I have always been informed, if anybody is to blame, it is Reed and Cook.

19,118. (Mr. Price.) That is a very serious allegation that Mr. Lovibond has always told you, that he had not the slightest idea where Allan had his money from?—Yes.

19,119. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not even Kinglake's money?—Yes.

19,120. (Mr. Price.) What! not even the 500*l.*?—Yes, over and over again.

19,121. Since the election petition?—Yes, over and over again.

19,122. And since the Commission began?—Yes, over and over again, and told my partner also.

19,123. Therefore, according to the state of your knowledge, you thought this money dropped from the clouds; that it came from the "Man in the Moon," to adopt a figure of speech?—No.

19,124. You knew of Mr. Fennelly's money?—Yes.

19,125. When did you hear any money had been spent on Mr. Kinglake's behalf?—I have not the slightest knowledge.

19,126. We are perhaps interrupting you?—I may say, going back, Mr. Lovibond then left Dr. Kinglake, and took my arm. We walked back to the "Globe," and Mr. Lovibond said to me, "Do you know that "Mr. Kinglake's friends look to the seat as of so much "importance that they are prepared to spend 2,000*l.* or "3,000*l.*?"

19,127. Mr. Lovibond said that?—He did, and I then, with Mr. Lovibond, went up into the "Globe" room, and saw Mr. Cook, and then it was that Mr. Cook said, "With such a majority, if you flood the "streets with money it is certain what will be the "result." I came to the same conclusion, and so that ended, I did not see Dr. Kinglake again that day.

19,128. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time would that be, 1 o'clock?—I should think it would be close up to that time.

19,129. (Mr. Price.) Where did you part with Dr. Kinglake?—Outside the "Globe."

19,130. Did Mr. Lovibond go away with him?—No; Mr. Lovibond accompanied me upstairs.

19,127. Upstairs?—Yes.

19,132. And did you stay, or did you leave Mr. Lovibond there?—Mr. Lovibond went upstairs. Now, whether Mr. Lovibond went out then and there I cannot tell, but I certainly saw Mr. Lovibond, and talked with him subsequently.

19,133. How long after was it that you heard that Mr. Kinglake and his brother left the town? You know now, even if you did not know it then, that they did leave the town. How long after you parted from Dr. Kinglake was it that they left?—It was a day of much excitement, and I should not like to say; but it was about 12 or half-past. I thought the election was dead and gone, and I was very much dejected, and I left my books and went into a corner and smoked a cigar, and I remember while lying by idle in the day, Mr. John Smith called me across the room, and Mr. Lovibond was next to Mr. John Smith, and Mr. John Smith said, "Mr. Reed, what is the "meaning of this? Mr. Lovibond says he has been "prepared all the morning, and you are not." Mr. Cook said, "No such thing; we were prepared, but "not to flood the streets with money." Well, the next thing that took place was, as far as I recollect, the Liberals began to poll up, and began to poll up very rapidly indeed. This would be after 1 o'clock. A question was put by one of the Commissioners the other day, and he said, "No one can explain how "this majority was knocked down, and why these "people came up and voted." Now my explanation is this, and I believe it is the truthful and the real explanation, that a considerable body of electors did wait back, anticipating money. They were led to believe there would be money, because of Mr. Westropp's antecedents, and because of Mr. Gray's antecedents.

19,134. There was nothing known about Mr. Gray?—Except his being a poor speaker, having little to say, but a very rich West India merchant, and so on.

19,135. That is always known of every candidate who comes to Bridgwater, you know?—Well, those two were cried up. Mr. Westropp for years had been courting the borough, giving to every possible local charity, and everything else. My explanation is this, that at 1 o'clock apparently the election was gone; there was no market for those doubtful Liberals, no market for their vote; they held a commodity which was not saleable, and the question was, "Will you "hold the commodity, your vote, in your pocket, or "will you give it away, and vote for the Liberal can-"didate?"

19,136. Up to that time, had there been any expenditure by either side?—I am quite certain no money had been spent by the Liberals, and, as far as my impression goes, no money had been spent by the Conservatives.

19,137. At that time the Conservatives were in a very large majority?—Considerable.

19,138. And you say when the majority began to be diminished by the Liberals going up, it was because they had been hanging back to see if money would be spent, in consequence of what Mr. Westropp had done before, and what they supposed Mr. Gray would do; but finding that money did not come, they went to give their votes for the Liberals?—Yes.

19,139. In consequence of that the majority got by the Conservatives up to that time was a bonâ fide majority, an unbought majority?—No; I look upon it like this——

19,140. (Mr. Coleridge.) They were bought by promises?—Yes, they were bought by promises.

19,141. (Mr. Price.) If the Conservatives had been going about promising voters, and were able to get a large majority in that way, one would have thought the promises would have gone about freely to influence the remainder?—No. My impression is this, that they had exhausted their own ranks, and they found they must go to the other side, with something else than promises.

19,142. You think that if they went to your side they must not go to them with promises, but they must go to them with cash down?—No doubt.

19,143. (Mr. Coleridge.) Your impression is that the Conservatives did not give money that day; they only promised that day; it was all promises?—They never spent a farthing; that is my impression. There was not a shilling spent.

19,144. They were entirely dealing in promissory notes all the day through?—Not promissory notes.

19,145. Promises?—Yes.

19,146. (Mr. Price.) IOU's?—IOU's. I have never been able to discover the spending of a shilling that day.

19,147. Your "doubtful fors" were not contented with Mr. Westropp's IOU's, and they would take nothing less than the packages of tea or something of that sort?—Yes; not only that, it would have been a dangerous thing for the Conservatives, with so large a majority, to come into the Liberal ranks, and venture upon promises.

19,148. No doubt, then, your "doubtful fors," finding there was no money going, and not liking to trust the other side, and perhaps not being asked, they then thought they would go and vote according to their political persuasion?—No doubt.

19,149. (Mr. Coleridge.) And no doubt many of those who were promised, and voted, were paid?—I have never heard that those who previously voted were paid.

19,150. Why did you allow those three hours in the morning to slip away without spending money?—First we were neck and neck, and then after a time the majority against us was very considerable.

19,151. Would not that be the time to spend it?—Yes; but whilst we discussed it they ran up so considerably, that we thought they were too considerable to be beaten, and the majority still increased.

19,152. And Bussell all this time was grumbling that no money was being spent?—Bussell certainly did grumble in the morning from time to time.

19,153. And everybody said things were going wrong?—No doubt of it.

19,154. (Mr. Price.) Was it not operating on your mind and the minds of the other gentlemen at that time that you had much better keep out of bribery altogether, not from any pure motive, but from the fact that you thought it was hopeless, there being such a large majority, and that it would be a waste of money?—I must state the truth; that was my impression.

19,155. You thought it would be a waste of money?—Yes.

19,156. It was really because you thought it would be a useless expenditure, and not from any ideas of purity that you entertained?—It was.

19,157. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Fennelly having brought down this money, and it being in the hands of this "tea dealer," in 10*l.* packages, how was it that you did not go to him for the money early in the morning instead of faltering on the subject of money all through the day; was there any reason for your not doing so?—Not the slightest.

16,158. Was there any reason for your not going to him for the money?—No.

19,159. Then I cannot understand it?—Then the Conservatives ran up, and there was a good deal of vacillation, no doubt.

19,160. But your ready cash would have been ten times better than their promises?—Yes, but the thing ran up; it grew up, as you may say, before the thing was at all contemplated or expected. I was speaking of the manner in which this large majority was brushed away.

19,161. (Mr. Price.) Have you got to that period of the day when Mr. Barham said, he came down and found Mr. Lovibond taking down names?—I never saw Mr. Barham there.

19,162. That may be a mistake of yours. You may not have seen Mr. Barham?—Quite so.

19,163. But was there a period of the day when Mr. Lovibond was taking down names, and you were, as Mr. Barham described it, looking the picture of despair?—Well, I was looking very miserable, no doubt.

19,164. That was about the time you are speaking of?—I think it was.

19,165. Because that would give Mr. Barham the idea that, at last, the resolution had been come to, to open the flood-gates of bribery?—We were not together; Mr. Barham was not with me.

19,166. No. He said he went about, and went once into your room at the "Globe," and found quite a different state of things from what he saw in his own room, or Mr. Lovibond's room; he found the position of things quite different altogether; the room full of people, Mr. Lovibond taking down names, and you yourself standing on one side, not taking any part in what was going on; and then was the time when you determined to open the purse?—No.

19,167. Later than that time?—At that time I had come to the conclusion that the election was gone and hopeless, or I should not have looked dejected.

19,168. And it was after Mr. Lovibond's going away?—No doubt.

19,169. Had you left the room when you came to that determination?—No.

19,170. Did you leave the room to go to luncheon?—No.

19,171. You stayed there?—Yes. I may say I should have left in the morning. Telegrams came from Taunton, and I said, "It is a cowardly thing to "run away; I will stay and see the thing out." But I certainly thought it was hopeless, and that we should not attempt anything at all.

19,172. I want to ask you this, if it comes in order; if not, you will tell me when you come to that part of it. There was a period of time, I suppose it must have been later, when the money was going; but I think either Allan, or Bussell, or one of them came into the room and complained in some way or other as to the want of money; and then it is said, I think, that you used the expression, "We have done all that we could; where the devil is Lovibond?"—That was later in the day.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It was at half-past three, I think.

(Mr. Price.) We will come to that presently.

A short adjournment took place.

Mrs. Sarah Gold sworn.

Mrs. S. Gold.

19,173. (Mr. Price.) You are the wife of Richard Gold?—Yes.

19,174. We want you to tell us what you know as to any money being given to your husband at the election of Vanderbyl in 1866, which he was to use for bribing?—All that I know, sir, is that Mr. Bond was in our house. I do not know his christian name.

19,175. Speak out, please, we can't hear?—He was in our house. Mr. Bond was in our house, and my master and Mr. Bond was talking about voting. Mr. Bond was in our kitchen, and they were talking about Wittridge; that is a man that worked for Mr. Bond—a shoemaker. He lives in Mount, and my master and Mr. Bond was talking about him. He would not go to the poll, and my master said, "I've got 10*l.* for "Wittridge. You know him better than I; you had "better give it to him." He said, "All right," and my master give him the money, and Mr. Bond said he would see that he got it, and make it all right.

19,176. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are you quite certain that you saw the money given to Mr. Bond?—I am quite certain of it.

19,177. What was it in? Was it in gold?—I do not know. I did not see the money; I saw the paper.

19,178. Was it money or notes?—Money, I believe.

19,179. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it in a sealed or covered paper—a paper parcel?—Yes, rolled up. I saw the money; saw my husband giving it to him.

19,180. Have you been talking to your husband

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mrs. S. Gold.

14 Sept. 1869.

about it?—No, I have not seen him since he came away this morning.

19,181. Did you talk it over last night?—My husband's brother came in and he said, "Why Bond said "you never gave him no money to give Wittridge;" and I listened a minute or two and thought of it, that at the time of the election I saw Bond in our house, and I said, "I am sure he did, for I saw him do it." I never said a word about it to my husband.

19,182. That is all that passed?—Yes.

19,183. Now, have you ever had it drawn to your recollection since the time that it took place?—I never thought of it till last night, and then I studied about it a minute or two and it came to my recollection where it was.

19,184. (Mr. Anstey.) What did Bond say?—He said that he would see him and make it all right.

19,185. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you see your husband go to Wittridge?—No, I did not.

19,186. Is Wittridge in court?—I do not know.

19,187. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you know Bond by sight?—Yes.

19,188. (Mr. Price.) Is that the man (pointing)?—Yes, that's the man.

19,189. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long have you known him?—I have known him for years when I have seen him.

19,190. For the last twenty years?—I suppose I have.

19,191. (Mr. Anstey.) Has he always lived in Bridgwater?—No, thirty years.

19,192. Had he been to your husband's house more than once that day?—No, I don't think he had.

19,193. Not several times?—No, I do not recollect seeing him but that once.

19,194. What time of the day was it?—Well, I think it was the morning part.

19,195. Before your dinner?—Yes, my husband had been to the poll I know.

19,196. Did you know your husband had money to give away for bribery?—I did not know it until I heard him say to Bond that he had 10*l.* I never knowed anything about it till I heard him say to Bond, "I have 10*l.* for Wittridge."

19,197. Did you talk to him about the money?—No, I never named it.

19,198. This was in Vanderbyl's election of 1866?—Yes.

19,199. You are quite sure of that?—Yes, I am sure of that; and that is all I know of it.

19,200. (Mr. Coleridge.) Don't you know of other elections?—No; I don't think my husband ever had anything to do with elections before that.

19,201. Had he anything to do with the last one?—No, he had not. He went to poll early in the morning, and afterwards went away.

19,202. Does he talk to you about political matters?—No. I never said nothing; never asked him anything about it.

19,203. He does not discuss them with you?—No. I know he never had any money in his life. I am certain of that.

19,204. How do you know it?—Very well.

19,205. If he got it he would have given it to you?—Yes, he would.

19,206. We heard the other day from one lady that her husband never gave her some money, though he had it we found?—If he had money I should have known it; he would have given it to me to make use of it.

19,207. Supposing he had spent it at public-houses?—He does not go to the public-house; I am certain of that.

19,208. (Mr. Price.) You have such confidence in your husband that you are quite sure if he had money you would have had it?—Yes, if he had had money I should have had it.

19,209. You never had money?—No; I never saw the colour of money.

19,210. (Mr. Price.) You never had any colours of pocket handkerchiefs?—He had a pocket handkerchief, but then he paid for it.

19,211. You have never had any expenses?—No.

J. Wittridge.

JAMES WITTRIDGE sworn.

19,212. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A cordwainer.

19,213. Who do you work for?—Mr. Bond.

19,214. Did you work for him at the election in 1866?—Yes.

19,215. Were you a voter then?—Yes.

19,216. Did he ask you at all which way you were going to vote?—No.

19,217. Did he know whether you had voted or promised your vote?—No.

19,218. Had you voted at other elections?—Yes.

19,219. Did he talk with you at all about the election?—Not a word of it; not on that day.

19,220. Had you said anything whatever to Mr. Bond about money?—No, never.

19,221. Did you talk to him on the day of election about your not voting?—No.

19,222. Had you said so to anybody else. Had you given anybody to understand?—I don't believe I did.

19,223. Don't talk about believing. Tell us honestly. You are here upon your oath, and if you do not tell us you will be in a considerable difficulty. Had you said anything to anybody to lead them to suppose that you were hanging back for money?—No.

19,224. Did you know that money was going?—No.

19,225. Had you received money for any vote on a previous election?—Well, I don't know whether it was for my vote or not.

19,226. Never mind. Had you received money at any other election?—10*l.* after Mr. Bagehot's.

19,227. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that the first time you ever had it?—The first time I ever received it.

19,228. How long after you had voted?—I should say about a fortnight or three weeks.

19,229. Who did you get it from?—Mr. White.

19,230. Cornelius White?

19,231. (Mr. Anstey.) Henry Cornelius White?—No, Joseph White.

19,232. (Mr. Price.) Now then, you got 10*l.* Is that the only money you ever got?—That is the only money I have received, but my wife received 10*l.* at the second election.

19,233. At Vanderbyl's election?—At the second election.

19,234. The second election of 1866?—I cannot tell.

19,235. What do you call the second election?—Five elections back.

19,236. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean the general election of 1865?—Who were the candidates then?

19,237. Kinglake and Shelley and Westropp?—It was before that.

19,238. In 1859?—It was when Mr. Patton was up.

19,239. That is 1866?

19,240. (Mr. Anstey.) You mean when Mr. Vanderbyl was elected?—No.

19,241. (Mr. Price.) Who was against Mr. Patton when you got 10*l.* Mr. Patton stood against Mr. Bagehot?—Yes.

19,242. And you got 10*l.* after voting on Bagehot's election?—Yes.

19,243. There was another the same year. Mr. Patton stood again the month after, and Mr. Vanderbyl against him. Did your wife get anything then?—10*l.*; the house received it.

19,244. What do you mean by "the house"—10*l.* was put into the house; I don't know who put it there.

19,245. Now then, do you mean to say you had not let anybody know, at Vanderbyl's election, that you expected money?—I mean to say no, and at no other election.

19,246. But you received money at Bagehot's?—Yes.

19,247. And of course they knew you had had 10*l.*?—After Bagehot's I received 10*l.*, not knowing what it was for.

19,248. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who gave you that?—Mr. White.

19,249. (Mr. Anstey.) How long after you voted for Vanderbyl, at the second election of 1866, was it that the 10*l.* were put into this empty house?—It was a full house, I believe.

19,250. I thought you said nobody was in it?—No, no; no one to see it put.

19,251. How long after you voted was it put into your house?—Well, I cannot say.

19,252. How long was it after you voted that you saw it or found it in your house?—I did not find it at all.

19,253. Your wife?—Yes.

19,254. Well, come, how long after?—Mrs. Wittridge told me that it was in the evening.

19,255. The evening of the same day on which you voted?—Yes.

19,256. You have not the slightest doubt that was given you for your vote?—Certainly, I should think it was for nothing else.

19,257. (Mr. Price.) You don't get 10*l.* put into your house every day, of course?—No.

19,258. Where was it put?—I cannot say that.

19,259. Your wife found it?—Yes.

19,260. Was your wife in the house all day?—No, I think not.

19,261. Was the house shut up then?—No.

19,262. Where did you go when you left your house that day? Where were you? Did you go to any of Bagehot's committee rooms, any of the public-houses?—I went to one.

19,263. (Mr. Anstey.) Which was that?—The "Lamb," in the morning.

19,264. (Mr. Price.) Who did you see at the "Lamb"?—No one particular.

19,265. Did you see Bond at all that day?—Yes, in the afternoon.

19,266. Did he say anything?—Not about money.

19,267. About your vote?—No.

19,268. Nothing whatever?—No.

19,269. Did Mr. Bond know that you would not go and vote without money?—He always understood I would not take money.

19,270. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did he come by that mistaken understanding?—I do not know.

19,271. (Mr. Price.) You know the man of the name of Gold? There he sits; do you know him? How could he come to know that you would not vote without money?—Well, I cannot say, but I never promised my vote to anyone.

19,272. (Mr. Coleridge.) By not promising your vote you mean that you wanted money for it?—I cannot say.

19,273. What time of the day did you poll, on the second election, Vanderbyl's election?—About three o'clock in the afternoon.

19,274. What time had you voted for Bagehot on the former election?—About eleven, I believe.

19,275. (Mr. Price.) Had you been asked to go and poll that day for Mr. Vanderbyl before you polled?—Not by anybody particular.

19,276. Whether particular or not particular, had you been asked by anybody to go and vote early in that day?—I cannot remember.

19,277. Yes, you can remember if you try?—I cannot. I would if I could.

19,278. You can. You can swear one way or the other?—I cannot swear.

19,279. Do you mean to say that you went and voted at 3 o'clock in the afternoon of that day, and that nobody had said a word to you about asking you why you had not voted, or asking you to go and vote?—I was out of the way for two or three hours.

19,280. (Mr. Anstey.) Why were you out of the way?—I was at a neighbour's house.

19,281. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was it in order that the 10*l.* should be left while you were away?—No, I believe it was there then.

19,282. During all the morning where were you? In the "Lamb" all day?—Only in the morning.

19,283. You went out of the way?—I went home.

19,284. You say you were at a neighbour's house?—Yes.

19,285. What time?—From the middle of the day to three o'clock.

19,286. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you doing from the middle of the day till three o'clock?—Well, I was at the "Lamb" in the morning, it might have been two hours.

19,287. Did you hear that any money was going to be spent?—No.

19,288. Now take care. Did you know that Mr. Vanderbyl was a rich, moneyed man, and that money was going to be spent, before you voted?—No.

19,289. No idea at all?—No.

19,290. You never asked?—No, I never asked.

19,291. Did you hear it? Now take care.—Yes, I am.

19,292. Did you hear before you voted that Mr. Vanderbyl was spending money, or that his friends were spending money for him, on the polling day?

(Mr. Coleridge.) Come, you can't want to doubt about it.

19,293. (Mr. Price.) You must have heard it? Did you hear it or not?—Well, I can't say I did hear.

19,294. Will you swear you did not?—No, I cannot; I have my doubt.

19,295. At Bagehot's election you voted at 11 o'clock, and you got 10*l.* afterwards?—Yes.

19,296. Do you mean to say you waited till three o'clock, and never heard a word about money being paid at Vanderbyl's election for votes?—Well, I cannot remember that anyone said anything to me of that.

19,297. Did not you know it perfectly well that men were being bribed, and that Mr. Vanderbyl was expending a great deal of money?—No, not then.

19,298. Not then?—Not till the afternoon.

19,299. In the morning?—No, not in the morning.

19,300. You never heard anything at all about money before you voted?—Not me personally.

19,301. Did you hear it said in the company you were in at the "Lamb"?—No, I did not.

19,302. Did you hear it said anywhere in the town?—I cannot recollect that I did.

19,303. You said not you personally; what did you mean by that?—Because nobody ever said it to me.

19,304. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they say it to your wife?—I cannot say.

19,305. She might have told you so after. Did she?—Yes, she told me so afterwards.

19,306. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you doing all that morning, from the beginning of the poll to three o'clock? Now answer fully, and let me hear what you have got to say?—In the morning I was down town, I cannot say where, somewhere in the town, when I met with a party just opposite here, and he asked me to go and have a glass.

19,307. Who was it?—Mr. Carter Reeves.

19,308. He asked you to go and have what?—A glass. He said, "Come across here;" and I said, "We will go a little further." That was the "Bull and Butcher." We went a little higher up, into the "Lamb," and then we had a glass of beer.

19,309. Did you pay for it?—Yes.

19,310. From there where did you go?—After that I believe I went home.

19,311. At what o'clock did you get home?—I cannot say, somewhere about twelve.

NINETEENTH DAY.

J. Wittridge.

14 Sept. 1869.

19,312. Did your wife say anything to you when you got home about the election?—No; I do not know that she was there.

19,313. Did anybody say anything to you about the election?—No.

19,314. Did Mr. Carter Reeves say anything to you about the election?—Nothing at all about the election.

19,315. What?—Nothing at all about no bribes.

19,316. But about giving your vote?—Well, we were only talking about the election.

19,317. Did he ask you if you had polled, and all that sort of thing?—He might have asked that, but I cannot say. I cannot answer.

19,318. But you must answer it?—I cannot tell the exact words. It was in conversation.

19,319. I must have an answer to it. Was anything said by either of you about your having voted, or going to vote?—He knew I had not voted.

19,320. Did you tell him anything about your intending to vote that day?—No.

19,321. You said nothing?—No, not that I am aware of.

19,322. Then you left him under the impression that you were not willing to speak about your vote? Was that it?—No, no.

19,323. (Mr. Price.) Why did not you go and vote at 11 o'clock, as you did at Bagehot's election? Explain that?—Gentlemen, I never do go and vote early.

19,324. You went and voted at 11 at Bagehot's election. We want to know why you did not vote till after three at Mr. Vanderbyl's? Have you any political opinions at all?—Well, a little, that is all.

19,325. What side are they? Which way?—Liberal.

19,326. A little for the Liberals?—Yes.

19,327. Very well then, having that little for the Liberals, why did not you go and vote as early for Vanderbyl as you voted for Bagehot?—I voted for Sir John Shelley——

19,328. Never mind about Sir John Shelley; why did not you vote as early for Mr. Vanderbyl as you did for Mr. Bagehot?—I did not think of voting for Vanderbyl.

19,329. Why?—Not respecting of money.

19,330. Why did not you go and vote as early for him if you did not care about money?—I did not go.

19,331. But why? Can you give us no reason?—No reason.

19,332. (Mr. Anstey.) Give us a reason. At 12 o'clock you went home and went out again, and went to your neighbour's house a door or so from you on the Mount?—Yes.

19,333. Why did you go to his house instead of staying at home?—Because my missis was not at home when I went in.

19,334. You went in there, and how long did you stay?—I suppose it might have been till 2 o'clock.

19,335. Who was that with?—James Taylor.

19,336. Did he talk with you about your vote?—No, nothing more than electioneering, that was all.

19,337. Did you tell him that you had not voted yet?—Yes.

19,338. Did you tell him that you were going to vote?—Yes.

19,339. Did you tell him when you were going to vote?—I told him I should go and vote when I left his house.

19,340. When did you leave his house?—I should say somewhere about 2.

19,341. You see you spent time in walking about the streets, in drinking beer at the "Lamb," in gossipping with James Taylor for two hours, according to your account, and then you left him. When you left him where did you go?—Down the street.

19,342. And to the "Lamb" again?—Not then. I was at the "Lamb" afterwards.

19,343. Before you voted?—Yes.

19,344. (Mr. Coleridge.) That was when the money was going?—I was at the "Lamb."

19,345. (Mr. Anstey.) Then you went to the poll at 3 o'clock or past 3?—Yes, that is the time; I judge it was about the time.

19,346. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you gone home or seen your wife before you had voted?—No.

19,347. Had you gone home a second time?—No.

19,348. You say you had gone home and found no one there; then you went to a neighbour's house; then you went down town to the "Lamb" again; then did you go home again before you voted?—No, not a second time.

19,349. Then you went to the poll at three or four o'clock; what made you go to the poll then?—Well, I went to the poll just the same as I do at any other time; I went to the poll because I considered myself an independent man to go to the poll.

19,350. Did anybody take you there?—No.

19,351. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it not to let the people know that if they wanted your vote they must pay for it?—No.

19,352. (Mr. Price.) Were you a supporter of Mr. Gladstone?—Yes.

19,353. If you were a supporter of Mr. Gladstone, why did you not go and vote for his candidate at 8 o'clock in the morning like a man?—I did not go at 8 o'clock in the morning.

19,354. Why not at 9, 10, 11, 12, 1, or before 3? You were a supporter of Mr. Gladstone; why did you not vote for his candidate and put him in as soon as you could?—Well, I did not do it.

19,355. (Mr. Anstey.) The question is this also: do you not know from your experience at former elections that bribed or bribable voters are thickest generally between 3 and 4 o'clock; that they come in thickest between 3 and 4 o'clock to vote at the last moment?—I generally voted before.

19,356. But were not you aware that people generally come in for money at that hour?—People say so.

19,357. Then, knowing that, you deliberately put off voting till then?—Not for money.

19,358. You knew it?—I have heard parties say so.

19,359. I understood you to say just now that you generally voted late?—Yes.

19,360. And the only election that you did not vote late was at Bagehot's?—That was at 11 o'clock.

19,361. You generally voted after the elections were won?—Yes.

19,362. You know how they were won, I suppose?—I cannot swear to that.

19,363. (Mr. Price.) You say you are an independent man?—No, I am an independent voter.

19,364. I mean you are a man who votes independently—for your politics?—I believe I do.

19,365. Very well, you took 10*l.* from Bagehot?—But not knowing it was for my vote.

19,366. What did you suppose it was for? What did you think anybody had given you 10*l.* for?—I thought it was a present afterwards.

19,367. (Mr. Coleridge.) A present for voting; what for?—I cannot say.

19,368. Did you ever get 10*l.* present except when you had voted?—No, it is the only one I ever got.

19,369. (Mr. Price.) Then if you are an independent man and had 10*l.* present, did you ever wait for 10*l.* present afterwards, at Vanderbyl's?—No.

19,370. When you received this 10*l.* why did you not take it back to the Liberal party?—I thought it was a present.

19,371. Answer this question. Who do you believe had made you a present of 10*l.*?—The Liberal party.

19,372. You believe it came from the Liberal party. That being so, and you being a perfectly independent man, why did you not take the 10*l.* back again, and say, "There's your 10*l.*"?—I considered it was a present.

19,373. What for? Why should the Liberal party give you 10*l.*? Have you ever done anything for the Liberal party?—No.

19,374. Except voting?—Not except voting.

19,375. Why then did you think they had given you a present?—Because it was after the election, and I never promised my vote.

19,376. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many presents have you had in your life?—That is the only one.

19,377. Ever?—Yes.

19,378. How often have you voted?—Six times.

19,379. When did you first vote?—When Mr. Follett put up.

19,380. That was in 1857. How did you vote then?—For Kinglake and Tynte.

19,381. What did you get for it?—Nothing.

19,382. And the next time was 1859. How did you vote then?—For Kinglake and Tynte, I believe.

19,383. What did you get then?—10*l.*

19,384. You told us you had never got but one present?—Not myself, but sent to the house.

19,385. Very well; then in 1859, when you voted for Kinglake and Tynte, you got 10*l.* That was for voting?—It was sent to the house.

19,386. Then the next election to that was in 1865. Who did you vote for then?—Was that Shelley?

19,387. Kinglake and Shelley?—For Kinglake and Shelley.

19,388. What did you get then — anything?—Nothing.

19,389. Nothing before or after?—Not at that election.

19,390. Then in 1866 you got 10*l.* from Mr. Bagehot?—After the election, never before.

19,391. At Vanderbyl's what did you get?—10*l.*; there was 10*l.* sent.

19,392. (Mr. Price.) Then you had three 10*l.*? What you mean to represent is this, you get 10*l.* from the Liberals when you don't promise to vote?—I never did promise my vote.

19,393. Do you get 10*l.* because you don't promise your vote?—I do not know.

19,394. You said so just now?—That is what I expect.

19,395. Because you don't promise your vote, therefore the Liberal party give you 10*l.* after the election?—They did at Bagehot's.

19,396. And at Vanderbyl's?—They sent it home.

19,397. But it is the same thing if you live at that house. Now, I tell you, if you do not answer the questions truthfully, most undoubtedly I will send you to prison?—I cannot help that.

19,398. Well, I tell you that?—I am answering.

19,399. You are not answering. You swore just now that you never received but one 10*l.*?—Not myself.

19,400. (Mr. Coleridge.) How often have you been bribed on both sides? What have the Tories ever given you?—Nothing.

19,401. Do you mean to say that in Vanderbyl's election you did not get something from the Tories too?—No.

19,402. Not a farthing?—No.

19,403. Were you offered anything?—No.

19,404. Quite sure of that?—Yes.

19,405. Nor at Bagehot's?—No.

19,406. (Mr. Price.) Did you go and look about to see whether you could get money?—No.

19,407. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get the last time?—Nothing.

19,408. Are you quite sure of that?—Yes.

19,409. How was that?—I cannot tell. I never looks out for money; they make me take it.

19,410. (Mr. Price.) How do you get it?—They send it to my house.

19,411. Cannot you take it back again?—I could take it back again.

19,412. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who do you suppose sent it to you?—The Liberal party.

19,413. If you had been an honest man and meant to repay this money who should you have taken it to?—The Liberals.

19,414. Which of them?—I cannot say.

19,415. Would you have taken it to Bussell, or Lovibond, or Allan, or Reed, or whom?—I do not know.

19,416. Who was it gave you the one 10*l.* which you received yourself?—Mr. Joseph White.

19,417. Would not he be the man whom you would have taken it to?—No.

19,418. (Mr. Anstey.) Would you have taken it to Bond or Gold?—No.

19,419. According to your own words you would not have taken it to anybody at all?—I do not believe I should.

19,420. But if you had been told that the Liberals had sent the money, and that if you sent it back to them you should have 20*l.* next month, and you had been moved by that, who would you have understood by the Liberals? To whom would you have taken it back, or would you have taken it back?—I do not know that I should.

(Mr. Price.) Well, you may go down. You prevaricate very much, and I do not believe a word hardly you have said, except that you took money whenever you could get it. Go and sit down there, and we will go on with someone else.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

H. C. Bussell.

(Witness.) On the morning of Vanderbyl's election I was fetched for to go to the "Lamb." I went to the "Lamb," and when I got there I made inquiries what it was for, and it appears it was to see—I do not know this man, but I suppose it was his wife. I was taken up into a bedroom, and there was another party there present, and I wanted to know what was up, and the wife said her husband had not been to the poll, and he would not go to poll unless he got 20*l.* The result of it was I did not like to give the 20*l.*, and she said her husband should not go to the poll unless he got it; and I eventually made an arrangement that the wife was to have 10*l.*, and she was to have 10*l.* afterwards. But she would not let her husband go to the poll. I wanted to see the husband, and she said he was home all right. I wanted to be safe about the second 10*l.*, and I left it in the hands of the landlord. In the afternoon there was a cry about this Wittridge not going to the poll, and it was said that he had taken money from another party, and then I went and gave the landlord notice that he was not to give up the money to Wittridge. I had given one 10*l.*, but the second 10*l.* was not to be given up to Wittridge.

19,421. (Mr. Anstey.) You gave him notice?—I gave notice. I said, "I must have the 10*l.* back again. You won't give it to Wittridge." Then in the evening Wittridge's wife came down, and she kicked up a jolly row. She came with the landlord. I said, "No, "you have had the money from a second party, and "I insist upon the landlord giving me the money "back;" and the result was that he did. It was a common conversation. I do not know who gave him the second 10*l.*

19,422. (Mr. Coleridge.) He has told us Joseph White. Was White there?—No.

19,423. Who was the landlord you left it with?—Stephen Crocker. He gave me the money back again.

19,424. (Mr. Price.) You never heard who it was that had given him the other 10*l.*?—No, I never heard to this day.

19,425. You heard that he had had another ten?—I heard that he had money; I did not know how much.

19,426. Who told you?—You know I went into the committee room, and there was an outcry about Wittridge not going to the poll, and I went out into the street.

19,427. This is an important matter, quite independent of the election, because there is a conflict of testimony, and one or other must have committed gross perjury. Who was it you heard it of in the committee room?—It was not in the committee room, it was in the street.

19,428. Never mind where it was; who was it?—

NINETEENTH DAY

H. C. Bussell.

14 Sept. 1869.

I cannot charge my memory; it was either one of those two parties.

19,429. Did you hear either Gold's or Bond's name mixed up in the transaction?—I never heard that Mr. Gold had money until I heard it here, and a good many others.

19,430. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear Mr. Bond's name mentioned in connexion with the voting?—No, I did not. I knew that the wife was a precious hard bargain to deal with.

19,431. Did Mr. Bond's name occur to you, from your knowledge of the last election and the elections before that, as a person who was bribable?—No.

19,432. Never heard of it before?—No, never.

19,433. (Mr. Price.) Or who would go and pass 10*l.*?—No, I have never heard of such a thing. The only thing that I got up for was to put the matter straight.

(Mr. Price.) Quite right. It only shows what a man he is.

J. Wittridge.

JAMES WITTRIDGE recalled.

19,434. (Mr. Price.) You see you kept back about the second 10*l.*, and your wife going there and bargaining about the 20*l.* for you?—No; she told me she was to get 20*l.* from the "Lamb."

19,435. Did not she get two 10*l.* for you?—No; there was 10*l.* at the "Lamb" and 10*l.* at the house, at Vanderbyl's election.

19,436. What did you get altogether at Vanderbyl's election?—Missis got 20; 10 home, and 10 at the "Lamb." She did not tell me till after the election.

19,437. (Mr. Anstey.) What has that to do with it?—Well, it is nothing only to me.

19,438. (Mr. Price.) You knew about it and you kept it back from us?—Not till after I voted.

19,439. You knew it when you were in the witness box?—You did not ask me, or else I should have told you.

(Mr. Price.) Well, go back, and we will consider whether you will have a certificate.

(Mr. Anstey.) And we shall also have to consider whether you are not a fit party to be included amongst those who are to be indicted for perjury.

(Andrew Allan.) I thought Searle the carpenter returned him in his list. I will not speak positively.

(Mr. Price.) Very well. We will see whether Searle is here.

(Bond.) I am not satisfied at all, sir. I am certain I have not had the money; if I had I should of course have given it to Wittridge.

(Richard Gold.) Will you please call Culliford as a witness for me.

(Mr. Price.) Culliford is not mixed up in this matter at all.

(Richard Gold.) He is, with me.

(Mr. Price.) You said you got 30*l.*; and you accounted for it by saying that you got 10*l.* from Allan, 10*l.* from his wife, and 10*l.* from Culliford, and that you disposed of it in a lump sum to Webber the gardener. That has nothing to do with Bond at all.

(Richard Gold.) Culliford was with me at the time.

(Mr. Price.) Well, we will call Culliford.

E. Culliford.

EDWARD CULLIFORD sworn.

(Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Culliford, do not fence with the questions like the last witness.

(Witness.) All I know respecting this man Wittridge was, that Mr. Gold told me on the day of the poll that he had given Mr. Bond 10*l.* to give to Mr. Wittridge; and I afterwards saw Wittridge in Dampiet Street, and I said, "Have you been to poll? because," I said, "if you have not I have got some money in "my pocket which I will give you." And he said, "No, Mr. Culliford, I have not been to poll, but I am "already sugared quite sweet enough."

19,440. What time was that?—About 3 o'clock.

19,441. (Mr. Coleridge.) What money had you to give him?—I had some money from Allan.

19,442. (Mr. Price.) You had heard then from Mr. Gold that he had sent Wittridge 10*l.*?—Yes, but he had not been to the poll.

19,443. But they had given him some money?—Yes; but we have to bribe twice generally.

19,444. Bribe him twice?—Not this man, but a good many.

19,445. And he told you he had been sugared quite enough already, before he voted?—Yes, before he voted.

19,446. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you see Mr. Bond before that?—Mr. Gold told me that he had given Mr. Bond 10*l.* to give to Mr. Wittridge. That is all I know of the circumstances.

19,447. Do you know by whom that money was accounted for; are their lists made out?—Yes.

19,448. Do you know on whose list that would appear if it was given to Bond?—That would appear on Gold's list.

19,449. Not on Searle's?—No; but I think Searle bribed him as well.

19,450. I am talking of Bond. On whose list would Bond's name appear, or would his name appear at all?—His name would not appear at all; he is not a bribed man.

19,451. (Mr. Price.) Wittridge would have 10*l.*, and then the man who had furnished the 10*l.* to Mr. Bond would be the person who would be answerable for it?—No, his name would not appear at all.

19,452. But the person who had given it to Bond would be answerable for the 10*l.*?—Of course.

19,453. And that would be Gold?—Yes, that would be Gold.

19,454. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you had some money from Allan, at Vanderbyl's election?—Yes.

19,455. How much?—I cannot tell the amount. I should think about sixty or seventy pounds, perhaps more.

19,456. Whom did you give it to?—It is given on a list. I have not quite reckoned it up, but I will try to recollect it presently.

19,457. Then we will call you again?—I could reckon them up. There is Scott the blacksmith, 15*l.*; Webber the barber, on the Pig Cross, 15*l.*

19,458. What is Scott's christian name?

19,459. (Mr. Price.) Give the christian names, and where they live?—I do not know them well enough for that. I think it is John Scott.

19,460. And what is Webber?—George Webber.

19,461. Where does he live?—Scott lives in Fryern Street.

19,462. Is that the same Webber that Gold says he gave 15*l.* to?—No, another man.

19,463. Who else?—Go Merry. We call him "Go Merry." It is Murray the tailor.

19,464. How much?—10*l.* Then he got bribed by somebody else during the day.

19,465. Well, who else?—I really cannot recollect for the moment.

19,466. Well, try, or else we will ask you to come again?—Charles Wilkins, 15*l.*

19,467. We have had him mentioned by somebody else?—Well, that was the transaction between me and Mr. Alway. I think the money went into my account. He kept back a sovereign and never gave me but 14.

19,468. Alway did?—I suppose he did. The man came and jawed me.

19,469. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are down for a hundred on Allan's list?—I did not have that.

19,470. Allan swears you did. How much did you have ?—I know it was not 100.

19,471. Was it 95 ?—It was more like 85.

19,472. You told us just now it was 60 ?—That is including Wilkins.

19,473. You have only accounted for 55*l.* Who else ?—I lent Gold 10*l.*

19,474. Did he repay you ?—It was not my money. It was Mr. Vanderbyl's.

19,475. Then you never got it back ?—Never tried.

19,476. (Mr. Price.) What did you lend it to Gold for ?—To bribe somebody else, because I had only 10*l.* left, and that was no good, the market was so gone up.

19,477. What did you have for yourself ?—Nothing, never in my life.

19,478. Nothing at all ?—Never a farthing.

19,479. No sovereign stuck to you ?—No.

19,480. (Mr. Anstey.) We have heard that said over and over again. Mr. Alway declared that he got nothing, and everybody comes and says he got nothing, and afterwards it turns out that they did ?—I will defy anybody to say that I did.

19,481. (Mr. Coleridge.) We want 100*l.* accounted for. Allan swears that you had 100*l.*, and he has given in a list in which your name appears for a hundred, and now you are five-and-thirty short ?—Please, sir, Mr. Allan is not sure that I had a hundred. He did not know that I had any at all till the morning when he came into the witness box.

19,482. You said 60 ?—It would be 65 according to my calculation, not reckoning the 15*l.* for Wilkins. There is Murray's 10*l.* Suppose I had 65*l.* and 15*l.*

19,483. That would have made it 80*l.*—Suppose I had 60*l.* and 15*l.*

19,484. 75*l.*, minus one. What became of the other 10*l.* ?—Me and a friend of mine were working together. I believe he had some money too.

19,485. Who was he ?—Walter Long, a clerk.

19,486. Do you mean that the 10*l.* went amongst you for expenses ?—No, it was not 10*l.* I let Walter Long have 20*l.*, not for his own vote at all. He told me he had already been bribed.

19,487. Who bribed him ?—Bussell.

19,488. What did he get ?—He told me 20*l.* He was not at all specific.

19,489. Whom did he have the 20*l.* for ?—Mr. Tottle the mason. Then he tried to bribe Mr. Vincent Case, the baker.

14,490. Did he stick to the 20*l.* ?—I am not quite sure.

19,491. You have a suspicion he did ?—I am not quite sure.

19,492. (Mr. Price.) Somebody may just as probably come and say that of you as you say it of this man ?—I do not say that he stuck to it.

19,493. You say you think so ?—I cannot hardly think he did. I do not know whether he bribed with the money. I have never heard of any man that he gave money to.

19,494. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you never hear the name of any man mentioned ?—No. I know he tried to give it to several people.

19,495. Did you never hear the name of any person mentioned who is said to have been actually bribed by him ?—I have not. I know he went to Mr. Tottle, and tried to bribe Mr. Tottle with the money.

19,496. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that there are people in Bridgwater who won't take money when it is offered to them ?—I do.

19,497. Are there many ?—I am one.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled. A. Allan.

19,498. (Mr. Price.) Now, Allan, what do you say about this matter ? How much do you say he had ?—He seems to have accounted for more than I gave him.

19,499. You charged him with 100*l.* when you gave your evidence ?—I put down all the sums. There was 100*l.* put to him. That was speaking from memory. I said it was subject to alteration in detail more or less. I did not give it from any written document.

19,500. (Mr. Anstey.) I understood you to say, Allan, that you stated it from his information. You said, "Mr. Culliford tells me" ?—I did not say so.

19,501. Did you not say so ? I thought you did ?—I had no conversation with Culliford ; it was somebody else.

19,502. (Mr. Price.) You charged him with it. We have got it down. How much do you now say you charge him with ?—I charge him with having had 40*l.* in his own name. The other voters that he names as having polled are charged separately, some of them, and they got the money.

(Mr. Coleridge.) What does it make up altogether ? Just read out your list.

(Witness.) Will you again mention the names that he says he paid ?

19,503. Well, he paid John Scott 15*l.* ?—I have not got Scott's name down, I believe.

19,504. Well, George Webber ?—There is one Webber.

19,505. Murray, 10*l.* ?—Murray I have got.

18,506. How much ? It is "Go Merry," or some such thing ?—15*l.*

19,507. Then he charged you 15*l.* for him, and gave him 10*l.* ?—You will find "Go Merry, extra, 15*l.*" He has been paid twice. You will find "extra." He has been paid before.

19,508. Charles Wilkins, 15*l.* ?—That is not charged.

19,509. "Lent Gold, 10*l.*" ?—That I do not know anything about.

19,510. You do not seem to know anything about any of these sums ?—I do not know anything about Walter Long.

EDWARD CULLIFORD recalled. E. Culliford.

19,511. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Culliford, you stand in this position. You see that your accounts do not tally at all with the man to whom you were to have accounted, and you are called to corroborate Mr. Gold. We have to judge of the value of your testimony as a corroborative witness, and you have heard what Allan says. Have you got anything to say to that ? You had much better make a clean breast of it ?—If you please, sir, I have. That is all I know of it.

19,512. You had much better do that, because as to disgrace or shame there seems hardly a person in Bridgwater who is not covered with it. Therefore you need not be afraid to let anybody know, because they are all tarred with the same brush ?—That is the truth. I really cannot tell you anything else. That is the truth.

19,513. How does it happen that you did not return the names to Allan for the money you received ?—I returned to Mr. Allan a true and correct account of it, and he expressed himself satisfied.

19,514. We have his account, and it does not tally with yours to-day ?—If you please, if Mr. Allan would produce the paper that I gave him it would be quite right.

19,515. (Mr. Coleridge.) You gave him a written document before ?—I did.

(Mr. Price.) Allan, what do you say to that ?

(Andrew Allan.) All the documents I got I gave

NINETEENTH DAY.

to Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Lovibond made out this account.

(Witness.) As regards this man Wilkins, that must be gone in another man's account; therefore I never received that money, you know. Mr. Alway went and borrowed the money, went to Mr. Allan for the money.

19,516. (Mr. Price.) How much did you receive to bribe with?—On my own account I could not have possibly received 70*l.*

19,517. (Mr. Coleridge.) But how much did you ever have in your hands? How much ever passed through your fingers?—I should not think at all more than 70*l.*

19,518. (Mr. Anstey.) What do you mean by on your personal account? What other account have you received money upon?—Alway got 14*l.* or 15*l.* which he went for.

19,519. Do you mean to say there were people who went for money at your direction and got it? We all worked together.

19,520. Will you give me an answer, and not give me the usual Bridgwater reply. Do you mean to say there were people who went for money and who got money in your name?—Mr. Alway did, certainly, I expect.

19,521. How much did he get?—I sent him for 15*l.*

19,522. And he got it?—He got 14*l.*

19,523. Who else went in that way and got money?—Oh, no one, of course not.

19,524. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why "of course not"?—Because I did not send anybody else.

19,525. (Mr. Anstey.) That makes only 84*l.*; 70*l.* on your own personal account, whatever that may mean, and 14*l.* from Alway. How do you make up the 100*l.*?—I never had it.

19,526. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom else did you get money from besides Allan?—No one.

19,527. What had you to do with the last election?—Very little to do with that.

19,528. What had you to do with it?—I went down to the "New Inn."

19,529. (Mr. Price.) Did you bribe anybody?—I did not.

19,530. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you bribed yourself?—I was not.

19,531. (Mr. Price.) Have you ever had anything for expenses?—Never in my life.

19,532. Or for out-door spending, or whatever they call it?—No.

19,533. Or treating?—I have treated.

19,534. Who paid for that?—Myself. I am out by it, and I owe money now for it.

19,535. Where do you owe money for it?—I owe money for it down to Tom Palmer's, and some at the "Mariners' Arms."

19,536. I suppose that but for this inquiry that would have been paid before now?—I do not know.

19,537. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it at the last election?—Yes.

19,538. Then it is not so long ago. How much money did you expend in that way?—5*s.* at the "Mariners' Arms."

19,539. Tell me how much altogether?—About 1*l.*

19,540. How much is scored against you not paid?—About 1*l.*

19,541. Altogether?—Yes.

19,542. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did you bribe at Bagehot's election?—Never had nothing to do with it.

19,543. Whom did you bribe at Kinglake and Shelley's?—There was no money, or I never heard there was.

19,544. Did you promise anybody?—No.

19,545. Do you mean that Vanderbyl's was the only one?—Yes.

19,546. How came you to go into that?—Because Mr. Joe Smith blinded up my windows. I went to London against Mr. Westropp, and when I came Mr. Smith had sent a carpenter just above here; I forget his name for the moment.

19,547. Is Mr. Smith your landlord?—He was.

19,548. (Mr. Anstey.) He sent a carpenter?—He sent two carpenters and blinded up all my back windows that overlooked the "Bull and Butcher" yard.

19,549. Why?—Because he knew I saw him bribing there the election before.

19,550. Were you examined then, at the election trial of 1866?—In London?

19,551. Yes?—No, I was not; I went to London about it.

19,552. Whom did you go for; Westropp or Kinglake?—I went against Westropp, certainly.

19,553. (Mr. Coleridge.) What had you to tell them?—I merely had to tell them what I saw in Temblett's yard.

19,554. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that Mr. Smith blocked up your windows because you went up to London?—He blocked the windows up at all events.

19,555. What Mr. Smith was that?—Mr. Joseph Richard Smith.

19,556. Oh, not Mr. John Smith?—Oh no.

19,557. (Mr. Price.) That was the reason then you took to bribing, was it?—I was living in his house.

19,558. I asked you whether that was the reason you took to bribing?—It was. I did it out of spite to Mr. Joe Smith.

19,559. Is he in court now?—I do not know; if he is he will tell you the same.

19,560. Who were the two carpenters he employed to commit that trespass?—Humber and his son.

19,561. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you a yearly tenant?—I was.

19,562. Did you bring an action against him for it?—Oh, I had no money; I was a poor man.

19,563. (Mr. Price.) But the Liberal party would have supported you?—No, they would not; they do not do anything of that sort.

19,564. (Mr. Anstey.) Henry Humber; he was one of the witnesses examined before Mr. Justice Blackburn, was he not?—I think he was.

(Mr. Anstey.) Or rather he was produced but not examined.

Mrs. J. Wittridge.

Mrs. Jane Wittridge sworn.

19,565. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember Mr. Vanderbyl's election of 1866?—I do, perfectly well.

19,566. When did you find any money in your house, on the day of the polling?—On the morning that Mr. Vanderbyl was carried, but I cannot say the time.

19,567. Before your husband had voted?—Yes.

19,568. How long before he had voted?—He voted in the afternoon, I believe.

19,569. Well, how long was it before that that you found the money?—I cannot say. It was in the morning.

19,570. Where did you find the money?—My front room door is joining the street door, and many persons came to my house that morning inquiring for my husband, which I wished him to vote for Mr. Westropp, but he denied me. Many parties came and inquired, and I did not know where he was. He was out, and I thought to myself I would go down the town. I went into the front room or kitchen. When I went in, by one side of a workbox I found a packet, and I took it up; I did not open it, but I thought it was money, and I put it away. I left my house.

19,571. (Mr. Anstey.) What o'clock?—Well, I cannot say.

19,572. Was it before 12?—I think it was. I would not be certain.

19,573. Go on?—I cannot recollect the time.

19,574. (Mr. Price.) Well, go on?—I left my house, not intentionally to look for my husband, but I went in the town; then I saw him and we came up the town together.

19,575. Did you tell him?—No, I did not. I did not intend to.

19,576. (Mr. Coleridge.) You meant to stick to the money yourself?—Certainly I did. I will tell the truth.

19,577. You thought you could make better use of it than he would?—Exactly. I went through the town. I spoke to him at last, and as we were walking along, Mr. Carter Reeves, the shoemaker, came up and spoke to him. I cannot tell you the conversation, but he asked my husband to go in and have something to drink. My husband said no, he did not care for it, or similar words, and he said, "Oh yes, we will go over there," which was the "Bull and Butcher." My husband said no, he would rather not go over there, he would go in here, and he asked me to come. That was into the "Lamb." We went into the "Lamb" Inn. I cannot say what drink was called for. Mr. Carter I think was a teetotaller at the time. I sat by the side of my husband. There was a person came in there at the time.

19,578. (Mr. Price.) Did you say that Mr. Carter, who was a teetotaller, asked your husband to go and have something to drink?—I think he was. He did not brink beer. This man came in by the name of Charley, and he asked us to drink. There were only those three persons there then, four with me. In a few minutes his wife came and said, "Mr. Wittridge, somebody has been after you." "Who?" said my husband. "Why, a carriage has been up there," or a fly (I cannot say which) from Eastover—Hobbs. "Oh," said my husband, "let them come." I believe at the end of that a man came into the room. I did not know the man at the time. He stood back against the table. He said, "Is your name Wittridge?" "Yes," my husband said, "it is, for why?" "I want you," he said; "what do you want?" he said (they are nearly the words). He says, "I like none of that work;" he says, "I only want you." I said to my husband, "Why don't you go?" and he said he would not. The man said to me, "Here, you come." I went out of the room and I left my husband. I went upstairs.

19,579. What happened to you there?—I am going to tell you. He said to me when I got upstairs, (there was another man there) and he said to me—— (I did not know the man at the time, but I have known him since).

19,580. (Mr. Price.) Who is he?—Bussell, of the "Anchor."

19,581. That man (pointing)?—Yes, that is him. He said to me, "Here, will you call your husband?" I said, "He won't come." "Why not," he said. "Oh," I said, "I know he won't. "He said, "Yes he will if you call him." I said, "Well, I won't call him." "Well," said he, "If you will get him to vote for us I will give you 20*l.*" I said, "Will you?" He said, "Yes." I says, "Give it to me then." He said, "No, I will give you 10*l.* now," and he gave it to me, and I said, "I want 20*l.*"

19,582. (Mr. Coleridge.) Well, you are the hard card to deal with that he has told us of?—I tell you the truth about it. He called the man Crocker from the room, and he said, "Crocker you take this money, "and when her husband has polled you give her the "remainder." I did not know this man then. I had heard that this Crocker had stuck to money, and I thought he should not stick to that 10*l.* then, and I went down and said to Bussell, "Here Bussell, do you "know that Crocker has not given me the 10*l.*, so "you had better give it over." "Oh," said he, "you had 10*l.* before, and I did not know that." I said it is not likely I was going to tell you.

19,583. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get altogether?—20*l.* at Vanderbyl's election.

19,584. What did you get at Bagehot's?—Nothing. I did not receive at Bagehot's; my husband had a present given him.

19,585. What?—10*l.*

19,586. Had you it?—He gave it to me and I spent it.

19,587. What did you get at the last election?—Nothing.

19,588. Nothing?—No, I was out there.

19,589. Was nothing promised?—No.

19,590. Did you not try and get anything?—No, and I never asked anyone in my life.

19,591. What did he get?—Nothing. If he had I should have had it.

19,592. What did you get at the election of 1859, Tynte and Kinglake's; 10*l.*, was not it, left at the house on the mantelpiece?—I cannot say. I did not know much about elections then.

19,593. But you had another 10*l.*?—Yes, 10*l.*

19,594. How much have you had since you have been married for your husband's vote?—10*l.*

19,595. And then 20*l.*?—No; I think 10*l.* before Bagehot's and before Vanderbyl's 10*l.*, and then 20*l.*

19,596. That is all?—That is all.

19,597. (Mr. Price.) You wanted your husband to vote for Mr. Westropp?—Yes.

19,598. Did you get any money from Mr. Westropp's people for your husband's vote?—Certainly not, and I told him if he did not vote I would not. He said, "Suppose he does not vote for us," "Then," I says, "I will give you your money back," and so I would, because that would have been defraudery.

19,599. If your husband had not voted for the Liberals, you intended to give it back?—Yes.

19,600. (Mr. Anstey.) Which Bussell was it?—That gentleman there.

19,601. You are not asked about that side of the question?—The Liberals at the "Anchor."

19,602. You are asked whether you got anything from the other side?—Westropp's?

19,603. Yes?—No.

14,604. Did you get any promise from the other side?—No; but I have no doubt but that I could have had it.

19,605. Why have you no doubt?—Well, I believe I could.

19,606. What makes you think so?—Mr. John Batten the shoemaker can give you that information.

19,607. Well, we would rather have it from you?—Well, because he would rather often impress me to ask my husband to vote for them, but I wished him to vote for Mr. Westropp.

19,608. And what did Batten say to you?—He would give 5*l.* and 10*l.* I told him I would make him a present of that.

19,609. It was not enough for you?—No.

19,610. When did he say that to you?—At Westropp's election.

19,611. What period of it; on the day of the poll?—No, I believe it was the day before.

19,612. On the nomination day?—Yes, the last election.

19,613. (Mr. Price.) 1865?—I had a conversation with him at the last election.

19,614. Mr. Westropp stood in 1865; it must have been 1865?—Well, the first time Mr. Westropp put up.

19,615. (Mr. Anstey.) The first time was when this money was put in your house, and the second time it was given to you by Bussell; that is 20*l.*, one 10*l.* put in the house, and 10*l.* given to you. What election was that?—Mr. Vanderbyl.

19,616. On that occasion did you get any money or promise of money from the other side?—No, no more than Batten said if he would vote—if I would get my husband to vote for him, there would be some money.

19,617. To vote for Patton?—No, Westropp.

19,618. You are talking about a person named Batten or Patten, a shoemaker?—Yes.

19,619. I am talking about the opposite candidate, Mr. Patton. Voting for Mr. Vanderbyl you got two 10*l.*?—Yes; no, not at Patton's.

19,620. I wish you would answer my question as it is put to you. You had 10*l.* in the house, and 10*l.* given to you afterwards by Bussell the same day. Had anybody on the opposite side of the question, the

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mrs. J. Wittridge.

14 Sept. 1869.

Conservative side, given you money or promised you money ?—No.

19,621. Or offered you money ?—No.

19,622. What did Batten the shoemaker say to you then ?—Nothing at that election.

19,623. Nobody on that occasion said anything to you about it ?—No.

16,624. (Mr. Coleridge.) Supposing your husband had voted for Patton instead of Vanderbyl ?—I never wished him.

19,625. Would he ?—No.

19,626. You did not care about Patton ?—No.

19,627. Mr. Westropp is your affection ?—Certainly.

R. Gold.

RICHARD GOLD recalled.

19,628. (Mr. Price.) Do you want anybody else to be called on this matter ?—Thomas Searle. I had 10*l.* from him in the morning.

19,629. We have no doubt that you got the money, but the question is between you and Bond ?—I gave it to him, no question at all about it. I gave it to him because the man worked for Bond.

19,630. Did you return Wittridge's name to Searle as having been paid 10*l.* through Bond ?—Through Bond.

G. Bond.

GEORGE BOND recalled.

(The witness.) This is a very hard case for me; I feel it very much. I never heard a sound until last night that Searle gave me money.

19,631. (Mr. Price.) It is not a question of bribing you, but whether a respectable man is to have his character tampered with. You have been either grossly maligned, or it is true ?—I never offered him anything from first to last.

19,632. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you leave the money in Wittridge's house ?—I did not.

19,633. Did you tell anybody to ?—No.

19,634. Did you leave any money ?—No. Henry Faun, who lived next door to me, is now dead, and he said to me one time, I do not know exactly which election it was, "Look after Wittridge; I have made it all right." I understood him to have given money.

19,635. When was that, at the same election ?—I suppose so. Two or three elections ago he told me to look after Wittridge, because he says, "I have made him all right."

19,636. (Mr. Anstey.) And did you look after Wittridge ?—I saw him in the course of the day and begged him to go to the poll early.

19,637. Then you were a party to Collis making him all right ?—I wanted him to go to vote, because I should like him to poll early; nothing else.

19,638. How much did Collis give ?—I do not know; I never heard.

19,639. Was he the person who put the money into the house ?—I do not know. Faun told me that he had made him all right.

19,640. I thought you said Collis ?—No, Faun, who lived next door to me.

19,641. Is not it possible that if Faun was alive he would reverse the story, and say it was you told him Wittridge was made all right ?—No, he would not do that.

19,642. He lived next door to you ?—Yes.

19,643. Where does Wittridge live ?—Wittridge lives on the Mount; he is at work for me.

19,644. Did Wittridge then work for you ?—He worked for me; it was some ways up.

19,645. He worked for you, and Faun lived next door ?—Yes. He says, "Look after Wittridge, and "see he is not got hold of by the other side; look "after him, I have made him right."

19,646. Had you any doubt that he had been bribed ?—Yes, I thought so.

19,647. (Mr. Price.) Now the question of your having kept the 10*l.* is at an end, because it reached the man somehow or other; but the question is whether you undertook that it should go to him ?—No, I never heard of it; it is the first sound that I have heard.

19,648. Was anything of that kind proposed that you undertook ?—No.

19,649. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you have it for nobody ?—No, neither myself nor anybody else. I would scorn the action to receive a shilling.

19,650. (Mr. Price.) It is not as to receiving a shilling, but whether you had been the means of passing it. You had been told to look after this man by Faun ?—Yes, he is a neighbour, and I did look after him, and I went to him several times.

19,651. You went several times and saw him about his vote, and were told by Faun to look after him for fear he should go to the other side with his vote, and you saw Gold that day ?—I might have seen him.

19,652. Have you any doubt that you did, and talked to him about the money ?—I do not think I was in his house; I may have seen him passing about.

19,653. Do you still maintain that you never undertook in any way to be the means of 10*l.* being given him ?—If I had it would be no such great crime if I handed it over to him; if I had it to give to Wittridge I should have done so. Most decidedly I should have done it. I am known to the end of this town that my word is to be taken.

19,654. You went to him several times after being told to look after him, "I have made it all right with him ?"—I did.

19,655. Did you come on each occasion to press him to vote ?—Yes, I did several times.

19,656. Did you say it had all been made right with Faun ?—No, I never said that.

19,657. Do you mean you did not say what a wrong thing it would be, in your opinion. I mean, for him not to vote now that all had been made right with him ?—I did not say it.

19,658. Nothing of the kind ?—I do not believe I did. I very well know that he always kept back betwixt 3 and 4 o'clock, and I knew very well in my mind that he would vote on our side, but he generally got all the money he could. I knew that.

19,659. Did you, in speaking to this man, remind him that Faun had been to him, the person next door to you; I do not know whether Collis or Faun, but the neighbour next door; did you tell Wittridge, "My "neighbour" so-and-so "has made it all right with you, "and you ought to vote." Come, yes or no ?—I do not think I did. I was always busy about that time getting them up. I did not like for them to hang back so late. I spoke to him several times in the course of the day, and he said, "Do not trouble about me. I shall be in time."

(A person in court.) Is this 1866 you are speaking about ?

(Mr. Price.) Yes. Who are you ?

(The person.) Faun's son-in-law, and he has been dead for seven years; three years before.

(Mr. Price.) Then you had better be sworn.

J. H. Waddon.

JOHN HENRY WADDON sworn.

19,660. (Mr. Price.) Are you the son-in-law of Faun ?—Henry Faun.

19,661. When did he die ?—Nearly seven years ago. I cannot say exactly the date, but between six and seven years.

19,662. That would be 1862 ?—1862 or 1863.

19,663. Long before Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866 ?—Yes, before I was married, and I have been married five years.

GEORGE BOND recalled.

19,664. (Mr. Price.) Now what do you say to that?—The election I spoke of was when Faun was living.

19,665. It is a very disgraceful thing that you cannot speak of a transaction of this kind without these contradictions. He says his father-in-law died four years before the election, and you say it was at this election he told you this man was all right?—One election.

19,666. (Mr. Anstey.) You said Vanderbyl's election?—I cannot remember.

(Mr. Anstey.) I have no more questions to put to you. I do not know whether my learned colleagues will, but I shall put no more, being of opinion that we have wasted a great deal of public time already, and you have not answered questions put to you, and therefore, as far as I am concerned, you will be left to the tender mercies of the authorities, rather than we should be further treated in this manner.

RICHARD GOLD recalled.

(The witness.) Will you allow me to speak? What made me ask him seven or eight times to go and get his men to poll seven or eight times during the poll days? I went to this man, and he went to the "Lamb," and I understood his wife had the best of the lambs.

(Mr. Price.) What do you say to that, Bond?

(Gold.) It is proved that I was there with him.

(Bond.) I do not believe I did.

(Gold.) I am certain I did.

(Mr. Price.) The way the matter stands now, as far as I can form a judgment, is, that Bond has certainly prevaricated very much in the matter. It must stand as it is, and we must consider it when we come to the subject of granting certificates.

(Mr. Anstey.) And I shall also have to take into consideration a much graver question than the certificate—prosecution for perjury.

(Mr. Price.) Which no doubt has been committed on one side or the other.

(Gold.) The truth ought to be told, he did not come here to defend himself, but he was guilty of it. I am certain I gave it, and am positive of it. I can swear before 30 judges.

(Mr. Anstey.) When will Searle be back?

(Gold.) I do not know.

(Mr. Anstey.) Is Jones here?

(Jones.). Yes.

S. C. JONES recalled.

19,667. (Mr. Anstey.) Does your recollection go back to an election at which there was a very serious riot, where an attempt was made upon the life of a man, Boyd, or upon his house, that is, either an attempt to murder him or wreck his house by the Liberal party?—What name?

19,668. Boyd, or some name like that, or Bowen?—I do not remember that.

19,669. Perhaps you will tell me whether Webber, the plaintiff in the qui tam action against Mr. Smith, is alive or not?—He is dead. I have the address of the attorney, Henry Jackson, 15, St. Helen's Place, Bishopsgate Street, London. I here wish to correct an error I made yesterday respecting Mr. John Richards. It was Drewe and Robinson he voted for, and not Gaselee.

19,670. If you will get those addresses I will be glad?—I will to-morrow.

Mr. P. O. H. REED recalled.

19,671. (Mr. Price.) I do not know whether you gave us the whole history of what took place between you and Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Mogg before you went into the "Globe"?—Yes.

19,672. The whole of what took place?—Yes.

19,673. The whole conversation between you and Dr. Kinglake?—Yes.

19,674. That is to say, you spoke about 3,000*l.* Did Dr. Kinglake enter into the question with you about the money at all. Did he say anything as to that?—My impression is it was was more a conversation between Mr. Lovibond and myself in the presence of Dr. Kinglake.

10,675. Did Dr. Kinglake take any part?—No, I cannot recollect that he did.

19,676. You cannot recollect?—It was as I put it just now; after this conversation took place I went away purposely with Mr. Mogg in front, so as to leave Mr. Lovibond and Dr. Kinglake together.

19,677. That I understood before, but you say you cannot recollect any conversation between you, or what part Dr. Kinglake took in the conversation before you separated from him, or whether he took any part?—I am not clear.

19,678. You cannot recollect anything that was said?—I cannot, so far as Dr. Kinglake was concerned.

19,679. That is what I want to know, whether he took any part in the conversation or not?—To my mind now apparently the conversation was chiefly between Mr. Lovibond and myself, Dr. Kinglake at the time walking by Mr. Lovibond's side.

19,680. Hearing, of course, all that took place?—Certainly, every word.

19,681. That is to say, you said something about 3,000*l.* What did Mr. Lovibond say?—It was discussed whether the election was gone or not, and whether it could be saved, and 3,000*l.* was mentioned—whether it could be saved for that sum.

19,682. Was the discussion confined to you and Mr. Lovibond, or did Dr. Kinglake take part in it?—Well, I think Dr. Kinglake said very little, if anything.

19,683. What did he say?—My impression is that he took no part in the conversation. It was more apparently that he was with Mr. Lovibond, as it struck me at the time, to learn exactly how things stood.

19,684. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he say anything about what was to become of that money at the meeting?—No.

19,685. (Mr. Price.) Did Mr. Mogg take any part in it?—Very little indeed.

19,686. How much?—If he took any part it was apparently saying the election was gone.

19,687. Then you left Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Mogg, and Dr. Kinglake together?—No, I beg your pardon. I said Mr. Mogg went ahead with me.

19,688. Then what did you talk with him about?—It was no doubt about the election, whether the election was not gone, whether it was possible to pick up to the Conservatives.

19,689. What did Mr. Mogg say about it?—Well, he was clearly of opinion that the election was gone.

19,690. Did you speak, did you say so?—I did believe it with heart and soul.

19,691. Was anything said about money, whether if money could be found there would be a chance of retrieving?—Well, it was looked upon as a very hopeless thing.

19,692. Did you say to Mogg, or he to you, "If "there was any money going the election might still "be saved?"—I think not.

19,693. Because we have it in evidence that Mogg went off in a hurry at a later period hunting Mr. Lovibond up, and very shortly after that Mogg went to the bank and got money. That is the reason I want you to tell us what took place as far as you can recollect, whether it was if money was spent there was still a chance, and that the election could be won?—As far as I remember we looked upon it at the time that the election was gone, and that the money could not pull it up.

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

14 Sept. 1869.

19,694. How do you account then for Mogg running up to Mr. Lovibond, and going shortly afterwards to get this money, nothing being said about the chance?—I never saw Mogg afterwards to speak about it that day.

19,695. I ask you can you account for it. You had parted with Mogg, and a short time afterwards, according to the account you have given us, Mogg is going to Mr. Lovibond's hunting him up, finding him at Mr. Nicholls,' and walking away with him. Shortly afterwards Mogg is at the bank getting 500*l.* Bearing that in mind I ask you whether anything was said between you and Mogg, or whether he made any inquiry of you as to whether if money was spent the election could be saved?—We both looked upon the election as gone; pardon me a moment, apparently you are not clear, or I am not, but as I understood the evidence the other day, Mr. Mogg was not found seeking Mr. Lovibond until at least close upon three hours afterwards.

19,696. Lovibond went to Mr. Nicholls's, and while he was there smoking a cigar Mogg comes in in a great hurry with Mr. Bate and fetches Lovibond out, and some time after that Mogg is seen going to the bank fetching the money. It could not be three hours, or anything like it, this was about one o'clock in the day?—About half-past 12, that was my impression.

19,697. I thought you said one o'clock?—Well, it might be.

19,698. From one o'clock within an hour after that Mogg is seen?—Yes.

19,699. Surely he said something to you that you can recollect?—No, if he did I would say truthfully all that I know.

19,700. I cannot understand your being unable to recollect that kind of thing?—He certainly did not say anything about money to lead me to suppose that he was mixed up with money.

19,701. But did he ask you whether you thought if money was forthcoming the election could still be won?—No, I cannot recollect a word that way.

19,702. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

19,703. Are you Mogg's solicitor?—Never in my life, in no way mixed up with him.

19,704. I put that question to you because it is so difficult to get at the ins and outs of things here. You say positively that you have no recollection of Mogg saying anything to you about whether there was a chance of winning the election if the money was forthcoming?—Yes.

19,705. That you say positively?—I do.

19,706. Nothing of the kind?—Nothing of the kind.

19,707. Nor did Dr. Kinglake to your recollection say anything, or make any inquiry of you with the view of eliciting an opinion that the election could be won if money was going?—No, I cannot recollect in the least. I clearly conveyed our opinion in conversation with Dr. Kinglake that the election was gone.

19,708. Was not there any such thing as an alternative put—surely he was anxious for his brother's sake. Did he say, "Do you think if money is spent we could not retrieve it?"—I do not recollect Dr. Kinglake saying anything like it.

19,709. Why did you leave them to let them talk the thing over then?—Because I knew that Dr. Kinglake knew much more of Mr. Lovibond than of myself, and I believed they would be more freely talking than if I had been there.

19,710. If the election was over in your opinion what was there then to consult about. You had all come to the conclusion that the thing was over and irretrievably gone. What else was there left for Mr. Lovibond to have a confidential communication with Dr. Kinglake about? That is what I do not understand?—I cannot explain it.

19,711. It requires explanation?—It does require explanation.

19,712. Because your declaration is that at half-past 12 you had all hopelessly given the thing up, yet when you met Dr. Kinglake in this way you left him and went on, because you thought he would enter into more confidential communication with Mr. Lovibond?—Yes.

19,713. What could have been the object if you had all agreed that the election was over. What confidential communication could there be?—The only question was whether they could have taken any other steps to alter the position.

19,714. (Mr. Coleridge.) You know the election was in that position that a very large sum might have altered it?—Yes.

19,715. (Mr. Price.) Just before you passed on 3,000*l.* had been spoken of, then you walked on as you say for the reason that it would allow Dr. Kinglake to talk more confidentially with Mr. Lovibond. Could there be any doubt but that that was done to let Dr. Kinglake discuss this matter of the 3,000*l.*, and the spending it?—It was undoubtedly.

19,716. It was?—Yes.

19,717. Did Dr. Kinglake then say nothing at all?—Not a word.

19,718. But you left him intending that he should discuss this question of money with Mr. Lovibond?—That is so.

19,719. That is not consistent with the notion you had that the whole thing was at an end, because you must have thought it was not at an end if bribery could bring it round?—Without a very large expenditure.

19,720. That is all, you say, that really took place?—I do.

19,721. Then you went to Mr. Mogg. Are you quite sure that you and Mr. Mogg did not discuss the question of money in any way?—I am clear.

19,722. Because, after Mr. Lovibond employed Dr. Kinglake in this way, what did you talk about with Mr. Mogg?—It is very likely, after I left Dr. Kinglake and Mr. Lovibond together, we may have said as to the election, and the large majority, that in our opinion it was lost and could not be picked up, but there was not a word alluding to money, or that he was mixed up in any way directly or indirectly.

19,723. But did you say in effect to Mr. Mogg that you thought the thing could be brought round if a sum of money was spent?—No, I do not recollect any such conversation at all.

19,724. You cannot recollect what took place between you and Mogg?—Very little took place. It was a very slight conversation indeed. We simply walked from the "Globe" to the corner. It did not occupy, I should say, five minutes.

19,725. Where did Mr. Mogg go after that?—Mr. Lovibond returned with me to the "Globe," and Mr. Mogg and Dr. Kinglake went away together.

19,726. You went with Mr. Lovibond?—Into the "Globe."

19,727. You left Mr. Mogg and Dr. Kinglake together?—Yes, outside the "Globe." Well, apparently after they talked together Mr. Lovibond came and took my arm, and we walked away to the "Globe."

19,728. Then did Mr. Lovibond tell you anything he had said?—No; he said, "You know, Reed, King-
"lake's friends look so much to the consequences
"of this election that they are prepared to spend
"2,000*l.* or 3,000*l.*"

19,729. After he had had this conversation with Dr. Kinglake?—Yes.

19,730. Did you judge that to be the result of the confidential conversation that had passed?—I did, and I recollect the observation I made to Mr. Lovibond, "What on earth could induce the Kinglakes to spend such a sum as that?" And he said, "I suppose they " are thinking there will be some office or other " under the new Government."

19,731. Now where did you go after this? We had got to 1 o'clock?—I went into the return room at the " Globe," and the returns of the polling became very brisk indeed, and continued up to half-past 1, or something like that, and then Mr. Cook made a communication to me, which was as follows: " I have " just seen Bussell, and he says there are some men " hanging about, and I (Cook) said, ' Get them " together, and I will see what can be done.'" Mr. Cook then inquired for Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Lovibond came in soon afterwards, and a conversation then took place between us three, Mr. Cook, Mr. Lovibond, and myself. Mr. Cook explained what had taken place with Bussell, and if any money were spent now was the time. Mr. Lovibond replied, " Will you spend it; will you find the money?" And Mr. Cook replied, " It is not fair to breathe from one lung." Mr. Lovibond then inquired for Allan and left.

19,732. (Mr. Price.) What is the meaning of that, " breathing from one lung." At that time no lung had been breathed at all?—Not one, and I may explain it. I may be doing Mr. Lovibond an injustice, but the real truth is this, that before anything that day had been done Mr. Cook and myself had agreed that we would not spend a shilling. We believed ourselves, when it came to the point, that unless we were careful with Mr. Lovibond, he would push us into the pit and leave himself out; therefore we would not agree that a farthing should go until Mr. Lovibond was in the same position; therefore that is an explanation of Mr. Cook saying, " It is not fair to breathe from one lung."

19,733. That is the explanation?—Yes.

19,734. You understood Mr. Lovibond wanted all the money to come from you and Mr. Cook?—For us to run that great risk, and for us to put ourselves in that position, and for him to stand aloof himself, if he could.

19,735. That is the meaning?—That is the meaning of the explanation. Then Mr. Cook told me that he had seen Mr. Fennelly, and requested that Mr. Williams might come up from the railway to the " Globe," so as to be on the spot, and Mr. Fennelly had sent for Mr. Williams to come up, and after the conversation with Mr. Lovibond Mr. Cook left me to go and tell Fennelly as to what conversation had taken place between Bussell and himself, and what was proposed to be done. Bussell's statement is true. He did come into the room and say that he had some men and wanted some money. I said, " Go into that room." I understood from Mr. Cook that Mr. Fennelly would send Mr. Williams there with some money. Bussell went in and came out, and said to me, " The man will not speak." I said to Bussell, " Nonsense, go in again." Bussell is clearly wrong, and no doubt it may put him straight. I did not go once that day into that room with Bussell or any other man. Bussell did go in, and my explanation is, why Bussell obtained that money on the second occasion and not on the first is, that between Bussell's first going and second going into the room, Mr. Fennelly had indicated to Mr. Williams the amount he was to let go to the persons who would come in. I never saw Mr. Fennelly but once that day.

19,736. What makes you think Mr. Fennelly did it?—From Mr. Cook's statement to me that Mr. Fennelly would go down and make arrangements for Mr. Williams to be in the town.

19,737. I do not see how that would explain his being refused first and having it given to him the second time, unless there was an intermediate communication made to the men?—Yes, that is it, there was an intermediate communication.

19,738. By whom?—To Bussell.

19,739. Where was Mr. Fennelly at that time?—In the house.

19,740. And Bussell had no means of telling Mr. Fennelly this, had he?—No; Bussell never saw Mr. Fennelly from first to last I understood.

19,741. Bussell came to you and said, " The man will not speak?"—Yes.

19,742. And you told him to go in again?—Yes.

19,743. Do you mean that he had found that out, and gone in the meantime and told Mr. Williams to let Bussell have money?—Yes, that is my impression.

19,744. What time was it?—I cannot say, that is only my explanation, and there is another statement I should make. I believe when Bussell came out the second time I said, " Go in and ask what tea is a pound."

19,745. That is much more likely than that Mr. Fennelly should go in and tell him. You told him that?—Yes.

19,746. It was nothing to do with Mr. Fennelly, but your telling him to ask that?—Yes, that was the second occasion.

19,747. Then that accounts for it?—Yes.

19,748. Now go on?—Afterwards I saw Mr. Lovibond in the room with Allan, and he left. Bussell came back the second time and had a second supply. That was through Mr. Cook. Garratt also had money during the afternoon. That was in the same way.

19,749. What time about was that when Bussell got the first supply?—My impression was that Bussell's time was close upon 3 o'clock.

19,750. When he came the second time was it that he expressed dissatisfaction, and you had said you had done all you could?—I was not there; you will find that referred to Mr. Cook.

19,751. I thought I asked Mr. Cook that question, and he said it was not he who said it.

(Mr. Cook.) No, I think I said Bussell came back a second time, and I remonstrated with him and said he was too fast.

(Mr. Price.) I thought the expression was, " We " have done all we can, where the devil is Lovi- " bond"?

(Mr. Cook.) No doubt he made an inquiry and he used that expression, but it was I remonstrated on that second occasion on Mr. Bussell's return.

19,752. (Mr. Price.) You told us you told him to go in and ask what tea was a pound, you told us that you would explain as to the word " Eureka"?—I never heard it until the other day in court by Mr. Lomas.

19,753. It was not given to him as a password by you?—No, I never heard the word used before.

19,754. Your idea is, what is tea a pound?—Yes.

19,755. Was that agreed between you?—Yes.

19,756. The night before?—It should be a pass word.

19,757. And because Bussell had not heard that in the first instance it made you tell him to go and ask that?—Yes.

19,758. Why did not you tell him in the first instance?—I did not wish to keep anything back, but it did not strike me at the moment.

19,759. That was Bussell's second supply?—Yes.

19,760. Then what after that?—Then it is in evidence as to Garratt having money. That was through Mr. Cook.

19,761. Were you there when Bussell expressed himself strongly about Mr. Lovibond?—Yes.

19,762. At that time were you under the impression that you were the only people who were spending money and Mr. Lovibond none?—No, I was impressed with the idea that Mr. Lovibond was at the same time.

19,763. What was the meaning of your partner's expression?—Apparently it was that he was hanging back so as to throw the burthen on us.

19,764. You wanted to save as much of Mr. Vanderbyl's money as you could?—No, I must not put it in that way, but apparently Mr. Lovibond was trying to push us to spend the money and screen himself.

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

14 Sept. 1869.

19,765. You say you were under the impression that he was spending money?—So I was.

19,766. Then he could not screen himself?—You asked the meaning of the expression, Mr. Cook saying "Where the devil is Lovibond"? Then the next thing I recollect was about half-past 3. I stood on the table in the room, and it was agreed to call out the names of people who had not voted. "Who knows Thomas Smith" or "John Jones?" And a man would say, "I know him," and by-and-by Bouchier's name was called out.

19,767. Was that the time that Mr. Barham came in?—According to Mr. Barham's statement it was a long time before Mr. Bouchier's name came under my notice. I went and saw Bouchier; his evidence is substantially correct, but I certainly did leave Bouchier impressed with the idea he was waiting for money; and if that man had not polled, if I had not seen him very shortly afterwards his having polled, I certainly should have sent someone to go to him.

19,768. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean with money?—With money.

19,769. (Mr. Price.) You thought he was hanging back?—I did.

19,770. Did he get any?—It has been stated in court that he received 10*l.* at the "New Inn."

19,771. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who from?—Andrew Allan, as I took the evidence to be. That brings me up as I recollect, I truthfully tell all I know, to the closing of the poll. I went upon the hustings at the declaration, and was there when the poll was declared. Mr. Barham made a mistake in stating that he saw me looking out of one of the windows of the "Globe" on his return, and I will explain why it is clearly a mistake. I was very nearly getting into the carriage, but it struck me that if I did I should be obliged to make a speech, which I detest, therefore I let someone else get in and walked. Mr. Cook spoke, and Mr. Hammill spoke, and I stood on the bridge and listened, and after the speeches were made I went into the "Globe," and Mr. Barham also went down in the carriage. Now I will explain; it is in evidence before you as to Thomas Williams, who came from Liverpool and voted, and received 5*l.* for his vote. That was at my request. Mr. White wrote to a Mr. Lilly at Lowestoft, Suffolk, to come and poll, which he did, and I paid on the part of the firm and charged Mr. Vanderbyl's firm 5*l.* 12*s.* but that was not paid until the 25th of March. It is also in evidence before the court that on the 5th of November we sent a cheque to London to pay the carriage to and fro of Chant. The agent's letter was put in returning the cheque, and stating Chant had left.

19,772. Did Chant get paid when he got down here?—No; the cheque was broken up. As far as we are concerned Chant never received a penny.

Now, William Dyke, of the Taunton Road. That man one evening during the nomination attended a branch meeting of the Liberal Association, at the "Rose and Crown," and the names of the different electors were called over, which way they had voted, if people could give information; and Dyke's way home would be part of my way, and Dyke accompanied me. I recollect, just before leaving Dyke, he said, "You know if there is any money going I should "like to have some," and my reply was, "You must "not talk to me about matters like that. If there is "any money you will know it like other people." I should state on the Saturday after the election judgment was levied under an award of the county court, and he was unable to pay the money, and was brought to the office by Jarman, and Jarman represented that he was a Conservative, and was apparently under the belief that he would receive money to pay out the man put into execution, and I said, "Jarman, you pay suffi- "cient to satisfy the execution, 2*l.*, and we will see "you paid again." That money was repaid Jarman on the 1st April, 2*l.*

Now I go to the canvass, and there are two cases that already you have inquired of several witnesses about as to their knowledge. I refer to Mr. Axford's and the Elsbury's cases. As to Mr. Axford, about 12 months ago, as far as I recollect, before the last election Mrs. Axford went to London and obtained through Mr. Vanderbyl an appointment in the P. and O. Company. Mr. Axford several times afterwards told me it was a valuable appointment and was the making of his son for life.

19,773. (Mr. Price.) Was anything said about those who got the appointment getting it revoked?—I am coming to that presently. Some few days before the nomination day I was at the "Globe" coming away, having been to inquire for Mr. Vanderbyl, who had been ill indoors. I met Mr. Axford in the porch, and as far as I recollect this did take place: "Doctor, how are you going to vote?" Mr. Axford's reply was, "Well, I shall support my own party;" and I did make this reply, "Well, it does appear to me after "a man has done as much as Mr. Vanderbyl has for "your son that you should support him." And I said, "Recollect another thing, the person who gave that "appointment might take it away." I did say that, there is no doubt about it, and I added further, "and I shall take it as a personal favour if you will "support Mr. Vanderbyl, or if you cannot do that do "not vote at all."

19,774. Then you meant to hold out something like a threat to Mr. Axford?—I am afraid it cannot be looked at in any other light. I did say that, but added also it would be a personal favour to myself.

There was also the case of Elsbury, at the "Union." He lived in the eastern district. I called at the house with the candidates. Elsbury himself was out. I saw Mrs. Elsbury, and she distinctly stated, "Elsbury "is going to vote for Westropp and Gray." I said, "Well, that is not like a Weston Zoyland man, they "are all Liberals there." Elsbury came from Weston Zoyland. "In addition he ought to recollect his "friends who proposed and seconded him for his "situation are both Liberals." I afterwards saw Elsbury and said much to the same effect, and no doubt that operated on his voting for the Liberal candidates.

19,775. Did you say anything about his being turned out of his place?—I have taxed my memory, and I think I may say I did not. I think I put it exceedingly strong, but I do not think that I should do that because I was holding a public situation.

19,776. Did it have that effect?—Yes.

19,777. Both with regard to changing the votes of Mr. Axford and Elsbury?—It did, no doubt. There are two other matters with reference to that election, and they refer to Henry Chapman Bussell's going away, and to Garratt's. As to Bussell, Smith came to me, and I learnt from him that Bussell was anxious to go. I was informed of the threat that had been used on the porch of the "Clarence" on the night of the declaration against Bussell. I did believe then, as party spirit was running very high, that very probably he would be prosecuted. I did believe it. There was another fact also that carried great weight with me, that previously to Bussell going away Allan had gone to America. I did believe, whether right or wrong, that Allan, a Scotchman, was the wrong man to go of his own account. I thought that, and felt at the time convinced that someone had sent him away, so as to throw the entire burthen on us.

19,778. (Mr. Price.) Who did you imagine had sent him?—I did imagine Mr. Lovibond had done so, so as to throw the entire blame on us. I did believe and I hoped and trusted sincerely that the petition would be arranged or withdrawn, and I thought also I had been to a certain extent the means of putting Bussell in the false position he occupied, and all this acted on me. I deeply regretted at the time, but I have thought since of the plainly dangerous position I put myself in.

19,779. Then you did it to spite Mr. Lovibond?—No, it was to protect myself to a certain extent.

19,780. You say you would not have done this for Bussell except that you thought Mr. Lovibond had behaved unhandsomely?—And apparently the link had been broken between Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham, and the only parties who would take part in corrupt practices on the petition must be Messrs. Reed and Cook.

19,781. Whatever disclosures took place you thought would attach to you, and Mr. Cook?—Yes, it was so.

19,782. (Mr. Coleridge.) At that time did you know that Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond had been paid four times as much as you?—I never heard it until the other day in court.

19,783. (Mr. Price.) As a professional man, I put it to you that all the elections in the world were not worth your position as an attorney and member of the profession—keeping witnesses out of the way?—I felt it acutely, the pain I suffered I cannot describe.

19,784. Which if Mr. Justice Blackburn had heard it at the time he would probably have taken severe notice, to the extent perhaps of your being struck off the rolls?—I am aware of it, and feel it acutely. There is nothing at all can excuse that act of mine.

Now to come to Garratt's version, which is correct. I did meet Garratt, and a conversation did take place. At that time I could not find that Garratt's name was before the public. I could not find there was any subpœna for the man, and the man that would supply a link, and to get rid of that I did the same. I felt I could not justify that under any circumstances.

19,785. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you been paid at the last election?—No.

19,786. Have you sent in any account?—No, we have received a sum of 250*l.*

19,787. The costs out of pocket?—The costs connected with the defence ef the petition; out of that we have paid one fee alone of 120 guineas.

19,788. (Mr. Price.) Was the part you took in sending Bussell and Garratt out of the way in any statement in your briefs to counsel on the election inquiry?—It was not.

19,789. Was it studiously kept from them and purposely?—May I be pardoned for saying that Mr. Cook attended to the brief, he drew it, and I never read the brief through.

19,790. You attended the consultations?—Only one or two.

19,791. Surely it was never known by the counsel in the case whom you employed, or they would have made the inquiry, "Where is Bussell?" and "Where is Allan?"—We proved as much as we could; "pray settle this on any terms; it must not go into court."

19,792. Did you tell them that you had sent Bussell away?—We were mixed up in it.

19,793. Did you tell them that you sent Bussell away?—I do not recollect that being stated.

19,794. (Mr. Coleridge.) Has not it all been paid away in fees?—Well, we paid if I am allowed to put it in that way, 30*l.* connected with Bussell, and 5*l.* connected with Garratt, and the sums I mentioned just now as being paid to Williams and Lilly and others.

19,795. How much have you in hand?—I went through the book the other day, and in hard cash payments we have paid away about 185*l.* or 190*l.*

19,796. That is including counsel's fees?—It is.

19,797. Did you receive that from Mr. Kinglake or Mr. Vanderbyl?—Mr. Vanderbyl.

19,798. You received nothing from Mr. Kinglake?—Not a penny. I do not know whether I may be permitted to mention one or two other matters in my memory connected with the petition. I went to London with reference to that twice, once was on the 5th December, I went up with Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Brice, and Mr. Trevor.

19,799. Was Mr. Lovibond's name on the brief as well as yours?—No.

19,800. You were solicitors to the petition?—We were for Mr. Vanderbyl.

19,801. And Mr. Lovibond for Mr. Kinglake separately and distinctly?—Separately and distinctly.

19,802. (Mr. Price.) I put it again, was it or not studiously kept from your counsel the part you were taking in keeping Bussell away?—Well, I cannot say that it was.

19,803. Was the fact of Bussell's absence represented to your counsel in its true light?—I have never read the brief through. I cannot say.

19,804. Who is responsible for this statement? "Bussell has been absent from Bridgwater for some "little time past, leaving his wife and family to carry "on the innkeeping business. His absence has no "doubt created a suspicion, and from what is heard it "is exceedingly doubtful if he will be present at the "petition." Who is responsible for that?—Well, Mr. Cook drew the brief.

19,805. Inquiries have no doubt been made for him almost daily at his residence by some person on behalf of the petitioners, and the same remark applies to Andrew Allan, the object of the inquiry being to subpœna him.

19,806. Mr. Cook knew perfectly well what you had done about sending Bussell away?—Certainly.

19,807. Then I ask you again, was not that purposely kept back from the counsel, the transaction?—No doubt it was. I may mention going to town; it was once before the petition was filed and once afterwards. The first time was on the 5th November, and Mr. Lovibond, Mr. Brice, and Mr. Trevor accompanied me, and we stayed at the "Tavistock," and it was, if possible, to prevent a petition being filed.

19,808. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Brice and Mr. Trevor being on the other side?—Yes; and early the next morning we found a second deputation had come up, as it was arranged, on the part of the Conservative Working Men's Association, putting pressure on Mr. Westropp not to allow the petition to be withdrawn.

19,809. I suppose Mr. Brice and Mr. Trevor were equally aware of the danger to the borough of a petition going on?—I should think it very likely.

19,810. I mean in the communication you had with them, was not it on the common ground of the probability of an inquiry like this which would end in the disfranchisement of the borough that they were willing to burke the petition?—Yes, no doubt.

19,811. (Mr. Price.) You had this further present to your mind, that you wanted to keep out all chance of any discovery as to your sending witnesses out of the way?—It was all before me; all the wrongs I had done from first to last. It was clearly before me. I did my very utmost to prevent the petition being filed. Well, it was filed in London, on the Monday, if I recollect right, the 6th December, and I saw that day Mr. Westropp at the "Tavistock" with Mr. Brice and Mr. Trevor, and I also saw Mr. Kinglake, but as far as I recollect one did not meet the other. It was a long coffee room, and one did not meet the other on that occasion, but I recollect distinctly on that day going with Mr. Lovibond to Mr. Kinglake's chambers or rooms, and I found Mr. Kinglake, and Mr. John Lovell Sealy in the room. Now on the way to Mr. Kinglake's room, Mr. Lovibond had agreed under any circumstances that both seats should be given up; but when I went there all I found he was trying to do was to save Mr. Kinglake's seat. I was in great trouble at the time, but I rose and walked up and down the room, and said, "Whatever is the good of "your trying to save a seat? you cannot do it. You "have already agreed to give up both;" and then I turned to Mr. Kinglake and said, "Your friends are "in trouble. I do not know whether you know it, but "Mr. Lovibond knows that a seat is not worth a "farthing, therefore you ought to make a sacrifice "for them now."

19,812. You said that to Mr. Kinglake?—Yes.

19,813. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did Mr. Kinglake say?—He did not make a remark, but Mr. Lovibond said, "My friend is a little put out." I said that the seats must be given up, that to attempt to save one is impossible.

19,814. (Mr. Price.) Did you give Mr. Kinglake to understand that his seat was as valueless and worthless, if it came under inquiry, as Mr. Vanderbyl's, on account of bribery?—Yes, no one could mistake what I said.

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

14 Sept. 1869.

19,815. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know the malpractices of the Conservatives?—I believe they promised, but not paid a farthing.

19,816. That was quite enough to void an election?—Yes.

19,817. What you tried to bring about was that they should accept the Chiltern Hundreds, and the petition be withdrawn?—I did not care how it was. The great point to my mind was to get rid of it. As to how it was to be done I could not tell.

19,818. Did you ever discuss the petition at any of those meetings in reference to the new Act as to bribery about withdrawing a petition by coalition?—Yes, it was discussed.

19,819. Who put it forward as an objection?—Well, the difficulty was, as I understand, to satisfy the court that there was no corrupt bargain.

19,820. (Mr. Coleridge.) No coalition?—No coalition.

19,821. (Mr. Price.) You could not possibly have gone into court any of you?—I do not see how it was possible.

19,822. You could not have any of you made an affidavit, either of you, Mr. Trevor, or Mr. Brice, or yourself?—Bad as we are I do not think one of us would have done a thing like that. A few days before the hearing of the petition we were in town again at our parliamentary agent's, and it is fair to say that we informed our parliamentary agent that the seat could not be held.

19,823. Who are your agents?—Messrs. Wyatt and Hoskins. I do not know one from the other. I have never seen those gentlemen but once. On that occasion Mr. Wyatt had some other appointment, and we went into another room and found Mr. Lovibond there, and I said to Mr. Cook "You know this must be settled; let us see Mr. Lovibond." We went in, and there was Mr. Lovibond with his papers. I "said, Mr. Lovibond, you know it is no use going on "like this, it must be settled. Let us give up both "seats."

19,824. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why was Mr. Barham not mixed up with this?—I cannot conceive.

19,825. How did he get out of it?—I do not know.

19,826. (Mr. Price.) How did he get in?—I thought he was the man who first started the proposition of the 3,000*l.*

19,827. Why was he not taken into this discussion about the compromise?—He was undoubtedly consulted from first to last about that.

19,828. (Mr. Coleridge.) He was not present at this meeting with Wyatt and Hoskins?—No.

19,829. He came up afterwards?—On that occasion we saw Mr. Lovibond. He said he would go down to the "Tavistock," and he said we should all join there and see Mr. Trevor and Mr. Brice, and by some means give up both seats.

19,830. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was Mr. Brice acting for?—For Westropp and Gray.

19,831. They were fighting together?—They were fighting together.

19,832. He was with Mr. Trevor?—He was with Mr. Trevor. Then we went to the "Tavistock."

19,833. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Barham says he had some conversation with Mr. Vanderbyl, I think, when he went with him in the carriage, or came back with him from the declaration of the poll, to the effect of their hands being clean, or something of that kind?—I was not in the carriage, so I cannot say.

19,834. But from anything taking place between you and Mr. Vanderbyl, or what you know had taken place between you and Mr. Vanderbyl, or Mr. Cook, or anybody on your part, had Mr. Vanderbyl any reason to suppose your hands were not clean?—I had never spoken to Mr. Vanderbyl on money matters in my life. I did not see him on that day from the commencement of the poll until after going up to the hustings. Well, when we came to the "Tavistock" I found Mr. Lovibond with Mr. Trevor. Mr. Trevor as far as I recollect was taking lunch, and all Mr. Lovibond again would do was to try and save Mr. Kinglake's seat, quite contrary to what he had just promised. I took Mr. Lovibond away by the fire, and I said, "I do not quite understand you; just "now you agreed to come here and give up both "seats; now you are trying to save Mr. Kinglake's, "you are just like an eel. You slip away, and I will "have nothing more to do with you."

19,835. But one was as impracticable and untenable as the other, was not it? You would have the collusion as regards one seat just as much as another?—We were in hopes that some slight case might be let in, and without a full disclosure the seats might be vacated.

19,836. Because it seems to me, as far as collusion went, you were in just as much peril as to one seat as if you got them to give up two?—Unless the petitioners would be content with one seat, and the petition withdrawn, if that could be.

19,837. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose your parliamentary agent pointed out to you the difficulty about a coalition?—I only saw him once, and Mr. Cook managed with him entirely.

19,838. (Mr. Price.) What is the result of that meeting at the "Tavistock"?—That we left, and we have not communicated with Mr. Lovibond since, and the petition came on for hearing.

19,839. Now Mr. Trevor repudiated the notion of this compromise. You say it was impossible for him to carry it out. What was the line he took? Your party seems to have taken the initiative about the compromise?—No doubt.

19,840. What was said by Mr. Trevor?—My impression is that he was ready to carry it out, if that could be done, but he apparently saw difficulties in the way.

19,841. As to the collusion?—Yes.

19,842. And the Act of Parliament?—Yes.

19,843. Did he ever give way on that point as the difficulties were removed?—No, I never heard him say so.

19,844. Did it go off upon that?—My impression is, if it may be pardoned, Mr. Lovibond bargained and bartered so long that we were driven up, and there was no time for any arrangement to be made.

19,845. So the thing went on?—It did. The day of hearing would be fixed the 23rd February.

19,846. You could not do it after it was fixed. The notices were given out in January, I suppose?—A long time before, and posted all over the town.

19,847. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Bridgwater before Taunton?—Yes.

19,848. (Mr. Price.) It would not be the earliest, but one of them?—Yes, they commenced at Windsor, I believe.

19,849. Now I come to the period when the counsel for the sitting members agreed to announce that they would no longer defend the seats. You had this brief prepared by your partner, Mr. Cook, and then you had a consultation with your counsel; was Mr. Vanderbyl present at any consultation?—We saw in the first place Mr. Edlin at Bristol some time before the hearing.

19,850. And was Mr. Vanderbyl present?—He was.

19,851. Was he present at any consultation?—I cannot recollect Mr. Vanderbyl being present on any single occasion, he was purposely kept away, but I know Mr. Henry James came down. I recollect being in Mr. Serjeant Sargood's room, and Mr. James said, "Have Messrs. Reed and Cook told you all the "facts? If not, let them make a clean breast of "them to you," and he went out of the room and we did inform Serjeant Sargood that the seats could not be defended, but they were in possession of knowledge that money had been used.

19,852. (Mr. Coleridge.) Whom did Mr. James appear for?—Mr. Kinglake.

19,853. By himself?—He alone.

19,854. Then Mr. James seems therefore to have known a good deal before he came to Serjeant Sargood's room?—No, I understood it like this.

Mr. James was completely in the dark as to Mr. Kinglake's case, because the onus of the burden had been thrown on Messrs. Reed and Cook.

19,855. Therefore you would gather from what he said that he had been instructed you were the persons who could let daylight in on the whole thing?—Yes.

19,856. As if it was impossible for those who instructed Mr. James to give any information?—Yes.

19,857. You were persons who knew the whole history of it?—Yes.

19,858. Mr. James went away and did not wait to hear your statement?—He did not.

19,859. Did Mr. Serjeant Sargood say he had not had a full disclosure, anything more than was in the brief?—We had given him to understand that it was a very difficult case to manage.

19,860. You had told Mr. Edlin everything?—Well, Mr. Edlin was a local man, and we could say more to him. When I say we told him all the facts, we gave him sufficient to understand that the election could not be maintained.

19,861. Was this the first consultation you had, and Mr. Edlin and Serjeant Sargood were present?—Yes, the night of their arrival.

19,862. After Mr. James was gone did you then inform Serjeant Sargood of the real state of things?—I did. I will not say I told all the facts, but simply the money spent, and "the seat cannot be defended," and we pressed much the making a suggestion so as to get rid of the hearing of the petition, and I recollect he said, "Now Mr. Vanderbyl is my client, you must leave him in my hands."

19,863. Mr. Vanderbyl you say was not present at that conversation?—He was not, certainly not.

19,864. Previous to your undertaking this petition and the defence of Mr. Vanderbyl's seat, had you talked it over with Mr. Vanderbyl?—I had never spoken to Mr. Vanderbyl about the election above twice, once when Mr. Cook was away and the petition was threatened, or it may be after; but I suggested to Vanderbyl that one seat should be given up, and it might be settled like that. Mr. Vanderbyl's reply was, "I do not know any reason why I should give up mine, and I will not do it," and I told Mr. Cook on his return.

19,865. Did he say anything at all about 5,000*l.* spent at the prior election?—No, we were no parties to it; it did not pass through our hands at all; it passed through Mr. Barham's and Mr. Lovibond's.

19,866. (Mr. Price.) As far as any communication from you to Mr. Vanderbyl went, Mr. Vanderbyl did not receive a distinct intimation from you that the seat was hopeless?—Well, he did not; I wilfully kept away information from Mr. Vanderbyl.

19,867. Did he go into it under the impression that he had a chance of the seat being saved?—Well, I cannot say. I never told him any facts.

19,868. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who would tell him if you did not?—Mr. Cook; and if you ask me there were other facts I was not clear at all upon, that is as to Mr. Fennelly. I could not conceal from myself that they were apparently in a very peculiar position.

19,869. (Mr. Price.) You judged that Mr. Vanderbyl must have known pretty well all about it from his relations with Mr. Fennelly?—I do mean that.

19,870. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were going to say something about Mr. Fennelly besides?—It was my notion, whether right or wrong, I did come to the conclusion.

19,871. (Mr. Price.) You thought it was impossible but that Mr. Vanderbyl must have known quite as much about money being spent from his intimacy with Mr. Fennelly, and the peculiar relation between them, as anything you could possibly inform him?—It looked very much like it.

19,872. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you know that Mr. Fennelly was Mr. Vanderbyl's partner at that time?—I think I did.

19,873. And that of course made your feeling all the stronger?—It did. Then I would say, I am speaking now as to the day when the seats were to be given up, we did not attend the consultation of counsel on the adjournment of the court for a short time, but on coming up I found that the members were to be called, and on coming into the court there was a great rush through the court, and I came against Mr. James Trevor, and I certainly did say, "Don't cross-examine Mr. Vanderbyl."

19,874. (Mr. Price.) What did Mr. Trevor say to that?—I do not know that he made any answer.

19,875. Did he say the usual phrase in Bridgwater, "all right"?—I do not think he did that, but if I speak the truth I think Mr. Trevor felt very much for me.

19,876. You wanted Mr. Vanderbyl to be saved from cross-examination. Did you know he was going into the box to say he knew nothing whatever about it?—I had not the slightest idea what he was going into the box to say.

19,877. What was the object of your seeking to prevent him?—I must say it looked very suspicious from the facts—Mr. Fennelly at the house, and one thing and another.

19,878. (Mr. Coleridge.) What part did you take in keeping Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Lomas out of the way?—Not the slightest.

19,879. (Mr. Price.) Was it ever discussed that it might be required?—The first knowledge I obtained that they might be away was at the "Union;" one of the guardians had cut out from the "Grocer" a statement about one of the gentlemen being away, and we certainly sent a copy of that in a letter to Mr. Vanderbyl asking for an explanation.

19,880. Did you get any?—It will be put in by Mr. Cook.

19,881. (Mr. Price.) When Mr. Vanderbyl answered that letter, did you gather from him that he knew it was advisable that Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Lomas should be out of the way?—No, it did not appear that.

19,882. The result was that they were not cross-examined?—They were not.

19,883. Neither Mr. Vanderbyl nor Mr. Kinglake were?—They were not.

19,884. And you had nothing to do with Mr. Kinglake; you do not know how that was brought about?—I do not.

19,885. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Westropp called?—I think not. Mr. Westropp was in court I recollect perfectly well.

19,886. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to tell us as regards that part?—Allow me to run through my notes. I recollect that with Mr. Lovibond we hired more carriages, but after doing so we found an opinion given in one of the daily papers by Mr. John Duke Coleridge that it was illegal, and those orders were countermanded; but so far as the eastern portion of the town was concerned afterwards we did hire a carriage; it was done through a third person who was not a voter.

19,887. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you yourselves voted?—We did.

19,888. That was equally illegal?—That was illegal, no doubt.

19,889. And all your paid agents and messengers?—Every man.

19,890. (Mr. Price.) Did you know Joseph Pitman, painter and glazier, of Taunton?—I saw him in this court, but not to know him to speak with.

19,891. Is he a man who has taken part in elections here?—I never heard of his taking part in elections here.

19,892. Do you know why he was subpœnaed here?—No, I have not the least idea.

19,893. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which side was he subpœnaed?—I think he must have been by the Conservatives.

19,894. (Mr. Price.) Was he telegraphed to from Bridgwater, do you know?—I am not aware. Will you pardon me saying as to the defence to a great extent it was managed by Mr. Cook entirely. I am merely now speaking in my personal capacity.

NINETEENTH DAY.

Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

14 Sept. 1869.

19,895. Do you not know whether Mr. Pitman had been employed at the last election to give money to voters?—I should say certainly not. I never heard of it.

19,896. And that therefore he knew quite enough to unseat the member. Do you know John Quick?—At Taunton, yes.

19,897. Was he subpœnaed over here?—He was here certainly.

19,898. Subpœnaed by the petitioners?—I do not know. Quick was here, certainly.

19,899. Do you know anything of Pitman being telegraphed to in the morning that he was not wanted?—Not the slightest.

19,900. Telegraphed for rather from Taunton to go away from here as well as he could?—No, never.

19,901. You never heard of that?—No.

19,902. But you know the man?—I think I do. I saw him in court.

19,903. Are you quite sure he was not employed here during the day at all?—Not to my knowledge. I never heard of it positively, to my knowledge.

19,904. A man named Robins from Taunton?—Not to my knowledge.

19,905. Who would be the person who would obtain such person to come and bribe here from Taunton?—I do not believe such a fact existed.

19,906. (Mr. Coleridge.) You were too open-handed about it to require such outsiders?—No.

19,907. (Mr. Price.) Was Pitman ever a resident at Bridgwater?—That I am not aware of.

19,908. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say they acted together; who was the head agent for the Conservatives, Mr. Trevor or Mr. Brice?—All about the same in conjunction.

19,909. (Mr. Price.) Then you never heard that Mr. Pitman had bribed a certain number of voters whose names were not known to the committee?—Well, it was alleged here in the court, I believe, but I do not possess the slightest knowledge of it. I do not believe it to be true.

19,910. Was that part of the case opened by Mr. Serjeant Parry?—No, I do not believe that it was, but I believe it was discussed in court in some way or other. I do not believe there was a tittle of pretence for such a statement.

19,911. What do you know of Pitman?—I know him, and that is all.

19,912. How should you happen to know the painter at Taunton?—Well, we do a business at Taunton.

19,913. Is he a client of yours?—No. Whether I took the man through the court years ago I cannot recollect.

19,914. That is the way you know him; you have an office at Taunton?—Yes, it is managed by Mr. Cooke.

19,915. Do you mean to say that Pitman was not a person who having once employed you as an attorney you knew had been mixed up in bribery in other matters?—I did not.

19,916. You never heard that?—No.

19,917. That he was a likely man to be a bribe agent?—No, I never heard talk of it.

19,918. Reported by the committee of the House?—Yes. I never heard of it.

19,919. Did you see him at all before the election at Taunton?—No, I did not see him.

19,920. When was the latest communication, to your knowledge, that you had with Mr. Pitman?—My impression is that I saw Pitman in court here one day during the inquiry.

19,921. But before that, before the election, not the petition. Before the last election, what was the latest communication you had with him?—I may safely say years ago.

19,922. Will you say so?—I will.

19,923. Positively?—Positively, certainly.

19,924. Does your partner attend more to the Taunton business than you?—Entirely.

19,925. Does he go there often, two or three times a week?—Twice a week.

19,926. You do not go at all?—Not at all, to attend to the business.

19,927. Do you keep a clerk there?—We do not.

19,928. (Mr. Price.) Is that all?—That is all the knowledge I possess with reference to the last election.

(Mr. Price.) We will not go into other elections to-night, but I will ask a question on this of Mr. Cook.

Mr. J. Cook.

Mr. James Cook recalled.

19,929. (Mr. Price.) Do you know anything of this man Pitman?—Until the inquiry before Mr. Justice Blackburn he was an entire stranger to me.

19,930. You did not know him at all?—I had not the slightest knowledge of him.

19,931. Then were not you taken by surprise entirely, when you heard he was coming over here to prove what are called unknown cases of bribery?—Certainly we were surprised.

19,932. It was entirely out of your cognizance?—Entirely out of my cognizance in every sense of the word.

19,933. Had he ever been to you as a client at Taunton?—Never. I think I can remember the first time I knew him; even when his name was mentioned, and he was then a stranger to me, was with reference to some county court case heard at Taunton, in which he happened to be a witness; and then it turned out, on explanations given, that he was the same person.

19,934. (Mr. Coleridge.) As far as I can understand, he came to give evidence against you for the Conservatives?—Yes, he was subpœnaed by the petitioners.

19,935. (Mr. Price.) Was not the effect of it that he was to prove he had bribed a number of persons unknown, as it was called, for Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

19,936. And knew enough to unseat the member?—Yes. We were taxing the costs in London, and the Conservative agents had carried in Quick's expenses and Pitman, and there was another man I have forgotten, and I argued before the master that they should not be allowed; that this man had said at Taunton, to Quick, and others opposed to him in politics, that he was telegraphed for to do part of the work of the election agents, and that he came, and that he knew enough to upset the election. The other person, whoever he was, gave information, as I understood it, to the Conservatives, upon which they acted here. I urged those as reasons before the taxing master, and the result was they were disallowed their expenses on the election inquiry; but, as far as coming here goes, he was a complete stranger, and I knew nothing about it.

Adjourned to to-morrow, at 11 o'clock.

TWENTIETH DAY.

Wednesday, 15th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

EDWARD BAKER called.

(Mr. Price.) Before you are sworn, it is right that you and other people who come to ask as a favour to be taken out of their turns should understand that we do not expect the time of the court to be wasted as it has already been by men in the same position as yourself, who instead of answering truthfully have fenced with every question put to them, and thus, instead of only being three minutes in the box they have occupied a quarter of an hour. (The witness was sworn.)

19,937–8. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter for Bridgwater?—Yes.

19,939. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

19,940. Did you get any money for it?—No.

19,941. Had you any promise made to you?—No.

19,942. Did you make any claim for money?—No.

19,943. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you get your expenses?—No, nothing.

19,944. Afterwards?—After the last election I did.

19,945. That is just the very thing you were warned against doing.

19,946. (Mr. Price.) What did you get?—I had 10*l.* from Mr. Vanderbyl.

19,947. (Mr. Coleridge.) At the last election?—No, nothing at the last election.

19,948. After the last election?—I had 10*l.* after the last election.

19,949. After the last election of 1868?—No, not 1868; I had nothing after the last election.

19,950. You say you got 10*l.* from Vanderbyl; you mean after the election of 1866?—Yes.

19,951. (Mr. Price.) You got nothing, you say, the last time. What did you get in 1866?—10*l.*

19,952. (Mr. Anstey.) Another 10*l.*?—No.

19,953. I thought you said you had 10*l.* after the election?—From Mr. Vanderbyl.

19,954. (Mr. Price.) When did you get it?—In 1866 I suppose it was. I do not know the dates.

19,955. Was it before or after you voted?—And I had 5*l.* at Bagehot's.

19,956. In 1865 did you have anything?—No.

19,957. In 1859?—Nothing.

19,958. In 1857?—Nothing.

19,959. Have you ever voted at any other election but those you were paid for?—I voted for Shelley.

19,960. And got nothing?—No.

19,961. Did you make any claim for expenses?—No.

19,962. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who gave you this 5*l.* or 10*l.*?—H. C. Bussell.

19,963. (Mr. Price.) On both occasions?—Yes.

19,964. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that all he gave you?—That is all he gave me.

19,965. How came he to give you nothing last time?—Nothing at all. I made no claim, and did not expect any.

19,966. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you make any claim at Shelley's election?—Nothing.

19,967. Did you ask for anything?—No.

19,968. Was nothing promised you?—No.

JAMES HAYWARD sworn.

(Mr. Price.) You heard what I said to the last witness, and I trust you will give us no trouble, because you know what it is you have come here about. If you do you will have to wait.

19,969. Are you a voter for this borough?—I am.

19,970. What are you?—A master mariner.

19,971. Who did you vote for on the last occasion?—Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

19,972. Did you get any money?—I did.

19,973. How much?—10*l.*

19,974. Who did you get it from?—Henry Chapman Bussell.

19,975. What time did you get it, before you voted or after you voted?—Before I voted.

19,976. In the afternoon?—In the afternoon.

19,977. After 3 o'clock?—About 3 o'clock.

19,978. Did you get any money from anybody else?—No.

19,979. (Mr. Coleridge.) Should you have voted if you had not got it?—I should have had a vote.

19,980. The same way?—I do not say the same way.

19,981. (Mr. Price.) Which way would you have voted?—One and one.

19,982. That is Westropp and Vanderbyl?—Westropp and Vanderbyl.

19,983. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you not written to a Conservative carpenter here of the name of Humber, on the 15th November, from Swansea:

"Mr. H. Humber,

"If you like to send for me I will come over "and vote for Mr. Westropp and Gray. You must "telegraph as soon as you get this letter for me to "catch the train from Swansea. My wife will give "you my address. You can send to me if you want "me.

"Remain, yours truly,
"Captain JAMES HAYWARD,
"Pig Cross."

—That is it.

19,984. It is not true that you would have voted one and one?

19,985. (Mr. Price.) You promised to vote for Westropp and Gray?—Yes, I did. I made a mistake in the letter, I meant Westropp and Vanderbyl.

19,986. (Mr. Coleridge.) What was the good of voting one and one, and neutralising your vote in that way?—I should please all parties.

19,987. Then the 10*l.* pleased you better?—I should not vote without.

TWENTIETH DAY.

J. Hayward.

15 Sept. 1869.

19,988. (Mr. Price.) In 1866 did you vote?—I never had one before.

19,989. (Mr. Anstey.) Bussell bribed you I believe, did not he, at this last election?—Yes.

19,990. Where did you meet him?—By the gaol.

19,991. When you met him who was in your company?—Henry Hobbs.

19,992. Who else?—No one else.

19,993. I shall certainly ask the other Commissioners to desire you to stand down and endeavour to recollect yourself better. If it happens again I will. We cannot waste our time upon a person like you in this way. Recollect you were examined in this court?—I was.

19,994. And you did not state "no one else." Was not Badger with you?—Not at that time, he was over on the other side of the bridge; before that.

19,995. Badger swore himself yesterday that he was with you when Bussell beckoned to you opposite the gaol?—I met Badger on the other side of the bridge.

19,996. What did Badger say to you?—He asked me to go to poll.

19,997. What else?—I asked him about my expenses.

19,998. You asked him for your expenses?—I did ask him about my expenses.

19,999. What did you say?—I asked him who was going to pay my expenses.

20,000. From where?—From Swansea.

20,001. Did you tell him that Humber had sent for you?—No.

20,002. Or that you had written to Humber?—No.

20,003. What did he say?—He said he could not pay my expenses.

20,004. Could not?—Yes.

20,005. What else?—There was nothing going, and I was to go and poll without.

20,006. What else?—Nothing else.

20,007. What made you say to him, then, "Damn "your expenses! I am not going for my expenses. "I can afford to pay my own?"—I did not say the words.

(Mr. Anstey.) I shall ask the Commissioners to let you stand down; you are telling a different story to what was told before Mr. Justice Blackburn.

20,008. (Mr. Price.) Is that the same thing that you said when you were examined before?—It was. I could not recollect. I did not say those words as put to me.

20,009. Did you say so before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—No.

20,010. Was it Badger?—No.

20,011. Did any such words pass between either of you?—No.

20,012. Who was it said so before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—No one in my recollection. I never mentioned the words to Badger, nor Badger to me.

20,013. About your being able to afford your own expenses?—The words never passed.

20,014. Badger never said so?—No, nor me to him.

20,015. Did you get any money in 1866?—I had never a vote before.

20,016. At any election?—No, none at all.

20,017. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that 10*l.* all you got at the last election?—All I got.

20,018. But if the other side had given you 10*l.* would you have voted for them?—Not for both parties, I should not.

20,019. You had offered to come up for the Conservatives; if Westropp's people had given you 10*l.* should you not have voted for both of them?—I should have voted for them if they had given me——

20,020. (Mr. Price.) When are you going to sea?—I want to join my vessel at Leith to-morrow.

You had better wait here, because Hobbs is summoned.

20,021. (Mr. Coleridge.) How did you want to go, by steamboat?—Across to Cardiff.

20,022. What time does the steamboat go?—I have not inquired.

R. Gold.

RICHARD GOLD recalled.

(The witness.) If you will allow me, I think I could call three or four witnesses who could confirm about that money of Bond's. One I should like, who was in the house at the time; and the other, I should like what he says; he was with Carter.

20,023. (Mr. Coleridge.) Have you any witness who saw you give the money to Bond?—No, no other than my wife; but the girl was in the house at the time Bond swears he was not in the house in the morning, but I have witnesses to prove he was.

20,024. Was Bond very drunk that day?—No, it was the morning, about 10 or 11 o'clock.

20,025. (Mr. Price.) That does not follow?—Well, he was not drunk.

20,026. (Mr. Anstey.) I should like to have any witness you can call in support of your statement?—Carter Reeves; he says he was with him at the "Lamb," and Crocker, the landlord of the "Lamb."

20,027. (Mr. Coleridge.) Are they here?—I do not know. I have not seen them, and I have not spoken to them.

20,028. (Mr. Price.) Will you give me the names of those whom you want called, and we will send for them?—John Carter Reeves, Stephen Crocker, and Jessie Gill. I only want her evidence to prove he was there in the morning, because he says he was not.

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

20,029. (Mr. Price.) Do you remember bribing this Hayward?—Yes.

20,030. Who was with him?—No more than some other captains. The statement that Badger made yesterday about my beckoning him was correct, but at time that I did not know that any money was going when I beckoned him.

20,031. When you gave him the money, was Badger there then?—No. I recollect the circumstance from their talking about it yesterday, that Badger was talking to him in the street, and I held my finger up to him because I did not think he was a man who would go to the opponent's side.

20,032. When he gave the money was anybody else present?—Nobody present in the room, but he and the captain of another vessel were together.

20,033. Was it Pitman?—No, Winslade; and they were the two I sent to my house.

20,034. You did not hear any conversation between him and Hobbs, and him and Baker?—No, none at all. When he was talking to Baker I was talking to him, and said, "Why did not you go and vote?" He said he was not going to be in a hurry. After that he went to the "Globe." Then the order was given to get all the men we could together, and I went out and fell in with this Hayward and Winslade together, and sent them into the house.

20,035. He went into your house, did he?—Yes; and after that I got the money and paid them.

20,036. (Mr. Coleridge.) By getting men together, you mean to bribe them?—By getting them into the house.

20,037. (Mr. Price.) Had he the money before he went to the poll, or after?—Before.

20,038. About what time did you give it to hm?—About a quarter past 3.

20,039. It is not true when he says you gave nothing at all?—I gave him 10*l.*, 10 sovereigns.

JAMES HAYWARD recalled.

20,040. (Mr. Price.) What did you mean by swearing before Mr. Justice Blackburn that you got nothing at all?—I mistook the words of Mr. Justice Blackburn.

20,041. It was not Mr. Justice Blackburn, but Mr. Serjeant Parry who asked you?—I mistook the words.

20,042. You were asked this, "You went to the poll by yourself?"—Yes, I did.

20,043. "About what time was this?—It might be "between 2 and 3 o'clock; I cannot say exactly. "What did he give you?" Do you mean to say you do not understand that question?—I misunderstood the words.

20,044–5. What part of that phrase did you not understand, "What did he give you?" and you answer "Nothing at all."—Being frightened by Mr. Parry, I could hardly catch the words.

20,046. You could not understand that, do you mean?—No.

20,047. "Not even your expenses?—No. Nor pro- "mise anything?—No. And you mean to swear upon "your oath that you voted for Kinglake and Vanderbyl "without receiving one farthing?—I did. And you "expect everybody to believe that oath?—I can swear "that. You expect to be believed?—I swear that: "that I never had my expenses nor a promise of any- "thing. After this election did you say to anyone that "you would take good care if you were away at another "election that you would never come to vote, because "you had been promised your expenses, and had not "been paid them?—Never." I should say you ought to be prosecuted by the Attorney General for perjury. I shall certainly request him to do so.—I mistook the words when it was mentioned to me.

Mr. JAMES WOOD SULLY sworn.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

20,048–9. What are you?—A colliery proprietor, coal merchant, and shipowner.

20,050. (Mr. Anstey.) And a justice of the peace for this borough, I believe?—I have not that honour.

20,051. Nor for the county?—No.

20,052. (Mr. Price.) You carry on your business in Bridgwater?—Yes, and at Lydney in Gloucestershire.

20,053. I am first going to ask you about the matter in which your name has been mixed up about nominating Mr. Vanderbyl, and the interview you had with him on the Saturday night?—The first interview I had with Mr. Vanderbyl was on the Saturday morning preceding the election.

20,054. If you like to make a statement do so?—I was not well that morning, suffering from nervous headache. I had not gone to my office, and about 11 o'clock Mr. Vanderbyl came with a gentleman whom he introduced as a friend of his, Mr. Fennelly. Mr. Vanderbyl was very unwell at the time, suffering from a relaxed throat, and he introduced Mr. Fennelly as his intimate friend. He never stated to me the object of the visit, as it was painful for him to talk. He moreover said, "Understand our interview, Sully, will be strictly confidential." Upon that Mr. Fennelly made reference to the extracts that had been circulated, a copy (I think of the "Daily Telegraph") in reference to Mr. Vanderbyl's evidence in connexion with the Lundy Granite Company, and I said, "I had received that" (I think I have it my pocket), and I showed it to him. I said I was very pained to read it. Mr. Vanderbyl then interposed, and said, "My "friend Mr. Fennelly will explain the matter to "you, Sully; you need not be anxious about it." Mr. Fennelly went into a long explanation respecting it, and I must say to some considerable extent he allayed my apprehensions, and gave me a different view of the affair: but I said, "Notwithstanding Mr. Fennelly's "explanation, Mr. Vanderbyl, if it be true as stated "here, that you rigged the market for the purpose of "raising shares, that is a very awkward affair, and, "as a commercial man, I must denounce it;" and then Mr. Vanderbyl gave further explanations. I think he contradicted that he had said it.

20,055. (Mr. Price.) Contradicted what?—That he had said that as reported.

20,056. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you call his attention to the letter alluded to in the newspaper report denied by him at first, and admitted by him afterwards, and in which those very words, or words to that effect, occurred?—I think I did so, now you remind me of it. I think it was on the printed circular. I think that was so.

20,057. (Mr. Price.) What did you say to that letter?—I think Mr. Vanderbyl gave a direct contradiction, that it was a misprint, that it was not a fair representation of his evidence.

20,058. The letter was not?—The representation, the statement. Mr. Fennelly then said—"That was "one object, Mr. Sully, of our seeing you this morn- "ing, but the primary or principal object of coming "to see you is to tell you that Mr. Vanderbyl had "quite decided that he would not have recourse to "any corrupt practices during this election, that he "had quite made up his mind neither to spend any "money, nor to allow anyone to spend money for "him, in bribing voters." I said I was exceedingly pleased to hear it. I then asked if he had made his agents and solicitors acquainted with that fact. And Mr. Fennelly immediately replied, "Yes, I did yester- "day. I had an interview with our agents, indeed "with all the Liberal solicitors, and I want to tell "you in confidence Mr. Vanderbyl is desirous that "you should know what is a secret understanding, "that it must be sacred in your breast. I want you "to understand that I am in a bother with these "lawyers, or in trouble or difficulty." I said, "What "is that?" "Why the fact is, they are very angry, "and desperately annoyed at my having told them "my decision that I will not spend." I said I was exceedingly sorry to hear that; I had hoped better of our solicitors. "Now," I said, "does that apply "to the whole of them equally?" and he replied, "No, I am glad to say there is one exception, Mr. "Barham," and I replied, "I am glad to hear there "is." Further conversation to that purport went on, and Mr. Vanderbyl interposed then, and he said, "My object in making you acquainted with this fact, "and let me beg you to keep it secret, respecting my "misunderstanding with the lawyers, is to ask you "to be kind enough to propose me on the day of "nomination." I immediately replied, "I would very "much rather not." I was frank with the man. I said to him, "Now you know there is not only this "affair of the Lundy Granite Company, but there is "also the manner in which the last election was con- "ducted, which is very painful to me, if one half of the "reports I have heard be true." He said, "Now I "must urge it on you. I am extremely sorry for "whatever was done at the last election, and so also "are my friends, and they have urged on me, and I "have come to the decision that I will not repeat it; "and therefore if such men as you will not come to "my help, where am I to look for it?" Those are the very words he gave utterance to. As I said before, the man was ill, and I felt for him, and after further pressing on his part, I said with great reluctance, "If you cannot get a better man I will propose you, but I would much rather not;" and I asked, "Whom do you intend shall second the nomination?" And he replied, "Mr. Hammill." I said, "Now I know Mr. Hammill, and if it will at all "help you, when you see him, will you ask Mr. "Hammill if he would prefer proposing you, and I "shall be equally pleased to second you, or to take "no part in it, but to be still." I again said to him, "Now allow me again to express to you the pleasure "I feel in having this assurance from you, and I

TWENTIETH DAY.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

15 Sept. 1869.

" know it will afford pleasure and satisfaction to " many of my friends. May I, without referring to " the solicitors, refer to this interview with you, and " give them the assurance from you that this shall be " a pure election, then certainly you will oblige me." I said, "I know Mr. Lovell Sealy will be obliged ; " will you call on him, and give him the assurance " yourself?" He said, "I will." I do not recollect anything that passed further at that interview. I was unwell, but I made it a point during the day of seeing several gentlemen referring to this interview, and giving them the assurance in the hope that they would take, like myself, a greater interest in the election. I remember looking for Mr. Thompson, and I think I saw him. I am not quite sure I saw Mr. Jones, the Congregational minister, and the late Mr. Perkins, the Baptist minister, and several others.

20,059. Did you see Mr. Sealy and tell him?—I do not remember. I do not think I saw him for the day. I left it to Mr. Vanderbyl, who promised he would see him himself.

20,060. Did you see Mr. Hammill to know whether he would propose or second?—No, I did not. This was on the Saturday morning. On the Saturday evening there was a very large meeting held here, when the candidates addressed the constituency. I was in the little ante-room for a few minutes before the meeting commenced. I think at 8 o'clock Mr. Lovell Sealy came in to me and said, " Sully, I want you." We went out just under the light of the lamp here in the lobby, and he put a letter in my hand and said, "I have just received this ;" I think he said from Mr. Fennelly, " I want you to read it." That was a letter from the secretary of the National Bank, giving Mr. Vanderbyl a copy of the resolution passed by the directors, to the effect that it was desirable, I think that was the word, or undesirable, that Mr. Vanderbyl and Sir Joseph McKenna should absent themselves from the board of direction until the dispute which was between them had been settled or explained. I said to Mr. Sealy, " Well, this is an awkward affair ; " it is making matters worse. But I do not see that " we can do anything in it now, but to let the meeting " take its course." " What would you advise?" I said, " After the meeting let a few of us meet together and discuss the matter quietly." And he said, " Very well ; come to my house after the meeting, " and will you during the meeting speak to a few of " the friends, and invite them to come over with you?" During the meeting I spoke to the gentlemen on the platform, and we met at Mr. Sealy's house. A considerable discussion took place as to what was the course most desirable or proper to pursue, and the majority of us was of opinion that had we heard these things, and seen this letter at an earlier stage, before Mr. Vanderbyl had come to the town we should have tried to dissuade him from becoming a candidate ; but inasmuch as he had secured the suffrages of the voters, and had become very popular, and his canvass very successful, and especially as this dispute was not settled, we could not prejudge the case, we had better let things take their course ; and the deputation was appointed to go from Mr. Fennelly's house to the " Globe," to inform Mr. Vanderbyl. Accordingly I was one of the members, Mr. Sealy, and I forget who the other gentleman was, but there were three or four of us who went to the " Globe," and we were shown into Mr. Vanderbyl's sitting room upstairs, where was this Mr. Fennelly. And Mr. Sealy introduced the matter, and gave him the letter, expressed our regret, and heard what he had to say, and Mr. Fennelly indeed mostly entered into matters, and explained ; and we said we hoped it would turn out as he represented, but we had decided that at this stage we could not at all interfere, things must take their course ; and we left. On the Sunday morning, as I was walking up and down the lawn before going to chapel, I saw Mr. Vanderbyl coming in the lower gate of my lawn. He came up and said, "I was not able to see Mr. Hammill " yesterday, and I thought I would go down and see " him now, before going to church, and I am sorry to " say he declined either to nominate or second." I said, " Did he assign any reason?" He said, " Yes, " he would do me and the cause no good, because he " differed from us on the Irish Church question."

20,061. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Hammill is a churchman?—Yes ; and I said, I think, " Well, I think Mr. Hammill is wise."

20,062. Had Mr. Hammill pronounced that opinion, do you know, in public?—I had not heard of it, nor had I any conversation, though he is a neighbour, and we are friendly.

20,063. Did you know that he took that view, that although he was a Liberal in politics he was opposed to Mr. Gladstone on the Irish Church measure?—I do not know that, but I know there were some of them who did. I said he was wise, because it would not do to have any division amongst us on the hustings. I must tell you that I passed a very restless night on the Saturday night. I could not sleep for thinking over this matter, and I resolved, before I rose from my bed, not to nominate or second Mr. Vanderbyl, but to see him, and get released from the obligation of my engagement. On hearing Mr. Vanderbyl state to me what Mr. Hammill had just said to him, my first impulse was to tell him my decision. I refrained, however ; I felt for the man ; he was looking unwell, and I remembered how he had been harassed the day before. I thought I would defer doing so, and let him have a quiet Sunday until the evening, when I intended waiting on him, and telling him my decision on Sunday night. On the Sunday afternoon I received a note from Mr. Nicholls, requesting me to do him the favour of calling on him at his house to meet a friend or two at 5 o'clock.

20,064. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is Mr. Nicholls the draper?—Yes, Mr. Henry Frederick Nicholls. I took an early tea, and did not leave till after 5 ; I think it was a quarter after 5 when I arrived at Mr. Nicholls's house, or 20 minutes. On arriving there I found Mr. Henry Lovibond and Mr. Barham.

20,065. (Mr. Price.) We know who the gentlemen were who were there. I need not trouble you to go through their names. I do not think it is any use your telling us anything about that interview. I think we have had quite sufficient as to what took place, unless you think there is anything you wish to correct which you have seen in the papers that does not accord with your recollection. If your account accords with that of the other witnesses I will not trouble you, but take you at once to the time when you went with the other gentlemen to see Mr. Vanderbyl at the " Globe?" —I have not read the evidence, but it has all been read to me by my children, and I do not think that any one of the gentlemen, in the evidence they have given, have spoken or referred to this private manner in which I spoke.

20,066. Anything you like to tell us?—In reference to the course we should pursue we were not to be influenced at all by what our opponents would do or would not do, and were only too glad to hear the decision of Mr. Vanderbyl, and that was the reason why we, as honest men, should tender him our very hearty support. I should further say that reference has been made that at that meeting an arrangement was made for another meeting to take place in the evening. That was not done in my presence. I knew nothing of the meeting in the evening until the message was sent to me at half-past 8 from the same gentleman, Mr. Nicholls, to request me to be kind enough to come up to him in half an hour, to meet a friend or two. I left and went, supposing and believing that I was to meet the same parties as I had met in the afternoon, but on entering I was surprised to see such another. You have the report of those gentlemen. I should say that Mr. Wilton came in at a later stage. It was nearly 9 when I entered the room, and he came in at a later stage, having been out at Wembdon to see my nephew, the mayor. You have that in evidence. I think I saw from the manner of the men when I entered the room that they had been having a discussion, and that there was a pause on my entrance, and that afterwards Mr. Henry Lovibond began by declaring, I believe, that it was his belief that the election was lost, that he thought that Mr. Vanderbyl's and Mr. Kinglake's seats were in peril, or something like that; that he believed the Conservatives had made up their minds to bribe, and inasmuch as Mr. Vanderbyl had decided not to, there was not the slightest chance for either of them. We should lose both seats. He went on to say, that being the case, and all of us being ardent friends of Mr. Kinglake, the question came whether some arrangement could not be made to secure Mr. Kinglake's seat. A good deal was said by him to that effect, and it was a tremendous tax on my patience, I can assure you, gentlemen, to sit there and hear it, knowing what I had heard from Mr. Vanderbyl on the Saturday morning, and I only wish that my lips had not been sealed. I would then and there have asked those lawyers questions, and have exposed and denounced their hypocrisy and deceit.

20,067. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you given a promise that sealed your lips?—A most sacred pledge to Mr. Vanderbyl that I would keep it in my own breast in the presence of Mr. Fennelly.

20,068. Had you made the same promise to the lawyers?—What promise?

20,069. That promise which prevented your answering the lawyers on that occasion?—I had nothing to promise the lawyers about; I do not understand your question.

20,070. I thought the charge was against the lawyers as well as Mr. Vanderbyl. You are referring to the expenditure at the former elections?—No, I am referring to the statement Mr. Vanderbyl made to me on the Saturday morning, that on his informing the solicitors he had decided to spend no money they became exceedingly angry and annoyed.

20,071. Then my question is still more apposite. Had you given any promise to the lawyers which sealed your lips?—In reference to what matter?

20,072. In reference to what Mr. Vanderbyl had stated, namely, that the lawyers were exceedingly annoyed?—I had no interview with the lawyers.

20,073. (Mr. Price.) But I understood you to say that you had promised Mr. Vanderbyl that you would not divulge to anybody that he was much annoyed at the way he had been treated by the lawyers?—Yes, to the effect that the lawyers were annoyed with him because he had stated he would spend no money.

20,074. And you had promised Mr. Vanderbyl that you would not divulge that?—That I would keep it secret in my own breast.

20,075. (Mr. Anstey.) But it did not keep you from informing the lawyers that you had something locked in your breast which it was due to Mr. Vanderbyl alone you should not divulge?—I should have betrayed him if I had. I went near enough to it in that discussion by saying, "Well, you know, gentlemen, that Mr. Vanderbyl has decided to spend no money, and moreover has he not informed you that it is not a question of money, but that he would spend to the extent of 5,000*l.* to petition against one seat of the Conservatives if they obtained their seats by corrupt practices, and has he not offered to make any guarantee, or give you security of that kind."

20,076. You said that?—I said that at the meeting in the evening. Mr. Paul Reed said, "We have had enough to do with petitioning;" and the other solicitors assented thereto. When I am excited I generally speak loud. I did then, and a little incident occurred which increased the annoyance I felt at going to that meeting. I was immediately under one of the windows of Mr. Nicholls's dining room, and the window happened to be down from the top sash, and although it was in November it was a close evening, the gas being lit and many of us being there. Some one, I do not know who, came behind me and pushed up the sash, and said, "Sully, do not speak so loud, you will be overheard by anyone outside on the pavement." Well, I felt I ought not to be, and there was no reason why I should be, ashamed to be overheard in anything I had to say; and knowing, or rather believing, that the solicitors were playing a game, it was a dodge of theirs to try and get us to withdraw our support from Mr. Vanderbyl to secure Mr. Kinglake's seat, in order to enable them the better to put the pressure on Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money. Whether I do them injustice or not, that was my belief at the time.

20,077. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you include them all in that idea; Messrs. Reed and Cook the same?—Yes, all alike, except, as I said before, Mr. Barham. Unfortunately I am deaf in one ear, and when there are two or three persons speaking at one time in the room I cannot hear. They were talking together in groups, and a good deal of the discussion I lost; to tell the honest truth, I did not feel interested in it. I felt annoyed; I felt that it was due to me before inviting me to come to that room that Mr. Nicholls ought to have told me who I was to meet, and the object of the meeting. If he had done so I should not have gone. After considerable discussion, persons were nominated and appointed to wait on Mr. Vanderbyl; my name was mentioned, but I would have nothing to do with it. They did so. The meeting was, I suppose, drawing to a close. I rose, took out my watch, and said, "Well, it is half after 10, gentlemen; I want to go and see Mr. Vanderbyl alone, therefore I shall go on before you."

20,078. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was any objection made by anybody to your going alone to him?—No.

20,079. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you tell them why you were going?—I did not tell them directly, but in a conversation I had with them they understood me.

20,080. What was it?—That I declined to nominate or second the nomination. I told them so walking down to Mr. Sealy's house on the Saturday night that it was an awkard affair, and I did not think I should; I should think the matter over, and they understood me. Your question brings to my recollection that I purposely avoided telling the gentlemen so directly in case Mr. Vanderbyl should ask me the question, that I might be able to say I had not; because I intended, as I told the gentlemen before I left, "I shall make Mr. Vanderbyl acquainted with the fact that I have met you here to-night, and had some discussion." I left them to go to Mr. Vanderbyl. Mr. Fennelly was with Mr. Vanderbyl when I went into the room. I apologized for waiting on him so late in the evening, and said that I intended calling earlier, but that I had been detained at Mr. Nicholls's house, where I had been sent for, and where we had considerable discussion on matters respecting the election. I then told Mr. Vanderbyl the object of my coming to him, reminded him of the pledge I had given him on the Saturday morning, told him I had been exceedingly uneasy respecting the matter since I had seen the letter on the Saturday night, and come to the conclusion either to decline to nominate, or to second the nomination; that I should have told him so in the morning on my lawn, but that I was anxious he should have a quiet day, and he was so poorly and had been harassed so the day before. The man appeared to feel it very much, and strongly urged me to reconsider. I said, "No, I must entreat you to release me from my obligation, for I have quite decided not to do so." He again asked me the reason, and I told him it was a very questionable affair, and an awkard matter, in connexion with the Lundy Granite Company, and his connexion with the National Bank, and this resolution. He went on to say it would be all cleared up. I said that I hoped it would, nothing would give me greater pleasure; but as a commercial man, having regard to my character, I could not support or countenance in any way a man who had done wrong. He took my hand, and said, "Now, Sully, be honest, is there any other reason?" and I said, "No, or you should have had it. Why do you ask me that question; what do you mean?" "Well, "I feared whether or not you really believed the "pledge I gave you yesterday morning respecting my "determination to pay no money to any bribers, or "allow it." I said, "No, I believe that."

20,081. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Fennelly present?—Mr. Fennelly was present the whole time. I received it in good faith and acted upon it. I told him that, and how I had exerted myself as far as I was able to see parties on the Saturday, and make them acquainted with the fact. Then he said, "Now "will you do all you can to ensure my election on "the solemn pledge which I renew?" "I will." Just at that moment he was holding my hand, a servant came and announced that Mr. Nicholls and the other gentlemen were below waiting to see him. He said to me, "Well, you said just now you had "been detained at Mr. Nicholls's house?" "Yes." "You had considerable discussion I suppose; what "about?" I said, "I must decline to answer that." I gave the gentlemen to understand before I left Mr. Nicholls's that I should not enter into any matter; I should not at all refer to it, or give him any information as to what had taken place; but I said, "Mr. "Nicholls and some others are deputed and they will "see you directly, and I will not detain them. But "now let me beg on my leaving you, Mr. Vanderbyl, as "my last words, let no man influence you to depart "from the decision you have come to." He replied, "Sully, trust me, I will not deceive you." I left. On going downstairs I inquired where these gentlemen were. I went into the room, and, addressing myself to Mr. Nicholls I said, "Poor Mr. Vanderbyl is very "ill. I have had a painful interview with him, but I "told him I should decline to take any part in the "nomination. I have also told him I have been to "your house, where there was considerable discus-"sion, and that you were deputed to see him, and "that is all I told him; so good night." I went home.

20,082. So far as you did hear any part of the discussion which had taken place at Nicholls's, as distinct from that part in which you yourself took a part, did you gather that the object of this deputation was to wait upon Mr. Vanderbyl with a view to shake him in his decision with respect to not spending money?—Certainly not; and I was astonished and surprised last night, when my child read to me, if Mr. Reed be rightly reported, that he swore here in this hall that the object of that meeting was to induce Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money.

20,083. I do not think Mr. Reed said that?—I understood that, as reported.

20,084. Well, I did not so understand him. I understood him to say this, that there were two questions which were discussed at the meeting at Mr. Nicholls's, the one was the getting Mr. Vanderbyl to retire, on the ground of his being mixed up with the Lundy Granite Company, and the other was his not spending money. But I understood him to say to this effect, and I may be mistaken also, Mr. Reed will be here to explain that, but I understood him to say this, that there was an impression that those gentlemen were to go to Mr. Vanderbyl and discuss with him the question of the Lundy Granite Company, and, if necessary, the question of spending the money, the "alternative" it is called by Mr. Nicholls and I gathered, therefore, that it was to that extent that the deputation were to discuss the two questions, and then it has been most undoubtedly given in evidence that the expression made use of by Mr. Lovibond, when he heard the next morning that Mr. Vanderbyl intended to spend money, was, "Then the meeting of last night has not been without its effect."

20,085. (Mr. Anstey.) Your mistake about the intention, I think, arises in this way, not only from the statement of the person you have named, but from other witnesses, that the real object of these lawyers, or some of these lawyers, who called those meetings, was to put a pressure upon Mr. Vanderbyl, or at least to give him an inducement to spend money, and to use the Lundy Island Granite affair as a good stalking-horse for the purpose. Your mistake consists in confounding the intention of all those who called the meeting with the intention of all those who were at the meeting itself. Nothing of that kind was said?—I am sorry to say, I do not dispute for a moment now, since the evidence I have read, the intention of the solicitors; but I understood from the evidence as reported of Mr. Reed here yesterday, that that also was equally the intention of the gentlemen who met at Mr. Nicholls's, and for that purpose the meeting was held.

20,086. (Mr. Price.) Well, I do not think that; I do not think it went to that extent?—The question of the Lundy Granite Company had been fully discussed on the Saturday night, and disposed of, and it was a mere pretext on the part of Mr. Lovibond using that on the Sunday night, and that I felt.

(Mr. Anstey.) And that we have felt too.

(The witness.) The chief argument he used at last, and which certainly I think was successful to some extent with the friends who were ardent friends of Mr. Kinglake, was, that if some arrangement could not be made to induce Mr. Vanderbyl to retire, Mr. Kinglake also would lose his seat. I very well remembered then saying, "Well, what of it? Who "are we in this room, that we should compromise "and barter the interests of the Liberal party by "treating with Mr. Vanderbyl or anybody else about "retiring." I am saying what gentlemen in the room were privy to, and can confirm, if their memories serve them right; but the impression on my mind was, that the chief effect produced on the minds of the deputation, and the others, was the danger of unseating Mr. Vanderbyl, if he had persisted in going to the poll and not spending money.

20,087. That you gathered, did you, from the conversation that was going on about you?—Precisely; they were in different groups.

20,088. (Mr. Price.) Therefore it would come to this, that one great thing was to get rid of Mr. Vanderbyl?—That was the argument.

20,089. That was one?—Yes.

20,090. To save Mr. Kinglake's seat?—Precisely, I should say.

20,091. (Mr. Anstey.) And others, or the same people, in the alternative, wished money to be spent?—Yes. And I should say further, it has just occurred to my mind now, that at one stage of the discussion reference was made certainly by Mr. Lovibond, whether he had the impression, or it had come to his knowedge, I do not know, that Mr. Vanderbyl had been in treaty with Mr. Westropp, or Mr. Westropp's party, and thus would incur the risk or danger of throwing Mr. Kinglake overboard.

20,092. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean Mr. Lovibond used that as an argument for pressing Mr. Vanderbyl, or rather to press you to press Mr. Vanderbyl to retire?—I would have nothing to do with it.

20,093. To press the deputation?—Precisely.

20,094. That he, working as Mr. Kinglake's friend, wanted to get rid of Mr. Vanderbyl in any way he could?—Precisely.

20,095. (Mr. Anstey.) Did it appear to you at the close of that day, when you retired together and reviewed what had taken place, that the lawyers, the patrons of the borough, and their followers, instead of promoting the Liberal cause as a cause, had converted the question into a personal matter, first of all between Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Kinglake, and then into a personal question of a graver character, namely, the question as to whether they should or should not be pressed to spend money?—Precisely; that was the impression; and they would have known it from me before I left that room, but——

20,096. But for what?—But for the engagement I had entered into with Mr. Vanderbyl, I would not have gone to my bed that night without telling them of it then and there.

20,097. (Mr. Price.) You see why Mr. Reed was asked about it was this, that Mr. Lovibond had made use of that expression as soon as he found out that Mr. Vanderbyl had made up his mind to spend money. Mr. Lovibond is reported to have said, "That comes from last night's meeting" ?—I heard that.

20,098. And then I put the question, "The meeting "which Mr. Lovibond referred to was the meeting at "Mr. Nicholls's ?" And to that Mr. Reed said "Yes." Therefore there is the impression left, that at that meeting of Mr. Nicholls's they had, in some sort of way, discussed the question of getting Mr. Vanderbyl to spend money, and therefore that the deputation who went to him had that as an alternative, or had that as a matter prominently before them when they went to see Mr. Vanderbyl.

20,099. (Mr. Anstey.) As well as the rest of the gentlemen who were present at the meeting ?—I beg your pardon. There I differ with you.

20,100. You said so just now?—Then I mistook your question.

20,101. (Mr. Price.) I will tell you why I put the question to you at this point, because you seem to have felt disinclined to be present with the deputation ?—I will tell you why, just as it occurs to my mind, if you will give me the privilege. I felt it was the first time in my life, and mine has been a long political life, that I was thrown into contact with the lawyers and their friends, particularly on the eve of an election, and that I appeared to be taken into their counsels. I was innocently drawn into that contact.

20,102. That is the reason I put the question to you. You say that Mr. Nicholls did not behave quite fairly to you in not telling you the object of the meeting at his house, which was, no doubt, to discuss the question of whether Mr. Vanderbyl ought not to be driven to spend money, and then you expressed a disinclination to go with them, upon which you came away, and you left them there, as if you had a distaste of being present at any discussion ?—Yes.

20,103. And it was for that reason I asked you, therefore whether from what you had gathered of what had taken place at Mr. Nicholls's that the deputation that was going to wait upon Mr. Vanderbyl would be naturally driven into a discussion with Mr. Vanderbyl as to spending money ?—Certainly not, because it went upon the assumption from the commencement when Mr. Lovibond opened his mouth, that Mr. Vanderbyl had decided to spend no money; and allow me to add, it was nearly 9 o'clock when I first went to the meeting. I do not know what time it assembled; I only know what took place between the time I was there and the time I left, and from what I could hear, the impression on my mind was that the deputation that waited upon Mr. Vanderbyl was as innocent of the matter as myself. They did not know——

20,104. Are you under that impression now?—I am.

20,105. Still ?—Still.

20,106. What! Upon hearing that Mr. Fennelly said to these gentlemen, "Be honest," or something of that kind, "it is money you want" ?—Yes.

20,107. And they acknowledged something of that kind was said, and they never disabused Mr. Fennelly's mind of it. They themselves acknowledged—that is, the members of the deputation, Mr. Wilton, Mr. Collins, Mr. Nicholls, and Mr. Palmer—certainly after a good deal of time was spent in getting it, they acknowledged this, that Mr. Fennelly said to them, "Do not humbug about this; do not beat about the "bush; you want money;" and they never disabused Mr. Fennelly's mind about it ?—That is a riddle I never can understand; I never can solve.

20,108. Then, having heard that, are you prepared to say that those gentlemen did not go there prepared to discuss the question ?—I felt they were the dupes of the lawyers, and I thought so all through.

20,109. (Mr. Coleridge.) You throw all the blame on the lawyers all through ?—No, I do not do that. They have enough to bear without that. I do not wish to lay upon them that which they do not deserve.

20,110. (Mr. Price.) I thought the reason you did not go there was, that you did not wish to be present at any interview with Mr. Vanderbyl when the discussion of any question about spending money should be raised?—That is quite right; and I felt annoyed that I should be found there on such an occasion.

20,111. Therefore it was I gathered that you thought from what you understood that this deputation when they got into communication with Mr. Vanderbyl would be, in all probability, dragged into a question of spending money, or not spending money ?—That is so; but still I believed that they were to a great extent the innocent dupes of the lawyers.

20,112. Go on with your statement ?—I went home after my interview with Mr. Vanderbyl. On the Tuesday morning I recorded my vote at 9 o'clock.

20,113. (Mr. Coleridge.) Will you excuse me for one moment. What motive did you attribute to the lawyers for all that they did in this matter ? Was it for what they should gain themselves, or what ?—No.

20,114. Then what was your idea, that they should take upon themselves the danger as well as all the iniquity of these proceedings?—Well, judging from what has taken place——

20,115. I mean at that time; why should they put themselves into this dangerous position ?—I had this impression, that they not only knew the way to make a market for themselves but also for those behind them, those they used, their agents.

20,116. Were you under the impression that they were to work for nothing ?—Certainly not. I never yet heard of a lawyer working for nothing.

20,117. (Mr. Price.) They must live. You do not sell your coals for nothing, and we do not sell our brains for nothing ?—No.

20,118. (Mr. Coleridge.) I want to know whether you in the upper classes entertain the same idea as the lower classes do, that the lawyers did all this for love of the cause without being paid any money ?—Certainly not.

20,119. (Mr. Anstey.) Why not ?—Why, from my general knowledge that professional men do not work without money.

20,120. Then do you mean that it follows that because a man works in his business of a blacksmith, collier, shipowner, skipper, and so forth, and will not work for nothing, therefore it is naturally to be expected when he goes to the poll that he does not mean to vote for nothing; is that what you mean to say ?—Certainly not. I am speaking now of the professional services of the solicitors.

20,121. You confine your remarks to lawyers?—Yes.

20,122. You think the lawyers are the only people who are not likely to have a pure and single motive for what they do in advocating or opposing a political cause ?—No, I would not say so. I should be doing lawyers an injustice. There are men as honest as myself, some of them.

20,123. I want to bring you to this: does your opinion, or rather did your bad opinion of those persons, rest upon a general position of that kind, which I now understand you to repudiate or did it rest upon your knowledge of, or acquaintance with those particular lawyers antecedents; which was it?—From the antecedents; I can refer to them by-and-by, if you wish.

20,124. That is what I wanted to know ?—Oh yes.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then, you see, my question was perfectly relevant.

20,125. (Mr. Price.) Go on ?—After recording my vote on the Tuesday I went——

20,126. Did you do nothing on the Monday at all?—Yes.

20,127. You went to the nomination?—I went to the nomination, and afterwards went to the large room at the "Globe" hotel, and presided there at a meeting. It was very crowded, and while I was speaking——

20,128. The "Globe" was Mr. Vanderbyl's head quarters?—Yes. There is a large room separated off, with a separate entrance.

20,129. I only want to know this: you seem to draw rather a fine distinction. You voted, you say, but you declined to nominate Mr. Vanderbyl as a commercial man, as there were certain things which ought to be cleared up. Although you did not prejudge him, you did not care to take a prominent part in nominating him, but you certainly took a prominent part when you took the chair afterwards at the meeting at the "Globe." All you wished not to do was, to let your opponents see you were taking an active part. You did not care so long as they did not see what you were doing?—No. I should not be ashamed now, or at any time, for my opponents to see me doing anything.

20,130. You thought in the first instance you would not nominate him, because you did not think him a fit and proper candidate, and you afterwards go and preside at a meeting called on his behalf?—Will you allow me to explain how that was? I was walking down Eastover, and as I came to the "Globe," I think it must have been 9 o'clock, there were a number of men outside, who expressed to me their disappointment that they had been left in the lurch; that there was to be a meeting in the room that night, and none of the leading men were there; and the crowd surrounded me and said, "Mr. Sully, you must go up and take the chair," and I took the chair; and that is the reason why I presided.

20,131. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean you were taken unawares?—I was, quite unexpectedly.

20,132. (Mr. Anstey.) You were going to tell us what took place on the polling day. I should like to know this. Did you hear nothing on the morning of the nomination day, as to Mr. Vanderbyl having changed his mind as to expending no money?—No; but I will tell you what I heard. It must have been after 9 when I recorded my vote——

20,133. (Mr. Price.) On the nomination day?—Yes, on the nomination day. It was 9 o'clock on the nomination morning.

20,134. (Mr. Anstey.) The Monday?—Yes. I think it was about 10 o'clock, after my breakfast, that I walked up the quay, and at the bottom of Castle Street I met Mr. George Wilton. He was going to his office, and after saying "Good morning," I said, "Had you a long interview with Mr. Vanderbyl last night?" I think he said, "Not very long." I am not quite sure exactly what his reply was. "What was the result?" "Why we decided nothing, except that Mr. Vanderbyl said," I think he told me, "at the "suggestion of Mr. Fennelly, that they would take "time to consider it, and let them know the next "morning."

20,135. (Mr. Coleridge.) To consider what?—To consider the point they had put before him about retiring, not going to the poll.

20,136. (Mr. Price.) Now, you see, you have learnt that these gentlemen left Mr. Vanderbyl in this way, that Mr. Fennelly said, "It is money you want, and the rest is all humbug," and that they never disabused his mind; and that therefore Mr. Vanderbyl must have been left, and Mr. Fennelly too, under the impression that it was all humbug, and it was money that was wanted. Now you know that Mr. Fennelly sent up to town for money, and telegraphed next morning?—Yes, I know that, and the more I think of it the more difficulty I have in reconciling it with what I knew then.

20,137. (Mr. Anstey.) It was not a telegram sent on the Sunday night, but it was a letter; therefore the letter must have been written before post time?—Yes, before I went to him.

20,138. Or before the latest time that parcels could be received?—Yes, you are quite right. I recollect I took out my watch in Nicholls's house before I left, and it was half-past 10.

20,139. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is the latest time you can post, with two stamps?—I think it is.

20,140. (Mr. Anstey.) And a few minutes afterwards it is the latest time you can send a parcel by the guard?—I think it is.

20,141. Drawing your attention to that fact, which you have heard since, and comparing it with what you knew then, can you reconcile what you knew then with that fact since ascertained?—No, I cannot. There is my difficulty.

20,142. I mean you cannot reconcile it in any way consistently with truth and honour?—No.

20,143. (Mr. Price.) You say you left Mr. Vanderbyl with the full determination on his part that he would not spend any money?—Yes.

20,144. And that letter had gone?—Yes.

20,145. (Mr. Anstey.) And you left Mr. Fennelly under the same impression?—Yes, Mr. Fennelly corroborated him.

20,146. (Mr. Price.) Therefore it would look according to that as if before this meeting or deputation, before any pressure, or supposed pressure, from the deputation was brought to bear upon Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly, or Mr. Fennelly alone, which ever it may be, they had made up their minds that they would have money ready?—I think that must be so.

20,147. (Mr. Anstey.) You said something about pulling out your watch when you left Mr. Fennelly?—No, when I left Mr. Nicholls's dining room.

20,148. That makes it stronger. You were a quarter of an hour or more, I suppose, with Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly?—No, I was not there so long. I was at home at 11 o'clock.

20,149. At all events, that was before the closing of the mail?—Precisely.

20,150. I want to ask you this question. Can you, by taxing your memory, call to your mind any sentence in your conversation with either of those two persons, Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Fennelly, which might be fairly interpreted, that they had, or one of them had, already written up to London to provide funds in case matters should come to a crisis?—No, most decidedly not. I have already told you the last words that Mr. Vanderbyl told me.

20,151. Then do I understand you to say that it was most effectually concealed from you that one of them before you entered the room must have at that time sent a letter or telegram, or both?—Yes, precisely. I knew nothing of it till I read it in the evidence.

20,152. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that you left Mr. Vanderbyl's presence that evening with his pledge as a man of honour, and as a man of his word, that he would spend no money?—Yes.

20,153. And the same thing was pledged by Mr. Fennelly?—Precisely.

20,154. (Mr. Anstey.) It was ratified by Mr. Fennelly?—Precisely.

20,155. Had you heard down to that time of any intention to provide money, I do not say for improper purposes, but for any purposes, under the name of "bales"?—Oh, no; it is all new to me. The evidence is all new to me. I knew no more of it than yourself.

(Mr. Price.) Now be good enough to tell us what you did hear on the nomination day.

20,156. (Mr. Anstey.) You had this conversation with Mr. Wilton?—With Mr. Wilton.

20,157. (Mr. Price.) And he told you that no result had been arrived at from the interview of the deputation with Mr. Vanderbyl, and that he had taken time to consider?—Yes, to consider. And then I said, "What time was he to let you know?" and whether he said it was 10 o'clock or before I do not know. I know the word "ten" was used. "Have you had your answer?" And, I cannot tax my memory now, but my impression is, that Mr. Wilton told me that some one of the deputation had informed him that Mr. Vanderbyl had told the solicitors his decision, but which of the gentlemen he named who had told him so I really cannot tell. I have been taxing my memory with the prospect of coming here to state that, but I cannot recollect; but I ought to say whilst we were talking——

20,158. I should just like to ask you what you really meant by asking what was the decision, whether it was that Mr. Vanderbyl was to retire altogether?—Yes, precisely; my question meant nothing else.

20,159. That he was to retire altogether?—Nothing else.

20,160. You were going to say something occurred while you were talking together?—Yes; I will tell you. While I was walking down to Browne & Co.'s office, Mr. Cook, the solicitor, came up, and he commenced saying, "Now, Sully, I do wish you would "propose Mr. Vanderbyl this morning;" and I said, "Cook, do not repeat that question; my mind is "made up, and Mr. Vanderbyl understands the "thing."

20,161. And I suppose Cook knew it also from that?—Yes, he did then. Then he asked Mr. Wilton if he would, and Mr. Wilton replied, "Why, the same "reasons that would influence Mr. Sully would "influence me; I have declined, and I should do "nothing of the sort." Mr. Cook and Mr. Wilton then went down to Browne & Co.'s office; I entered, I think, the outer office, and supposing they had some business to transact I left.

20,162. Did Mr. Cook say anything to this effect, "Mr. Vanderbyl has considered the matter, and is "going to stand," or, "It is all right," or anything of that kind?—No, nothing of the kind.

20,163. At that time it must have been so, according to the statement of Mr. Nicholls?—Precisely. My conclusion at the time I met Mr. Cook was that they must have all known it.

20,164. And yet they did not say anything to you?—No.

20,165. They must all have known?—They must all have known. I must tell you that I smiled. I thought if I had made an arrangement over night to go and see a gentleman next morning at 10 o'clock I would go and see him, and not allow a lawyer to be intermediary between him and me.

20,166. You did not say so?—No.

20,167. I understood you had made up your mind from what Mr. Vanderbyl said, that he would not spend money. Could it occur to you that it was possible for him to have swerved from his resolution of the night before?—No. The first impression I had of that was on the morning of the polling day.

20,168. So that during the whole of Monday, and up to the time you took the chair at the "Globe" at 9 o'clock, you were still under the impression that Mr. Vanderbyl was going to keep to his word, that he would not spend money?—That was the fact.

20,169. (Mr. Anstey.) You were at the nomination, I think?—I was.

20,170. Well, did you suppose from the tenor of the speeches made by Mr. Kinglake in praise of Mr. Vanderbyl, and of Mr. Vanderbyl in praise of Mr. Kinglake, that the other question, namely, as to which should be shoved out, was also accommodated?—I understood that they were both going in to fight, and have a fair contest.

20,171. (Mr. Price.) To fight honestly with one another?—Precisely; that was my belief.

20,172. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you remember that the speeches on both sides were pleasant; I mean to say, on both sides, the speeches of Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl were mutually complimentary and comfortable?—Yes. It showed they were friendly. That was the impression on my mind.

20,173. (Mr. Price.) Now, then, will you come to the polling day, unless you have anything else to tell us on the nomination day that you heard or saw?—Only that at that meeting, I urged upon the men to be early at the poll, and so on.

20,174. (Mr. Anstey.) Then at 10 o'clock on the polling day, what happened then?—I should say that Mr. Vanderbyl came into the room when we were holding that meeting, and he just spoke a few words, and I said to him, in his then state of health, it would be very unwise of him to remain in that heated atmosphere; and he simply urged upon them the necessity of being early at the poll, and referred to the show of hands being in his favour.

20,175. Did you see Mr. Vanderbyl alone before you left the "Globe"?—Oh dear no.

20,176. Then we come to the next morning?—I recorded my vote at 9 o'clock. I then went round to the "Mansion House" room where the poll sheets were kept, to the "Three Crowns," and to the "Globe," to see if the poll sheets were in their places, and that the votes recorded were registered. Things were very quiet, and I think it was a little after 10 that I met, I am not sure whether it was Mr. Henry Lovibond or Mr. Cook, but I met one of those gentlemen, and I said, "Well, our men have not come up for the first hour this morning as I hoped and expected." I meant by that, there was not such a large number polled on our side as I expected; and I almost believe it was Mr. Lovibond; I am not sure to whom I said that, and he replied, "No, sir, they have not; and I begin to suspect all is not right on the other side."

20,177. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Lovibond said that?—Yes; "for there were men there who would never "have gone to poll so early this morning if they "had not received a bribe, or expected it, or had a "promise of a bribe." I will not do the gentleman the injustice of saying it was him, I am not sure whether it was Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Cook; it was one of them. On hearing that I walked about the town, and as the majority increased on the other side it increased my apprehensions that they were doing that which was not right on the other side. About half-past 12 I went into the room at the "Globe" to ascertain the state of the poll, and I found Westropp and Gray were in a very large majority; I do not know how many, nearly 200 one of them was; I think so. There were several persons in the room, and I called Mr. Cook on one side, and said, "Well, our "opponents have a large majority; I fear there is "something wrong there. Now tell me honestly, "have the men who voted on our side gone up and "recorded their votes honestly?" "Sully," he said, "on the honour of a gentleman I pledge you that to "the best of my knowledge no man on our side has "voted dishonestly." I said, "I am glad to hear "that, Cook; and now I shall go home comfortably "and have my dinner, for the election is lost, and I "would rather lose 20 elections honestly than gain "one dishonestly." With that, I went home.

20,178. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever gain one honestly here, that you know of?—No.

20,179. You are of the same opinion with the other witnesses we have had before us upon that?—Yes, certainly, after the disclosures which have been made here.

20,180. (Mr. Anstey.) Well, you went home, did you?—I went home.

20,181. Did you see anybody on the way home?—I met some workmen. The bell was ringing, I recollect that. The men from the dock were going home to their dinners, and I went home to mine.

20,182. Your own men you mean?—No, the dock men, the other side of the river; and I remained home until the clock struck three, and I then said to my wife, "I shall go over to the 'Globe,' and see what the state of things is now—how the poll is." As I got to the bottom of Castle Street some two or three men ran along in a most excited manner, and said, "Mr. Sully, we are only seven behind." I was taken by surprise. I walked over to the "Globe," and found a number of men outside the door which led to the large room, and I went upstairs, and I found the room was crowded, and there was great excitement. I immediately jumped up on the table and said, "Now, gentlemen, this is a very pleasing "surprise to me; I hope it is all right, but it is very "important that this room should be cleared, other-

TWENTIETH DAY.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

15 Sept. 1869.

" wise the polling clerks cannot keep a correct " account of the votes as they are returned. Now, " let me entreat every man who is here, and who has " not recorded his vote, go and do so, and those who " have done so try to get another vote, and never " consider an election won till 4 o'clock." They left the room.

20,183. Were there a number of the poorer order of voters present when you said that?—Oh yes; workmen.

20,184. As well as the lawyers?—I think Mr. Reed and Mr. Cook were in the room; I am not quite sure.

20,185. I suppose it was very far from entering into your mind, when you used those words, " Those " who have voted go and get others to vote with " diligence," that the bribeable voters, if any were there, giving you credit for knowing more than you really did know, might possibly associate your advice with the advice that they had already received from the lawyers?—I do not think that any man who knew me would put that construction upon my words. I then left the room and went up the town, and heard the state of the poll declared, and then went home, believing that which I had been told on the way up the town, on inquiring how the state of matters was altered, that the working men, members of the Working Men's Liberal Association, finding that Mr. Kinglake had left the town, were so annoyed and vexed, that they determined at once to go and elect him, and they did so at once.

20,186. (Mr. Price.) That has been said before; but it is a strange thing, that in conjunction with that having been stated, that the working men had heard, to their annoyance, that Mr. Kinglake had left the town; every gentleman who has been called before us, exeept one, has said he was utterly unaware that Mr. Kinglake had left the town?—I never heard it till I was told then.

20,187. We never had that cleared up; but that seems to me to be of the last importance, because it appears that Mr. Kinglake, as it were, slunk away without letting the people know anything about it; after a very suspicious interview with Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Mogg at the " Globe," and immediately after that, or very shortly after, the bribing begins; and then we find Mr. Kinglake saying, " Well, I am not liable for this matter, because I left before the bribing began." Therefore I cannot accept that as a reason for the men rushing to the poll, that they knew Mr. Kinglake had gone, because I do not think there were five men in the town who knew it; you did not yourself know it at the time?—I did not, as a fact. I was told he had gone; it was reported in the town. I was not out of my house at the time he was said to have gone away.

20,188. (Mr. Anstey.) You have told us of everything else about the poll. I want to ask you a question about one or two matters with regard to the polling, which you have not yet answered. Now, with regard to the undue influence. You have—when I say " you " I mean of course your firm—your firm, or you, or both, have a great number of voters I believe in your employment, or under your influence?—I am the only one in the firm of " Sully and Company." I have no partner.

20,189. I put it to you so that you could answer it at once without that explanation?—Certainly not.

20,190. You have no voters in your employment?—Oh yes.

20,191. If you had listened to the question it would have saved my putting the question again. It gives me great trouble to have to repeat questions?—It was your reference to my partner that made me give that explanation.

20,192. I said either you or your partner. How many voters have you in your employment?—I really do not know.

20,193. They are of the humbler ways of life, are they not; they depend for their bread upon their employment?—Certainly. They are masters of vessels, mates, and seamen.

20,194. And then you have men in your employment on shore in the coal office, have not you?—No; they are men that work. I do not think many of them have votes. They are men who discharge the vessels and boats.

20,195. There may be some?—There may be some.

20,196. I must ask you this question. Have you, ever since the election of 1868, dismissed any person in your employment who, being a voter of the borough, voted at that election for either of the Conservatives?—No.

20,197. Has a person in your employment of the name of Captain Turner, the captain of a small ship, dismissed a mate of the name of James Luckes who so voted?—Turner was the captain of the " Carry Winch," and he discharged the mate.

20,198. " Discharged," I suppose, may be a more classical phrase than " dismissed," and I accept your correction. Have you blamed Captain Turner for what he had done, or, on the contrary, have you ever told him that you very much approved of what he had done?—No; but on my return from Lydney I was informed that Captain Turner had been summoned before the magistrates by the man Luckes, and the summons was dismissed.

20,199. Never mind that. I do not want to know anything about that?—On my return from Lydney——

20,200. (Mr. Price.) You wish to explain?—I do.

20,201. I wish you would do so then?—On my return to the office I asked my son what had taken place, and he told me, and I said, " Turner, what does this mean; why did you discharge this man, Luckes?" I may say I did not know the man Luckes. I have nothing to do with employing the crews and the men; the captains employ the crews and the men; therefore I do not come into contact with the crews and the men. Turner said, " I did not discharge him; he discharged himself." I said, " What do you mean?" He said, " When I came down one morning " (whether he discharged him or not I do not know) " he was " skulking on shore, and on going to the vessel and " going down below I found some of his ' traps,' he " called them, were packed up; and then I called him " on board, and said, ' Now you may as well go.' " And then I said, " Has the man been mixed up in the " election; did you know that this man had a vote, " or had voted?"—" Yes, on the opposite side." I did not know how Turner voted. I asked him, " Did you know how this man voted?"—" No." " Did you discharge him for that?"—" No." " Did that at all influence you in discharging him?"—" No." That is all.

20,202. The man was on shore shirking his duty?—The man was on shore shirking his duty.

20,203. (Mr. Coleridge.) Instead of being on board?—Certainly.

20,204. (Mr. Price.) What took place before the magistrates?—He summoned the captain.

20,205. This man summoned him?—Yes.

20,206. Under the Master and Servants' Act?—There is an agreement with respect to vessels above a certain tonnage, that the men are to be employed for a period not less than six months, and this man sued for six months' wages, and that fell through; and on my return home I was told of it; and another summons was issued, charging him with violating the Merchant Seamen's Act, that he had not given the seaman a printed form setting forth the wages and the time, what he had had on account, and what was due to him. I may say that that was not the practice in this port, and it never has been done; but it applies to certain vessels above a certain tonnage, and this " Carry Winch " was one of this class. There was a great deal of excitement, and I may say I never saw the Tory magistrates muster so strongly as they did on that occasion. They thought they had caught a tartar then, and one of them made himself so conspicuous (Mr. Hammill) on the bench that it rather called forth a reproof from the solicitor for the defence.

20,207. (Mr. Coleridge.) Mr. Hammill is a Liberal ?—Mr. Salmon I mean. And it turned out it was a vindictive affair altogether ; and Mr. Symmons was there to prove that it was not the custom of the borough ; and the magistrates fined him. I do not know what amount.

20,208. (Mr. Price.) They fined h m under the Act, for not having done it according to the Act ?—Precisely.

20,209–10. (Mr. Anstey.) How does that apply to my question ? You insisted upon stating it before the magistrate. It appears that all that occurred there was, you set up as a defence a supposed custom that existed here, and the magistrate thought the letter of the Act of Parliament was of much more consequence than the custom of the port. How does that apply to my question ?—I stated it in answer to the chairman, and not in answer to your question.

20,211. (Mr. Price.) I asked you to explain the matter, and, as far as I know, the explanation is satisfactory ?—It was in answer to your question.

20,212. Yes, it was. I think it is perfectly satisfactory. Was that all you had to do with the matter ?—It was.

20,213. (Mr. Anstey) You mentioned this in answer to a question from me, as to this story about the magistrate, and I asked you not to trouble yourself about it, and I wanted you to answer my question, which was this, Had you expressed your approval or disapproval to Captain Turner of his having dismissed or discharged this man ?—I said he did right if that was his reason, if he found the fellow shirking his duty.

20,214. Therefore you did express your approval ?—Yes, at once.

20,215. Had you any other person in your employment who voted in like manner for the Conservative candidates at the last election ?—I really do not know ; and will you allow me to add to that, that I have always made it a point never to say a word to any man in my employ as to how he was to vote. I consider the man's vote is his own as much as mine is mine.

20,216. But have you never at any time after an election, got rid of a person in your employment who had voted against your side of the question ?—Certainly not. I should scorn to do it.

20,217. (Mr. Price.) That is, on account of his vote ?—On account of his vote.

20,218. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you heard that amongst the people in your employment there exists an apprehension to that effect ?—Certainly not. They have no cause for any apprehension ; on the contrary.

20,219. Do you remember Mr. Westropp canvassing persons in your employment at the last election ?—Oh, very likely he did.

20,220. You are not aware that they told him that although you never said anything before them about their votes, that your practice was, if they went against you, to remember it, and punish them for it afterwards ?—No ; but if they did they slandered me. And allow me further to say, that years ago, when I was a younger man, I used, prior to the election, to make a point of seeing my captains and men, and telling them plainly that their votes were their own, that they had a right to do with them as they thought right, that I hoped they would record their votes according to the dictates of their conscience, and according to their judgment ; and whether it was for or against the side I was I should take no notice of it. The only thing that would annoy me, and shake my confidence in their honour and integrity, would be, if they allowed themselves to be tempted, to receive a bribe. And of late years I have requested my principal clerk and cashier Mr. Bounsall, to do what I had previously done.

20,221. (Mr. Coleridge.) I suppose you sometimes found out afterwards that they had received bribes ?—I heard it reported.

20,222. I mean before this Commission ?—I heard it before Mr. Vanderbyl's election.

20,223. Who did you hear received it ?—Mr. Bounsall, my clerk, told me that he feared that Wills and Hamsom, and two or three more, I forget their names, had received money.

20,224. Did you ever speak to them about it ?—No, I did not. I said if it could be proved I would certainly discharge them.

20,225. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you ever done anything to discourage anybody who has found out corrupt practices to have existed on your side from bringing to light those practices ?—I have discouraged these practices, both in private and in public.

20,226. I do not think you undersand my question. Have you ever discouraged any of these things from being found out ?—Certainly not.

20,227. Let me mention the case of a man who was examined before the committee of the House of Commons in 1866, in support of the petition, or rather in support of the defence to the seat. I presume it must have been for Mr. Westropp ; a man of the name of Cole, who swore distinctly that Henry Chapman Bussell had offered him money for his vote, and that he refused it ?—Yes, I think I recollect something of that sort.

20,228. Well, that man came down to Bridgwater. I ask you the question whether he was not, on your motion, as a member of an Independent congregation, or a Baptist congregation—— ?—A Baptist.

20,229. Excommunicated ?—He was not on my motion solely, but it was brought forward by me myself, and my colleagues.

20,230. Therefore, did he bring an action against some of the parties to that measure ?—He did.

20,231. And did he not recover on both counts, under Mr. Justice Byles's direction at the Taunton assizes, something between 50*l.* and 60*l.* ?—He did, 50*l.*

20,232. And did not Mr. Justice Byles express himself very strongly in favour of that money in summing up ?—No, not in favour of the man, but in favour of the pastor with respect to his having stated before two members of the church, strangers, that the man had perjured himself before the committee of the House of Commons.

20,233. You were present at the trial ?—I was.

20,234. Did you not hear Mr. Justice Byles say distinctly in summing up, " The man has given his " evidence in a straightforward way, and I think he " is a very truthful and honest witness ? "—No.

20,235. (Mr. Price.) Was it not on a question of privilege ? If I remember right, he said, that the privilege would not cover that part of the slander, which was, that the pastor of the congregation had stated it to persons other than to the members of the congregation, and upon that count he said they would have to find substantial damages ?—If you will allow me, it will only take two or three minutes, I will just explain the matter.

20,236. That is my impression about it ?—The minister, Mr. Perkins, who has since died, had just come among us. He had been at Uxbridge and the surrounding villages, and it was his custom, I did not learn it till after he came here, to let the communicants know at the church meetings of anything of any importance which concerned the members of the congregation, and at one of these meetings, to my surprise, he referred to this painful matter of this man, about his having sworn falsely before the committee of the House of Commons, and thereby perjured himself.

TWENTIETH DAY.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

15 Sept. 1869.

20,237. (Mr. Coleridge.) To what denomination do you belong?—A Baptist; and there happened to be amongst the communicants two other Baptists, not belonging to that congregation but strangers, and Mr. Justice Byles held it not privileged.

20,238. (Mr. Price.) Decidedly; and he not only held it not privileged, but also that the man was entitled to have substantial damages on that account?—Yes. Now the theory was, that I had made myself the persecutor, and influenced the pastor against the man.

20,239. We have asked whether any ministers of religion have ever denounced any of the corrupt practices which exist in Bridgwater. It seems, in this particular instance, that directly the minister denounced it, he immediately had an action brought against him?—Yes; and I fear it brought about his death.

20,240. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not agree with you in that observation. What he denounced was not bribery but perjury?—Yes.

20,241. It was not against bribery but against perjury?—It was connected with both.

20,242. Was it not Cole who swore that there had been bribery endeavoured to be practised upon him?—No; he swore he was not bribed.

20,243. Did he not swear that Henry Chapman Bussell offered him a bribe?—Oh, possibly he did do that.

20,244. And that he refused the bribe?—Oh, possibly.

20,245. Then he was excommunicated on the ground that he had committed perjury?—No, in reference to what he said of Bussell.

20,246. What then?—Because that he swore he had not been to the "Golden Lion," and been bribed on the morning of the election.

20,247. Are you quite sure that was it?—Yes; and there was proof to the contrary.

20,248. Are you quite sure that the charge of perjury was confined to that one point, whether he had been to the "Golden Lion" that day?—That was the opinion of the minister, that the man had told a lie in saying that he had not been there when he had been.

20,249. There was an attempt to justify it at the trial at Taunton?—No.

20,250. And that attempt to justify failed?—No, there was no justification. It was said that it was a privileged communication, and it was found that it was a slander, and that it was not a privileged communication.

20,251. Do you mean to say that there was no attempt to prove a justification?—No; there was no evidence given on the side of the minister at all.

20,252. (Mr. Price.) There was no defence at all?—No.

20,253. You merely went on the fact that it was privileged, as I understand?—Yes.

20,254. (Mr. Anstey.) Now, we have had it admitted that Cole not only voted against your side, but also gave evidence against your side before the House of Commons, and that you were an active party to his excommunication here?—Not on account of his having given evidence against us.

20,255. But it is a fact?—I do not dispute that the facts existed.

20,256. (Mr. Price.) Tell us the reason why he was so excommunicated?—The reason for his excommunication was this, that he swore that he had not been on the morning of the polling to the "Golden Lion" and been bribed, whereas there was evidence that he had been, and I happened to be in the committee room at the time when Mr. Powell commenced examining this man's evidence, and the chairman said, "Mr. Powell, pass over this man's evidence;" and they did not go into his evidence at all.

20,257. As if they did not believe it?—Certainly.

20,258. What were the exact facts as to his excommunication, for I do not quite understand what they were. Was his conduct brought before the community?—Yes, at the church meeting.

20,259. Who brought it forward?—The minister.

20,260. Was that the time when it was supposed he had uttered this slander of him?—No. It was held it was not a privileged communication. It was not held to be a slander.

20,261. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you mean to say that you, as deacon, or otherwise, did not, in the first instance, mention it, before the minister mentioned it?—No, the minister mentioned it.

20,262. (Mr. Price.) What part did you take in it; was it put to a vote?—Yes. After the minister's referring to it, I rose and expressed sorrow and regret that the man should have acted so, and it was put to the vote, and he was excommunicated.

20,263. And excommunicated on the ground of his perjury?—Yes.

20,264. And his bribery?—And his bribery; and he disputed it.

20,265. It was initiated by the minister of the congregation?—Yes.

20,266. On the ground of his having received a bribe, and his perjury in connexion with it?—Yes.

20,267. And was it put to the vote then?—Yes.

20,268. And then the slander arises out of the fact, that some persons who were not members of that particular congregation were present?—Yes, at the ordinance on the Sunday after.

20,269. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he restored to church privileges?—No.

20,270. What is he now?—I do not know.

20,271. Is he living in Bridgwater?—I think he is. I suppose he is. I have not heard to the contrary.

20,272. (Mr. Price.) Did you join in that with conscientious motives, that the man had committed perjury, and had received a bribe, and was not fit to be of the congregation?—If it was the last word I had to speak, that was my only reason.

20,273. Not that he voted against your party?—Not at all.

20,274. Have you anything more to tell us at any time?—There is a matter which has reference to the former elections of Lord Henley, and so on.

(Mr. Anstey.) Can you state anything with regard to these elections?

(Mr. Price.) We know a great deal about them.

(Mr. Anstey.) It is not worth while to trouble you to come back again.

20,275. (Mr. Price.) Unless there is anything particular you wish to state; of course, in that case, we shall be glad to hear it?—I took an active part in Lord Henley's election, in the hope that we should break up the abominable system which the lawyers had instituted.

(Mr. Price.) Very well. Then you can come back again.

A short adjournment then took place.

T. Searle.

THOMAS SEARLE sworn.

20,276. (Mr. Price.) Now, Mr. Searle, what are you?—A builder.

20,277. Are you a voter for the borough here?—I am.

20,278. Well, now, what you are called about is with respect to the transaction of the 10*l.* which Mr. Gold says he had received from you and gave to a Mr. Bond, for Mr. Bond to hand over to a man of the name of Wittridge. We want to know what it is that you know about the transaction?—Mr. Gold came to me and said he wanted 10*l.* for Wittridge. 10*l.* I gave him, and he left my house at the time, and in the meantime Mr. Bond came to me. Mr. Charles Bond I believe his name is.

20,279. Mr. Bond, a shoemaker?—Mr. Bond, a shoemaker; quite so. I said, I have given 10*l.* I have let Richard Gold have 10*l.* for Wittridge. He left again, and I think it might be somewhat an hour afterwards he came again and asked me if I had seen Gold. I believe he said, "Have you seen Gold?" I said, "No." I said, "Has Wittridge been to poll?" He said, "I cannot find him." I met him again, I think, somewhere about opposite Thompson's, close by the Fish market, during the morning, and he asked me if I had seen Wittridge. I said, "No." Somewhat about two hours, I think, after that I heard he was at the "Lamb," a public-house just yonder, and I think many people—I think Mr. Bond himself, if I remember right, went to that inn to see him, but whether he did or did not I cannot say. I understood from him that he was going to see a man who was in his employment. I think I heard him say that he had got him to poll in previous elections, if my memory carries me right.

20,280. (Mr. Coleridge.) This is Mr. Bond?—Yes. He is a man under his employ, I think; but whether Mr. Bond gave him the money I cannot say. All I know, so far as my memory will carry me to that election, is that Mr. Gold had the money, and my impression was that Mr. Bond had it, and I am strongly impressed at this present moment with the belief that Mr. Bond had the money of Gold, and Wittridge of him.

20,281. That is to say, did you understand from what Bond had said to you that if you gave up 10*l.* to Gold, Bond would see it given up to Wittridge?—Just so.

20,282. That was the impression you had?—That was the impression I had.

20,283. From the conversation you had with Bond and Gold, and what you had known previously?—Yes; and repeatedly during the day I met Mr. Bond respecting this man.

20,284. You had repeated conversations with Bond about this man?—Just so.

20,285. And of his saying that he could get him to vote?—Just so. And during this inquiry (a most strange little feature about that matter) about 8 o'clock in the morning, I think it must be somewhat about five or six days ago, I met Mr. Bond, early in the morning, and passed the compliment of the morning as men generally do, and he came across to me from one side (I live just by), and the topic of the inquiry came up, and I said——

20,286. (Mr. Price.) I did not ask you what you were, Mr. Searle?—A contractor and a builder.

20,287. (Mr. Anstey.) What were you going to say?—He went on with the conversation of the inquiry—that it went on—and I said, "You remember the circumstance of the 10*l.* which you received" (this was just to fresh my memory) "respecting of Wittridge?" and he seemed rather to quibble about the matter, and so it went on. This was a conversation a few days ago, within this last week, here.

20,288. Since we have been here?—Since the inquiry has been on.

20,289. You say he seemed to quibble about the matter. What did he say?—I cannot give you his words. The sum and substance was that he wanted to evade doing it. That was the fact of the matter; that was the impression on my mind.

20,290. Evade what?—Evade of giving the money or receiving it.

20,291. Did he know then; did you understand from him that it was going to be made an accusation against him that he had received the 10*l.* to pay Wittridge?—That I cannot say.

20,292. Then how did the conversation begin about the 10*l.*?—Because I put it to him that he received 10*l.*, and he denied it or evaded it. I did not put the question strongly to him. I thought myself from the remarks that you have made, which I have heard you make and read myself, that the less I said about it the better. That is just the impression which came across my mind at the time.

20,293. That Bond was shuffling with the question whether he received the 10*l.* or not?—That is just how I took it.

20,294. Then you have no doubt you gave the 10*l.* to Gold?—I am certain of it.

20,295. You gave it under the impression that Bond was to have it for Wittridge?—That is it. I will just refresh your memory, at least it comes to my memory just for one moment, that at the previous election——

20,296. (Mr. Coleridge.) What election?—In 1866.

20,297. You said the city election?—I thought Mr. Coleridge was alluding to the last election.

20,298. No, I thought I caught you to say the word "city" election, and that you might be alluding to the municipal election.

20,299. (Mr. Anstey.) Previous to the election?—I went to his house myself.

20,300. (Mr. Price.) Whose house?—Wittridge's, and I found I could do nothing with him, and therefore I left him under the impression that Mr. Bond should see him.

20,301. Therefore you were strongly impressed with the idea that if Gold got 10*l.* from you it was on the understanding that it was to be handed to Bond, and Bond was to deal with Wittridge?—Yes, sir; and furthermore than that there is an account, if Mr. Allan will produce it. When I settled with Allan I gave him a statement of the money which I received, and the money which I had paid away, and I more than that—(perhaps mine is a singular case)—I paid him the balance.

20,302. Paid him what?—Paid him a balance which I had in hand, which I did not expend. I paid that in the presence of Allan and my son, who made the statement out in the office.

20,303. (Mr. Coleridge.) As to this particular part the very material thing is this. Did Bond come to you frequently, as you stated, on that day in such a way as to lead you to believe he was perfectly willing to give money to Wittridge if he could get it?—Decidedly so.

20,304. You have no doubt?—My mind is strongly impressed with the fact.

20,305. You pray in aid of your memory an impression as to the fact of his having had some at a previous election?—Yes, I can remember back.

20,306. We shall go to that presently; but you do pray in aid of your impression the fact that he was a man likely to accept?—Quite so.

20,307. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever hear that he denied it till a few weeks ago?—I never heard he denied it or evaded it till a few days ago—till the conversation I had with him since the inquiry has been on.

20,308. (Mr. Price.) You are down in Allan's list for 60*l.*—Yes, sir.

20,309. That is all you have to tell us about Bond. Now, then, while you are here tell us how you expended the remainder of the money. 10*l.* we know you gave to Gold. What was the other? You must tell us how you expended the rest of the money.

(Mr. Allan.) There was a second item of twenty pounds. 60*l.*, 20*l.*, and 5*l.*

(Mr. Price.) Quite right. Now, is Mr. Bond in court? Mr. Bond is not here.

(Mr. Allan.) I think it fair, Mr. Chairman, that I should state that two or three days after the election of Mr. Vanderbyl, in 1866, Mr. Bond asked me for money for expenses at the election. He wanted some money from me to pay him for money that he had spent at the election in electioneering business.

(Mr. Coleridge.) How much?

TWENTIETH DAY.

T. Searle.

15 Sept. 1869

(Mr. Allan.) I think about 30*s.*

(Mr. Price.) I think we are all agreed about this, that we do not require any further evidence with regard to that matter of Mr. Bond, and it is due to Mr. Gold to say that we are of opinion that he has cleared up the matter satisfactorily, and it will remain now for us to say whether Bond has not committed perjury before us upon this matter, and must be dealt with accordingly. It is due to Mr. Gold to say that our impression is that there is no imputation upon him with regard to this 10*l.* Our impression is that he has told us the strict truth. The question really was whether the money had gone through the hands of Bond or not, and we are strongly impressed with the idea that it went through the hands of Bond, which was Mr. Gold's story; and therefore, as far as Mr. Gold is concerned, we are of opinion that he told us the strict truth.

R. Gold.

RICHARD GOLD recalled.

20,310. (Mr. Anstey.) Before you leave the court, Mr. Gold, I should like to ask you a question with reference to a previous election. There is only one question I want to ask you. You heard me yesterday ask a question—not of you, but of another witness (Mr. Jones, I think,)—as to a parliamentary election in this borough when there was a riot, and an assault made of a desperate character on Mr. Bowen, an attack made on his house. Were you in trouble on that account?—No.

20,311. Which Gold was it?—I do not know. I do not know whether it was my father or no.

20,312. Was there not a person named Gold tried at the sessions or assizes?—I do not know whether it was my father or uncle, but I was young at the time. I have no knowledge of it.

20,313. You do not recollect which election it was?—No, I do not.

(Mr. Anstey.) It struck me the name was similar.

T. Searle.

THOMAS SEARLE recalled.

20,314. (Mr. Price.) Now then, Mr. Searle, you are down here for these different sums: 60*l.*, 20*l.*, and 5*l.* That is 85*l.*?—Quite right. About seven in the morning, at Vanderbyl's and Patten's election, Mr. Allan brought me 60*l.*

20,315. First let me ask you, did you do anything in the last election?—No.

20,316. Had you no money entrusted to you at the last election?—No; that is the case of Palmer, a foreman of mine, if I remember right.

20,317. That is the man who took the ten sovereigns to the Conservative committee room?—That was him.

20,318. What did you do with regard to him?—I knew nothing with regard to him, only he came to entrap me, if I may use the expression. He came in somewhere about half-past 2 o'clock or a quarter past, I could not say; but it was after 2 for certain. He sent for me, and I was in one of the rooms. He sent a servant to say that he wished to see me. I went down, and he said, "Governor, I want to see you." I said, "What do you want, Palmer?" He said, "I wish to speak to you." I said, "Come into the office." He said, "Oh no, this will do, up the yard;" so I walked up the yard with him, and I said, "Have you been to the poll?" and he said, "No, I promised you I would not poll till I had seen you." "But," I said, "I understood you to say you would go to the "poll the first thing after you had finished the polling "booth opposite" (the north ward). The polling booth was opposite the yard, just at the back of my house.

20,319. That you had built?—That I had built. And he said, "I do not think I shall go directly." I said, "My good man, you have promised Mr. Kinglake "and Mr. Vanderbyl in my presence, and I was "under the impression in the shop when they called "on you, that you would poll for them both, because a "long conversation ensued respecting flogging in the "army." He said, "I have not been to poll." I said, "You had better go." He said, "The fact of "the matter is, governor, money is more of an object "to me than politics." I felt indignant at the expression, and I said, "It's all humbug." He said, "No, no, money is more an object to me than politics." "But," I said, "my good fellow, you had better go the poll." He said, "You can do something "for me; you know I am in pecuniary difficulties." I said, "I know nothing about your pecuniary difficulties."

20,320. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why were you angry with him, considering that you had bribed at former elections?—Because I had made up my mind never to do it again.

20,321. Had you told him you had made up your mind never to do it again?—Decidedly not.

20,322. Why were you angry with him if he knew you had bribed formerly?—So I had, but I did not intend to do it again. I would not give him any money, and I told him so; and he told me he should go with the stream. I told him he might go to the old fellow if he liked, for he would get no money out of me.

20,323. (Mr. Price.) Now then, Mr. Searle, will you go on? Will you finish what you were going to say?—I have just told Mr. Coleridge, sir, that I told Palmer I would not give him any money.

20,324. You made up your mind, you say, to have nothing more to do with bribery. That was the reason?—That was the reason, and the fact.

20,325. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then what did you do?—I impressed upon his mind at my door to go to poll, as he promised me in the morning, and the impression on my mind was that he went to poll; but I went out about half-past 3 o'clock, and saw him with a man of the name of Harwood.

(Mr. Price.) Mr. Searle, I do not know that we need trouble you about it. Palmer has sufficiently thrown discredit upon himself by showing that he went and took 10*l.*

20,326. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is all you had to do with that election?—That is all.

20,327. Before or after?—I had nothing to do with the election before or after, neither at the meetings.

(Mr. Price.) Palmer has given an account of himself which is most discreditable.

20,328. Now, will you tell us how you expended the 65*l.* Just the names?—Richard Henry Hobbs, 10*l.*; John Croker, 10*l.*; Charles Day, 10*l.*; Joseph Fursland, 10*l.*; Henry Bartram, for William Hex, 10*l.*; Richard Gold, for William Wittridge, 10*l.*; Richard Gold, for another voter, 10*l.*

20,329. Richard Gold for whom?—For another voter, which I think he can explain to you about.

20,330. "Richard Gold for William Wittridge, and "Richard Gold for another man"?—I think he came and had 10*l.* for another man. He had 20*l.* That was 70*l.* I think you will find. But three or four days after that I met Mr. Allan, and I said, "Mr. Allan, we had better make up our accounts." I said, "I have some money in hand which I have not expended," and he said, "I will come to your house at any time." He came to my house at an appointed time, and in my office, in the presence of my son and myself, there we made the account up. He took from his breast pocket the account which I had made out, which my son had made for me, and I paid him the balance which I had in hand; it might be 10*l.* or 15*l.* I think you will find it to have been 15*l.*

20,331. You have accounted for 70*l.*, and you got 85*l.*?—I had 85*l.* The whole of the money was paid back to him in the presence of my son that made this statement out.

20,332. 85*l.*?—Whatever it may be, sir, Mr. Allan had it, whether 80*l.* or 90*l.* I cannot be answerable for it.

20,333. You have only accounted for 70*l.*?—I have only accounted for 70*l.* I would not be positive on that matter. This is only from memory.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

A. Allan.

(The witness.) There is nothing at all in connexion with the election of 1866. The last item I paid to Mr. Searle is 5*l.*

20,334. (Mr. Price.) That is so. "Searle, 5*l.*"?—Well, Searle never had so small a sum of money as 5*l.* at one time. That accounts for the money returned to me. It is the last money I charged him with.

20,335. Then all you got back from him is 5*l.*?—No, what I got back from him made the last payment towards him a payment of 5*l.*

20,336. How much did he hand you over as balance?—The money I charge him with having is 85*l.*; and 5*l.* is the last sum of money that he has received from me. Now he never received so small a sum as 5*l.* The money he returned to me made the last money he received from me 5*l.*

20,337. (Mr. Price.) What balance did you get from him? He has accounted for 70*l.* You put him down in the account as having received 85*l.*?—That is the money he received from me.

20,338. He has accounted for 70*l.* Did he hand you the balance of 15*l.*?—I remember making up the account, the particulars of which I do not recollect. I say he never had so small a sum from me as 5*l.*, by itself. That is the balance after what he had returned, the balance of the last money advanced to him.

20,339. Do you mean to represent that that was a balance paid you back?—That was the balance of the last instalment he had received.

20,340. I see what you mean now. You never paid him so small a sum as 5*l.*; therefore, if he gave you that, it was a balance of a larger sum.

Mr. THOMAS SEARLE recalled.

Mr. T. Searle.

20,341. (Mr. Price.) Now, what do you say, Mr. Searle. The balance of 5*l.* cannot represent the sum which he gave you, because he never paid you so small a sum as 5*l.* at one time. He thinks that 5*l.* represents a balance of a larger amount?—No, I paid him back a larger sum than that.

20,342. Do you mean to say that you ever got so small a sum as 5*l.* at a time?—That is a 10*l.* and a 15*l.* which I had received from him.

20,343. (Mr. Coleridge.) Then you returned 5*l.* out of the 15*l.*?—Decidedly not.

(Mr. Allan.) No, he returned me 10*l.* out of the 15*l.*, and that leaves the balance of 5*l.* to be charged.

(Mr. Price.) You returned him 10*l.* out of the 15*l.*, and that made it right. What do you say to that?

(The witness.) I made out an account at the time, which Mr. Allan took away from my house, and he took a book from his pocket and said it was perfectly right, as I am certain it was, and Mr. Allan will not deny it.

20,344. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did that 5*l.* go in expenses?—Decidedly not. I paid every farthing to him; I accounted for no expenses. I expended nothing but what I had paid to the voters in the election.

20,345. Who did you give it to?—That I cannot account for; I might have paid it to some man, or to Mr. Allan. I am certain I paid it for no expenses.

(Mr. Anstey.) Mr. Searle gives us that statement. Were you satisfied, Mr. Allan, with the account that Mr. Searle gave you of the expenditure?

(Mr. Allan.) Yes, I was, and I passed that account to Mr. Lovibond, who was also satisfied.

(Mr. Price, to the witness.) Therefore you must have forgotten, or something, Mr. Searle.

(The witness.) Oh, there is no question about that; I could not tax my memory.

20,346. You had 85*l.*, you spent 70*l.*, and you told me you gave 10*l.* back to Mr. Allan, so that there is 5*l.* to account for?—I cannot tell now.

(Mr. Allan.) Mr. Searle did account for all the money I charged him with at the time.

(Mr. Price.) That may be so.

20,347. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you recollect whether he accounted for it by giving so small a sum as 5*l.* for any vote?—No, I do not believe he did.

20,348. Perhaps he gave 15*l.*?

(The witness.) I believe I did; I have a strong impression that I gave one man 15*l.*

20,349. May not this be the balance of an account of monies expended at the election which took place two months before?—No. I am positive that everything of that was separate.

20,350. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything to do with Bagehot's election?—I had.

20,351. (Mr. Price.) Tell us what you did in Bagehot's?—Shall I give the money which I expended?

(Mr. Price.) Yes.

20,352. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do it whichever way you like. Give us the money you received first, or give us the money you expended first?—I never expended it; not first.

20,353. You promised it?—I promised it, and I could not get the men to go to poll without paying them. I paid the money. I paid William Benjamin Gold 10*l.*, or "William B. Gold." I do not know whether he is Benjamin or not; he lives near the bridge. I paid William Preece 10*l.*, Richard Henry Hobbs, 10*l.*, William Vickery 10*l.*, Charles Wilkins 10*l.*; 6*l.* I paid for travelling expenses from Castleford in Yorkshire to a man, the Rev. Mr. Balmer—James Tubbs Balmer, a minister.

20,354. Not a clergyman of the Church of England; you don't mean that?—I mean a minister of the Methodist Free Church.

20,355. (Mr. Anstey.) Is he alive?—Yes.

20,356. Where is he?—I can give you the name in the evening, but I could not now. He was at Castleford, at the time; Castleford in Yorkshire.

20,357. He is not in Bridgwater now?—Oh, dear no. He was a minister at this time.

20,358. (Mr. Price.) Did he vote for his chapel, or what qualification had he?—For a residence; a house.

TWENTIETH DAY.

Mr. T. Searle.

15 Sept. 1869.

20,359. Still he had his residence?—He had a residence in this town; his vote had not expired at the time of the election.

20,360. (Mr. Anstey.) You mean that he is now residing in the north-east, or that he was then absent in the north-east; which do you say?—He was at Castleford; he left Bridgwater.

20,361. He had permanently left Bridgwater at the time?—Yes, and gone to another circuit; they only stop three years in one circuit.

20,362. Then his vote would be bad on a scrutiny; but he could manage to vote, no doubt. He was on the register, and he voted?—I wrote to him myself.

20,363. And you paid him his expenses?—I paid him 6*l.*

20,364. (Mr. Price.) What do you make that altogether?—56*l.*

20,365. Did you pay all that, or was some of that promises?—I paid the whole of it.

20,366. On the polling day?—On the polling day, before they went to poll.

20,367. Did you promise any others?—I do not remember.

20,368. That would be very little more than his expenses?—I do not believe it covered his expenses. I asked him, "What were your expenses?" and he said, "Five or six pounds;" and I gave him 6*l.*

20,369. I should think it would hardly cover it; Castleford is up very near York?—No; and he paid his own expenses while he was waiting in the town two or three days.

20,370. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you take any opinion as to whether it was a legal expenditure or not? Did you ask any of the lawyers whether they thought it a legal expenditure or not?—I think I asked Mr. Cook.

20,371. What did he tell you?—He said it was a very little expense.

20,372. Did he tell you it was legal—lawful?—Oh, I do not remember that circumstance; I did not ask him that.

20,373. (Mr. Coleridge.) You did not care about that?—Well, I do not know about caring.

20,374. (Mr. Price.) Did you get that money paid back to you?—I did.

20,375. The whole?—From Bussell. He paid it to me, I think, about three days afterwards.

20,376. (Mr. Coleridge.) And anything more?—Not a farthing.

20,377. Nothing for your trouble?—Nothing; I never had in my experience.

(Mr. Price.) Can you go to any other election, that of 1865?

20,378. (Mr. Coleridge.) Kinglake and Shelley. But before you go on, will you tell us which of the William Preece's was it you paid. Was it Monmouth Street or Back Quay?—Just at the back of this hall.

20,379. Back Quay?—Oh, no. They would call it Back Street, I expect.

20,380. There is one William Preece on the register "Back Quay," and another "Monmouth Street"?—It is here, close at hand; I think it is Back Street. It is two doors from my house.

20,381. (Mr. Price.) Now, then, with regard to 1865, Shelley; what part did you take then?—I took no part in that election, not in bribing any man.

20,382. Or treating?—I did; I spent somewhat. There were several men which I took to the poll which were promised money, and it was never forthcoming.

20,383. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who promised them?—Oh no, I mistake. I beg your pardon, not at Shelley's election; I paid no man a farthing.

20,384. (Mr. Price.) Did you treat anybody at that election?—I do not remember that I did.

20,385. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you promise anybody at that election?—No, not a soul.

20,386. Did you hold out any expectation to them?—No. I was several times with Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Bate at the time; they said there was no money for them.

20,387. (Mr. Price.) You were going to speak of some other election?—The election of 1859. I bribed a man of the name of William Dibble in 1859.

20,388. What did you give him?—I gave him 10*l.*

20,389. Where did you get it?—From Captain Bussell.

20,390. Who else?—No one. I do not remember of a single instance.

20,391. Was that all the money you had that time?—I only just took it from one hand, and put it into another.

20,392. (Mr. Anstey.) Was Dibble a Conservative voter? Were Dibble's politics Conservative?—I think he was.

20,393. James Dibble?—No, I think his name is William Dibble; I think he is under the employ of the ex-mayor, Mr. Smith, at the present time.

20,394. Not the turner? He is not a turner by trade?—Oh, dear no.

20,395. (Mr. Price.) Well, then, any election before that?—No, I do not remember. I never have bribed no man. I voted at Gazelee's election and Tynte's, but I took no part in bribing, and I had nothing to do with it.

20,396. But there was an election in 1857, you know. Did you have anything to do with that?—1857; I never bribed any man at that time, not more than out of my own pocket. There was a man of the name of Charles White; I gave him 4*l.* or 5*l.* I promised that I would pay him if he voted at the poll, and, in fact, I was told by Foster and Henry Faun if I would get them up to the poll, two or three of them, that they would pay me afterwards.

20,397. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which election are you speaking of?—1857 election.

20,398. (Mr. Anstey.) You paid Charles White?—Charles White. 5*l.* I believe I paid him.

20,399. Did they keep their promise and make good the money to you?—No, they did not.

20,400. Who did?—I was paid back that balance that Mr. Cook gave you of 11*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* somewhere about, I think, four or five years ago.

20,401. You mean at the election of —— ?—Sir John Shelley. Before the election of Shelley.

20,402. Who repaid it to you?—Mr. Cook.

20,403. Mr. Cook the lawyer?—Yes.

20,404. "Mr. Thomas Searle, amount of his account "for 1857 and 1859, arranged to be paid on canvass, "11*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.*"?—It was before the canvass that he paid me back; the 1st July that he paid me that money.

20,405. The 30th June?—That was somewhere about it.

20,406. Then, at all events, I understand you to say that the item of the 30th June 1865, 11*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.*, includes the 5*l.* which you had paid to this man in 1857, and had been owing to you all that time?—And another voter I paid.

20,407. But is that so?—That is so.

20,408. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is this Charles White dead or alive; he is not on the register?—He has left this town for some years. I do not know where he is. I think he is in North Wales somewhere. There was another man (but I cannot give you his name) that I paid at the time.

20,409. (Mr. Anstey.) At the 1857?—At the 1857.

20,410. How much?—Three or four pounds I paid him.

20,411. Who repaid that?—That was in the same account. Mr. Bate promised to pay me.

20,412. The late Mr. Bate?—The late Mr. Bate promised to see me paid, and likewise Foster, and likewise Henry Faun; but they never did pay me, and I have asked them again and again for it.

20,413. What reasons did they give for not paying it?—They said Tynte had not paid his account, and they could not settle it up, and I was the sufferer after that time.

20,414. Then you do not agree with those witnesses who represent the election of 1857 to have been a pure election?—Well, I do not believe it was. I do not believe in 1857 it was a pure election, because there were many men that were promised, and I promised them under the impression that I should get paid again, but I never was paid.

20,415. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many did you promise?—Three or four at the time, I have no doubt.

20,416. (Mr. Anstey.) You voted, I think, in 1865 for Kinglake and Shelley?—I did.

20,417. After having been repaid this sum of 11*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.*?—Not on that account.

20,418. No, but after?—I have voted for 30 years in this town.

20,419. You did vote after that?—I did.

20,420. And you had previously obtained this payment?—I did, which was due to me.

20,421. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you vote in 1852?—I think not.

20,422. At Lord Henley's election you voted, I suppose?—I voted in Lord Henley's election for Gazelee, Serjeant Gazelee.

20,423. Did you do any bribery then?—I did not.

20,424. When was the first time you ever did any bribery?—I have just told you.

20,425. Was that the first time?—That was the first time that ever I touched anything of the sort.

20,426. (Mr. Anstey.) Who persuaded you to do it?—Well, I cannot tell you who. I think I was mixed up with Faun and Foster, and Captain Bussell at the time.

20,427. (Mr. Coleridge.) What has become of Thorn?—It is Henry Faun.

20,428. (Mr. Anstey.) He is dead?—He has been dead for years.

20,429. (Mr. Price.) Have you never made anything by it yourself then, Mr. Searle?—Never.

20,430. Are you out of pocket now?—Well, I do not know about out of pocket. I have no doubt I might have been out of pocket, but these little matters I never keep in my head. I never had anything for it.

20,431. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the first election you remember?—The first election I remember, I think, was Broadwood's election, the last time, I think, Broadwood came here.

20,432. That was 1847?—Yes, 1847, I think. I voted in his election. No man ever tempted me, never asked me in any manner, direct or indirect, but Richard Smith said at the time if I would vote for Broadwood he would try to forward me in trade. That is the only man that ever held out the slightest thing in my experience.

20,433. When you got repaid this bill by Mr. Cook was that money you had actually expended, or had you charged interest for the time it had been owing?—That was money I had expended. I should be very sorry to charge interest.

20,434. What, after the seven or eight years you were kept out of your money?—Just so.

20,435. (Mr. Price.) Will you explain to us, Mr. Searle, in your own justification, how it was that you came to make that claim, and how it was that claim was liquidated previously to your voting on that occasion?—I will explain how the matter came up. I built this Town Hall, and there wds a dispute between me and the corporation, and I had a little bit of law, too much for my profit, and I had a good deal to do with Mr. Reed and Cook at that time respecting this building.

20,436. Were they your solicitors?—They were.

20,437. You made a claim for extras or something beyond your contract?—That was just it.

20,438. Very well, go on?—While we were there, I asked him about the money which I had paid out of my pocket in previous years, and Mr. Cook paid me. I had applied both to him and Mr. Bate and Mr. Benjamin Lovibond repeatedly before, and they promised I should have it.

20,439. Mr. Cook was told by you that you should expect to be paid that amount?—He had heard me apply for it before to Mr. Bate, I believe. I have no doubt I had told him so, and no doubt he had heard before the account was standing.

20,440. It that all you have to tell us?—That is all I know, that I can refresh my memory with.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

H. C. Bussell.

20,441. (Mr. Anstey.) I just want to ask you one question. My question is concerning the man Robert Coles, mentioned before in the examination; my examination of Mr. Sully. Turn your recollection back to the election of 1865, when Kinglake and Sir John Shelley stood together. Did you see Robert Coles on that day, the polling day?—No.

20,442. Did you at any time during the election learn from him that he had promised his vote to Mr. Westropp?—I should like to explain that matter, if you would allow me.

20,443. (Mr. Price.) You had better answer the question. Did you hear from him that he had promised his vote to Mr. Westropp?—No, I never heard from him that he had promised Mr. Westropp.

20,444. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you say this to him, "Don't vote for him. Vote for Kinglake and Sir "John Shelley"?—No, I did not.

20,445. Did you say to him anything to this effect, "Now is your time if you have a mind to do your-"self any good; let me know what you want, and I "will get it for you?"—No, I did not.

20,446. Did he tell you anything to this effect, at any time, during that election you know, "You must "get plenty of money if you serve all the voters "alike"?—No, he did not.

20,447. Did you say anything to him to this effect, "Well, on the last election we carried our two mem-"bers by tens and fifteens, and we are better prepared "this time, and I hope we shall carry them again for "Sir John Shelley has got plenty of money"?—No, I did not.

20,448. Did he say to you, "Let Sir John Shelley "keep it himself, I am not going to be bribed by you "or any other man, for I shall vote for Mr. Westropp. "It is of no use; I have promised Mr. Westropp, and "I shall vote for him"?—I did not exactly catch that question.

(Mr. Price.) Did he say that to you?

20,449. (Mr. Anstey.) Or anything like it?—No.

20,450. (Mr. Price.) "Sir John Shelley had better "keep his money. I shall vote for Westropp. I don't "intend to be bribed by you or anybody else"?—No, he did not.

20,451. He said nothing of that kind?—Nothing of the sort.

20,452. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you ever hear that he deposed to that effect before the committee of the House of Commons?—I knew it, and I was in the lobby at the time. I should like to explain that. I have never had the opportunity, and I should like to do it now.

20,453. Certainly.—I had a conversation. The fact of it was, Mr. Westropp was canvassing here, and at the time he had been down the quay. I believe at the time Sir John Shelley was not in the town. I think that was the very day there was the hitch against Mr. Lovibond going to London. Mr. Westropp had been down to where he was canvassing, and this man followed him back. I was stood by John Smith's, York House door, and I knew some parties down the street would be a little bit suspicious if they saw me speak to anybody; and I went up to Coles, and I said, "Coles, have you promised your vote?" and he said, "No, I have not. I am not going to yet." I did not ask him to promise or anything else, for this very reason, I knew that his sons were in the employ of the Conservative lawyers, and that if I was to say anything of that sort to him it would be the very thing they would go and tell directly. That was the reason why I was very cautious with him. I knew that the man's sons were employed by Mr. Smith.

20,454. Therefore if you had been called as a witness on that occasion you would have denied it?—I should have denied it every word, in toto.

A. Allan.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

20,455. (Mr. Price.) I see, Mr. Allan, referring to the matter of Bond and Gold, I see you have put down Wittridge in your list as 10*l.* On other occasions when it went through the hands of somebody else you have put it down differently. For instance, "Gold for Trapnell" follows Wittridge immediately; and you have put down "John Richards by Crocker;" and so at other times when it went through other hands; but you have put it down as a direct payment to Wittridge of 10*l.*?—It does appear like that, and I cannot account for it, but there is only 10*l.* charged to Gold, and that makes the 20*l.* he has accounted for.

20,456. That does not throw any light upon that particular dispute. You have put it down as a direct payment to Wittridge, but it was not a direct payment to Wittridge by yourself?—I cannot account for it. I did not know Wittridge till I saw him in court.

H. C. Bussell.

HENRY CHAPMAN BUSSELL recalled.

(Witness.) There is one matter with regard to Coles. I went to this trial at Taunton, and was prepared to go into the box if they had gone on with the defence, and prove what Coles swore up there was false. That was at the trial at Taunton, where they recovered a verdict, but they did not go into the defence then.

20,457. (Mr. Price.) When they brought the action?—When they brought the action against the minister of the Baptist chapel. I knew he had sworn falsely, and had not any opportunity of contradicting it.

20,458. There was no justification?—No, not at all. (Mr. Price.) Then, of course, they did not call you?

Mr. J. Cook.

Mr. JAMES COOK recalled.

20,459. (Mr. Anstey.) I don't want you to come into the box. Some statements have been made on the subject of Mr. Vanderbyl's letter referred to in an examination either in bankruptcy or in the winding-up in chancery of the Lundy Island Company; and you know several times in the course of the examination that passage in the brief, your brief of the last election, which referred to that matter has been read in this court. May I ask you, did you prepare that portion of the brief from information furnished to you by Mr. Vanderbyl?—I have no doubt of it.

20,460. Therefore in stating, as you have done there, that the letter in question did allude to the rigging of the market, and was Mr. Vanderbyl's letter, you made the statement upon the authority of Mr. Vanderbyl himself?—Yes, I believe so; and I may state, sir, that when Mr. Purcell, the secretary to the Commission, asked for the brief which had been prepared for the defence of the seat, I felt it due to Mr. Vanderbyl as my client to state that we had received the application, and receive his sanction as to its being handed over; upon which I said to Mr. Vanderbyl, "You had better take the brief and read it through," and he had it for the purpose, and returned it to me sanctioning its being handed over to Mr. Purcell.

20,461. (Mr. Price.) I was going to ask you about this 11*l.* to Searle?—You will find that is one of the things upon which I was examined by you; that it came to our knowledge that there was a sum of 11*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* outstanding as due to Mr. Searle in respect to prior elections. I do not know that I was aware of his application until the day of payment, when he did say that he had been promised over and over again, and payment was made by our firm, and subsequently charged to Mr. Kinglake, and paid, I think, in the month of January last year. I was examined about it before.

20,462. You were examined about it before, but there was an impression upon the mind of one of my learned colleagues that you could not account for that payment?—No, I accounted for it as being a payment to him of a balance from former elections.

20,463. Your recollection of the matter accords with what Mr. Searle has told us?—Yes. I think you yourself put the question to me, having the paper in front of you at the time.

20,464. (Mr Anstey.) I understood you to say that you did not know that the monies which had been standing over from 1857 were monies paid in respect to corrupt practices?—I did not know how it was made up; I understood it was a balance.

20,465. But you knew there was a balance, as he called it, for what had been done at previous elections?—At previous elections. Perhaps the learned Commissioner, Mr. Anstey, will permit me to state that as he put a question to me as to whether the Messrs. Kinglake were shareholders in Stuckey's bank, I have made the inquiry, and I find that Dr. Kinglake and his brother Arthur Kinglake, at Weston-super-Mare, have been for many years shareholders, but that the late member, Mr. Alexander Kinglake, is not a shareholder.

Mr. P. O. H. Reed.

Mr. P. O. H. REED recalled.

(The witness.) In the report of my examination yesterday in the "Mercury," there are one or two apparent misprints, and the first would be as to my conversation with Mr. Lovibond on the Monday morning. It is here stated that my evidence was that there would be no money. My evidence was that there would be money. The second misprint is that Mr. Lovibond said over and over again that he never knew where that money came from, and he told people he did not know where it came from, and that Messrs. Reed and Cook must know. My statement was that Mr. Lovibond alleged that he knew where Bussell's money came from, but I never understood that he alleged he knew where Allan's money came from.

20,466. (Mr. Price.) I have no doubt that our shorthand writer has it correctly, but I understood you to say that Mr. Lovibond continually said to you that he knew where Mr. Kinglake's money came from?—Certainly.

20,467. (Mr. Price.) You will not be judged by the "Bridgwater Mercury."—Some time afterwards Mr. Cook made a communication to me to the effect that he had just seen Bussell, who told him that men were hanging about, and I asked him to see what could be done. My evidence was that "I, Mr. Cook," would see what could be done. There is one slight inaccuracy further on, about it is not fair to bleed one lung.

20,468. (Mr. Price.) The fact is, we are not responsible for what appears in the papers. There may be a mistake made here which you may wish to have made quite straight, but your evidence will be taken, and as far as I can judge there is hardly a mistake made by the shorthand writer who makes our transcript, therefore you may rely on its being pretty correctly taken there; and if any witnesses come to contradict what you stated, what we should do with you and other witnesses would be to refer to the shorthand note, and judge of it by that; therefore you need not fear any contradiction on any point without reference to the authenticated note of our shorthand writer, and upon that the conflict would arise, not upon anything that might happen by mistake, which it is very natural to make in the hurry of taking down evidence. Now, I think you carried us up last night to the time of the petition, when you begged Mr. Trevor not to cross-examine Mr. Vanderbyl. That closed the inquiry with regard to the last election?—I wish to say something further. Upon my return to the office last night I read a copy of the correspondence between our firm and Mr. Vanderbyl. Mr. Cook entirely conducted that correspondence from first to last. I believe I may truly say that I never wrote a line in my life to Mr. Vanderbyl on matters connected with the election; but on reading one of the letters, I saw that an appointment was made for our being at Mr. Vanderbyl's house some few days before the hearing of the petition, and we expected to meet there Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Lomas, but when we came we found from Mr. Vanderbyl that there was a letter from Mr. Fennelly, the sum and substance of which was that he had taken a severe cold, and was unable to leave the continent, unable to leave his room. We did hope on that occasion that both of them would have been present, because our desire was (we saw it was perfectly impossible to settle it without them) that they must go into the box and make their statements, and afterwards we went to the parliamentary agent, Mr. Wyatt. Mr. Vanderbyl met us by appointment there; he was in the room a very short time, when we requested him to leave, and upon that occasion we informed Mr. Wyatt that we were disappointed at Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Lomas not being, as we expected, with Mr. Vanderbyl; and Mr. Wyatt said, "My impression is, the farther they are away the "better."

20,469. (Mr. Price.) "The longer away they are the better"?—Something like that, "The further off they are the better; and we stated, it is perfectly "impossible for the seat to be saved, and if we go into "the box we must speak the truth, and intend to;" and Mr. Wyatt's answer was this: "They will never "venture to call the lawyers, and I have pulled "through many worse cases before." We could not reason with Mr. Wyatt; he was determined to fight it out, and we thought the other way.

20,470. He said he had fought many worse cases than that at Bridgwater?—Yes, he reasoned against light and everything else. That is all I know with reference to the last election. I have taxed my memory, but I cannot recollect a single further thing.

20,471. Have you made out any bills of costs for your services at the last election?—Not delivered?

20,472. Irrespective of the petition costs?—No; but day by day they were entered into the ledger, and the day book and ledger will speak for themselves.

20,473. Now go to Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866?—I went to London and saw Mr. Bagehot with reference to his again standing. It was with the full knowledge and sanction, and I may say at the request of Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham that I went. I saw Mr. Bagehot, and he declined to stand, and as far as I recollect his reasons were given why he would not, and one was, that he saw no reason why the previous decision of electors should be reversed; and in the second case what stood apparently much in the way of Mr. Bagehot standing was that it was contrary to etiquette to go down and oppose a gentleman who had just taken office. Those were the reasons he presented to me.

20,474. (Mr. Price.) And not anything with regard to money?—No; I did not talk to Mr. Bagehot on money. The next thing, as far as I recollect, was when I came back I found Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham were away, and my impression is that while I was in London in my correspondence with the firm, Mr. Cook may have stated that it was the fact that they were looking after a candidate, but the Monday after the election the first thing that came to my notice was a letter from Mr. Lovibond, and I went to Mr. Lovibond's office, and they stated that they had found a candidate who turned out to be Mr. Vanderbyl, and Mr. Lovibond read the draft of Mr. Vanderbyl's address, which had not then been printed. As far as I recollect some few slight alterations were made, and it went into the printer's hands. Then Mr. Cook has detailed to you the letter to Bottomley as to Mr. Haviland going for him. It is all within my knowledge it was done. Mr. Cook caused it to be done, but it was with my knowledge. Rookley was also sent for by Dyment at Wimbledon, and a sunstroke taking him on the way down he was unable to leave London. As to the money spent on that occasion not a farthing came into our hands, nor did we direct any at all. I was aware money was going. Mr. Lovibond told us Mr. Vanderbyl was a rich man, and I was perfectly aware on the nomination day that money would be spent, and on the polling day that money was being spent, but I took no part in expending money or sending people to be paid.

20,475. (Mr. Price.) At that election were you in the complete confidence, did you understand or believe, of Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham with regard to electioneering matters, or not?—No, we fully believed we were never fairly treated. They told us what they liked and kept back what they liked.

20,476. That had something to do with your only getting 100*l.* between you as compared with what they got?—I never knew what Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Barham received.

20,477. Now you have heard that difference it confirms you?—There was another reason, once or twice my name was published as one of the agents receiving so much money, but I never knew that Mr. Lovibond would allow the same to be done with his, and I always thought that he had received considerably more.

20,478. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever ask him?—It was no use.

20,479. Did you know?—No.

20,480. (Mr. Price.) Why was it no use?—He would not have told me, it was concealed probably; that was my impression.

20,481. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you ever ask Mr. Barham?—I cannot say I have. Mr. Cook has spoken of that election, that we received on the 25th August 50*l.* each, and also on the 7th September through Mr. Barham as being legitimate payments the sum of 12*l.*

20,482. (Mr. Price.) When you were first engaged in this matter of electioneering as a legal agent, although for very illegal purposes, did you understand that you were to do it gratuitously or not?—Certainly not, and I have not said so. It would not answer my purpose to give up my time. I have not represented so to a soul.

20,483. (Mr. Coleridge.) How do you account for Bussell and these men having the notion that you did it gratuitously as they alleged they did?—I was never mixed up with the accounts being made up, and I was not aware until I heard it in this court that they held such an opinion.

20,484. Is that all you have to tell us?—Yes.

20,485. The election before, Bagehot's election, had you any part in that?—Yes, certainly. Mr. Cook has placed before the court certain letters, and the first thing I recollect was on May the 12th I went to London with Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham. My impression is, I am not clear as to that, that we could not find a candidate, and we searched high and low; we saw lots of people, some rich, some old, and some young.

20,486. (Mr. Price.) Who were the persons in London with whom you put yourself in communication in the first instance?—As far as I recollect it was the firm mentioned the other day, of whom one has been made a baronet.

20,487. No, not quite ; but a knight. No doubt in the course of time, he may reach that; it is something Drake ?—Yes.

20,488. He writes to us to say he knows nothing at all about Bridgwater elections, therefore we want to know what Sir William Drake knows about it ?—We went to the office several times.

20,489. Do you know this gentleman ?—No, but my impression is that on these occasions, I was, if I may say so, a mere cipher. Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond chiefly did it.

20,490. But you went to Mr. Drake's office ?—We did, we communicated with lots of people, but the difficulty was to get a candidate.

20,491. What was the difficulty ?—It was a question of money ; they did not like the place, they knew as much about it as we did. When in London, I understood on the Sunday Mr. Barham has referred to, there was a conversation between Mr. Barham and myself as to Mr. Lovibond monopolizing Mr. Kinglake. That took place. No doubt Mr. Barham has repeated so far as he can remember what is correct, but he put it like this, that he was as anxious as I that the political power might be shared fairly, and I said he had better represent the other candidate coming down, and his answer was, that being mixed up with the town clerk it would not do to be agent of one of the candidates, but then it was suggested that the candidate coming down should be ours, which was done, but Mr. Barham stipulated this, that any political power or fresh batch of gentlemen sent to London to be made justices, he should be allowed to nominate some of his friends, and that in all things of that sort he should take part.

20,492. (Mr. Price.) Let me understand ; whenever you were in communication with this gentleman, Mr. Drake, at all events he was the gentleman who suggested candidates to you ?—That is my impression. I am not clear.

20,493. And with whom you discussed, whoever he was we shall no doubt have the gentleman here, and you will be able or someone else to identify him ; did he discuss the probabilities of the election ?—I do not know that I should know him again.

20,494. But whoever he was at Mr. Drake's office that you saw, with that gentleman you discussed Mr. Bagehot's election ?—To a certain extent. It was Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond ; I did very little 20,495. In his presence it was discussed ?—Yes, that is my impression.

20,496. We have had a letter from Mr. Drake, in which he tells us that he knows nothing of Mr. Bagehot's election ; now we hear that you, Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Barham were all in communication with him, and I want to know whether in your presence the matter of the Bridgwater election, when Mr. Bagehot came forward, was thoroughly discussed, and the eligibility of the different candidates, and the prospects of success, and so forth ?—As far as I recollect, it was simply recommending who would be likely to be candidates for Bridgwater.

20,497. But the thing was discussed about money, and whether it would cost anything ?—Well, they knew pretty well the place.

20,498. Then Mr. Drake cannot be right in saying he knows nothing about Bridgwater elections ?—No, I should say not certainly.

20,499. If he is the gentleman you name ?—Certainly. On the 2nd June 1866 I find I went to London, and that arose as follows : quite by accident I went to Mr. Lovibond's office, and when there I found Mr. Barham with Mr. Lovibond, and it came out then for the first time as to the mode which would be necessary to fight the election, and the question was, how is the money to be obtained ? It will not do to go to the candidate, who are the candidate's solicitors ? Then that could not be ascertained, and it was suggested whether Mr. Watson Bagehot was at home, who was a cousin of the candidate, and I went into the town, and found out from Wimple, the clerk at Langport, that he was in London, and so I came back and reported that to Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham. Then the question was who was to go to London, it is a dangerous thing to do. Mr. Barham states that I jumped at it. I do sincerely deny it, and it was perfectly clear that some one must go, and it fell to my lot and I went. That was on Saturday. The next day, having obtained Mr. Watson Bagehot's address, I called at Mr. Bagehot's place, but he was out. Soon afterwards he returned, and I referred to the Bridgwater election, that Mr. Bagehot was very popular there, and was satisfied that if the Conservatives had money we must do the same, or the candidate could not succeed. Mr. Bagehot expressed himself very coolly on the matter, that he was certain his cousin would be no party to expending money, and I said no more on it and left. I went to see Mr. Cooper, and asked if there was any chance of money being obtained from the Reform Club.

20,500. What is Mr. Cooper ?—The parliamentary agent. He said certainly not, it would be a very dangerous thing to us now. I went and saw Mr. Travers Smith.

20,501. The gentleman who called you a lunatic ?—Yes, and so I was at the time, it was true enough ; and he said there was no chance of money, but the best thing was to get a detective to prevent bribery, and it was arranged that one should come down ; and I then returned on the Monday following, and communicated the next morning to Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond the result of my journey.

20,502. Did you ask Mr. Travers Smith to send 3,000*l.* down ?—I cannot tell. I certainly asked him for money. There is no doubt about it. It is very likely whatever he states I did. Whatever I did was with the full knowledge and sanction of Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond. A few days afterwards I received by hand a letter as follows :

" Dear sir, 5th June 1866.

" The bearer is the person to whom I alluded " on Sunday. I wrote, but under cover to Mr. C.," (Mr. Carslake that means) " which will explain the " fact of no letter from me having been received.

" I am, dear sir, yours truly,

" J. Travers Smith."

The messenger came at once, apparently a detective. He was staying at the " Albion," which was about the head quarters of the Conservatives. I saw him twice, and heard he was staying at the house, and passed himself off as a traveller going through.

20,503. What name had he ?—I do not know, but he told me he had become on friendly and confidential terms with the landlord, and he was in a great state about the money being expected from London, but it had not arrived, and the question was whether any money would be used. I saw the man once or twice afterwards, but he never gave me any information of bribery on the other side.

20,504. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who paid the detective ?—I never paid a shilling, nor did I hear of any claim.

20,505. Do you suppose Mr. Travers Smith paid him ?—Well, the man would not come without being paid.

20,506. Did he never ask for money here ?—Never ; but I was never present when any accounts were being made up. It would be in Mr. Lovibond's accounts. I have no knowledge.

(Mr. Price.) Do you know about this, Mr. Cook ?

(Mr. Cook.) I do not know.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It was not passed through any account you know ?

(Mr. Cook.) Not at all.

(The witness.) The next evening I dined with Mr. Bate, and Mr. Barham also dined, and I am not sure whether Mr. Bagehot. I am not clear whether Mr. Barham dined there, my impression is that he dined there, but we left soon after dinner, that is, Mr. Lovibond and myself, and Mr. Barham said, " We are going to raise money, you must go in." I said, "Very well," but how it was raised or spent or where it was obtained I do not know. I gave him a guarantee certainly.

20,507. (Mr. Coleridge.) I thought you were all four in it?—I understood from Mr. Lovibond that Mr. Bate and Mr. Barham were going in, and I must go in.

20,508. You did not give any scrip?—No.

20,509. You understood you were to be a guarantor?—Certainly.

20,510. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean that you did not understand what your liability was to be?—I understood 1,000*l.* between four, but how it was obtained, or where it was obtained from, I do not possess the least information. That was Mr. Bagehot's election, and the Liberals were ahead, and apparently the election was Mr. Bagehot's.

20,511. Have you no idea, now, where that money came from?—Except what I have been told in court.

20,512. (Mr. Coleridge.) By Mr. Barham's cheques?—Yes, Mr. Barham's cheques. It is in evidence before you how Mr. Bagehot was ahead and apparently elected; and I saw Mr. Lovibond about half-past 9 on the Cornhill, and he told me on that occasion that he had stopped the money, it was going too freely, and apparently there was none on the other side. We found about 2 o'clock that the Conservatives were close upon us; no end of men were bottled away at the "Clarence," as you have heard, and then the question was, "Can we get so many people, or the election is lost?" We agreed that no money was to be paid unless as many voters could be obtained. I recollect at that election we saw two men, one was King, a pastrycook and a member of the Plymouth Brethren; I made him no offer, but shortly after he polled for Mr. Patton, and I afterwards went and saw Mr. Chedsey; my impression is that Mr. Barham was present, but I know as far as I am concerned that I tempted Chedsey. We were close upon each other; Chedsey was unwilling to poll at all, and I said, "Chedsey, you had better poll; would 50*l.* be of any service?" And he refused. At the same time, William Henry Batten came in. No doubt he induced Chedsey to vote for Mr. Patton, and I left.

20,513. How did he vote after all?—I do not think he voted at all.

20,514. Did he have anything for not voting?—No, I do not look on Mr. Chedsey in that light.

20,515. You did not give him anything?—No, not a farthing. I saw Bottomley, who came up to vote. I have taxed my memory, but I do not know that I held out any inducement to him. Mr. Cook has told you about the two guineas. I have no recollection of it. I am told that at Mr. Vanderbyl's election he had 10*l.* We can give his address; it is in Birmingham somewhere. Then we received, as Mr. Barham puts in evidence, 13*l.* 5*s.* for payments, and 50*l.* for our joint services. That is at Mr. Bagehot's election.

20,516. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is that all you had to do with that election?—Yes. I told you I understood there was money, but we never handled it, and were never present when the accounts were made up.

20,517. Now go to 1865?—At the 1865 election I did part of the canvassing.

20,518. Was any money spent as far as you know?—I do not believe a shilling was spent by the Liberals.

20,519. There was a good deal of treating, which was afterwards paid for by Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

29,520. Was there any attempt to get money?—No, I did not believe that money was spent.

20,521. But was not there that same sort of meeting that there was in 1868?—I was never in Mr. Lovibond's confidence. All I know is that I was at that meeting referred to by some of the witnesses at Mr. Lovibond's house on the day of the nomination. No end of people were there, apparently money was going to be spent, but suddenly I recollect Mr. Lovibond arose, about 12 o'clock, and said, "Gentlemen, I wish you to understand that no money will be spent." That is the only phrase that took place between Mr. Lovibond and myself.

20,522. Do you know anything about money being spent by the Conservative side at that time?—Except by public report.

20,523. No doubt there was?—No doubt there was.

20,524. Now the other elections. In April 1859, Mr. Padwick, Mr. Tynte, Mr. Kinglake, and Mr. Westropp?—I canvassed, and received 25*l.* I know nothing of money one way or the other.

20,525. You know that money was spent?—I have not the slightest information.

20,526. Do not you know that Mr. Kinglake paid 1,100*l.* to Mr. Bate afterwards?—Never.

20,257. As there was no money going, how can you account for 1,100*l.* being spent over and above the legitimate expenses? It must have left some mark after it?—No money was spent, I beg your pardon. Now I think I may say something; apparently the report in Bridgwater at the time was this, that early in the morning of the poll, long before it commenced, Mr. Richard Smith, at the "Clarence," congratulated Mr. Padwick and Mr. Westropp as being members, but, as I understood afterwards, the same men who had promised to poll for them, went and polled the other way.

20,528. And Tynte and Kinglake came in?—Yes. I now come to the election of 1857, Mr. Follett, Mr. Tynte, and Mr. Kinglake. I simply canvassed, and received 25*l.* from Colonel Tynte and 25*l.* from Mr. Kinglake.

20,529. Do you know anything about money at that election?—I do not the slightest.

20,530. By rumour?—No.

20,531. Surely the people must give an indication of what is going on?—They always expect, no doubt.

20,532. Your impression is that money was spent, but you knew nothing about it?—I fully believed it. Then I come to my first election, in 1852. I plumped for Mr. Kinglake, and received 25*l.*

20,533. How came you to plump for Mr. Kinglake?—Mr. Bate was my friend then. I think he was 30 years my senior.

20,534. But you did him no good?—No, but the question was to show Mr. Kinglake's strength as much as we could.

20,535. (Mr. Price.) He was first coming out, and the object was to show as strong a party for him as you could?—Yes.

20,536. He failed that time?—He polled 99. He was the last on the poll.

20,537. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did Lord Henley poll?—140, I think.

20,538. The next lowest?—The next lowest, and then Colonel Tynte and Mr. Follett came in, and I think I may say this, if my memory is correct, that Colonel Tynte and Mr. Mansell were ahead a long time early in the morning.

20,539. Is that the first election you know anything about practically?—Yes.

20,540. (Mr. Price.) Now have you finished all the statements you had to make?—I have.

20,541. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have a correspondence to hand to us which has been copied?—Certainly.

20,542. That being so, you have told us everything. We trust that you have, because you heard everything that I said about the hesitation we had to examine you, but the majority of the Commissioners had come to the determination to to so, and we trust you have made a full disclosure of everything you know, and of course if anything turns up in the course of the inquiry we shall look at it in a very different light if it shows that you have not told us the whole?—I perfectly understand the caution you have given me, and I understand the position I am in, and understanding that, to the best of my ability I have made a full and truthful disclosure of all the knowledge within my power.

(Mr. Coleridge.) And as far as we have gone it seems satisfactory.

Mr. James Wood Sully recalled.

20,543. (Mr. Anstey.) I wish to know whether you drew Mr. Vanderbyl's attention to the flagrant contradiction between his answers to you on the morning of the Saturday and the conduct of the attorneys in the Liberal interest, and the conduct of the Liberal party generally, with regard to the expenditure of the money. You say you were very much shocked when you went to that meeting, and the more so, because the promise you had given to Mr. Vanderbyl sealed your mouth. It did not seal your mouth to him. Did you ever remonstrate with him about it?—I have never seen him to speak to him since.

20,544. I thought you said you saw him on the nomination day and on the return?—Precisely, but not to have any conversation with him since.

20,545. Not to make an observation of that kind?—Not the slightest allusion.

20,546. Did you see him last night?—I have not seen him since.

20,547. Have you had any correspondence with him?—Certainly not. An allusion has just been made to Lord Henley's election, and reference has been made during this inquiry to it. Will you kindly allow me to do his lordship the justice to refer to that election?

20,548. (Mr. Price.) You may tell us about any elections in which you have taken part. It is for that object you are here. You have begun with 1868, and we would rather take you upwards?—Then we go to Mr. Vanderbyl's election in 1866. Prior to that election, and I think the writ was issued, I was attending to my business in Lydney in Gloucestershire. I took no part in the election, but simply came and recorded my vote. I never saw Mr. Vanderbyl until I saw him on the hustings on the day of the nomination, and never spoke to him until eight or ten days afterwards, when I met him on the quay, when he was with one of the solicitors, returning thanks, and I returned with him, and simply recorded my vote, and had nothing to do with the election.

20,549. (Mr. Anstey.) The question is, can you tell us anything about corrupt practices at that election?—Oh dear no; I should be the last to hear anything bonâ fide I can speak to. I can only speak to vague reports; I have no knowledge. Then the next election, I think it was Mr. Bagehot's, I understood it was to be a fair stand-up fight. Mr. Bagehot professed to set his face against anything that was wrong, and I know he spoke very strongly in reference to that at a meeting which was held at the "George Arms." Looking at my subpœna, I find I was required to bring any papers in my possession, and I searched for anything I might have. I find I have a "Bridgwater Mercury," which gives a report of Mr. Bagehot's speech at that time, and there are about a dozen lines which, with your permission, I should like to read. "I need say no more to you on the "state of the nation, but I want to say one word as "to the state of the borough. We know that for a "long time the Liberal party has been triumphant "here, and we know that at the last election that "party suffered a temporary but disastrous eclipse, "and we know by what foul means that eclipse was "produced (hear, hear). I do not mean to touch on "the details, but I have a practical remark to make "about it. There is a remarkable class of people "whose position in the matter I do not understand. "I understand Mr. Westropp's, and I do not want to "be hard upon him; after all, he has suffered a great "penalty in being excluded from Parliament. He "was very ambitious of the seat, and therefore had "great temptation. I can, too, make allowance for "the poor voter. He is, most likely, ill educated, certainly ill off, and a little money is a nice bait to him. "What he does is wrong, but it is intelligible; but "what I do not understand is the position of the rich, "respectable, virtuous members of a party which "countenances these things. (Cheers.) They are "like the man who stole stinking fish; they commit a "crime and they get no benefit. (Laughter.) Bribery "cannot be carried on without their connivance. It "is their crime as well as that of others; and they "are more inexcusable, for they are hardly tempted "at all, and others are tempted much. Now that it "has been exposed to the light of day, I cannot believe that the respectable men of the Conservative "party will permit now what at the last election is "ascertained to have happened."

20,550. (Mr. Coleridge.) That is enough to have caused the loss of a dozen elections?—Well, it secured my vote.

20,551. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it before the nomination or after?—Before the nomination.

20,552. (Mr. Price.) There Mr. Bagehot seemed to think all the corruption was on the Conservative side?—Yes.

20,553. According to the evidence before us it is pretty equally distributed?—I believe that was a pure election.

20,554. (Mr. Coleridge.) You believe it was a pure election?—No doubt I did at the time.

20,555. (Mr. Price.) Have you any idea where the money came from?—Soon after the election I heard a report that it was not a pure election. Mr. Bagehot's family had furnished the solicitors with money unknown to him to secure the election. I never knew the contrary until the evidence which has been given in this court.

20,556. (Mr. Coleridge.) He adopted the acts of the attorneys and paid it afterwards?—Yes.

20,557. (Mr. Price.) Does not it sound like cant and humbug for men to preach to the people in that way, and then sanction the thing afterwards. How do you account for it?—Only on the supposition that I believe he was a conscientious man, and thought "You fellows have done wrong, but as it is done, I "will pay."

20,558. (Mr. Anstey.) Does not that account for it, that there is a principle of partizanship that impels the partizan strongly to see that the law is observed by his adversary, and punish him if he violates it, leaving himself a carte blanche for what he does himself?—Too much of that, I fear. Then, I think I may refer to Sir John Shelley's election, that I will not keep you long about, because reference has been made to it in this inquiry, that I simply took a part on the assurance of Sir John Shelley that if he took the seat at all it would be by honest means.

20,559. (Mr. Coleridge.) As far as we have heard, he did so?—I believe he did. Reference has been made in the course of the inquiry to the petition that was signed. I want just to give additional information to the particulars on that point.

20,560. (Mr. Anstey.) You signed it, I believe?—I believe I signed it.

20,561. (Mr. Price.) You have no objection to give us that valuable portion of Mr. Bagehot's speech, because when we have the pleasure of seeing him we will have it out of his own mouth?—None at all. You are aware there was a cross petition. I saw Mr. Kinglake on that occasion.

20,562. (Mr. Anstey.) Signed by 820?—I do not know the number. The chairman of the committee pronounced their decision on the 25th April 1866, saying that Mr. Kinglake was duly elected.

20,563. And Mr. Westropp not?—They had decided that a few days before.

20,564. My object in calling your attention to that is just to make this statement. Immediately the chairman had so decided, the parliamentary agents on both sides stepped forward, and applied that the certificates for indemnification might be given to all the witnesses who had given evidence. I took the liberty at once, though not a professional man, of objecting to it. The chairman decided to grant it. Immediately upon that I exclaimed "Then we are "sold, and we might all of us as well have remained "at home, for if these men are allowed to come here "and swear as some of them have, and we have "no means of punishing them, no man's life and "character are safe." Upon that I rose and left the committee room with feelings of indignation.

(Mr. Price.) Did you say that aloud to the committee?—Louder than I am saying it now. I have a good voice, but I am speaking now in pain.

20,565. Was it so that Mr. Baxter and the members of the committee must have heard it?—I should think so.

20,566. (Mr. Anstey.) What did the honourable members say, anything?—No, I believe they cut out of the room directly.

20,567. (Mr. Price.) Was there no threat of sending you to Newgate?—I did not wait to hear it. I cut away.

20,568. (Mr. Anstey.) You have not since heard from the committee that it is a mistake to suppose that the certificate would protect a man from indictment for perjury?—I have not heard anything about it. The next day, Thursday, I hoped to have an opportunity of speaking to the chairman, Mr. Baxter, and urging upon him the importance of doing what he could to get the House to grant a commission. I saw him, but failed to have an opportunity of speaking to him. I, however, knew that some of my friends were pressing that matter with him and through Sir Harry Verney, and before I left when I saw Sir John Shelley I urged upon him the importance of using his influence in that direction. Nothing occurs to me with reference to Sir John Shelley, more than has been related to you by other witnesses.

20,569. (Mr. Price.) With respect to your indignation about certificates of indemnity being granted, you must be aware of this, that the certificate is not to protect a man who has falsely sworn, because he is still liable, but is only granted on the assumption that the tribunal are satisfied that he is making a truthful declaration of what he knows; and public policy requires that in such case he should be indemnified, otherwise no information in many cases could be obtained?—I find I am in error, but that was my assumption upon which I acted at the time.

20,570. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you at that moment at which you interposed that observation about the certificate of indemnity learnt that the committee were going to drop all inquiry into upwards of 100 cases of bribery brought forward against the sitting members, seven only having been inquired into?—No.

20,571. You knew it afterwards?—No.

20,572. Then why did you get up the petition, because the petition was founded entirely upon that?—This petition? I thought you referred to the petition of other elections.

20,573. With reference to this very case you got up in the committee and made that very speech about; at that moment the committee had closed its inquiry and pronounced its decision. You are aware at that moment they closed it by refusing to inquire into upwards of 100 cases, having only inquired into seven?—Yes, precisely.

20,574. Was that in your mind when you felt that indignation?—No, I was so excited that no such thing occurred to me.

20,575. You afterwards concocted or promoted the petition of 80, in which reliance is principally laid upon that fact, that the committee of the House of Commons in point of fact had objected to inquire into the major number and the greater quality of cases which had been alleged against the sitting members?—I remember that statement was in the petition when I signed it. I had nothing to do with preparing it. It was the solicitors.

20,576. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have to say?—I was going to refer to Lord Henley's election. That was an effort on the part of many what we call independent Liberal members of the borough to extricate ourselves from the leadership and influence of the lawyers. We put ourselves in communication with Lord Henley, stated the facts to him, and he very kindly came to our help, and became a candidate for the borough. He contested it of course on pure principles, and he failed, but on looking up these papers I met with this letter, which, with your permission, I will read, because I think it an act of justice to his lordship.

20,577. (Mr. Price.) He has written to the "Times" under the misapprehension that he was said to have been mixed up with corrupt practices, but I took the opportunity of saying that was not so; there was not a tittle of evidence that would implicate him whatever?—I only mention it. I have a letter in my possession.

(Mr. Price.) It will appear on our notes that the writer was mistaken, that there was no evidence, but that he did fight a pure election and failed.

20,578. (Mr. Anstey.) The best proof perhaps that he did fight a pure election was that he did fail?—Yes, and the failure was so great, that although he offered to come again we had no opportunity of getting him, because the lawyers were our masters.

20,579. There is an election more ancient than those which have been spoken to, at which a serious riot occurred, either with a view of turning the election if not consummated, or of revenging it if it was over, in which Mr. Bowen, a gentleman of rank and influence in the Conservative party was attacked in his own house by a storming party, and an attempt was made either to wreck the house or to put him to death, or both, and that this riot was not suppressed until a large reinforcement of the Conservatives came to the rescue of Mr. Bowen, consisting for the most part of young gentlemen, sons of the most respectable inhabitants of the town and its vicinity. Can you tell me what election that was?—In the year 1832. I know very well when it was, and I have good reason for remembering it.

20,580. There was one incident in the scuffle I may mention; the mask in which one rioter was disguised was torn off his face?—I really do not know.

20,581. Was that person yourself?—No.

20,582. You are quite sure you were not present. First of all, were you any participant in the riot?—There was no riot.

20,583. In that amusement, or whatever you like to call it.

20,584. (Mr. Price.) Practical joke?—I was not present.

20,585. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you present?—No.

20,586. Do you mean to say you have not been reported in the town to have been?—Very likely.

20,587. (Mr. Price.) You say you had good reason to remember it?—I am anxious to save the time of the court if you will let me explain.

20,588. (Mr. Anstey.) I will put it to you more fairly?—I will give you a fair statement, if you will allow me.

20,589. Do you mean to say, that day or that night during the row, the person who came to you did not immediately come to you and take off something which you had on your face or body which covered you or disguised you, and so revealed your identity to all the people around?—I was not secreted, therefore I know nothing of it.

20,590. Disguised I said?—Nor disguised.

20,591. Then tell us what happened?—Certainly. On that occasion, I think, more than now, it was a very common thing on the night preceding the election for men to remain up all night and walk about

TWENTIETH DAY.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

the town, and some of them disguised. At that time I went to sea. I was spending the evening with the Mr. Helyar, in Eastover, and about 9 o'clock a message was sent to me that the Tories were bribing at Mr. Bowen's. I resolved then to sit up for the night and I sent for one of my men and requested him to go aboard and bring my sea clothes, my sou'wester and my pea jacket.

20,592. (Mr. Price.) And a very good disguise it would be.—No, for this reason, that I had been seen to wear it in the town, in port, on board the ship, and on the quay. Having received it I put it on.

20,593. (Mr. Anstey.) Had it flaps to the sides as well as a flap behind?—Yes, there were what we called ears tied on, but they were not used; it was not blowing that night. I then met with a person of the name of Manning.

20,594. (Mr. Price.) What other sea garment had you on?—Nothing but a pea jacket and sou'wester.

20,595. And your ordinary dress?—The ordinary trousers. I met with Manning and Captain Headford, and told them what I had heard, and resolved that we would not go near Mr. Bowen's, because we thought it was a joke, with a view of throwing our men off their guard, therefore we would watch in other parts of the town. We did so, and at 12 o'clock, I think it was past 12, and we were in the "Castle" Inn at the corner of the bridge, a man passed on and said with an oath to Headford, "By God, Headford, Mr. Bowen's "house is on fire;" "Well," I said, "if it is the "greatest enemy I have I will go and help to put it "out, and though we have not been up there let us go "and see."

20,596. (Mr. Anstey.) Was that man one of your party?—Yes, both of them.

20,597. Was that a signal?—What?

20,598. Those words, "By God, Mr. Bowen's house "is on fire?"—I believed it was a truthful statement on the part of the man, and that induced me to go up there. Just as we walked up by the old Congregational Chapel, we saw some men outside the entrance of Fryern Place, where Mr. Bowen lived. I said to my companions, "Let us go on the other side of the "road, and we shall soon know whether what we have "heard is true." Just as we got to old Johnson's door, who was the clerk, they made a rush at us.

20,599. Who did?—The men who were standing at the entrance of Fryern Place.

20,600. Who were they?—Constables and men of the Conservative party.

20,601. People keeping order there?—Well, they were there; I do not know what they were about. Mr. Tom Watson immediately laid of my sou'wester and tore it off. Upon that Mr. Ruscombe Poole——

20,602. The father of Mr. Gabriel Poole?—Yes, and Jonathan Toogood came up, and Tom Watson says, "Oh, this is Captain Sully."

20,603. Was Mr. Poole's son there, do you recollect?—No, I do not. Mr. Ruscombe Poole said, "Why, "captain, I always thought you were a respectable "man." "So I am, sir, as respectable a man as you "or any man in the town. I earn my bread honestly, "and as long as I can pay 20*s.* in the pound I con-"sider myself as respectable as you or any other "man." Well, Mr. Toogood said to me, "Well, Mr. "Sully, what do you do there. It would be an act of "kindness to take you home."

20,604. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was that the old doctor?—Old Doctor Toogood. "Well," he said, "Mr. Sully, I am going home without you," and as we went home, I heard from him what had taken place during the evening at this place. There was no riot there, and not a pane of glass broken, but it seemed that while some low fellows were randying at low public-houses, Mr. Bowen being absent presiding at a meeting, they thought they would have a lark, and get into his house and sit down in the kitchen, and some smoked a pipe there, but there was no riot that I could hear of at all events I was among 36 others.

20,605. (Mr. Anstey.) You do not mean to say that was with Mr. Bowen's consent?—Certainly not; they took advantage of Mr. Bowen's absence.

20,606. You do not mean to say it was that?—Certainly not.

20,607. Therefore the men must have forced their way?—Certainly; no doubt.

20,608. Is it not a fact that a gentleman of your party was tried either at the sessions or the assizes for forcible entry and other acts of violence?—Very possibly. I forget that. I know that five were tried for conspiracy for riot at Taunton, and 37 afterwards at Wells.

20,609. You admit that there was a conspiracy?—No, not at all. It was all a farce.

20,610. Were they found guilty?—Not a bit of it; all liberated. It was the same fact of vindictiveness that was manifested the other day with reference to my captain.

20,611. They were tried, and what happened?—They were acquitted.

20,612. (Mr. Coleridge.) What were you going to say about you and 35 others?—Five were indicted for conspiracy, and that five and 32 others, and I among the number, were indicted for assault and riot, and tried at Wells.

20,613. (Mr. Anstey.) Were you also?—I was one of them.

20,614. Were you found guilty or acquitted?—All acquitted; and my poor wife at the time was annoyed by fellows of constables who had a warrant for me whilst I was away, and had no peace in the house.

20,615. You know the difference between being acquitted and not prosecuted?—Quite.

20,616. On the case being called on, did not they through their counsel, if any were present, express their unfeigned contrition?—They did their utmost. The vindictive spirit was too apparent. They obtained the best counsel, and spared no expense, and they would have sent us, as the old woman said, if they could to Botany Bay.

20,617. When was this?—It was just after Mr. Leader's election; the result of that made the Tories so savage that they could not control themselves.

20,618. What that in 1832 or 1833?—I believe it was in 1832.

20,619. Was there a good deal of political effervescence at the time?—No doubt.

20,620. That was immediately after the election of the first reformed Parliament under Lord John Russell's Act?—I believe you are right. The jury were disgusted in both cases, both at Taunton and Wells.

20,621. But perhaps they participated in the political effervescence of the period?—I do not see why they should.

20,622. (Mr. Price.) Did the case go to the jury?—The cases were tried out, each case; therefore they did all they could to convict us.

20,623. The judge left the case to the jury?—Yes, I had my friend Mr. Lovell Sealy and two other persons to give me a character.

20,624. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who did you have for counsel?—Mr. Serjeant Kinglake was the counsel.

20,625. On which side was Sir William Follett?—I think that was at Taunton, but Mr. Wilde was against them on the part of the Conservatives.

20,626. Was it Mr. Serjeant Kinglake?—At Wells.

20,627. Was Mr. Serjeant Kinglake at Wells the junior counsel?—I do not think he was serjeant then, but he was first rate as a counsel. He took a very prominent part on the Western Circuit at that time, though comparatively a young man. If they could have done it they would have sent us away, no doubt.

20,628. At all events there was then a forcible entry, and Mr. Bowen was in fear of his life?—Not a bit; the man was not there, it was all a farce.

20,629. Do not you know the constables were called up?—I know they were under the influence of the Tories, as they are now.

20,630. At all events they were there?—There were a large number of them; no doubt about it.

20,631-2. (Mr. Price.) You have had an opportunity of explaining a personal matter, and you have explained it, and satisfactorily to my mind, and you should have been content with that, and not have taken an opportunity of throwing out aspersions on your fellow citizens, which can have no other effect than of keeping up ill will?—I would not say a word that would revive that; I am sorry for it. I shall be happy to give any further information or answer any further question.

Mr. William Salmon sworn.

Mr. W. Salmon.

20,633. (Mr. Price.) Are you private secretary, or were you, to Mr. Brogden, M.P.?—I am, and have been for some time.

20,634. In July 1866 do you remember seeing Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond at Mr. Brogden's office in London?—I do perfectly well.

20,635. I want to get a little information from you as to Mr. Brogden's position in life; I believe he is a large ironmaster?—Yes, and a large coal proprietor as well.

20,636. A man, no doubt, of very considerable resources and wealth?—Yes.

20,637. (Mr. Coleridge) And has large Irish property as well?—Perhaps if I explain in detail it may give you a better understanding. He is a large ironmaster in the Furness district, in North Lancashire; also a partner in very extensive collieries in Durham. He is also partner in very extensive collieries and ironworks at Tondu, in Glamorganshire. With reference to the Irish property of which the learned Commissioner speaks, he is a shareholder in the Irish Land Company, of which you may probably have heard, and also his family. Those four will give you an idea.

20,638. He lives somewhere near Bridge End, does not he?—No, at Ulverston.

20,639. Is that a brother of his?—Yes, James Brogden, who is managing director of the Tondu works.

20,640. (Mr. Price.) We know also that he had been candidate at Yarmouth, but was unsuccessful?—He was in 1865.

20,641. He had not been in Parliament at that time?—No, he was never in Parliament until the last election.

20,642. In July 1866 did Mr. Barham, and Mr. Lovibond call upon Mr. Brogden at his office in London, and see him in your presence?—Yes, in my presence.

20,643. Had you before that learnt anything from Bridgwater as to the chance of Mr. Patton's re-election?—I had been a few evenings before in conversation with Captain Bridges, a gentleman, who resided here at that time, and we were speaking on the political state of parties at that time.

20,644. Was that down here?—No, in London. I have seen his name mentioned in connexion with the evidence here.

20,645. (Mr. Anstey.) Was he connected with the Bristol and Exeter Railway?—I believe so. We were staying at the same hotel, and frequently met, and had conversations, I think three or four evenings, or not so long. The Saturday you referred to we were talking about the state of parties, and incidentally he referred to Bridgwater, where he resided. I believe the conversation arose with reference to that. He was speaking very strongly on the Conservative side with regard to the working men having votes, and he was opposed to that. However, he incidentally mentioned that the Lord Advocate's chance of success was not so great as some supposed.

20,646. Had you heard anything about Bridgwater before that?—Not the slightest.

20,647. Did you know before that Mr. Brogden was on the look-out for a seat in Parliament?—He was not.

20,648. But he had been defeated at Yarmouth?—He contested Yarmouth.

20,649. I mean what should induce Captain Bridges to discuss the chance of the Lord Advocate unless something led up to it?—It was purely because Captain Bridges resided there. Up to that moment I had never heard of Bridgwater.

20,650. Did not he say something about if Mr. Brogden likes to come down?—Not the slightest. Not one word was mentioned in connexion with Mr. Brogden as a candidate.

20,651. He brought the topic up then without anything to lead to it at all?—Perfectly so, just as we might discuss the question of the eclipse of the sun.

20,652. Did you tell that to Mr. Brogden?—Yes.

20,653. What did Mr. Brogden say when you told him?—I happened to go into his private office. I was not then aware, as I had not then been introduced to Mr. Barham or Mr. Lovibond, but I knew they had been there because I knew them when introduced to them afterwards, and I mentioned that I had heard something, and he said, "By-the-by those "gentleman have been here, and mentioned that "very question," and Mr. Brogden went to see Mr. Travers Smith on the question.

20,654. Try and recollect. Do not you think you must have said something? You know those gentlemen had been to see Mr. Brogden before you saw Captain Bridges?—Oh no, certainly not, the time I saw Mr. Barham, I think, was on the 7th of July 1866, and the conversation with Captain Bridges two or three days before.

20,655. They had as it turns out now seen Mr. Brogden?—No.

20,656. I thought you said so?—These gentlemen had seen him on the morning of the 7th of July before I was aware they had been there.

20,657. And then you told him about Captain Bridges?—Yes, he simply remarked those gentlemen have been here, and called with reference to Bridgwater. Then these gentlemen returned in the course of the morning, and Mr. Brogden called me in, and they were speaking about Bridgwater, and their object then was to press Mr. Brogden to become a candidate for the Liberal seat, which he declined to do.

20,658. Is that all that passed then?—All.

20,659. Now on the same evening did you see the two gentlemen again at your hotel?—Yes, they called at my hotel.

20,660. What did they say to you?—They said they should like again to see Mr. Brogden, to ask whether or not he still persisted in refusing to stand as a candidate. It was then about half-past 10 at night. "Well," I said, "my opinion is that Mr. "Brogden so very strongly declined to become a "candidate, you will find he will still be of the same "opinion, but if you think your seeing him will be "of any avail, I shall be happy to go to his house "with you." We went to his house at Notting Hill, he was in bed, and I got the butler to call him up, and they had an interview with him in my presence, and then he more strongly declined to become a candidate.

20,661. Did he give you a reason?—I think the only reason he mentioned was that he could not see his way to become a candidate for any other place as he had not done with Yarmouth.

20,662. Was any question of expense talked of then?—Not in my presence, or in the morning before.

20,663. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you cognizant of the Yarmouth proceedings?—Yes.

TWENTIETH DAY.

Mr. W. Salmon.

15 Sept. 1869.

20,664. How was it he did not claim the seat there?—I should judge from the result of the commission it is manifest why he did not.

20,665. That was known to you at the time?—Oh yes.

20,666. (Mr. Price.) Now the next day what happened?—On the Sunday evening, at a little after 5 o'clock, I had just done dinner, Mr. Brogden and Mr. Vanderbyl called on me at my hotel, and Mr. Brogden said, "Well, Mr. Vanderbyl has a notion of "going down to Bridgwater to contest the seat, I "want you to give Mr. Vanderbyl your opinion "about the place from what you heard Mr. Lovibond "and Mr. Barham state." Well, I said I certainly was extremely pleased with the candid and straightforward statement which Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham made.

20,667. Tell us what you considered a candid and straightforward statement?—The impression made on my mind was this, from their statements, that there was every probability of winning the seat for the Liberal party.

20,668. (Mr. Coleridge.) At what expense?—No expense was mentioned in my presence whatever.

20,669. (Mr. Price.) Do you call that a candid and straightforward statement, two attorneys coming up and telling you that there was every chance of success?—Well, I am speaking of the candid and straightforwardness of Mr. Barham it appeared to me.

20,670. (Mr. Coleridge.) You mean compared with Great Yarmouth?—No, not by comparison with Yarmouth.

20,671. Do you mean to represent that up to that time Mr. Vanderbyl was going to rush into this blindfold, ready to send you down and accredit you as a candidate, and nothing was said about expenses at all?—When I say that, nothing was said in my presence.

20,672. You started to this place having no instructions whatever from Mr. Vanderbyl to deal with the question of money at all?—None whatever.

20,673. Did you come down?—I came down.

20,674. (Mr. Coleridge.) What day did you get here?—The Sunday.

20,675. (Mr. Price.) You got to Bath, and picked up Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham there?—Yes.

20,676. Did you represent to them that Mr. Vanderbyl was a wealthy man?—I did.

20,677. Why did you tell them that?—Well, because I always had, and still have an impression that if you want to become a candidate for any place, and afterwards become a member, you must be a gentleman of wealth and standing, or else it is a great folly to do it. That is the only view I had of the cost, no reference to anything improper.

20,678. Any reference to Great Yarmouth?—No, I always condemned Mr. Brogden's conduct there, and all the proceedings.

20,679. What did they say?—They came to the carriage window where I was, and I said, "I have a candidate," and brought his address with me.

20,680. Who wrote out the address?—I believe it is in Mr. Vanderbyl's handwriting.

20,681. (Mr. Anstey.) Who drew it?—I believe Mr. Vanderbyl, but not in my presence.

20,682. (Mr. Price.) Was there any flourishing like that about Mr. Bagehot's, and the disgraceful proceedings at the last election?—Not the slightest; it was a very straightforward address. I may say that Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham got into the train with me, and perused it immediately, and they were perfectly satisfied. Mr. Lovibond suggested a few immaterial alterations, and after doing so asked whether it would be proper that those alterations should stand. I said, "As they do not in any way appear to affect "the character of the address, and as there is no time "to communicate with Mr. Vanderbyl, I see no objec-"tion to your printing it in that form." When Mr. Vanderbyl came down, on the Monday or Tuesday I think, I saw him. I mentioned that these alterations had been made, in order to get his sanction to it, because I did not feel authorized.

20,683. What sort of alterations were they?—I think they were mostly verbal, but I think there was one put in which Mr. Lovibond suggested would rather please the Liberals of Bridgwater; I don't remember what it was.

20,684. "Eureka"?—No.

20,685. Anything about bales or tea?—No.

20,686. What was it that would please the Liberals?—I do not remember what the word was.

20,687. (Mr. Anstey.) Had it reference to profuse expenditure, generous disregard of bills?—Not at all.

20,688. (Mr. Price.) Something he thought that would be perfectly agreeable to the party?—Yes; of course I did not know anything about it.

20,689. Then you arrived here?—Yes.

20,690. When did Vanderbyl come?—The Monday evening.

20,691. Did Brogden come with him?—He did.

20,692. On the day of the nomination did you see Mr. Brogden, and did he tell you he had some parcels in a black bag in his room?—Yes.

20,693. What did you say to that?—I said I should have nothing to do with them.

20,694. Did you say you would have nothing to do with them, or nothing to do with money?—I do not know whether I used "them" or "money," perhaps both.

20,695. (Mr. Anstey.) Had he told you they contained money?—He did not tell me, but I concluded they did.

20,696. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you been at Yarmouth with him?—Yes.

20,697. (Mr. Price.) Were there any black bags there?—No.

20,698. (Mr. Anstey.) What made you think the black bags contained money?—Well, for this reason: I think that whenever an election is spoken of in a mysterious form, it always means that.

20,699. He did speak to you in a mysterious kind of way?—When he spoke of the parcels.

20,700. And you refused?—I refused to have anything to do with it. Well, there was a party came; he asked me to show that party into his bedroom, and I showed that party in.

20,701. (Mr. Price.) Would you know him again?—I think it is Mr. Reed.

20,702. Look round; is that the gentleman behind you (pointing to Mr. Reed)?—No, I think it was this gentleman sitting here.

20,703. Allan?—Yes, I think that is the gentleman, but I would not really be certain.

20,704. He asked you to show a gentleman, who you say now was Allan?—Yes.

20,705. Had you seen Allan there before?—No.

20,706. But Allan must have been close by you when he asked you?—He was in one of the corridors of the house, near the bedroom, at the time.

20,707. Did Allan go in?—He went into the bedroom.

20,708. With Mr. Brogden?—No, alone. I showed him the bedroom, and he went into it.

20,709. According to your recollection, Mr. Brogden must have had communication with Allan before he spoke to you?—Perhaps so; but I am not aware of it.

20,710. He merely said to you, "Show him into the bedroom"?—Yes.

20,711. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Brogden scheduled as a briber at Great Yarmouth?—Yes.

20,712. Were you?—Yes.

20,713. (Mr. Anstey.) What happened then?—I suppose he got what he wanted.

20,714. Was the money there then?—I understood from Mr. Brogden that there were parcels in the black bag in his bedroom, and he asked me to show Allan into the bedroom, and I concluded it was for the purpose of getting them.

20,715. But there was more than one parcel in the bag?—I do not know; I did not see them.

20,716. I thought you said he said "parcels"?—Mr. Brogden said there were parcels in a black bag.

20,717. (Mr. Price.) "I have some parcels in a black bag in my room?"—Yes.

20,718. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it intended that he should take the whole, or only a few parcels?—I assumed the whole.

20,719. Did he take the bag away with him?—I am not aware that he did. I did not watch.

20,720. You did not see whether he went out with the parcels or the bag?—No.

(Mr. Price to Allan.) I forget whether you told us that Mr. Brogden told you anything before going into the room?

(Allan.) I believe this is the gentleman he introduced me to on the landing.

20,721. Was that all that took place that night?—Yes, on the Tuesday.

20,722. (Mr. Anstey.) I thought you were going to add something?—I should certainly like to make a remark.

20,723. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was Mr. Vanderbyl also scheduled as a briber?—No.

20,724. Not at Yarmouth?—No.

20,725. Mr. Brogden?—Yes; I should like to make a remark to the learned Commissioner on your left with reference to the Yarmouth question, why I was put down as a briber. I apprehend that he has an object in putting the question, and of course I should like to explain it. After the election was over Mr. Brogden asked me to remain behind at Yarmouth, and clear up the accounts of the election. I met Mr. Livingstone, who was one of the leading men of the committee, and brought before me a certain account which he said had to be paid.

20,726. (Mr. Price.) Were those, in point of fact, bribing accounts?—I do not know.

20,727. Was it discovered on the commission, when the commission of inquiry sat, that those accounts you took charge of were accounts for money spent in bribery?—Well, Mr. Fitzgerald took that view.

20,728. Upon that part you took you were scheduled as a briber?—Although I knew nothing of it.

20,729. Therefore, you really did not touch the money yourself, or had anything to do with it, but were simply asked to deal with these accounts, and the commission thought that that made you a briber?—One remark. I told Mr. Livingstone that I knew nothing whatever. You and the committee think it liable to be paid by Mr. Brogden; I, acting on my discretion, will pay them.

20,730. On the morning of the poll did Mr. Brogden say anything to you on the state of affairs?—Yes, he said things were not looking very well.

20,731. Anything more?—I think he also said, "They will require more money."

20,732. Did he say more money will be wanted?—Something to that effect.

20,733. What passed after that; did you say anything to him?—No.

20,734. Did he tell you to do nothing?—Nothing.

20,735. (Mr. Anstey.) I am speaking from recollection; but do you mean to say that Mr. Vanderbyl was not returned as a briber by that commission?—That is certainly my impression, but if you say so, I stand corrected.

20,736. Was not this a fact, that both Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Brogden were returned as bribers, and then added that Mr. Vanderbyl, and I suppose Mr. Brogden too, had said, not on oath, but on honour, he knew nothing about it, and therefore they returned the fact that he had declared on honour that he was not personally guilty, however guilty he may have been through his agents?—I think not, but I stand corrected if I am in error.

20,737. Do not you remember that the report of the commission was at the time much commented on, because, instead of declaring him not personally guilty without more they put it in that sort of way; he having on honour stated, &c., we have no other course to take?—In the absence of the report itself, of course I shall stand corrected on the subject, and I should like to say that the whole of the money expended at Great Yarmouth on the Liberal side was found by Mr. Brogden.

20,738. (Mr. Coleridge.) Not by Mr. Vanderbyl?—No, not at all.

20,739. (Mr. Price.) He paid the whole shot?—He paid the whole shot.

20,740. And no contribution from Mr. Vanderbyl afterwards?—He contributed a very small sum, a share of the legal expenses.

20,741. And nothing with regard to bribery?—Nothing whatever; but still I will not be positive, as the learned Commissioner has expressed a strong opinion of his with reference to the terms of the report. I will say no further than that Mr. Vanderbyl was not classed as a briber.

20,742. (Mr Price.) Do you know whether Mr. Brogden signed cheques that day or not?—Yes, I have the cheques (handing them).

20,743. 3,000*l.* in all, are they not?—Yes.

20,744. Did Mr. Brogden say anything with regard to that, how he was going to treat it?—As a loan.

20,745. To Mr. Vanderbyl?—To Mr. Vanderdyl.

21,746. And that he should charge him interest for it?—Yes.

20,747. One 1,100*l.*, one 300*l.*, one 100*l.*, another 700*l.*, and another 800*l.*?—Yes, making 3,000*l.* altogether.

20,748. There is one, 1,100*l.* paid at Bristol, therefore that 1,100*l.* must have been brought into town, probably by Mr. Brogden, in those parcels?—That may be so, but I am not aware that he brought money.

20,749. Mr. Brogden said he had parcels?—I have no doubt that represents the money Allen got on the morning of the nomination. I was going to say I can also put in, if you like, the pass books.

20,750. Did Mr. Brogden say he intended to charge Mr. Vanderbyl interest on them?—He did.

20,751. He told Mr. Vanderbyl so?—Yes.

20,752. Do you know when that money was repaid?—Yes, I can give you full particulars.

20,753. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is there any business connexion between Mr. Brogden and Mr. Vanderbyl?—Not the slightest.

20,754. Or family?—None whatever. I think their connexion commenced by standing for Yarmouth in the Liberal interest. That money was repaid; July 16, 1866, he repaid 1,100*l.*; that was five days after the election. On the 26th July he repaid 1,500*l.*, and on the 11th August 500*l.*, making 3,000*l.*

20,755. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was any interest charged?—Interest was charged, and my expenses out of pocket out of town coming down, 5*l.* 17*s.*, leaving 15*l.* 10*s.* for interest and commission. I had 25*l.* to cover all.

20,756. (Mr. Price.) You cannot tell us how that was repaid?—I think the two first payments were, the 11th and 16th August, by cheque, and I think the latter 500*l.* was paid into one of our banking accounts in London.

20,757. Mr. Brogden, I suppose, was well known in Bristol, to get a cheque cashed for 1,100*l.*?—Yes.

20,758. (Mr. Anstey.) A gentleman has furnished me with a copy of the report of the commission at Great Yarmouth, and I find Schedule A. is a list of persons who bribed at the election of 1865, and under it is "Vanderbyl, Philip, not on register." That is the same?—Then I said I did it under correction. Of course I had no motive in saying he was not.

TWENTIETH DAY.
Mr. W. Salmon.
15 Sept. 1869.

20,759. (Mr. Price.) As far as you know, in fact, you do know positively as far as money was concerned, not a farthing of it was spent by Mr. Vanderbyl out of his own pocket?—No, I am quite certain of that.

20,760. Never called on to contribute any legal expenses?—Beyond a certain amount of money, I forget what, a very small sum.

20,761. Is there anything more you have to tell us about that election?—I do not think there is.

20,762. You stayed down here at Bridgwater, attending to your duties as secretary?—Yes.

20,763. Did you take any part yourself?

20,764. In any way dealing with money?—Not a farthing.

20,765. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything to do with Mr. Pender?—No. You are referring to the Totnes commission; some gentlemen of the same name, not myself, nor any relative.

20,766. There is nothing more you have to tell us?—No.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

Thursday, 16th September 1869.

PRESENT:

EDWIN PLUMER PRICE, Esq., Q.C.
THOMAS CHISHOLM ANSTEY, Esq.
CHARLES EDWARD COLERIDGE, Esq.
HENRY FRANCIS PURCELL, Esq., Secretary.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.
A. Allan.
16 Sept. 1869.

ANDREW ALLAN recalled.

20,767. (Mr. Price.) You come to make some statement?—Yes. I wish to state that when I met Mr. Brogden at the "Globe Hotel" on the morning of the nomination at Mr. Vanderbyl's first election I told him I was prepared to answer any question respecting electioneering matters he chose to ask me. I also put in his possession a book which was a duplicate of the list of names at Mr. Bagehot's election the month prior. The questions he asked me were from his looking over that book. It was a list of the names of bribe agents who had paid money for me at Mr. Bagehot's election, and a list of the names of the men who had been paid by them. I would not have the knowledge of that book come before the Commissioners from Mr. Brogden.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You mean it was an account with regard to Mr. Bagehot's election that he might draw his own conclusion as to his own.

A. Brogden, Esq., M.P.

ALEXANDER BROGDEN, Esq., M.P., sworn.

20,768. You are the present member for Wednesbury?—I am.

20,769. Which is a new borough?—It is a new borough created under the new Act of Parliament.

20,770. Had you a contest there?—Yes.

20,771. Against a Conservative?—Against a Conservative and a Liberal.

20,772. (Mr. Coleridge.) The Liberal interest was split there, was it?—Yes.

20,773. (Mr. Price.) We want to have from you an account of the part you took in bringing or sending down Mr. Vanderbyl here in 1866. In the first place, we understand that you stood with him as his colleague as a candidate for Yarmouth?—Quite true.

20,774. That was the commencement of your acquaintance with him?—Yes.

20,775. (Mr. Coleridge.) You had paid his expenses, we are given to understand?—I had not paid his expenses. There was an agreement between us as to how they should be divided, and a limited sum he had to pay.

20,776. (Mr. Price.) Would that limited sum of his cover more than what you call legitimate expenses?—I do not think it was based at all on the legitimate expenses.

20,777. (Mr. Coleridge.) However, you paid more than he did, three or four times as much?—And more than that.

20,778. (Mr. Price.) There was a deputation waited upon you, we understand, with regard to coming down to Bridgwater yourself?—Yes, there was a deputation.

20,779. How did you first hear of it?—I had an intimation from Mr. Travers Smith. He wished to see me at his office in the City. I went there and saw him.

20,780. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was your name down upon a list that Mr. Travers Smith had of persons who were wanting seats?—Not that I am aware of.

20,781. Had Mr. Travers Smith sent you to Yarmouth?—No, but I had had frequent communications with him.

20,782. (Mr. Anstey.) Perhaps it would be more convenient if you would hand those in and save an examination as to them?—I have no political communications.

20,783. (Mr. Coleridge.) However, you had communication with him?—I had frequent communications with him as the solicitor of the Liberal Association. I called frequently at his office during the contest.

20,784. Was Yarmouth your first contest?—It was.

20,785. When you failed there on your petition he still knew that you were wanting a seat?—Of course he knew I had tried. I did not intimate that to him.

20,786. (Mr. Price.) At that time had the petition been presented regarding the election at Yarmouth?—The petition had been tried before the committee and a commission appointed.

20,787. Upon that occasion you did not pray the seat?—It was not my petition at all, but was from certain electors at Yarmouth.

20,788. At all events your seat was not prayed for?—No.

20,789. Did you take no part in supporting the petition?—In supporting the petition I did.

20,790. You were thrown out at Yarmouth?—Yes.

20,791. And Sir Edmund Lacon and Sir Henry Stracey were elected?—No, Sir Edmund Lacon and Mr. Goodson were elected.

20,792. Then you say there was a petition against them by the electors, but they did not pray for the seat for you or Mr. Vanderbyl?—I think not.

20,793. Did you take any part in the petition yourself?—I paid a large portion of the expenses of the petition.

20,794. At that time you had been of course unseated, but the commission of inquiry had not sat?—No, it was just about to sit.

20,795. When you first heard of this Bridgwater business the commission was just about to sit?—Just about to sit, and sat within a month afterwards.

20,796. When Mr. Travers Smith sent wishing to see you what passed?—He told me that two gentlemen from Bridgwater had come to town, two highly respectable solicitors, and they wanted a candidate to contest the place.

20,797. Did he state to you their names?—I knew who they were. I do not know whether I did at that moment. Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond, two very highly respectable solicitors, wanted a candidate to contest the seat on the re-election of Mr. Patton, and he said, "You must make your own inquiries and "form your own opinion. I have nothing more to "say about it."

20,798. Is that all that passed between you?—That is all that passed between us.

20,799. Did you know anything of Bridgwater?—Not at all.

20,800. You did not know what kind of borough it was?—Not in the slightest degree.

20,801. Did you know the circumstances under which Mr. Patton was coming forward again?—I did.

20,802. For re-election, as Lord Advocate, after a contest two months before?—Yes, I did.

20,803. Did you know whether there had been any discussion, or disinclination expressed on the part of Mr. Bagehot, under the circumstances, to contest the seat against Mr. Patton?—I was not made acquainted with those circumstances. I knew nothing of them.

20,804. What was the next thing you did after that interview with Mr. Travers Smith?—I am not quite certain. I think I saw those gentlemen at Mr. Travers Smith's office.

20,805. On the same day?—Almost at the same moment. I was introduced into a room where they were.

20,806. Did Mr. Travers Smith leave you there?—Mr. Travers Smith left us there.

20,807. And no conversation took place about the election whilst Mr. Travers Smith was there?—Not a word.

20,808. How did he introduce you, as Mr. Brogden, who would hear what they had to say?—Quite so.

20,809. After Mr. Travers Smith left the room what occurred?—They told me the circumstances under which Mr. Patton was retiring, and asked me if I was going to stand as the candidate, telling me at the same time that the borough was a Liberal borough, and generally speaking returned Liberal members to Parliament, and that there was every probability that a Liberal member would be returned again. I was not myself inclined at that time to go through any contest, for I had the Yarmouth commission still on my mind, and was not at all prepared to contest any place.

20,810. Did you tell them that you were reserving yourself for Yarmouth?—I told them that I had had enough to do with Yarmouth.

20,811. That is to say with the commission of inquiry?—With the commission of inquiry.

20,812. Did you give them to understand that you were waiting to have any chance at Yarmouth?—Quite possibly they might have had that impression, because I did say this to them, that I did not approve of people running about the country from one place to another. For my part I should prefer sticking to one borough.

20,813. (Mr. Coleridge.) You preferred to be off with your old love before you were on with your new?—Quite so.

23,814. (Mr. Price.) Did anything else take place about money matters?—Yes, I asked what it would cost, I think. It was more about the cost than anything else, because I had then pretty well made up my mind to have nothing to do with it, but they told me it would cost above 1,500*l.*

20,815. Did you express any surprise at that, considering the number of the constituency?—No.

20,816. Your Yarmouth experience had not made that appear to you a very large sum?—Quite so. I am afraid my experience rather led me to larger figures.

20,817. Did anything more take place?—I told them I would not give them an answer at that moment, but if they would come to my office in Westminster later in the day I would give them my answer. Our interview was not a long one. I left them and went up to my own room in Westminster and talked the matter over with myself. I did not consult anybody. I was confirmed in my opinion that I would not contest the place.

20,818. You did not discuss the subject with anybody?—No.

20,819. Did you see Mr. Travers Smith afterwards about it?—No.

20,820. Or Mr. Drake?—No; I never saw Mr. Drake about electioneering matters in my life.

20,821. Did you see them again at your rooms in Westminster?—They called upon me, I think, perhaps two or three hours afterwards, and I told them that after consideration I had fully determined to have nothing to do with it.

20,822. Did you tell them or suggest to them in any way that you would look out for a candidate for them?—No.

20,823. Did they ask if you knew anybody?—It is quite possible that we may have talked over something of the kind, but I am quite certain I did not suggest a candidate to them.

20,824. Did they ask you to give the name of another gentleman?—No.

20,825. (Mr. Anstey.) Had Mr. Vanderbyl's name been mentioned at all?—No, not at that time. I will explain precisely how it came to be introduced. I thought I had given them a sufficiently conclusive answer, but late at night, after I had gone to bed, they came to my house accompanied by Mr. Salmon. The man servant came up to me and told me that Mr. Salmon and two gentlemen were there and wished to see me very particularly. I got out of bed and put on my dressing gown and went into the adjoining room, and there they pressed the subject upon me, that they had failed to find any other candidate, and they pressed the question on me very closely. I told them I thought they ought to have had a sufficient answer before.

20,826. (Mr. Price.) Who spoke principally on that occasion?—I think it was pretty equally divided between the two, but at last, when I thought they pressed it unduly, I gave them a very sharp—at least a short, answer, and left them suddenly. The next morning, Sunday, after church, Mr. Vanderbyl drove up to my house in his carriage with his little girl; he was going to call on me, and I told him about the interview I had had.

20,827. His coming there was accidental?—Perfectly accidental. He was coming from church, and he drove to me with his little girl, and came to call on me. I told him what had taken place. He said, "Oh, I have some property near Bridgwater," and he said, "There is a steamer bearing my name "going in there for repairs." I said to him, "Well, "I think, if you like to try the chance of a seat they "will be very glad to have you as a candidate." Thereupon he left his child with my children, and we went in his carriage to Bacon's hotel, where Mr. Salmon was staying. I did not know where Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham were staying. We went to the hotel.

20,828. In Great Queen Street?—In Great Queen Street. We went there on the chance of finding where Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham were staying. Mr. Salmon told us that they were staying at Wood's hotel.

20,829. Before you went did you name to Mr. Vanderbyl the sum they had named to you as being required?—I must have done that.

20,831. What did Mr. Vanderbyl say?—I do not think he thought it was a very large sum. We went to Wood's hotel, and found that they had left.

20,832. Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham had gone?—Yes. We went back again to Bacon's hotel, Mr. Salmon was still there, and we talked the subject over as to whether Mr. Vanderbyl should proffer himself as a candidate or not. I remember an observation of Mr. Salmon's at the time, that he thought there was a very good chance, and that if Mr. Vanderbyl decided to offer himself as a candidate he ought to go down at once. Mr. Vanderbyl said he could not go that night, he must see his partners, and make arrangements before going down, and Mr. Salmon said then, "If you do not go down, I must."

20,833. (Mr. Price.) Then it was Mr. Salmon's own offer to go down?—Quite.

20,834. Not by your desire?—Not at all, I did not express an opinion about it.

20,835. Did you gather from what Mr. Salmon said that he must have had a good deal of conversation with these gentlemen by his saying he must go down?—Yes, I did. At least I came to the conclusion that he knew a great deal more about the place that I did, for I knew a very little. Having determined not to contest it, I made no inquiry, and did not care to inquire more about it than I had heard. Mr. Vanderbyl drove back to his own house, and wrote out his address, and I think both Mr. Salmon and I met him in the evening.

20,836. Then you gave your consent to your secretary going down?—I did. I think we met Mr. Vanderbyl in the evening, and he went by the mail train.

20,837. (Mr. Anstey.) Had you anything to do with the drawing up of the address?—I was at Mr. Vanderbyl's, but it was his own composition.

20,838. With suggestions, probably, by yourself?—We talked over the subject, which was very natural.

20,839. (Mr. Price.) I suppose it was denouncing the Irish Church measure, and other things?—I do not think that was one of the topics.

20,840. Did you say anything about money to him?—I said undoubtedly at the time they told me the expenses would be 1,500*l.*

20,841. Besides that?—Nothing more.

20,842. Did you give him to understand that you would be prepared to find him money?—I did not; I will tell you precisely how that occurred.

20,843. Then Mr. Salmon started?—Mr. Salmon started. I think I got a telegram from him, my memory is not quite clear about that, to say that they would expect Mr. Vanderbyl. Then Mr. Vanderbyl and I started by the train on Monday about noon.

20,844. (Mr. Coleridge.) You agreed to go down with him?—I agreed to go down with him, and introduce him, because he had never seen the parties, and we met at the Paddington station; I did not see him until we met in the morning at the station, and went down by the train together. I had made my arrangements previously to go into Glamorganshire to my place of business there to meet my partners, and I telegraphed to my brother, who is my partner, and who was then at Bristol, to meet me at the Bristol platform, and he did so.

20,845. (Mr. Price.) You stopped at Bristol did not you?—No, I came forward to introduce Mr. Vanderbyl to Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond.

20,846. What day in the month was it?—On Monday. I do not remember.

20,847. July 10th?—It is the Monday.

20,848. The reason why I ask is this, did not you get a cheque cashed before you got into Bridgwater?—No.

20,849. It seems to have passed through a Bristol bank, that is why I am asking you?—I will tell you precisely how it was. I came down with Mr. Vanderbyl, leaving my luggage at Bristol, and telling my brother to leave word (I had a sister living in Bristol) to send word up by the carriage that I would be there that night to stay with her, my intention being to introduce Mr. Vanderbyl, and then leave and go down to attend my business engagements. I came with him to the station, in fact I asked my brother, "If you wish to see a little bit of electioneering you "can come with me, and we will return together," and he did come down, and did return. We had a very brilliant reception here, a large gathering, evidently on a very extravagant scale.

20,850. How do you mean?—Bands of music, banners, carriages and four, electors very exuberent with beer, and all that kind of thing.

20,851. All prepared?—All prepared. At least I do not know what inference you draw from that.

20,852. Were there guns firing?—That I do not remember, but I went with Mr. Vanderbyl in that procession to the market place, and Mr. Vanderbyl addressed the electors there. I addressed them as well, speaking in favour of Mr. Vanderbyl, and from there we went into the "Globe" hotel, where he was going to stay. I told him then that I should have to leave him, that I was going to Bristol that night, and he said, "You must not leave me, for my friend Mr. "Russell, who had arranged to come down, has just "telegraphed to me that he has missed the train, there-"fore if you go I shall be without anybody here."

20,853. Who is Mr. Russell?—I think it is Mr. Russell the composer.

20,854. The musical man?—The musical man. He said he was to have come down; he showed me a telegram to say that he had either missed the train or lost his luggage, or something of the kind to prevent his coming down, and he said, "Besides that I have made no arrangements about money." I said, "That is very awkward." I had been speaking in his favour in the market place. I said, "I told you the solicitors said 1,500*l.* would be wanted. "Well," he said, "I must ask you to advance it for me. I said, "Well, if I do advance it for you I must have it "returned immediately you return to town. I did not "come here to advance you money. I must have it "returned to me when you get to town." He said, "Oh yes; I will do that at once. I was so busy this "morning that I had not time to do anything. Of course he had only had the morning of the Monday up to noon to make every provision for carrying on his business in his absence.

20,855. (Mr. Anstey.) When you spoke in his favour in the market place is it not the fact that the whole of your acquaintance with him, on political matters at least, had began and ended with Yarmouth?—It began with Yarmouth; it did not end there.

20,856. It was from your experience of Mr. Vanderbyl at Yarmouth and after Yarmouth that you spoke in his favour to the people here?—Not entirely.

Mr. Vanderbyl was introduced to me by Mr. Travers Smith at Yarmouth.

20,857. Then with that additional circumstance that he had been introduced to you?—That was the commencement of our acquaintance; we had known each other rather intimately since that time.

20,858. That is only a year, or not quite a year?—Rather more than a year, about a year. In fact, we live very close to each other, and during that time we saw a great deal of each other. I returned to Bristol, and there I drew a cheque on the Manchester Bank, which I believe you have seen, for 1,100*l.*

20,859. (Mr. Coleridge.) What time did you get back to Bristol?—By the mail train that night.

20,860. You did not cash it that night?—No, I could not do so. I drew a cheque.

20,861. (Mr. Price.) Who are the Messrs. Budgett whom you drew the cheque in favour of?—Mr. Budgett is my brother-in-law, and they are people there with whom we do business. I asked him to get me that cheque cashed, which they did. I said, "I want it in sovereigns," and they got it me in sovereigns. They sent to the bank for it, and I got it, and I put that into the black leather bag and took it to the station with me and returned. I think I do not know what time in the day, but 11 or 12 o'clock I should think I left Bristol.

20,862. You knew perfectly well at that time that the money could not be wanted for legitimate expenses at that early period of the election; it must be wanted to pay electors?—I had been told that there were bad debts which had not been paid off.

20,863. Who told you that?—Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Barham at our first interview.

20,864. And that any candidate was expected to pay those?—They said their party would not work unless those things were cleared up.

20,865. Who recommended you to bring it in sovereigns? Was it your own idea or the lawyers?—I cannot remember, but I have a recollection of some person speaking to me on the previous night, saying that it should be in sovereigns.

20,866. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand that Mr. Lovibond or Mr. Barham told you there were 1,100*l.* of bad debts owing?—I did not say anything of the kind.

20,867. They told you there were bad debts?—There were some.

20,868. Following up the learned Chief Commissioner's question, to which that certainly was the reply, are not you perfectly aware that sum of money; 1,100*l.*, in whole or part, was intended to go in payment of illegal expenses?—I cannot say that I am.

20,869. (Mr. Price.) What could you suppose that the 1,100*l.* would be wanted for on the day of nomination?—Well, what I made up my mind——

20,870. You knew well that the expenses would probably come to 150*l.* or 200*l.* at the outside, and are never paid until after the election, because there are the hustings expenses, and sheriff's expenses and returning officer's expenses, which cannot be told to the end?—My own experience is precisely the opposite of that. I have always paid the returning officer a deposit before the hustings are prepared.

20,871. A deposit if he requires it, but the expenses of the hustings, poll clerks, and any other legitimate expenses are never known of course until after the election, they cannot be, and there is a return made by the election agent, and they must be returned within a month, as you know?—I am speaking within my own knowledge of the election at Wednesbury, where there was not more than 7*l.* additional to be paid to the returning officer by each candidate.

20,872. You did not find 1,100*l.* at Wednesbury?—I found 500*l.* for the returning officer.

20,873. (Mr. Coleridge.) Legitimate expenses?—Legitimate expenses.

20,874. That included your agents?—Not at all. I mean paid to the returning officer.

20,875. (Mr. Price.) 500*l.*?—Yes.

20,876. (Mr. Anstey.) Has he been the returning officer before at any election; it is a new borough?—The legal gentleman who acted as deputy returning officer certainly had.

20,877. Where?—I do not know; he is a solicitor at Birmingham. It is a very large borough.

20,878. (Mr. Price.) What is the constituency?—About 18,000.

20,879. And 500*l.* expenses? I never heard of such a thing. Sheffield has 34,000 voters, and the returning officer's expenses bear no such proportion as that—This is seven miles long by five miles wide.

20,880. (Mr. Coleridge.) How many polling places are there?—I forget.

20,881. A dozen?—A great many more.

20,882. (Mr. Price.) If you divided it among the candidates, was it 1,500*l.*?—I believe it was 1,500*l.*

20,883. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you take this money in gold if you were not fully prepared to expect some portion at least would go in illegal expenses?—One thing, I thought if I took 1,100*l.* in gold I should make the solicitors be satisfied with that sum.

20,884. Instead of 1,500*l.*?—Instead of 1,500*l.*

20,885. (Mr. Price.) For receiving it in cash?—Receiving it in cash.

20,886. (Mr. Anstey.) Would not that equally apply to 5*l.* notes?—I suppose it would.

20,887. Still the question arises why not take it in 5*l.* notes if that was your only reason?—I told you that I have an impression that some one asked me over night to bring it in sovereigns.

20,888. (Mr. Price.) When you were asked to take it in sovereigns would you doubt the least in the world what it was wanted for?—The inference undoubtedly was so. I do not want to fence the question at all.

20,889. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not it from your experience of Yarmouth, where the report says you took 7,000*l.* in sovereigns also?—No, 6,000*l.*

20,890. Was not it the recollection of Yarmouth that made you think of bringing this in gold?—No doubt it was an indiscretion to take it in gold which I ought not to have made.

20,891. (Mr. Price.) Still I must ask you, you were a person in a very peculiar position, because you see you had an inquiry hanging over your head with regard to Yarmouth, which might have resulted, as it did, in your being scheduled as a briber, and in which your expenditure would all come out; did not it strike you as an extraordinary thing to ask you to mix yourself up at such a time in the transmission of or bringing into the borough a sum of 1,100*l.* in sovereigns?—Yes; I will tell you what I did. I made up my mind that whatever money I did hand over should go through the legal agents.

20,892. But Mr. Vanderbyl had appointed no legal agent then?—Mr. Barham and Mr. Lovibond I looked upon as the legal agents.

20,893. But there was no appointment at that time; Mr. Vanderbyl had hardly had time to make an appointment, and you know that Mr. Vanderbyl had not appointed either of those gentlemen as his legal agent?—I will not tax my memory at this moment whether we had actually signed the document or not, but I understood, and was sufficiently acquainted with the election to know that Mr. Lovibond and Mr. Barham were the legal agents.

20,894. Under the statute?—Under the statute.

20,895. The persons who would have to pass the expenses?—Quite so.

20,896. And make the return?—So I understood.

20,897. But did you understand the election expenses would be anything like 1,100*l.*; bad debts would not appear as legal expenses?—It is quite clear there were expenses going on from the reception we had on our arrival, and the quantity of beer that seemed to be flowing. It was quite clear that there was a great expense going on, and great extravagance.

20,898. (Mr. Anstey.) You were quite aware, being a man of education, that the payment of what you call bad debts at former elections, especially when due in respect of bribes, a claim of anybody's debt made upon a fresh candidate at a new election, was an illegal claim which necessarily would expose the fresh candidate to the pains and penalties of bribery?—I was not aware by paying debts such as the candidates might choose to adopt.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

A. Brogden, Esq., M.P.

16 Sept. 1869.

20,899. Let us reason upon this for a moment. Supposing you hear that I had gone away, leaving a bad debt, and my creditor comes to you, and says, "Pay me the amount of that bad debt so-and-so has "left unpaid," and you pay it, would not you regard that as a free gift to me of the amount of that debt?—Certainly.

20,900. Then in what respect does the free gift to a voter in respect of a debt differ from a gift to a voter eo nomine as a bribe?—But I did not understand that they were altogether debts to voters.

20,901. (Mr. Price.) What did you understand them to be?—It was a mere surmise on my part. I never inquired.

20,902. Surely a man in your position would take the trouble before drawing a cheque for 1,100*l.* to say, "What do you mean by bad debts?" and know what the amount was, and what it was.

20,903. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did they tell you from whom these debts were owing, at which election?—No, I did not inquire. This was made to me at the time they were asking me, and seeing that I declined to contest the borough I did not go further into it. The request to me to find money for Mr. Vanderbyl came on me by surprise. I do not know that I had the opportunity, leaving that night.

20,904. Did you deposit this 1,100*l.* in the hand of the legal agents?—No; I will tell you how it was.

20,905. (Mr. Anstey.) I do not follow your reasoning as to that; will you explain in what way this payment of this large bribe fund into the legal agent, Mr. Barham's, hands would in any way diminish your responsibility or guilt?—Well, I take it that no legal agent would be the means of transmitting himself monies for which he would have to account to the candidate, and which he would be under the penalty of the law if he supplied.

20,906. But that legal agent according to you was Mr. Barham?—Yes.

20,907. And he was one of those who had told you this large sum would be requisite?—Yes.

20,908. And it was in consequence of what that inchoate legal agent so told you that you went and procured this money to be raised in gold and brought into this borough for a purpose, or raising an inference as to the purpose, for which that disguise or secresy was sought?—In fact I must say I was shutting my own eyes to the way in which it was going to be spent.

20,909. And you further say this legal agent had told you there were bad debts to be paid?—Yes.

20,910. Then in what way, I ask, would the fact of Mr. Barham dispensing the money directly in bribes diminish your responsibility or change your position further than this, that your complicity would be a little earlier than Mr. Barham's?—I do not follow you.

20,911. I certainly do not follow you. I want to know in what respect you, having your eyes open to the purpose for which this was brought, you being the person who raised the money and procured the disguise and concealment by having it turned into gold instead of bringing it in the proper and most portable way, in notes, and handing it over to the man who told you he wanted it for illegal expenses, that is, the payment of bad debts, and also having a surmise in your own mind that it was wanted for illegal purposes, what difference do you say there was in your position and his, except that your complicity was a little earlier, that is to say you began the business which he would consummate?—Well, I took the money over to the legal agent, and it was his business to see that it was legally distributed.

20,912. (Mr. Price.) Do you mean to say that you raised 1,100*l.*, which you brought into this borough in sovereigns, and after the intimation you had had that a part was to go in bad debts, you thought you would get rid of the responsibility of bringing this money by handing it over to a person like Mr. Barham, who had stated that to you?—I did.

20,913. (Mr. Anstey.) Now when did you deposit the money?—I brought this money with me in a bag quite openly. I did not affect to conceal it. Mr. Patton came down in the same train as I did, and I walked out of the door with it.

20,914. But you did not rattle it in his face?—I carried it in my hand.

20,915. But he would not know that it was full of sovereigns?—We walked together, and there was a large number of his supporters there, and he got into the carriage. I got into the omnibus and put it with my ordinary luggage, and I drove to the "Globe," and put the bag in my room. I forget whether it was that night or the next morning that Mr. Barham put a question to me as to whether Mr. Vanderbyl seriously intended to fight. I said, "Of course he does." Then he said, "We shall certainly want the money."

20,916. (Mr. Price.) Did not that open your eyes? In the meantime you had not handed the money over, but put it in your bedroom?—I was going to add that all the time I was covering myself I believed with the responsibility of the legal agent. Perhaps it was unwise for me to consider, and unsound for me to consider that that would cover me, but I did so.

20,917. (Mr. Coleridge.) But you were only deferring the opening of your own eyes, you knew that they must be opened eventually?—I was doing it as Mr. Vanderbyl's friend; but I had no more to do with it than to get my money back as soon as I returned to town.

20,918. The experience which you had had at Yarmouth did not make you aware that it was required for illegal practices?—You must be aware that from my experience at Yarmouth I did not look into the accounts until the day before I went into the box.

20,919. But you carried the gold yourself into Yarmouth, did you not?—No.

20,920. I understood you to say that you had done so?—No.

20,921. (Mr. Price.) Did you say to anybody that night, "I have some parcels in a black bag in my room"?—I forget whether it was that night or in the morning that they put this question to me, and I said, "You must make less do. I have 1,100*l.* in a bag in my room," and he said, "I shall not take the "money myself. I shall not have anything to do "with illegal practices." I said, "No one asks you." He said, "I shall send a man named Allan to you," and I said, "Well, I will give the money to any "person you send on sending me a proper authority. "I do not know Allan from Adam." "Well," he said, "I will give him a note." I said, "I do not know your handwriting;" and he pulled out a pencil and wrote a few words (we were then leaning on the chimney piece) on a piece of paper, and put his initials to it, and I said, "I shall know your writing now. I will give the money to any person you send." Some little time afterwards, I do not know how long it was, I was called out of the room. A note was given to me by, I suppose, the man named Allan. I recognized the name only from having seen the evidence in the papers.

20,922. Do you recognize the man?—I saw him just now. I should not have recognized him had he not mentioned my name when in the box.

20,923. (Mr. Anstey.) Have you that piece of paper here?—No.

20,924. What was it?—Half a sheet of note paper written on in pencil. I forget the exact language, but it was an authority to me to hand over the parcel to him, and I kept that note.

20,925. (Mr. Price.) "Hand it to the bearer," was it?—Yes, I kept it until my account with Mr. Vanderbyl had been settled, until he had repaid me all the money he had from me, and then I destroyed it.

20,926. (Mr. Anstey.) That is about a week afterwards?—No, I think altogether it was about a month afterwards.

20,927. Why did you destroy it then?—I did not look upon it as necessary to be kept.

20,928. Was not it, not only not necessary to be kept, but did not you regard it as something which was necessary to be destroyed?—No, I did not know that it was.

20,929. Did not you know that it might rise in judgment against you if an inquiry took place?—I did not consider that I had anything to do with it after I handed the money over to him.

20,930. Did not you think that if you did not destroy that document it might rise in judgment against you if an inquiry took place?—Certainly not.

20,931. (Mr. Price.) What was the next thing that happened?—Mr. Barham told me that 1,100*l.*—I rather jumped over an interval, to show how the 1,100*l.* got out of my hands; but when talking about the 1,100*l.*, he said it was insufficient, and I said, "I "will give a cheque for 100*l.*, and you must make "that do." And he says, "No, it will not. I told you 1,500*l.* will be required; we must have it," and I drew another cheque for 300*l.*, and I gave him the 100*l.* cheque, and the 300*l.* at the same time.

20,932. That would be the 300*l.* cheque, dated July 12th, and the 100*l.* dated July 12th?—They were given at the same time.

20,933. (Mr. Anstey.) Why did you draw them on the Manchester bank instead of on the Bristol bank?—They were all drawn on Manchester.

20,934. (Mr. Price.) They are all drawn on your own bank?—Yes.

20,935. The difference being that you got your brother to cash the first at Bristol, and the others were cashed at Sealy and Prior's, or the South Wales District Bank?—I do not know what became of them. I handed them to Mr. Barham. It is not the habit of country banks to give cheques back; but when the inquiry was going on, I wrote to them for the cheques, and they have furnished me with them.

20,936. That is 1,500*l.* which you had given up to that time?—1,500*l.* I had given. Well, I think I drove out to Highbridge, very shortly after that; I think that was the nomination day; I am not very certain. I suppose it would be the 10th July.

20,937. On the 12th these two cheques are given. All the other cheques are dated the same day; all but the first one, which was the 10th?—Yes.

20,938. You came on Sunday and went to Bristol on the Monday, and came back from Bristol on the Monday night. Tuesday was the nomination day, and Wednesday the polling day?—Yes, I drove out to Highbridge. I think Mr. Vanderbyl was with me, and we came back again.

20,939. You could hardly drive out to Highbridge on the polling day, I should think?—No, I do not know whether it was the polling or the nomination day. I think it was the nomination day.

20,940. (Mr. Price.) The polling day was on the 12th?—No, it was on the previous day.

20,941. On the nomination day you drove out to Highbridge?—The nomination day we drove out to Highbridge.

20,942. At that time they had had the 1,100*l.* only?—Yes, they had had the 1,100*l.* No, they got the 1,100*l.*, the 100*l.*, and the 300*l.* practically all at the same time.

20,943. You brought the 1,100*l.* with you?—Yes.

20,944. And you handed it over at the same time that you gave the cheques?—Yes, the cheques were taken from me first, and the money afterwards.

20,945. That would be on the polling day?—That would be on the polling day.

20,946. The cheque would be dated, of course, on the day you drew it?—Yes.

20,947. You were going to say about driving to Highbridge?—Yes; but I do not see how that affects the question.

20,948. During the drive Mr. Vanderbyl was perfectly well aware what demand for money had been made upon you of the 1,100*l.*, and did you discuss it with him on the nomination day?—No, I did not. I mentioned it to him afterwards.

20,949. (Mr. Coleridge.) When, before the polling?—It was during the polling.

20,950. You mentioned it to him, you say, during the polling?—Yes, of course, he understood the 1,500*l.* had to be provided. I was trying to reduce the amount a little, but I was obliged to give the 1,500*l.*, and on the day of the polling, but late in the day, Mr. Barham came to me again, and said that he must have another cheque, that he had incurred additional liability, and must have a cheque for 800*l.*

20,951. (Mr. Price.) He said he had incurred additional liability?—That he had incurred additional liability. I remember that was about the expression. It left that impression on my part. He asked me for 800*l.*, which I gave him. I dared not then inquire into how they were spending the money.

20,952. You knew perfectly well, then, how it was being spent?—As far as my suspicions went they were that it was going in bribery.

20,953. Now I must put this question to you. Considering the position in which you stood respecting Yarmouth, that there was this commission of inquiry threatened, did not it then, your suspicions, whatever they were, being thoroughly aroused, occur to you what peril you were placing yourself in?—I tell you now, as I did before, that my conviction was that I was covering myself entirely by paying it into the hands of Mr. Barham, the legal agent.

20,954. But you did not. You got a bribe agent sent to you, because you could not doubt that if he was sent to you he was no legal agent?—No, but he came with a note authorizing me to pay it to him.

20,955. (Mr. Anstey.) You have already said not half a minute ago you agreed to give it to Allan if Allan was sent for it, as Mr. Barham told you, with his own note, and he (the election agent) would decline to have anything to do with corrupt practices or illegal practices. Had not you then a perfect knowledge on the one hand that he meant to have nothing to do with that, and on the other hand that Allan had to do with it?—I thought, and I think any reasonable man would take the same view, that when one gentleman made that declaration to me, that I was at any rate safe in giving the money into his hands, or in getting the money paid to his order.

20,956. (Mr. Price.) Did you understand, then, from what Mr. Barham said to you, that you might be perfectly certain, as he was going to deal with it, or as you were asked for it by him, it was not therefore going to be used for illegal purposes?—I thought there was no danger in letting the money go.

20,957. (Mr. Anstey.) The learned Chief Commissioner has not asked you whether you thought you had sufficiently fenced yourself or made yourself safe, but did you, during this transaction of the 1,500*l.*, believe that it was going, that money of which you had taken charge, to be expended for corrupt practices? He has not asked whether you were to be safe?—I did not think very much was going in bribery.

20,958. But some was?—Some might go; but I did not think much might go in bribery.

20,959. (Mr. Price.) But what were the legal expenses at Yarmouth, at Yarmouth they were very large, were not they?—Very small.

20,960. And you now come to Bridgwater, which is a tenth part of the size of Yarmouth, with about 600 voters, and Yarmouth had something like 2,000, had not it?—1,600.

20,961. You come to an infinitely smaller place, and fancy that 1,500*l.* was going to be spent in election expenses. If you had had your Wednesbury experience, it would have been a different thing. What were your legal expenses at Yarmouth?—I am sure I do not know.

20,962. Were they 100*l.*?—The lawyers' fees, or the other?

20,963. The published account?—Yes, I think 700*l.* or 800*l.*; fully that.

20,964. (Mr. Coleridge.) Including the lawyers' fees?—Yes, the lawyers' fees were very moderate. When I say 700*l.* or 800*l.*, you will take that I am not prepared with that answer. I do not vouch for it. I am only speaking from memory.

20,965. I only want to test how you thought so large a sum, which certainly strikes one with its amount, should go in legal expenses on the first day of the election, the polling day. Then you said he had demands on you. You did not think there, surely, legal expenses were concerned?—No.

20,966. Why did not you then draw back and say, "I will have nothing more to do with it," because you say your suspicions were aroused?—I thought the money was too much. I candidly say it, I dared not inquire.

20,967. But why did not you refuse to have anything to do with it. You a gentleman who had been mixed up with Yarmouth, and having a commission of inquiry hanging over your head, why did not you say, "I am perfectly certain this is all wrong, and I will "not be a party to any such transaction"?—I merely considered myself a vehicle for handing the money over to them.

20,968. Do you know what the published expenses were here the last time?—I do not know at all.

20,969. 166*l.*?—I never heard anything at all about it.

20,970. That was with this large increase of electors. You thought you were free from this possibly?—Yes; handing it over to the legal agents.

20,971-2. If there had been a petition against Mr. Vanderbyl's return in 1866, and this matter had come out before a committee of the House of Commons, do you mean to say you entertain any doubt whatever you would have been returned as a briber?—I should never have entertained the idea that I should have been returned as a briber.

20,973. (Mr. Coleridge.) There was another cheque that day?—There was another cheque that day. He came to me again after the poll was all over, and said that he would want another cheque for 700*l.*, that would be the surplus and would pay every expense.

20,974. That made 2,800*l.* in all?—No; it was 3,000*l.*

20,975. (Mr. Price.) 1,100*l.*, 100*l.*, 300*l.*, 800*l.*, and 700*l.*?—Yes; 3,000*l.* altogether. He asked me what he should do with it. I said, "I have to receive "my money from Mr. Vanderbyl, and I shall have "nothing to do with accounts. You must account "for everything to him."

20,976. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand that not one single farthing of this large sum of money could have been raised, either by you or Mr. Vanderbyl in Bridgwater itself, when Mr. Vanderbyl first told you that he had no money?—Neither of us was known here.

20,977. Therefore, reverting to the question of your moral responsibility, if you like to call it so, did not you see that you had been the means of bringing into the borough 3,000*l.* of foreign money from another place, in order to debauch the electors at that time, either with bribery, or in treating, or in the payment, as you say, of bad debts, which to my mind is bribery. Do not you see that?—Yes.

20,978. There was 3,000*l.* brought into the borough?—Undoubtedly.

20,979. And for those purposes?—For the purposes of the election.

20,980. (Mr. Price.) Do you wish it to appear on our note that you considered by the handing over of these large sums, your eyes being opened, and your suspicions aroused, Mr. Barham relieved you from all responsibility?—I certainly was under that impression and have never doubted it until this moment.

(Mr. Anstey.) Then I can only say that I do not wonder at the prevalence of bribery, when persons like you profess such absurd doctrines, and those in the presence of the poor and needy.

20,981. (Mr. Price.) The published expenses charged to Mr. Vanderbyl are 36*l.*?—I never heard that before.

20,982. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean that your legal adviser has never from that time to this told you that you had put yourself in exceeding peril about these proceedings?—I never consulted him. At least I did since I received the summons. It is the only day I happened to be in London.

20,983. Do you mean to say that he told you that you had done nothing wrong? You said up to this time that you never heard it?—He told me, if I had handed the money over to the legal agent.

20,984. A lawyer told you?—Certainly.

20,985. (Mr. Price.) I should like his name, if it is not a breach of confidence. Was it Mr. Travers Smith?—No.

20,986. Or Mr. Drake?—No.

20,987. (Mr. Anstey.) You have heard this matter of your liability discussed elsewhere I dare say. May I ask you this, is it the probable opinion of members of the House of Commons, that a man who has done what you have is free, not only from legal, but moral responsibility?—I cannot answer for the other members of the House of Commons.

20,988. We only want to know how far the plague spot has spread?

20,989. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was not what your lawyer told you, that more than a year had transpired, therefore you are free from this charge?—No, I did not ask him that question. I knew that myself.

20,990. What time was it that the 700*l.* was obtained?—It was after the poll, and just at the point when I was leaving.

20,991. Did you go away on that day?—I went away that night by the 5 o'clock train. I went away immediately after the election was over.

20,992. Did you ever pay any money after that? Did you ever send any cheques down?—Never a shilling.

20,993. The 3,000*l.* entirely exhausted your efforts in the matter?—That is the entire sum I ever found or know anything about.

20,994. When were you repaid these sums?—I think the dates were handed in to you. 1,000*l.* were repaid to me on the 16th.

20,995. By September it was all repaid, and 25*l.* interest charged?—Quite so; the interest was paid in September, but the whole of the money was paid early in August.

20,996. (Mr. Price.) You have heard, or probably may have read, that it has once or twice been said to us by witnesses who have been bribery agents in this town, when we have tried to rouse them to a certain sense of responsibility about it, that they have always sheltered themselves, and not unnaturally, with this answer, that "Persons like myself would not be placed "in the position I am now in if gentlemen did not "bring money into the town." Does not that alter your view of the moral responsibility when you hear these men have been in peril and obliged to decamp and get away from appearing before the judge, and shelter themselves from prosecutions and penalties, and everything, and all they can say is, "I would not have done it if gentlemen had not brought money here." Where does the moral responsibility lie?—My impression is it is the other way. If constituencies did not exact it, the candidates would not usually place their hands in their pockets.

20,997. (Mr. Anstey.) To carry that out, do you mean to say that if a gentleman, leaving with a large sum of money in gold and notes, is stopped by a garrotter, the fault lies not with the garrotter, but with the garrotted, because if the garrotted had not presented such a temptation he would not have been garrotted?—I do not profess to be equal to you in legal reasoning.

20,998. On July 11th 3,000*l.*, then interest so much, and commission 3*l.* 15*s.* What commission is that?—Broker's commission.

20,999. For cashing the Manchester notes?—No; all Manchester banks charge commission on the amount when turned over.

21,000. (Mr. Price.) They do not charge their customers commission?—Yes, I pay it regularly; every shilling I draw from the bank. It is the ordinary practice.

21,001. (Mr. Coleridge.) Is not that peculiar to Manchester?—No, it is very common. It is not done in London.

21,002. (Mr. Price.) I never observed such an item as that?—It is not done. It is not the practice in London at all.

21,003. (Mr. Coleridge.) There was a balance of 23*l.* 17*s.*?—We lumped that into a sum of 25*l.*

21,004. They charge you with commission for letting you have back your own money?—Always; they allow us interest and charge us commission.

21,005. On current accounts?—On current accounts.

21,006. What is the commission they charge?—From a quarter to one-eighth per cent.

21,007. (Mr. Price.) Have you anything more to say?—I have nothing more to say.

(Mr. Price.) It is very lamentable.

21,008. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you not show Allan where the money was in your bedroom?—Oh yes, I did.

21,009. Then tell us about that?—I told you that Allan came to me with this note, and I took him into a room. I think it was a bedroom, we had only one sitting-room in the hotel. I asked him into a room immediately opposite the end of the passage, and I read the note there, and he produced what appeared to me to be a register.

21,010. A what?—A roll, a book like a register, and he was beginning to talk to me about this, but I did not look at it.

21,011. You say he was beginning to talk to you about it. What did he say to you?—He said, as nearly as I can remember, "This is a register." I did not look at it. I said, "It is all right, the parcel is here for you." I did not look at the book at all, and I said, "You will find the parcel in my bedroom." He was not with me a minute, not a minute altogether. I stopped my conversation with him because I did not want to have any conversation.

21,012. (Mr. Coleridge.) Why not?—And I walked out.

21,013 (Mr. Price.) Why did you not want to have any conversation with him?—Because I suspected to tell you the truth.

21,014. (Mr. Anstey.) I understand that perfectly. It was for that reason that you refused to hear what was in that bribe-list?—I did not know that it was a bribe list.

21,015. Well then, a register?—A register I think I heard him say it was. It may have been a bribe list, but I did not know it.

21,016. Go on?—I went out to him into the passage to show him my bedroom, and Mr. Salmon was in the passage, and I said, "Show this man my bedroom, and there is a parcel in a black bag in the bedroom."

21,017. You did not say what was in the parcel?—No.

21,018. You left Salmon and this man together in the passage to go to the bedroom and take the money?—Yes. I was not aware that Salmon knew it was money at all.

21,019. You knew that Allan did, who was a stranger to you, even if you knew that Salmon did not?—Yes.

21,020. Would you have handed that money to any person under the sun in that way, and under similar circumstances, if you were not afraid of incurring legal and moral consequences by knowing anything about it?—I was authorized to hand the parcel to him, and I acted upon that.

21,021. That is not an answer to my question. Supposing that you were authorized to hand the parcel to him, would it not be the same thing as if you handed the parcel to Allan yourself, instead of telling Salmon to take him into the bedroom?—Certainly.

21,022. Have you ever done such a thing in your life before, as that of sending a person into your bedroom to find a black bag there, without counting the money there, or seeing what was in the bag, and without knowing anything about it?—I have sent Salmon into my bedroom hundreds of times.

21,023. I shall not fatigue myself by going into the particulars I have enumerated. I ask you have you done anything of the kind before?—I have never been concerned in a transaction of that kind before.

21,024. That brings me back to this question. If you had known that this money had been intended for the purpose of bribery, would you have taken this course?—It was intended for electioneering purposes no doubt. Whether it was for bribery or not I did know, and did not inquire.

21,025. You said you thought that a part of it was intended for bribery, but not much. I ask you, if you had known that the whole or a part of it had been intended for bribery, would you have taken the course you describe?—I cannot answer what I would do.

21,026. Then do you, a member of Parliament, wish that last answer of yours to go forth to the world, and to stand on the notes that you do not know what you would do?—I do not know what I should do under circumstances which are not before me.

21,027. (Mr. Coleridge.) You would not do it again?—No, I should not.

21,028. (Mr. Price.) I should like to know, as a matter of curiosity, whether on the hustings you denounced corrupt practices?—I was pretty well denounced for them.

21,029. But did you denounce them?—I advocated the ballot as a cure for them.

21,030. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you say when the 800*l.* was asked for?—When the 800*l.* was asked for, I thought the amount was large. Mr. Vanderbyl was sitting alone in the room making notes, I presume for his speech, and I went to him, and I said, "This "thing is looking ugly; I have paid already over "2,000*l.*" and Mr. Vanderbyl said, "It is very unpleasant."

21,031. He said it was very unpleasant?—He said it was very unpleasant, and I said, "What must I do"? "Well," he says, "they are respectable people," speaking of Mr. Barham particularly, and Mr. Lovibond, whom he had been associated with more especially; he said, "They are very respectable people, I suppose it will be all right."

21,032, Did he tell you to let them have more money?—I asked him the question, whether if more money was required I was to let them have it.

21,033. And did he say "Go on, and let them have more money, if they require it?—He said they were very respectable people, and I could let them have money.

21,034. And did he say "Go on, and let them have money?"—Yes.

21,035. To what limit did he say you were to go?—I do not know whether he mentioned a limit. I understood that he left it to my discretion as to the limit.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

A. Brogden, Esq., M.P.

16 Sept. 1869.

21,036. He did not say you were not to let it outtop Yarmouth ?—No.

21,037. (Mr. Anstey.) No limit was talked of ?—No.

21,038. (Mr. Price.) Knowing that Mr. Vanderbyl had come down, and was anxious to get in, would you have stopped at the 3,000*l.* ?—I thought 3,000*l.* was a large sum undoubtedly.

21,039. Very likely. It was about half what you had spent at Yarmouth, and about half the constituency but if later in the day things had come to a push, a near run between Mr. Vanderbyl and Mr. Patton, would you have hesitated to draw more cheques if Mr. Barham wanted them ?—I should not have given the last cheque for 700*l.* except the election was over, and I knew the end of it.

21,040. (Mr. Coleridge.) I understand you would not have advanced any money without consulting Mr. Vanderbyl about it ?—Not within a hundred or two.

21,041. (Mr. Anstey.) Supposing there had been a near run, and they had come to you and said "In "order to secure the election we must spend 5,000*l.* "more, therefore hand us over 5,000*l.*" would you have done so ?—I should not have had anything to do with it ; and if a demand of that sort had been made, they would have had to have gone to Mr. Vanderbyl.

21,042. You say you should not have paid the 700*l.* unless you had known the election had been over ?—Yes ; I knew the end of it ; that it was over.

21,043. You say you would not have drawn a cheque for 5,000*l.* ?—No.

21,044. Why not ?—Because it would have been a great undertaking to expend so large a sum on the part of Mr. Vanderbyl, and Mr. Vanderbyl might have turned round on me and said, "You have been most egregiously extravagant, and I will not pay you."

21,045. What limit would you have gone to ? You say you think 700*l.* would not be too large a limit, and 5,000*l.* would be, how much do you say ?—It is such a hypothetical question, that I cannot answer it.

21,046. I want to know how far you were prepared to bribe the voters, to what limit you would go, and I must ask you the question ?—I was not prepared to bribe at all.

21,047. That is my interpretation of your evidence. To what point between 700*l.* and 5,000*l.* would you have gone after the election, in recouping to the lawyers, the money they had spent in bribery, in corrupt practices ?

21,048. (Mr. Price.) Would you have spent as much more as the sum which you say you had already spent, namely 2,000*l.* ?—No, certainly not ; not near 1,000*l.*

21,049. If they had said, "Let us have 1,000*l.*," you would not have advanced it on your own responsibility ?—I daresay if they had asked me for 1,000*l.* I should have given it, instead of the 700*l.* I mean.

21,050. If instead of the 700*l.* you had been asked for 1,000*l.*, would you have given 1,000*l.* ?—Yes.

21,051. (Mr. Coleridge.) While you were distributing these large sums of money, were you told that Mr. Patton had been spending money ?—I was.

21,052. Who was it that told you of it ?—I think I had no communication excepting with Mr. Barham, Mr. Lovibond, and Mr. Reed.

21,053. Did one of those three tell you that Mr. Patton was spending money ?—I heard it in conversation amongst those parties, who it was I cannot tell ; but I did not hear what the amount was.

21,054–5. You cannot tell who it was ?—No.

21,056–7. When you heard that Mr. Patton was spending money, did you not know that your money was wanted to counteract the money Mr. Patton was spending ?—Yes ; I tell you I was very much dissatisfied at that time.

21,058–9. When Mr. Vanderbyl paid you, did he do it by private cheque, or by cheque on his firm ?—That I do not know.

21,060. You do not know whether it went through his books as a business transaction, or not ?—No.

(Mr. Anstey.) I am informed that one of the justices of the peace of this borough is anxious to be examined in the presence of Mr. Sully with reference to the case of the man Luckes—a Mr. Salmon, I think.

Mr. James Wood Sully recalled.

Mr. J. W. Sully.

21,061. (Mr. Anstey.) Will you repeat. I did not myself very clearly catch what you said. Will you repeat what took place at the hearing of Luckes's summons, which you say was dismissed—not the proceeding for the penalty under the Merchant Shipping Act, but the summons against you which you say was dismissed by the magistrates ?—I think there must be some mistake if the Commissioner understood me that my remarks applied to the first meeting. I was at Lydney, and was not present, and knew nothing of what had taken place except as reported to me by my son. My remarks applied to the second meeting when the penalty was inflicted, and when I was present on my return from Lydney.

21,062. State what took place then ?—I do not know whether I can repeat verbatim what I said yesterday.

21,063. About the magistrates ?—Well, I think I said that the magistrates mustered pretty strongly.

21,064. Stronger than you had ever seen them before ?—Yes, stronger than I had ever seen them before. There was evidently a strong feeling of interest, more than ordinary, manifested by the magistrates, and especially by one gentleman, Mr. Salmon, so much so that it called forth rather a reproving remark from the Defendant's solicitor, Mr. Barham, who gave expression to his opinion that it was a vindictive affair, or that vindictive feelings had prompted him. I know the word "vindictive" was used, because afterwards there was a discussion between the solicitor and Mr. Salmon, and it resulted I think in Mr. Salmon withdrawing or apologizing or something of the kind. I believe that is the fact.

21,065. And that is all you remember ?—I think that is the substance of what I stated yesterday.

21,066. Was anything said on that occasion about your having dismissed Luckes, or Luckes having been dismissed out of revenge for his vote ?—Oh yes, by Mr. Boyle the solicitor for Luckes.

21,067. By nobody else ?—Yes, I think Mr. Salmon made some remark.

21,068. From the bench ?—From the bench. Now you call my attention to it I think it was to this effect, that it had been represented to him by Luckes or some of his friends that I had discharged the man because he had voted on the Tory side, something to that effect. I believe that was the substance of the remark, and I took that to account, for the manner in which Mr. Salmon had acted on this occasion—the second occasion.

21,069. I have gone through the examination of Luckes, and his cross-examination, and re-examination, before the Committee of the House of Commons, and I look there in vain for any attempt on the part of your counsel—on the part of the counsel for the petitioners against Mr. Westropp, to show that he had been dismissed for misconduct, and to cross-examine him on that point ?—Before the Committee of the House of Commons ?

21,070. Yes?—I may save your time, Mr. Commissioner, I think I heard no allusion to that.

21,071. No, I do not mean the House of Commons, I must mean before Mr. Justice Blackburn, I suppose, when it was first mentioned?—It was mentioned first in my presence in the court by Mr. Boyle, the solicitor for Luckes.

21,072. (Mr. Price.) The question is whether it was mentioned in the inquiry before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—Oh yes, there was an allusion made to that.

21,073. (Mr. Anstey.) First of all, when did this take place—after the election, was it not?—After the last election, and prior to the Commission.

21,074. Now Luckes was examined. I will give you his very words?—Before Mr. Justice Blackburn.

21,075. Wait one moment, Mr. William Luckes's evidence commences at page 49. Now at page 50 this is what he says upon his examination in chief. "Two or three days after the election were you dis- "charged from your ship?—Yes. Without notice "or reason?—Without notice or reason. Was that "one of Mr. Sully's ships?—Yes." Then the only questions put upon that in cross-examination by Mr. James, refer to the fact that it was Captain Turner who discharged him, and not you, you generally being away in Wales, and having collieries at Lydney, Lucke's not being able to say whether you were at home or were away at Lydney. Well, nobody asked Luckes on that occasion about his being disobedient, or insubordinate, or anything about his neglecting his work or anything of that kind; on the contrary, they allow his answer to pass without comment, which answer I have read to you, that he was discharged without notice or reason. Now, if the story which has been told you of that mate being dismissed with good cause is a true story, why was not he cross-examined on that point before Mr. Justice Blackburn?—I really do not know, but I believe there was a question put to him before Mr. Justice Blackburn on that subject as to whether I had canvassed the man or not.

21,076. (Mr. Price.) The question is this, and surely you must see the point of it. Here you say you discharged this man, or your captain discharged him, and you afterwards approved of your captain's conduct, because he had good cause for discharging him, quite irrespective of the election. Now it appears that before Mr. Justice Blackburn it was made an allegation against you and your captain that you had discharged him without any good excuse. The question is, how could you let that go forth at that inquiry without having for your own sake, and your captain's sake, had questions put to this man to show that the reason you discharged him was what you told us yesterday?—I took no interest in it because I knew it was a falsehood, but if you will allow me just to refer——

21,077. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you quite sure you took no notice of it?—Before Mr. Justice Blackburn——

21,078. Stop a minute. In consequence of your answer to me just now, does it not appear that some question was asked about canvassing? I find you took so much notice of it, or at least so much notice of it was taken for you that after the re-examination the question is put to him, "Before the polling day, or on the "polling day, or any time before, had Mr. Sully asked "you for your vote?—No." You see if you thought it material to have that question put, why did you not think it material to ask him the more important question, "Have you done nothing to merit discharge"?—The counsel was not prompted by me to ask that question; I sat still and took no interest in the matter.

21,079. (Mr. Price.) Did you not think in a public inquiry before a judge, when you were accused of discharging a man from political motives, did you not think it worth your while to have it cleared up?—No, for this reason, because my captain had told me before that he had discharged him for want of duty.

21,080. Then it was a controversy as to which should be believed, your captain or Luckes, and so you sat still without thinking it worth your while to have the matter cleared up?—I did not think on that occasion before Mr. Justice Blackburn that I had any liberty to stand up and speak with reference to it and contradict it.

21,081. You know it was a public inquiry.

21,082. (Mr. Anstey.) You were not afraid of speaking before the committee of the House of Commons?—I am not afraid of speaking before any one.

21,083. Then why did not you set the matter right then and there?—Because I thought I should be out of order if I did so.

21,084. Then you must have thought you were out of order in the way you addressed the committee of the House of Commons?—I was very much excited at the time.

21,085. You have deliberately sworn there was no riot and no assault in the election of 1832, and you did not know that Mr. Bowen received so severe a blow across the eyes as that it was sufficient to have endangered his eyesight, and in that condition he was going about the streets?—I have no recollection of it.

21,086. You have also stated you were present at a "wrangling meeting," you know what a "wrangling meeting" is. Now is it not the fact that he was assaulted and beaten by a mob on his own lawn when he went to ask what was the reason of their coming there?—I never heard of that.

21,087. Then I will ask you this third question about the trial at Wells. I think the trial at Wells lasted two days?—Yes, at Wells.

21,088. And the jury could not agree, and they were not locked up?—Yes.

21,089. And was there not the next day something very unpleasant said as to persons having been admitted into the sleeping apartments of the jury in the interval of the first and second day?—That is quite new to me, I never heard of it.

21,090. Did you not hear a complaint made at the time that the jury had been tampered with, or I may go further and say, "bribed"?—No.

21,091. You never heard it said?—No, I do not remember it. I remember both at Taunton and at Wells every precaution was taken by the counsel for the prosecution to challenge every man.

21,092. (Mr. Price.) You could not challenge them?—To object to them, I know some of them were objected to, I remember that very well.

21,093. (Mr. Anstey.) I will refresh your memory. Do you recollect that both sides for fear of exasperating the jury agreed to let the jury go where they pleased, agreed to let the jury go without being locked up?—No, I may not have been in court at the time, but I do not recollect that; at Wells you refer to.

21,094. Do you know where the grand jury went?—No, I do not.

21,095. Do you know it had been said that somebody had been in communication with the jury, or some of the jury during the night?—No, I have no recollection of it. I was busily engaged in looking after my witnesses. I had ten or a dozen witnesses.

21,096. But I mean afterwards?—After the trial was over?

21,097. Yes?—I beg your pardon, there were all kinds of reports after the trial.

21,098. I thought you were too precipitate in your answer?—There were all kinds of reports.

21,099. And was not one of the reports that the jury had been tampered with and bribed?—I think it was.

21,100. As far as you are concerned do you know whether they were tampered with or bribed?—Oh dear me, no.

21,101. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was there any proof of it?—I never remember any attempt to prove such a thing.

21,102. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear that anybody had got at them?—No, never. I heard afterwards all sorts of reports; not while I was at Wells.

21,103. Did you know that a man had got to the jury during the night?—I cannot say. It would have been a very wrong thing to have done with the jury. I do not know that it was done, and I can only say that I was no party to it.

21,104. With reference to the election of 1838. Were you one of the signataries to that petition which has been referred to here, a petition presented by Sir Henry Ward, and made the subject of a long debate in 1838, but which was withdrawn till another petition which had been presented should be tried, and was never again presented?—Possibly I may have done so, but I do not remember.

21,105. Do you know where the original of that petition is to be found?—No, I do not.

21,106. Did it make much noise in Bridgwater?—No, I do not think so. In 1838?

21,107. December 1838, complaining of the malpractices on the side of Mr. Broadwood, and when Sir John Lethbridge was defeated by Mr. Broadwood?—I remember there was some talk respecting that petition, but I do not remember what took place.

Mr. R. Salmon.

Mr. Robert Salmon sworn.

21,108. (Mr. Price.) Are you a justice of the peace for the borough?—I am.

21,109. You have heard what has been said by Mr. Sully about this inquiry before the magistrates, about the dismissal of one of his men. Tell us what your recollection is?—My recollection is, that the man was discharged from his vessel, and he applied for a summons for his wages. Well, I attended the bench, and I recollect asking the question, "Will you kindly "inform me why this man was so peremptorily "discharged."

21,110. To whom did you put that question?—To the captain of the vessel. Mr. Barham jumped up immediately, and said, "You have no right to ask that question; it is most irrelevant matter."

21,111. Well, I should have thought it was most relevant. Who was the chief clerk?—Mr. Brice. Mr. Brice took no part in the matter, and I asked the mayor if Mr. Barham was right.

21,112. Who was the mayor?—Mr. G. B. Sully. The bench was Mr. Sully, myself, Mr. Hammill, Mr. Ritson, and Mr. Axford.

21,113. Was there any great whip of Conservatives to attend?—No.

21,114. Mr. Sully was a Liberal?—Yes.

21,115. Mr. Hammill a Liberal?—Yes; we were three to two.

21,116. (Mr. Coleridge.) You are yourself a Conservative?—Yes, and Mr. Axford and Mr. Ritson.

21,117. There was no great whip?—No.

21,118. How many magistrates are there here?—I do not know. They talked the thing over, and the case was adjourned till the following Monday.

21,119. There was a majority against you?—No. I thought it was a proper question to ask, but I was overruled.

21,120. (Mr. Anstey.) Who overruled you?—I I cannot say now, but it was thought over, and the matter was adjourned till the following Monday.

21,121. You got no answer to that question?—Not the slightest. The reason I made that inquiry was this: I had two servants who had lived with me 8 or 10 years past, and they were sisters of this man Luckes, and he told them that he was peremptorily discharged because he voted for the Conservatives. That is how I came to know about this man Luckes, and that he voted for the Tories.

21,122. The case was then adjourned to the following Monday?—Yes.

21,123. What happened on the following Monday?—On the following Monday I addressed the mayor in these words, as nearly as I can remember; I said, "Mr. Sully, I asked a question the other day before "you, and one of the advocates of the prisoner told "me I had no right to ask that question, and I want "to know from you whether I am right or he is," words to that effect, "because if he is right, I have no business to be here," and I took up my hat to leave. Mr. Sully had some talk about it, and then Mr. Barham in his usual plausible way, stood up and talked the matter over, and made a sort of half apology, and there the matter dropped.

21,124. Mr. Barham talked it over?—Yes.

21,125. What did he say?—I cannot tell you now. It was a sort of apology to me.

21,126. And that was satisfactory, as far as you were concerned?—Yes.

21,127. Was there any answer given to the question you asked?—Never to this day; and I trust you will ask Mr. Sully that very question, why that very man was discharged.

(Mr. Price.) He has told us. He says he believes that that man was discharged because the captain found the man loafing about, and some of his things down in his cabin tied up, and he said, "Now, you may go."

21,128. (Mr. Anstey.) Did the captain say anything of that sort?—Not at all.

21,129. (Mr. Price.) What did he say?—He said he stopped down in the cabin.

21,130. I should like to see how justice is administered in this borough. A man made a complaint about being discharged?—Yes.

21,131. And the captain was before you, the defendant, I will not call him a prisoner?—Yes.

21,132. And Luckes was the complainant?—Yes.

21,133. How was the case dealt with?—It was postponed till the following week, and then they fastened something else on to it, and heard the two cases together, as far as I recollect.

21,134. (Mr. Anstey.) The case of the penalty?—Yes.

21,135. (Mr. Price.) Then they heard the case of the penalty, for not giving him a printed form, and the magistrates decided he was wrong, and fined him a nominal fine?—You are perfectly right.

21,136. And the other matter, which was the real complaint made, was never adjudicated upon at all?—Not at all; and they brought forward a book called "The Merchant Shipping Act," which I knew nothing at all about, and I said, "I have a right to know something about it."

21,137. Being a magistrate, you are supposed, like other judges, to know something of the statute book?—I did not know anything about it.

21,138. (Mr. Anstey.) Do I understand that you mean positively to state that the summons was not heard, adjudged, and dismissed; the summons for wages?—I can hardly go so far as that. I believe it was tacked on to something else; it was consolidated with the penalty?—Yes, I think it was tacked on to that, and I do not think that first part was heard at all.

21,139. Therefore, if you are right in that, it cannot be said that Luckes's complaint was dismissed by the magistrates?—Well, I hardly know; I do not think it was taken much account of.

21,140. You know the difference between dismissing a case and then consolidating it with another case, and hearing the two together?—Yes.

21,141. Which was done?—Well, it was consolidated with the other case, as far as I can recollect.

21,142. And in the other case judgment was given against Mr. Sully, and in favour of the complaint of Luckes's?—Yes.

21,143. Therefore it was not dismissed?—No.

21,144. You say that the captain did not give the cause assigned by Mr. Sully for the dismissal or discharge of the mate, Luckes?—I was not allowed to ask the question.

21,145. Did the captain say anything at all about the circumstances which led to the dismissal?—No.

Mr. Eustace Barham then entered the witness box. Mr. E. Barham

21,146. (Mr. Price.) What are you going to speak to?—After the statements which have been on the subject of this man Luckes, I thought you might possibly wish to hear a short explanation.

(Mr. Price.) No, I do not think so. Mr. Sully has brought this upon himself by answering questions as to his using undue influence, in a manner which was not satisfactory to one of the Commissioners. That was a perfectly legitimate matter to be inquired into. It has been inquired into, and Mr. Sully having spoken with reference to the conduct of Mr. Salmon on the bench, on the occasion of the hearing of the summons, we have had Mr. Salmon before us, and he has fully explained what took place, and I do think we need go further into it, because if we go into these collateral issues, as to personal matters between you and Mr. Salmon, as to what was said, or what not, we may sit here for ever. It was a a perfectly legal inquiry, and Mr. Sully has given his account of it, and Mr. Salmon has given his, and I think that is entirely satisfactory.

(Mr. Barham.) I am entirely in your hands, and am ready to give an explanation if required.

Stephen Colin Jones recalled. S. C. Jones.

21,147. (Mr. Price.) You have got that document that you were asked for the other day?—I made the inquiry that Mr. Anstey wished me to make, as to where Mr. Fackerell was. He was here in 1865 and voted, and is since dead; his brother went abroad some 20 years ago. Bradford is living at Weston-super-Mare. Southwood is also dead.

Mr. John Hawkey Bingham Carslake recalled. Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

21,148. (Mr. Price.) I believe you want to give us some explanation. I thought you perhaps would have those documents about the writs. You have not got those documents?—No.

21,149. Now I think the time has come when it is due to you that I should put some questions to you. You are the town clerk of this borough?—I am.

21,150. And are in partnership with Mr. Barham?—Yes.

21,151. Now you have heard the part which Mr. Barham took at the last election, which was not a part with actual bribery according to his account?—Yes.

21,152. At all events, whatever that part was, you have also heard the important part which he played during the two preceding elections?—Yes.

21,153. And I want to ask you whether you knew, or whether you had any idea, of what had taken place?—None whatever, it has come to me for the first time to my knowledge.

21,154. (Mr. Coleridge.) Do you mean that Mr. Barham being a partner of yours, that you allowed Mr. Barham to do all this without making entries of his being engaged in so and so?—He was acting for the Liberals, and I did not interfere in any way.

21,155. Did you not wish him to make entries of what he was doing?—You have seen the journals, and I am not aware of what entries are in the journal.

21,156. Are they not copied out into your books?—There they are, it is nothing more than, "Attend-" ing Mr. Lovibond, attending Mr. Fennelly, attend-" ing So-and-so."

21,157. (Mr. Price.) There is nothing by which a bill of costs could be made out against the candidates?—Not unless Mr. Barham could furnish further information.

21,158. There is nothing that appears in your books from the time that Mr. Barham has been in partnership with you, from which you could make out a bill of costs in the name of the firm against the candidates he had been concerned for?—Nothing.

21,159. You, of course, make out your bills of costs from your diary, or your journal, whatever it is?—Yes.

21,160. There are no materials existing in your books from which, supposing you and Mr. Barham disolved partnership, or supposing Mr. Barham left the town, or anything of that kind, you could make out that they were outstanding debts to be collected, and be divided between the partnership?—Exactly.

21,161. Are there materials, as far as you know, from which you could make out a bill of costs for the firm for the candidates?—I think not, the materials are very meagre indeed. If Mr. Barham was dead, I should be at a loss to know how to make out a bill.

21,162. (Mr. Anstey.) Is not the important portion of the materials wanting in every case, namely the want of a name against whom the bill of costs might be made out?—I think it is very likely, I do not know how the entries are headed. I really have not read them.

21,163. Is it not the fact that there is not a single heading to a single entry?—I have not read a single entry. I confess I do not know that of my own knowledge. I will get the books if you like.

21,164. You have heard the evidence given on oath by Mr. Steele, our chief clerk, with respect to his examination of the journals and so on?—Yes.

21,165. According to his statement, not only is there no skeleton bill of costs at the end of each business, but there is no name given of the person to be charged with the bill of costs?—Very likely.

21,166. Is that the way in which the entries are made in your books?—Do you mean with regard to Mr. Lovibond, or Mr. Barham.

21,167. Is that the way, to your knowledge, in which the entries have been made with reference to Mr. Barham's transactions and connexion with the election?—From what I have heard it appears to be so. I do not know myself.

21,168. You say there was, "Attending Mr. Lovibond," "Attending Mr. So-and-so"?—Yes.

21,169. Are they attendances which can be charged for?—Well, I suppose if they are entered there they are attendances for which a charge could be made, and bills can be made out.

21,170. (Mr. Coleridge.) And the profits would come to you?—Oh yes, certainly.

21,171. Do you know of any bill made out in which such charges have been included?—No, I do not.

21,172. And delivered and received?—No, I do not.

21,173. (Mr. Anstey.) Is it not the practice when a business is finished, that you enter in a journal, not only the attendances, and so on, if there are any; but several charges forming an aggregate item; is it not the practice of solicitors, of your firm for instance, in the journal to have a sort of sketch or skeleton of so much of the bill of costs as relates to that business?—Oh yes.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

16 Sept. 1869.

21,174. Have you known a single case where that was done, where the subject matter was electioneering?—I cannot say that I do. You had the books before you, or the entries, and you can judge quite as well as myself.

21,175. Yes, but I would rather not depend on my own observation?—I know no more about those entries than you do.

21,176. When Mr. Barham entered your firm, was it an understanding between you and him that in electioneering business you were to take no part?—Well sir, there was no understanding at all. The fact of the matter is this, that Mr. Barham knew perfectly well that I declined, as I always had, and have, to take any part in electioneering matters, and he knew that. I cannot say that I agreed with him, or that he agreed with me; I should not do so, because he knew my determination.

21,177. Was that determination founded on your knowledge or belief, that electioneering here was not carried on in a proper manner?—No; as soon as I was appointed town clerk, I resolved to state generally to my friends, and to those whom I call my political opponents, that I should not take any part in electioneering matters.

21,178. What year was that?—1854.

21,179. Did Mr. Barham become your partner after that?—After that.

21,180. (Mr. Price.) When Mr. Barham entered your firm, did you make any stipulation with him as to what he was to do if asked to engage in electioneering?—No, I made no such stipulation at all.

21,181. When you found he was engaged in electioneering, did you make any remark or comment to him upon that?—I cannot say that I did.

21,182. You did not object to his taking a part in electioneering?—No.

21,183. Nor did you check what he did in the course of that employment?—No; because I had no idea that he was going to do other than that which was legitimate.

21,184. You had an idea that the borough was a very corrupt one?—Oh yes, certainly.

21,185. Then having had that idea, how came you to form the conclusion that any person engaged in electioneering here, your partner, or anybody else largely engaged in electioneering would keep so clear of corrupt practices as not to require your controlling eye?—I thought it was not at all compatible with the position of a solicitor in a borough like this to take a part in what was not legitimate.

21,186. An active part or a leading part?—Yes, an active part.

21,187. Is it not the fact that not one of the parties taking a leading part among the Liberal solicitors of this borough in the bringing out the candidates, and conducting the election, has refrained from taking a part in bribery?—So it appears.

21,188. (Mr. Coleridge.) It appears that after the election Mr. Vanderbyl gave Mr. Barham 200*l.*?—Yes.

21,189. Did you receive a part of that?—Some considerable time after Mr. Barham paid me 25*l.* I cannot recollect the time.

21,190. What for?—He paid me over that, so to speak, my share, or part of it, and he accounted subsequently, in 1867 I think it was, for a further sum. There were some accounts.

21,191. He got 50*l.* in 1857 you know, from Mr. Bagehot?—Yes.

21,192. And in 1866 he had got 200*l.* from Mr. Vanderbyl?—Yes.

21,193. Did you get an aliquot part of each of those sums?—I got a portion as I told you, of the 200*l.*; 25*l.* I think, and I got another sum after Mr. Bagehot had cleared up his account, which was not till subsequently.

21,194. How much?—I think it was 15*l.*, but I am not quite sure. I will get the figures for you.

21,195. Did Mr. Barham when he paid you these sums tell you what it was for?—Simply that he had received from Mr. Bagehot so much for——

21,196. Did he tell you that he had received 50*l.*, and only gave you 12*l.* or 15*l.*?—There were sums I had received as town clerk for work I had done, and that was carried into the account.

21,197. Take the 200*l.* Did he tell you he had received 200*l.*, and did he only give you at the time 25*l.*?—He did not tell me he had received 200*l.* at that time from Mr. Vanderbyl. He gave me 25*l.*

21,198. As your share?—Yes.

21,199. When did he tell you that he had received 200*l.* instead of 50*l.* as you probably imagined?—Some time I think when Mr. Brogden's account was cleared up. He had made payments or sums, which he deducted himself.

21,200. Did you remonstrate with him and say that 25*l.* was not a fair proportion of 200*l.*?—No; I said, "What you think is fair I am perfectly satisfied with." He had made payments which I knew as a fact, for instance, towards that fund—the subscription towards the petition in Sir John Shelley's case.

21,201. But that was his own private subscription?—I know, I am quite aware of it, and that was deducted out of it.

21,202. And you did not consider yourself entitled to what he got for his services at the election?—Well, I never raised the question with him.

21,203. But did you consider yourself entitled to half what he got?—Strictly speaking, I should be.

21,204. Because his time would be deducted from the time of your firm?—Yes.

21,205. And that is the only way he accounted to you for it, that he was engaged on the election?—That is the way he accounted for it, Vanderbyl's and Bagehot's election.

21,206. (Mr. Price.) I suppose you thought it wise not to probe too deeply?—It was this. At that time I had heard there had been corrupt practices, but I did not know, nor did I know it till now how far Mr. Barham had been concerned in them. I thought it was quite possible that he had had notice by which, as a lawyer, you will understand what I mean—knowledge; but I had not the most remote conception that he was mixed up with them in the way he had. I had not the most remote idea of it.

21,207. There would be nothing in your banking account which would show whether money was paid in or drawn out on account of the election?—Nothing there at all. In fact if it had been through my banking account my attention must have been called to it. I should have seen at once, "Cheque for" so-and-so.

21,208. (Mr. Anstey.) Where is your bank?—The West of England Bank.

21,209. That is the place where he banks?—Just so.

21,210. Has he a private account there?—Yes.

21,211. And you have a private account there also?—Yes.

21,212. What did you mean just now when you said, that by strict legal right you would be entitled to a share?—Well, the learned Commissioner, Mr. Coleridge, asked if I thought I was not entitled to 100*l.*

21,213. Will you please to answer my question. I ask you why you consider it was your strict legal right to share in the money received by your partner. What is the distinction you draw between your strict legal right to share in one item more than in another item?—I say in strict point of law I think myself entitled to have half of that 200*l.*

21,214. But you are drawing a distinction between your legal right with respect to one thing and something else?—Well, I might have said, "I do not choose to allow your private payments out of that." I did not claim it at all.

21,215. You mean there was no moral right?—Yes.

21,216. What do you mean by your legal right?—

I did not press my strict legal right to a division of the 200*l*. That is all I wish to convey.

21,217. Have you not been able to discover anything about the great petition of 1838?—No, I have not; I have tried.

21,218. Not with the clue I have given to you? When it was presented there was a long debate, and the speaker ruled it could not lie on the table, because at that time a petition had been presented, which had not then been tried. Upon that it was withdrawn, and it was stated that it would be presented after the petition was tried, and it was never presented again after the petition was tried?—I have not been able to find it. I may say, on no occasion have I ever canvassed about with the exception of writing to King, who was at Lyme, to come up to Sir John Shelley's election. I think it right to state that, because I have always held out the course I wished to pursue, that is, to take no part in the elections, and I never have.

21,219. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say in 1854, as soon as you were elected town clerk, you took no active part in any election?—No.

21,220. Did you ever do so before?—I was a partner with Mr. Lovibond from the end of 1843, down to Christmas 1854; and down to that time there were two general elections. The one in 1847 I think was when Mr. Broadwood and Colonel Tynte stood. I could tell from my returns.

21,221. (Mr. Price.) Mr. Mansell was it not?—No, Mr. Broadwood; when Mr. Serjeant Gazelee was brought down. Mr. Lovibond acted entirely on that occasion, as he always did, for Colonel Tynte. I took no part in that election more than I am going to tell you of now. I was asked by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, just before the nomination to go down to see Mr. John Trevor, who was engaged in politics, as to the writ being sent down to the under sheriff. That was all the part I took in it. And then the election of 1851——

21,222. (Mr. Coleridge.) The election of 1852 was it not?—It was 1852. It was Lord Henley's election. Mr. Lovibond was again acting for Colonel Tynte, and also for Lord Henley, and he asked me to act for Lord Henley, and I refused to take any part in electioneering matters.

21,223. Did Mr. Lovibond treat you to a share of the plunder as Mr. Barham did?—No, he did not.

21,224. He did not even treat you as well as Mr. Barham has?—No; his time was taken up with it, and I never interfered.

21,225. Do you know whether Mr. Lovibond ever made anything out of the elections?—I do not know; he died a wealthy man.

21,226. (Mr. Anstey.) You declined to take a part with Mr. Lovibond in the election matters?—Well, he never said anything to me on the election proceedings, and I was as ignorant of Mr. Lovibond's proceedings perhaps as much as you are.

21,227. Had Mr. Lovibond been town clerk before you?—No; he was magistrate's clerk at one time.

21,228. Who was your predecessor?—My predecessor was Mr. Richard Smith, for a short time, and before that, a Mr. Matthew Parramore, who is dead.

21,229. Mr. Smith was a Liberal?—Yes.

21,230. And Mr. Matthew Parramore also?—No; Mr. Matthew Parramore was a Conservative.

21,231. Who succeeded Mr. Trevor on the passing of the Reform Act?—Mr. Matthew Parramore. That was before my time. I will get you information if you wish it.

21,232. (Mr. Coleridge.) How long have you been in this borough?—I came here in 1841.

21,233. Then you cannot tell us anything about Leader's election in 1835?—No; I can tell you nothing about it; simply from report I have heard he was a very rich candidate.

Mr. Daniel Spink sworn. Mr. D. Spink.

12,234. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you a registered voter in this borough?—I am not.

21,335. Are you a partner in the firm of Hennet and Spink?—I am.

21,236. How long is it since you left Bridgwater?—I left Bridgwater on the 10th of July.

21,237. Last?—Last.

21,238. That was after the address had gone up for the appointment of this Commission?—Oh yes, decidedly.

21,239. Do you remember Mr. Vanderbyl coming here a few days before the last election of 1868, and telling you he should like very much to have a compromise, or a coalition with Mr. Westropp?—No; it did not emanate from him.

21,240. I did not use that fine word "emanate" at all. I ask you, do you remember having any conversation about it?—I do.

21,241. Tell us all about that?—One Sunday, Mr. Fennelly came to my house. I was then living——

21,242. Stop a moment. Was that the Sunday immediately before the election?—To the best of my knowledge it was the Sunday immediately before the election. I dined in the mid-day, and I think after dinner he took a walk with me on the Wembdon Hill. We then discussed Mr. Vanderbyl's chances of success, and I said, "It occurs to me that a compromise "might be arranged which would prevent any money "whatever being spent on either side in bribery."

21,243. Tell us what Mr. Fennelly said to you, which made that occur to you about spending money?—The idea entirely emanated from myself.

21,244. Will you tell us what Mr. Fennelly said to you about spending money?—Mr. Fennelly, up to that moment, to the best of my recollection had not said one word to me about spending money.

21,245. I thought you said this would be a good way to prevent the spending of money?—Simply from my knowledge of the borough, I was morally certain that if steps were not taken to prevent it, that at this election money would be spent, and I thought this would be a good idea to prevent money being spent; and I said, "I throw out this crude idea, and give "you an outline of it, and you can fill in the details "and see if anything can be made of it."

21,246. Did Mr. Fennelly say anything about an interview with Mr. Vanderbyl?—He did not.

21,247. What did he say about this idea?—He said, "I think there is something in it; I will think it over."

21,248. What happened in consequence of that?—In consequence of that Mr. Westropp had an interview at Mr. Hennett's house with Mr. Fennelly.

21,249. Were you present?—I was not present in the room when Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Westropp met. I thought it would be better, and they would be more at their ease if Mr. Hennet and myself left them. They were left entirely alone together.

21,250. And where were you?—I cannot be positive whether I was in another room, or whether I went home, or whether I was simply walking about.

21,251. What I want to know is this: Had you any conversation yourself with Mr. Westropp, or Mr. Vanderbyl or Mr Fennelly, after your conversation of the morning with Mr. Fennelly?—I did have a conversation with Mr. Westropp to the best of my belief before Mr. Westropp and Mr. Fennelly met.

21,252. Well, what took place then?—I said to Mr. Westropp, "I understand and I have an idea that the Conservatives are going to spend money."

21,253. What did Mr. Westropp say to that?—Mr. Westropp smiled, and said, "You know a great deal." And I said, "Well, I will tell you what, Mr. Westropp, "Mr. Vanderbyl is not going to spend one farthing; "but if it costs 10,000*l*. to prove bribery against your "side, he will spend it." I said that in consequence of a conversation I had had previously with Mr. Vanderbyl, and Mr. Vanderbyl then gave me the idea that he was going to fight a pure election—to fight on pure principles.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. D. Spink.

16 Sept. 1869.

21,254. You had seen Mr. Vanderbyl before?—I had seen Mr. Vanderbyl before.

21,255. That day?—I think that day. I think he was ill in bed with bronchitis.

21,256. I will come to that presently. What did Mr. Westropp say to that?—Mr. Westropp said he must consult his legal adviser before he gave an answer. I believe he went and saw Mr. Brice. He came back again and said, "I have been talking the "matter over, and I will tell you this, that although "we are disposed to fight every inch of ground, and "dispute it to the utmost, still for the sake of peace, "and to prevent any improper practices on either "side, I have had a conversation with Mr. Gray, and "Mr. Gray is willing to yield so far as he is concerned, "and if it can be done I on my part have no objection, "but it must however be laid before the legal advisers "on either side; it must come to us in a legal form "and then we will discuss it."

21,257. Did you communicate that to any person?—I communicated that to Mr. Fennelly I think.

21,258. And was it after you had so communicated, that the conversation you have already spoken of between Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Westropp took place?—I do not know. I think it was on the same day—the same evening.

21,259. What was the upshot of it; what was done?—The upshot of it was that Mr. Fennelly went and saw Mr. Cook, as the legal representative of Mr. Vanderbyl, as to the possibility of carrying out this scheme.

21,260. Now go back to what you said of your having seen Mr. Vanderbyl at an earlier period of that day, when he was ill of bronchitis. What o'clock was it you saw him?—I think, in the first place, that I saw Mr. Vanderbyl very early on the Sunday morning. I think so, so far as my memory serves.

21,261. Was he in bed?—I think he was.

21,262. And did you speak to him about the expenditure at the approaching election?—No, I do not think I did.

21,263. What did you say to him then which brought out that statement which you communicated to Mr. Westropp. You say when you spoke to Mr. Westropp you referred to what had passed between you and Mr. Vanderbyl. When did that occur?—I think I saw Mr. Vanderbyl more than once that Sunday.

21,264. When did you have any conversation with him with respect to money being spent at the election?—I never had any idea about any money going to be spent at the election.

21,265. I thought you said that you distinctly told Mr. Westropp that Mr. Vanderbyl would not spend any money otherwise than in proving bribery on the other side, and if it cost 10,000*l.* to expose it he would spend it?—He did say that.

21,266. Then I want to know how that came out; what led to his making that remark?—I think it came out in talking the matter over as to the chances of the other side (I mean by "the other side," the Conservatives) spending money.

21,267. Who mentioned that they were going to spend money; you or Mr. Vanderbyl?—I think it came up as an understood thing. There was no mystery about it. It is a thing that always has taken place.

21,268. And Mr. Vanderbyl said he was prepared to spend 10,000*l.*, if necessary, to expose bribery on the other side?—It may have been 3,000*l.*; I would not say.

21,269. Or 3,000*l.* in exposing bribery, but he would not bribe himself?—Exactly.

21,270. Was there anything said to you on that occasion by Mr. Vanderbyl, about coming to a compromise, when he was talking to you about this?—Yes, I understood he was perfectly willing to fall into it.

21,271. Therefore, when you went to Mr. Westropp, and made this statement about Mr. Vanderbyl's determination not to bribe, and to spend money in order to expose Mr. Westropp's bribery, you also communicated to him, did you not, that Mr. Vanderbyl you thought would not be unwilling to come to a compromise?—Yes.

21,272. Therefore you went to Mr. Westropp for that double purpose, for communicating both of those points?—To endeavour to bring the two together, in point of fact.

21,273. Therefore, the communication which you made about Mr. Vanderbyl's readiness with regard to expenditure, was used by you as an inducement to operate on Mr. Westropp's mind, and to persuade him to content himself with one seat for himself, and to let Mr. Vanderbyl have the other?—Yes.

21,274. Now, did you see Mr. Westropp again that day?—I saw Mr. Westropp a second time. I saw Mr. Westropp on the Sunday afternoon before he had consulted Mr. Brice. I saw him afterwards when he came back again to meet Mr. Fennelly. Then I left Mr. Fennelly and Mr. Westropp together in Mr. Hennet's dining-room, and to the best of my memory, I did not see anything more of him. I simply shook hands, and did not ask what had taken place between the two. I thought it was not my business to ask.

21,275. Had you any conversation with Mr. Westropp, either before witnesses, or not before witnesses, on this matter, at any time after that occasion when he came back from Mr. Brice's?—Will you kindly repeat the question?

21,276. You know you had two conversations with Mr. Westropp, one before he went to Mr. Brice's, and one when he came back, and I ask you, after that second conversation, had you, at any time, either that day or afterwards, any conversation with Mr. Westropp on the subject, whether before witnesses or not before witnesses?—I do not think I did; I do not think so.

21,277. You yourself are a Liberal, are you not, in politics?—I am a Liberal-Conservative.

21,278. You have all through your examination used the term, "the other side," and you said by that you meant the Conservatives?—I considered myself more identified with Mr. Vanderbyl. I was with him on the Irish Church question.

21,279. I do not want to know your points of political agreement or disagreement, but it is a fact that you are a partisan of Mr. Vanderbyl's?—I am.

21,280. And a private friend of his?—A private friend.

21,281. And your firm or yourself, have received advantageous business through that friendship?—I am hardly prepared to say that. The first thing I had to do was to repair a steamer in connexion with the Lundy Island Granite Company, and in the course of conversation, it came out that he had had dealings with our firm. I said, "Mr. Vanderbyl, as far as our having any "benefit from that steamboat of yours, we had better "not have had to do either with you or your vessel, "because it was a losing concern, and we got no "benefit from that."

21,282. (Mr. Coleridge.) You have had advantageous things from him?—We have had one contract, for which Mr. Farren received a commission, which he represented came through him, through his influence with Mr. Vanderbyl. He received his commission of 5 per cent. in the usual way.

21,283. (Mr. Anstey.) You yourself had no vote for the borough?—No, I had not.

21,284. Not at this time?—No.

21,285. Supposing this arrangement to have carried through, which way would your partner have voted?—I do not know. To my idea, he was a Conservative, thoroughly devoted to Mr. Westropp and Mr. Gray.

(A short adjournment here took place.)

AMBROSE DYER sworn.

21,286. (Mr. Price.) Are you a voter for the borough of Bridgwater?—I am.

21,287. What are you?—A nurseryman.

21,288. Carrying on business in Bridgwater, are you?—Yes.

21,289. Did you vote at the last election?—I did.

21,290. Whom did you vote for?—For Kinglake and Vanderbyl.

21,291. Did you get anything for it?—No.

21,292. Were you promised anything?—No.

21,293. Did you make any claim of any kind upon anybody?—No.

21,294. Did you take any part in bribing anybody else?—No, not any.

21,295. Or in treating?—No.

21,296. You did nothing but vote at the last election?—No.

21,297. Did you go out of town after you had voted?—I did.

21,298. After dinner?—I did.

21,299. Went to Taunton?—I did.

21,300. At the election of Vanderbyl in 1866, did you get any money then?—I did.

21,301. Did you vote?—I did.

21,302. Who for, Vanderbyl?—Vanderbyl.

21,303. What did you get?—I got 30*l.* from Allan.

21,304. What did you do with the 30*l.*?—10*l.* I gave to Alway, the grocer; 10*l.* I gave to William Vickery; and 10*l.* to John Dyer.

21,305. Your son?—Yes.

21,306. Was that all given for their votes?—It was.

21,307. Did you get anything yourself?—No, I did not.

21,308. Did you take any other part in that election?—None whatever. I attended two or three meetings.

21,309. Was your son a voter?—He is.

21,310. And you gave him 10*l.*?—I did.

21,311. (Mr. Anstey.) Where were the meetings held that you attended?—One was held here at the "Mansion House" inn.

21,312. Was there drinking going on?—Not a spoonful of anything. It was a public meeting.

21,313. I do not mean in the public meeting, but was drinking going on in the public-house?—I do not know; I was not in there. I was only in the room where the meeting was.

21,314. (Mr. Price.) Well then, in Bagehot's election, did you vote?—I did.

21,315. Whom did you vote for?—For Bagehot.

21,316. Did you get any money then?—I did.

21,317. How much?—20*l.*

21,318. Whom did you get it of?—For John Dyer and William Vickery.

21,319. But whom did you get it from?—From Allan.

21,320. Did not you take any share in these two tens that you gave to your son?—No.

21,321. What is your son?—He is a labourer.

21,322. (Mr. Anstey.) A partner of yours?—No.

21,323. (Mr. Price.) Does he work for you?—He did then.

21,324. Did you pay him wages?—Yes.

21,325. Did you pay him this 10*l.* instead of paying him wages?—No, certainly not.

21,326. You paid him his wages as well?—Yes, I did.

21,327. (Mr. Anstey.) That was in June 1866?—Yes.

21,328. In the previous month of May, that is a month before, you had signed a petition telling the House of Commons you were very anxious to prevent corrupt practices?—I did.

21,329. Who seduced you from that good opinion?—Well, I would do almost anything to do away with bribery.

21,330. Well, who seduced you from it, because you were the next month bribing away like mad, you know. Who seduced you from that opinion?—Well, no one at all that I am aware of.

21,331. (Mr. Price.) The thing was a humbug, in fact, it is quite clear. The candidates were Kinglake, Shelley, and Westropp in 1865?—Yes.

21,332. Did you vote then?—I did.

21,333. Whom did you for?—Shelley.

21,334. Shelley alone?—Kinglake and Shelley.

21,335. Did you get any money then?—No, I did not.

21,336. Not for anybody?—No.

21,337. Did you have a person of the name of Cooze a tenant of you at that time?—I had.

21,338. Do you know how he voted?—Yes.

21,339. How?—For Westropp.

21,340. Did you ask him how that happened?—I did.

21,341. Why did you interfere with him at all about his vote?—Because he had always promised me that he would vote as a Liberal. He always did vote as a Liberal before, and I understood that he was going to again.

21,342. What did he say when you asked him about it?—Why, that there was no money going on the Liberal side, and he was determined to have it from somewhere.

21,343. Where did he get it from?—He told me he had it from Thomas Boys.

21,344. How much?—10*l.*

21,345. Did you take him to the committee room?—I did.

21,346. To Benjamin Lovibond?—Yes.

21,347. Did you get the 10 sovereigns from Mrs. Cooze, and give her up 10 in place of them?—I did.

21,348. Did you go to London as a witness on the petition?—Yes.

21,349. And were examined?—Yes.

21,350. And gave that account to the committee?—I did.

21,351. (Mr. Coleridge.) You say you would do anything in the world to get rid of bribery?—Yes.

21,352. Did you think the best way of getting rid of it was to supply people with money to bribe with?—I knew very well they were doing it the other side, Those very individuals that I bribed, I knew they were offered to be bribed on the other side.

21,353. You had no real objection to bribery, or else you would not have done it?—I had a very great objection to bribery; I always had.

21,354. Why then did you do it?—Because I knew they were doing it on the other side, and the other party would have had the votes that belonged to us.

21,355. (Mr. Anstey.) I find I did you an injustice in saying you were anxious to prevent corrupt practices. You did not express your desire to get rid of corrupt practices. You only express your desire to get rid of those that prevailed before. You were "anxious to prevent the recurrence of the corrupt "practices which prevailed at the last election, the "existence of which had been reported to the House." That is, you were only anxious to prevent the recurrence of corrupt practices on Westropp's side. Is that so? That is the meaning of your petition, I see?—Yes.

21,356. (Mr. Coleridge.) You do not mean corrupt practices on your own?—I do not like to see them on either side.

21,357. Why did you always assist at them?—I did, and I have told you my reason for it.

21,358. (Mr. Price.) In the election of 1859 did you vote for Kinglake and Tynte?—I did.

21,359. Did you get anything for it then?—No.

21,360. Did you bribe anybody?—No, I did not.

21,361. Did you take any other part in the election?—No, none whatever.

21,362. How long before that had you come to reside in Bridgwater?—1854, I think.

21,363. Had you anything to do with the election of 1857?—Who were the candidates?

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

A. Dyer.

16 Sept. 1869.

21,364. That would be at the time Mr. Kinglake came in with Colonel Tynte.

21,365. (Mr. Coleridge.) Kinglake and Tynte and Follett?—Oh yes, I was a voter then.

21,366. (Mr. Price.) Did you bribe then?—No.

21,367. Did you get anything?—No.

21,368. Have you ever got anything in the way of business or in money in your life?—Not a halfpenny in my life.

21,369. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you get paid for your expenses when you were doing this?—Nothing.

21,370. Nothing whatever?—Nothing.

21,371. What did you keep back for it, a shilling in the pound?—No, I never did in my life,

21,372. You did it merely for the love of the sport?—Yes.

21,373. (Mr. Price.) You keep a garden?—Yes.

21,374. Did you get your fruit bought at high prices during the election?—No, not a halfpenny more than at any other time.

T. Hill.

THOMAS HILL sworn.

21,375. (Mr. Price.) Do you live in St. John Street, and are you a baker?—Yes.

21,376. Or you were a baker. You are out of business now?—Yes.

21,377. Are you a voter?—Yes.

21,378. Were you at the election of 1868 chairman of the Bridgwater branch of the reform league?—Yes.

21,379. What part did you take in the last election?—I took an active part so far as trying to get people to vote, and so on. I cannot say that I took any other part.

21,380. What time did you vote yourself?—I was voting before the poll was opened in the eastward, but the mayor's uncle popped in before me; and I intended to have the first vote, but he forestalled me, and I had the second.

21,381. Did you receive any money at that time, either for yourself or to bribe anybody else with?—No.

21,382. Did you make any promise of it?—Decidedly not.

21,383. Did you know that money was going at any time during that day?—I did not know it till nearly 4 o'clock.

21,384. During that time when you went to get voters up to vote you never induced them to go by saying if there was money going they should have it?—No, not those words. I may have said, "Come, "don't stand about any longer. You will stand as "good a chance if there should be anything as if you "wait any longer." I never promised them.

21,385. But you might have said that?—I would not say that I did not.

21,386. In Vanderbyl's election of 1866, did you distribute money then?—I think I had better hand in this (producing a list.)

(Mr. Coleridge.) You must answer the question.

(Mr. Price.) You must answer. Did you distribute money then.

(Mr. Coleridge.) You may answer from that paper.

21,387. (Mr. Price.) You may look at that and answer my question. Did you distribute money at that election?—That is Vanderbyl's.

21,388. Vanderbyl's?—Yes, I did.

21,389. How much altogether? Seventy pounds was it? I will give you the names. I dare say they are down here. Did you give Peter Tilbert 10*l.* for Richard Pawley?—I did, and he voted.

21,390. Did you pay 10*l.* yourself to Thomas Ralls?—I did.

21,391. Did you pay 10*l.* to Thomas Bisgrove?—I did.

21,392. Ten pounds to Henry Vearncomb?—I did.

21,393. Ten pounds to James Fletcher?—I did.

21,394. Ten pounds to John Tucker?—I did.

21,395. Ten pounds to James Far Squires?—I did.

21,396. Making 70*l.* altogether?—Making 70*l.*

21,397. Whom did you get that money from?—From Mr. Allan.

21,398. Did you also give 10*l.* to Robert Walters? I did.

21,399. Ten pounds to Frederick Walters?—I did.

21,400. Fifteen pounds to Stephen Colin Jones?—Yes, for John Richards that has been named in this court.

21,401. Did you give 5*l.* to Mr. Pearce of Hampward, to send Richard Tooze to Weston-super-Mare?—I am not quite certain, but I believe that that must be the man. It was the same man that brought me the two Walterses, and I am not positive about that.

21,402. Had he brought him from Weston-super-Mare?—I gave him 5*l.* to take down to him to see him off to Weston-super-Mare, and I said to him particularly, "Now, if I give you this 5*l.* to take Mr. Tooze off to Weston-super-Mare, don't you give him the money till you get him in the train.

21,403. What did you send him to Weston-super-Mare for?—To prevent him from voting. He would not vote for us; and he came back and he told me that he had done so, and it was all right. I am not quite certain who the person was.

21,404. That is Pearce?—I think it was.

21,405. That is 40*l.* Where did you get that 40*l.* from?—From Andrew Allan.

21,406. Now come to the election of Bagehot in 1866. Did you give 10*l.* to Thomas Bisgrove then?—Yes.

21,407. Ten to Thomas Ralls?—Yes.

21,408. Ten to James Fletcher, who is now in America?—Yes, but his wife can be found.

21,409. John Virgin, 10*l.* He is dead?—Yes.

21,410. His wife is living?—Yes.

21,411. Did you give 10*l.* to John Tucker?—When the report came out after Mr. Smith had given his evidence here, Mr. Tucker (John Tucker) came to me, and he said to me, "Well, whatever is this fuss about? How is this?" He said, "John Smith has "reported that I have had 10*l.* at Bagehot's election, "and 10*l.* at Vanderbyl's election from him. I have "never had a penny from him. It is no such thing. "It is not true." He said, "All that I have had is "I have had one 10*l.* from you. That is at Mr. Van-"derbyl's election," said he. "I had none at Mr. "Bagehot's election. I have had 10*l.*," he said, "once "of Henry Faun. I never had but 20*l.* in my life." I said, "Well, I don't know. I fancied—— I made "out that report," said I, "myself, but I understood "that I paid you the 10*l.* at each of those elections, "and I am strongly persuaded that I did do so; but," I says, "I can't understand it if it should not be so. "I will turn it over in my mind again."

21,412. Now, you could find that out by telling us——?—Oh, I am going to tell you. I am going to put you in possession of all the particulars, and give you the evidence clearly if I possibly can. Then I said, "Well, if things should be so," I said, "I must try to make the best thing of it I can." Said I, "Your oath will be as good as mine." That is the very words I made use of, but I am strongly of opinion I did give it to him.

21,413. How much did you get from Allan?—If you will excuse me. Well, I said to myself, well, if I did not give it to him then I must return back to Andrew Allan. The list that I gave him I am prepared to swear to: and that was a correct list of how I got rid of that 50*l.*, and that is what I had from Allan.

21,414. Did you return Tucker's name? Do you remember returning Tucker's name to Allan?—No, I do not. There I am at a loss, but I returned and accounted for the 50*l.* by the real parties that had the money, and if that can be produced I will swear to that as correct.

21,415. You cannot swear whether Tucker's name is there or not?—No.

21,416. But you strongly believe it was?—Yes.

21,417. Was he a man who you knew would be likely to take money for his vote?—Well, I spoke to him, and he should not have had the money if I had not understood that.

21,418. Does that lead you to think that you did give give him the money?—Yes.

21,419. He does not dispute that he did get 10*l.* from you?—No, not at Vanderbyl's election.

21,420. You did not stick to the 10*l.* then?—No, never in my life.

21,421. Did you stop anything for expenses?—Never.

21,422 (Mr. Coleridge.) You did all this work for nothing?—I did, and shall be happy to do so again as long as I live.

21,423. What! happy to go on bribing?—Yes, I would——. No, no. I do not say that I would. That I must call back; but I would assist the Liberals all I could. If any candidate came here and told me that he is a supporter of the ballot, there is my stand; and if you are not a supporter of the ballot I don't vote for you; but if you are a supporter of the ballot I will support you as much as I can.

21,424. And bribe as much as you can?—No.

21,425. If you had the ballot you would not want to bribe?—I fancy not.

21,426. (Mr. Price.) Would not the ballot enable them to take money on both sides? Do you think if the Bridgwater people had the chance of getting it from both sides they would not take it in handfulls?—I should think that any gentleman would be a very foolish man to attempt to bribe.

21,427. Dou you really think men would not get money then on both sides?—My answer to that is, who would be the silly man that would risk his money?

(Mr. Price.) Well, we won't argue about it.

21,428. (Mr. Anstey.) As a humble supporter of the ballot I wish to ask you whether you think it would very much tend to make the ballot popular in this country to hear persons like you, and others who have gone before you, express, as you have done and they have done, their wish that the ballot may be introduced, they being notorious bribe givers, if not bribe takers also?—Well, all I can say is, I believe the ballot would cure it, and I am a strong supporter of the ballot, and I want to do away with bribery and corruption.

(Mr. Anstey.) I would advise you not to talk about purity of election. It is simply absurd.

(Mr. Coleridge.) If you did not tempt these men they would not be bribed. It is men like you that do the mischief.

(Mr. Anstey.) It is to me ridiculous to hear mention made of honorable names, like Gladstone and Bright, by such mouths.

21,429. (Mr. Price.) Well now, that makes 50*l.*?—Yes; that is all I had.

21,430. You gave an account, you say. Did you hear a report at that time of Mr. Greenhill?—We understood that—I am not prepared exactly for the time of the day, but the Liberals were a long way ahead, and it was reported that Mr. Greenhill had left the town, and when he arrived, I think it must have been somewhere about 11, or half-past 11, or somewhere there about, but they said he had arrived, and he drove up to the hotel, and the report was that he had arrived with money, and Mr. Joseph Smith came out of the hotel (that is the report) and he said, "Now," he said, "the election we shall win," said he; "we are right now," or something to that effect. That was reported in the committee room where I was, in George Lane.

21,431. (Mr. Coleridge.) Which side was Mr. Greenhill?—On the Conservative side.

(Mr. Price.) Well, now we will go to the election of 1865, when Kinglake and Shelley, and Westropp stood.

(Witness.) Will you allow me? There is one name that I should like to mention in connexion with the first election before I go to the other. That is, there was a man by the name of Edwin Baskerville. He was the one that was first and foremost, and the one that was the getter up and former of the league here in 1866. He joined that, and he was a regular attendant. He was one that spoke, and was a very strong supporter, and he joined also the Liberal Association. He attended almost every meeting; but, on the day of the poll he voted for Westropp and Gray. Now, I do not understand a man doing that.

21,432. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had not you sugared him, or what?—No, I had nothing to do with him.

21,433. (Mr. Anstey.) At the last election?—Yes.

21,434. (Mr. Price.) But you would have done it if you had it to do with?—No.

21,435. I thought you said so?—I beg pardon. I made up my mind to have nothing to do with money matters at the last election.

21,436. (Mr. Coleridge.) But had you offered no money?—That is a slip of the tongue.

21,437. (Mr. Price.) Your tongue is so accustomed at election times to speak about money?—I did not intend to do it any more.

21,438. (Mr. Anstey.) What was the name of that man?—Edwin Baskerville, Bath Road.

21,439. (Mr. Price.) Did you take any part in the way of a slip of the tongue, or of the hand either, in the election of 1865?—No, I took but very litle part in it.

21,440. What little did you do?—I was at those meetings.

21,441. Did you do anything in the way of treating?—No, I did not.

21,442. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear any complaints made, or remarks made, by any of the voters to the effect that Sir John Shelley ought not to have pledged himself and made Mr. Lovibond pledge himself not to bribe?—I recollect no such thing as that.

21,443. Was it known among the electors generally that Sir John Shelley had obtained that pledge in honor from Mr. Lovibond?—Well, it was given the night before. I am quite aware of that. It was given by Mr. Lovibond the night before, in my hearing.

21,444. I beg your pardon. If Sir John Shelley, who is now dead, told the truth about it, there can be no doubt the pledge was given in London. Was it known before Sir John Shelley came down here that that pledge had been given by Mr. Lovibond in honour?—No.

21,445. It was not?—No. After the election——

21,446. It was not known till after the election?—After the election I spoke to Mr. Lovibond. I told him that the people were deceived. They thought they were going to make a market, and they had been deceived.

21,447. You told Mr.——?—Mr. Benjamin Lovibond.

21,448. That is what I was bringing you to. What made you say that to him?—Because the people were so dissatisfied, and they expected the money.

21,449. Then they had to your knowledge been expecting money?—They had been expecting it.

21,450. When did you learn that they had been expecting money?—From the beginning to the end.

21,451. (Mr. Price.) A Bridgwater election means money when there is a contest?—Yes, it does.

21,452. They always expect it?—Quite right; it is so.

21,453. And they are always disappointed if they do not get it?—Yes.

21,454. (Mr. Anstey.) In this election of 1865, you know, Sir John Shelley's election, had you been talking to the voters about their votes when they told you that they expected money?—Do you mean before the day of polling, or on the day of polling?

21,455. Before the day of polling?—Before the day

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

T. Hill.

16 Sept. 1869.

of polling we are all very anxious, and ask them to be prepared, and ask them to vote early, and all that sort of thing, and we get the answer.

21,456. I am not asking what was generally done. Go on with what you told me just now, about the people expecting money. Did they tell you that before they polled?—Decidedly; the people are always asking.

21,457. I do not want what they were always doing; that has nothing to do with it. I ask what it was then. Did they before the polling day at this election of 1865 tell you that they expected money?—They did.

21,458. Then why did not you answer? Were you canvassing them when they told you this?—Oh no, it was not on the canvass. I canvassed with those gentlemen; but there was no such thing, not then.

21,459. You never canvassed by yourself?—Oh, when I have been asking by myself that is what I got.

21,460. Then you did speak to them by yourself?—Yes.

21,461. Very well. And they told you that?—Yes.

21,462. What did you tell them in reply?—I told them that I knew nothing at all about money matters.

21,463. Did you tell them that it would be all right by-and-by?—No, I did not.

21,464. Then what did you mean by your observation to Mr. Benjamin Lovibond that the people had been deceived? If you had made them no promises how could they have been deceived?—Well, I mean speaking in general terms.

21,465. You did not mean in that particular election?—No.

21,466. Did you mean to say that they had always been deceived at all elections?—No; they had been deceived at that election because they expected there would be money when there was not any.

21,467. Did anything that you said to them encourage them in that expectation?—Decidedly not; I never gave them no encouragement at all.

21,468. Why not? You did not think there was any harm in that?—I did not. I am very cautious about elections when I promise them anything. I do not promise them anything but what I think I can fulfil.

21,469. Then you had no authority to make them any promise?—I had no authority.

21,470. Did you tell them there were no hopes at all of getting money?—I did.

21,471. Did you tell them that there was to be no money?—I did, because I understood there was to be none.

21,472. I thought you told me it was not until the night before?—That was when Mr. Benjamin Lovibond stated it.

21,473. Then from whom did you learn there was to be no money?—I do not know who it was, but from some of the authorities. They said, "There will be no money, Hill; there will be no money."

21,474. How long had you heard that before the polling day?—Several days.

21,475. You repeated that to the people?—I did.

21,476. Then I do not understand why the people could have been deceived in their expectations?—Because, as one of the honorable Commissioners observed, a Bridgwater election means money.

21,477. Do you mean to say that the people thought that what you said to them about there being no money was only the usual pretence?—Yes.

21,478. And that there would be money?—Yes.

21,479. Is it always usual in those cases, even where money is expected for the persons who are to have the charge of it to say beforehand, "You must not look for it"?—We always, I believe, every one of us, make that observation, because we are not positive.

21,480. Now, you heard from Mr. Lovibond the night before the election that he had given this promise to Sir John Shelley, did you?—Well, yes.

21,481. Was that the night of the election or the night after the election?—That was the day of the poll, I believe. No, no, the night before the poll.

21,482. The night of the nomination?—Yes.

21,483. Between the nomination and the poll?—Yes.

21,484. What did you say to him?—I never made any answer. He spoke it to several in the room.

21,485. When was it you told him the people had been deceived?—After the election.

21,486. What day was that?—Three or four days it may be after the election.

21,487. What did he say to that?—Laughed at it, and made no answer.

21,488. (Mr. Price.) Now we will go to the election of 1859. In 1859 did you receive 100*l.* from Mr. Charles Foster?—I did.

21,489. He was Mr. Lovibond's clerk. Did you pay Mr. Poole, of St. John Street, innkeeper, 10*l.*?—I did.

21,490. Did you pay William Squibbs 10*l.*?—I gave it to my son, and he handed it to him.

21,491. He told you so; you do not know it, I suppose?—I came in from the court, and said, "Go on." He understood what I meant, but I think a great deal has been said about that 10*l.*

21,492. It is not quite clear it ever got to Squibbs, is it?—Oh yes.

21,493. There is a good deal that has been said about it?—Because he went down to the station yard, and there he bribed him. He said he had got 10*l.* from Thomas Hill, and I believe he carried that 10*l.* as far as I recollect, or another. It is reported he had it from the other side also. He carried that 10*l.* down there or another, and also he carried up one (whether it was the same I cannot say) up to the "White Hart." There was a gentleman down about Brook's Bridge—I do not know the particulars at all—he asked him to look at it, and he said, "You had this for your vote," and he said, "I did," or something like that. I am only speaking from the information of what was talked about at the time; and this gentleman gave him 10 sovereigns; and I believe if there had been a petition this 10*l.* would have been brought forward at the Committee.

21,494. In the same way that Palmer brought forward his 10*l.*?—Yes, I believe so.

21,495. Thomas Ralls, did you pay him 10*l.*?—I did.

21,496. Thomas Bisgrove?—I did.

21,497. James Culverwell?—I did.

21,498. Samuel Lee, 10*l.*?—I was in the garden with him, and my son was there, and I left him behind, and I said, "All right;" so he gave him 10*l.*; and the next day, or it may be a day or two afterwards, he came to me in Salmon Lane and said to me, "Mr. Hill," he said, "I am surprised." "What are you surprised of?" I said. (This will prove that he did have it.) He said, "I did not know the young gentleman." "Did you not?" I said. "No." "Why did you not know him?" I said. "I did not know that was your son." "All right," I said, "just so."

21,499. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was "the young gentleman"?—My son that gave him the 10*l.*; he said he thought he was Colonel Tynte's son.

21,500. That was Samuel Lee?—Yes.

21,501. (Mr. Price.) James Fletcher, did you give him 10*l.*?—Yes, I did.

21,502. Joseph Hawker?—I did; he is now over at Watchet.

21,503. Then Vincent Case, 10*l.*?—I did.

21,504. Joseph Pollard, 10*l.*?—I did.

21,505. That exhausted your 100*l.*?—That exhausted my 100*l.*

21,506. Is that all you had at that election?—That is all.

21,507. Had you anything yourself then?—Never.

21,508. Was that the first election at which you had anything to do with money?—It was.

21,509. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who persuaded you to have anything to do with money?—Mr. Foster spoke to me two or three days before and said, "I shall want your assistance." I think it was two days before, "I shall want your assistance the whole day."

21,510. Had you been doing bribery at municipal elections before that which made him think you would do it then?—A great many years agone I have done it at municipal elections.

21,511. Let us know about it?—I cannot but very little, it is so long back. I never meddled in any municipal elections since the compound franchise, I mean since the franchise was compounded.

21,512. At other elections, when you did meddle, what did you do?—I used to try and get them to poll, all that I possibly could.

21,513. What used you to pay them?—On several occasions as much as a couple of pounds.

21,514. 2l. a vote?—Yes.

21,515. How long ago would that be?

21,516. (Mr. Price.) How long before 1859?—Oh years before, it is so long ago I really cannot recollect.

21,517. Did you know Foster well?—Yes, I did.

21,518. Had you any business to do with him before this? Had you employed Mr. Lovibond as your solicitor?—No, never.

21,519. How was it he came to you?—Knowing me to be a Liberal and always very anxious on the Liberal cause; I can give you no other reason.

21,520. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who had given you money to bribe the men?—I always had; whatever money was expended I always had from Mr. Francis a respectable gentleman living in Eastover now dead.

21,521. A respectable gentleman who dealt in bribery?—We called him respectable.

21,522. Used he to bribe at parliamentary elections?—I do not know anything about that.

21,523. You once got a 5l. note to yourself, did not you?—I did.

31,524. Sent in an envelope?—Yes.

21,525. Nothing else.—Nothing else in the world but this 5l. note?

21,526. How do you account for that? When was it? 1859 was not it?—No, no; I cannot account for that. I cannot find my papers but it was previous to that, when Tynte put up, Tynte, Kinglake, and Lord Henley. I then had unlimited power to go and treat and spend what I thought proper given to me in the presence of Mr. Tynte himself, Colonel Tynte who was then returned to Parliament.

21,527. Who by?—And the solicitor's name was Gooding, he was with him, and they told me "We "shall put great confidence in you, you may go and "do just as you please."

21,528. Who told you that?—Mr. Gooding and Mr. Tynte.

21,529. (Mr. Price.) They must have know something of you if they did that?—Oh yes.

21,530. (Mr. Coleridge.) What has become of Mr. Gooding?—Dead.

21,531. (Mr. Price.) They must have known something about you at that time to entrust you to go and spend what you liked?—I was well known, always have been, a number of years.

21,532. (Mr. Coleridge. What did they give you? What money did you get from them?—I got nothing, but I was going to state that at that election I paid out a great deal of money out of my own pocket which I did not get for three years.

21,533. How much?—I really cannot say.

21,534. About?—It may have been 22l. or 23l., I really cannot say. I got that, all but 10l. paid by Mr. Foster, and Mr. Foster told me I might go to Mr. Gooding and get the other.

21,535. Was Gooding a solicitor?—He was. He happened to die and then I had no one to apply to. I applied to Mr. Tynte himself as he had given me the order, and he said, "I remember it perfectly well, "it is very hard for you, I will tell you what I'll do, "when I get home to-night quietly with my father "I will name it to him and get it put to rights for "you."

21,536. Did he?—Yes.

21,537. How did you get it?—It was very nearly 12 months after before I got it, I went up two or three times.

21,538. Where to?—Up to his house, and the old gentleman paid it, the father paid it.

21,539. Paid you by cheque?—Yes.

21,540 On what bank?—On the West of England.

21,541. That was for bribery and treating done by you at the election of 1857?—No, not 1857.

21,542. In 1852?—No.

21,543. Lord Henley's election?—It was at the election of Lord Henley. I have not got my paper.

21,544. You had better look to your paper, you will very likely find out some more that you can tell us?—Oh no I can't.

21,545. (Mr. Price.) Then that does not account for this 5l. note to you?—Then, sir, I said to them "I "never will lay out any money if I am to be done so "long out of the money which I lay out out of my own "pocket. I never will lay out a penny more." I said that up in Mr. Lovibond's office before Mr. Foster himself; and previous to the next election, about a week or a fortnight before, something like that, on a Sunday morning, I received an envelope with a 5l. note in it, and where it came from I didn't know, and do not know up to the present moment.

21,546. What did you do with it?—I spent it at the election. I expected it was for that purpose, and I did it.

21,547. (Mr. Price.) You first voted in 1837, at Broadwood's, did not you?—I did, reluctantly.

21,548. And you voted at every election from that time down to the last for the Liberals?—I did.

21,549. Was it not perfectly well known in addition to what you did yourself, perfectly notorious, that bribery went on at every election that you have known—on one side or the other, and sometimes on both?—I don't think it did.

21,550. On one side or the other?—I don't think it did. I am rather doubtful whether it did at Gazelee's election.

21,551. Was not Broadwood in Gazelee's election?—Yes.

21,552. There was never an election in which Broadwood was concerned without bribery?—I think there was. I do not think there was much money then. I won't be certain.

21,553. Not very much?—I don't think there was if there was any.

21,554. (Mr. Coleridge.) You don't recollect Leader's election, do you?—Yes.

21,555. Was there much money expended then?—Yes, there was.

21,556. How much?—I have heard it said in this hall that it was 10,000*l.* or 12,000*l.* I don't know the truth of it.

21,557. Had you anything to do with it?—No.

21,558. Did you get anything no?—No.

21,559. Did your father get anything?—No.

21,560. Not a farthing?—No.

21,561. Never offered anything?—My dear sir, I don't belong here. I was not born in Bridgwater.

21,562. How came you to be here?—How came I to be here?

21,563. When did you come here?—To try to better myself.

21,564. When did you come?—Oh, when did I come? In 1827.

21,565. (Mr. Anstey.) 1827 or 1837?—One thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven.

21,566. (Mr. Price.) How much did you spend in Broadwood's time, at his first election?—I have no means of knowing.

21,567. Was not the money given openly in the street?—I have heard that stated here, but I never saw it.

21,568. Was not that quite as expensive as Leader's?—I think Leader's was the most expensive that I know of.

21,569. (Mr. Coleridge.) Broadwood and Leader fought one another, did not they, and both spent lots of money?—Broadwood and Martin, I think.

21,570. I am talking about 1835, Leader's election?—Well, that would be it, I think.

21,571. There were two or three against him?—Yes, I think so.

21,572. (Mr. Anstey.) Do you recollect an election in which Broadwood was returned against Sheridan?—Yes, that was the first election. I voted.

31,573. Then Sheridan petitioned against the return?—Yes.

21,574. Then the old king died, and there was a new election, and Broadwood again stood against Leader?—No, not against Leader.

21,575. Who was it against?—Leader did not put up; I really forget.

21,576. (Mr. Coleridge.) Leader went to Westminster, did not he?—Yes, he did.

21,577. (Mr. Anstey.) At either of those elections do you recollect Broadwood's money and Leader's money being quoted against one another?—I recollect that there was money.

21,578. Do you recollect that people said, "If "Broadwood will give his forties Leader will give "his fifties"?—I remember the phrase being used; I do not know whether it would be a fact or no.

21,579. Do you know that Broadwood was a pianoforte maker?—I don't know.

(Mr. Price.) No, I understand he was not.

(Mr. Coleridge.) It was an allusion to that.

21,580. (Mr. Anstey.) That was it, was not it?—I don't know whether it was a fact. That is the story.

21,581. Do you remember in the midst of all this competition between Broadwood's money and Leader's money, a petition being got up by a number of persons who were anxious to get rid of the disgrace to the town (magistrates and others) a petition to the House of Commons praying that it would proceed by disfranchisement or otherwise to purify the borough before it was allowed to return a member of Parliament in the year 1838?—Well, I do not remember.

21,582. Well, it is a most extraordinary thing that nobody can recollect that?—I do not.

21,583. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you have got to tell us?—I do not believe that I have anything more that I can tell you, but I am open to answer any questions that may be asked.

21,584. (Mr. Coleridge.) When was the last time that to your knowledge there was bribery at a municipal election; does it take place at present here?—Well, there are treatings. I do not know about any money. I have been an assessor for four or five years, and I have never been out on that day at all. I am confined in.

21,585. Before five or six years ago was there any?—I do not think there has been a great deal of that this many years, but when it was on the old 10*l.* then they used to try to make their market.

21,586. And about 2*l.* was the mark?—Yes, I never gave them more than 2*l.*

21,587. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you send an invitation or requisition to Sir Thomas Lethbridge asking him to come forward and stand in the year 1836 or 1837?—I cannot charge my memory, but I think I did.

21,588. And were you one of those who having requested him to stand as soon as you provoked a contest voted against him?—Never.

21,589. You remember a number of those who requested him to stand voting against him and returning Broadwood, the Tory?—It was reported so. I beg your pardon, there is one thing more that I have not given in. It is this bill. When Mr. Bowden, the secretary of the league, left Bridgwater. He is gone to London——

21,590. Mr. who?—Mr. Bowden. He used to be the secretary of the league.

21,591. What league?—Of the Reform League of Bridgwater. I find that amongst the papers is this bill (handing same).

(Mr. Coleridge.) This is from the "Globe Hotel?"

21,592. "1868. October 7th. Hiring room, 1*l.* 1*s.* 0*d.*" What was that for?—That was for our meetings.

21,593. "19th Octr. 1*l.* 1*s.* 0*d.*" Again, "22nd Octr. 1*l.* 1*s.* 0*d.*; Novr. 16th 2*l.* 2*s.* 0*d.*" You find it increased?—I do not know the cause.

21,594. "17th. 2*l.* 2*s.* 0*d.*" "Repairing windows, 7*s.* 6*d.*?"—There were some windows broken.

21,595. "Coloring walls, 1*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.*" and "two forms," which, I suppose, had been broken, "13*s.* 6*d.*"?—There were.

Mr. J. H. B. Carslake.

Mr. John Hawkey Bingham Carslake recalled.

(The witness.) Since I left the court there was a circumstance which I wish to state to you. I may say at once that before coming here I had mentioned it to my partner, Mr. Barham, and told him that I should come and state it, and I state that much because subsequently to my coming to the court I was told that I should be recalled; therefore I do not wish to make it appear that it arose from any idea that I should be recalled. It was in regard to the petition, the petition against Kinglake and Vanderbyl. On the Sunday previous to the filing of the petition I saw Mr. Henry Lovibond in the morning, and he requested me to go to Mr. Joseph Richard Smith and see if there was any possibility of preventing the petition being filed, and I am afraid my good humour led me away to go, and I went and saw him (Mr. Joseph Richard Smith) and said, "Is there no means by "which this petition can be prevented from being "filed? Cannot you use your influence to see if you "can prevent it? It will lead to a great deal of "annoyance and discomfort to the town. See what "you can do." He said he would, but there were a number of persons outside pressing him, and he feared there was no chance of his succeeding. I left him, and what subsequently he did beyond hearsay I do not know, except that I was told afterwards that he went to town, and also that by the night's mail went a number of other gentlemen who were anxious to press the petition, and they succeeded in doing so. I thought it right to state to you that I went to Mr. Smith and requested him to do what I have stated.

21596. (Mr. Anstey.) What time was this?—This was on the morning, sir, of a Sunday previous to the petition being filed. I cannot tell you what day that would be. I really forget, but I think the petition was filed on the following Monday or Tuesday. I do not remember which.

21,597. Did Mr. Lovibond give you any reason; did he state any reasons which you were to urge on Mr. Smith?—I cannot tax my memory, sir, that he did. He said, "Do see Smith and see if you cannot induce him to do that." I think he was very likely moved to that, because I have been mixed up as town clerk with Mr. Smith, and he was an active member of the town council, and he had been always exceedingly kind to me, and he thought I might bring arguments to bear, but I was unsuccessful. Then there are some other matters. It is difficult to know what one ought to state. I do not know whether it is important or not, but I may be charged with having kept back something that I ought to have stated. You have heard of the meeting at Mr. Barham's office; that was on the Friday. On the Friday evening I was in my office which adjoins Mr. Barham's, separated by double doors, and Mr. Vandberbyl was shown up into my office to see Mr. Barham. Mr. Barham was engaged, and he sat with me in my office waiting; I did not know who was with Mr. Barham. I looked in and saw a gentleman with him. His back was towards me. I think the one with me must have been Mr. Vanderbyl from what I have heard since. I did not know him; had not seen him before; and Mr. Vanderbyl began talking as to the probable chances of success, and whether they were going to spend money. I said, "I don't know whether they will or not." He said, "All "I can say is, I will not spend one shilling, and if it "costs 5,000*l.* I will petition to unseat the Conserva- "tives if they are elected." I said just now I had never canvassed a voter. I wish to be straight with you. I do not know how far you will consider this canvassing. We have a managing clerk in our office of the name of Mansfield. On one day during the course of the canvass Mr. Kinglake was in his office with Mr. Barham. When they were just about to start for voting, canvassing I mean, I said, "You are going out canvassing; here is a voter sitting there." However, Mansfield told him he was a Conservative, and there was an end of it. I did not know until that time that he was a Conservative, nor did I know till three months ago that he had voted, so little part did I take in the election. Then there is one thing more. On the day of the election, hearing that the Liberals were likely to be defeated I began to look about and think about tendering the poll books to the candidates, and going down the street I met with Mr. Henry Lovibond on the bridge and asked him, "What shall I do about tendering the poll books? I "must tender them to Mr. Kinglake; it is very "unpleasant." "Oh," said Mr. Lovibond, "you "won't see him, for there he is in the carriage just "going off by the train." Mr. Lovibond appeared to be at that moment of opinion that the whole thing was hopelessly gone. I don't think, with the exception of that (I do not know whether that is material or not) there is anything more for me to say.

HENRY JARMAN sworn.

H. Jarman.

21,598. (Mr. Price.) You are now retired from business?—I am.

21,599. Living on your own private means?—Yes.

21,600. And you are a voter, I presume. Were you present at the "Globe" on the polling day with Mr. Bussell and the lawyers?—I was.

21,601. What time of the day was that?—About half-past 10 or 11.

21,602. Did you hear then that no money was going?—I did.

21,603. Now two days before the election had you told Mrs. Dyer that you could get money for her husband if any was going?—I did.

21,604. When you found that money was not going on the polling day, did you give in Alfred Dyer's name?—I did.

21,605. And got 10*l.* for him from Mr. Allan?—I did.

21,606. How did it get to Dyer?—It has not got to Dyer yet.

21,607. How is that?—When I got to the Cornhill I heard there was a petition to be filed, and I held the money through fear, but I made myself responsible for it.

21,608. You have not returned the money?—No; I have not said word about it. It is in my possession.

21,609. (Mr. Anstey.) You have still got the same ten sovereigns?—I have.

21,610. Supposing Allan declines to take it back?—I suppose I had better give it to the party I promised it to, and I was going to ask your opinion.

21,611. It is no part of my duty to advise you. But what shall you do if Allan refuse to take it?—I do not know what I could do, unless I give it to the party.

21,612. Suppose he refuses to take it?—The party would take it, I know.

21,613. But supposing you made up your mind not to give it to him, but to give it back to the original owner, to whom would you have given it?—I should have given it to Dyer.

21,614. Supposing you did not give it to Dyer, supposing you want to find out its original owner, its first owner, to whom would you go?—I do not know. Well, I should go to Mr. Lovibond. I have kept it through fear, nothing more.

21,615. Have the Dyers asked for it?—They have, but I have never told them I got it. I have said I would get it for them, but I have not told them that I had got it. I have always denied it through fear.

(Mr. Anstey.) You had better consult your professional man before you pay that money to the Dyers.

(Witness.) Thank you.

21,616. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you had to do with the last election?—That is all I had to do with it.

21,617. Now in 1866, at Mr. Vanderbyl's election, were you asked by Mr. Lovibond to pay bills?—One of the gentlemen took me to Mr. Allan (I do not know which) and asked me to go and pay bills in Eastover.

21,618. What bills?—I do not know what for, I think it was for colours, but I asked no question.

21,619. You had no money of your own?—No.

21,620. Are not you the Mr. Jarman who said he would not vote till the bills were paid?—I never had bills in my life.

21,621. They were bills of a previous election?—I suppose so; I asked no question.

21,622. Did they say that if they were not paid the men would not go to the poll?—That was said in the committee room. I heard that that was the case.

21,623. Did you get 20*l.* from Allan and pay a bill at Glanville's?—At Glanville's?

21,624. A bill not quite 20*l.*?—Yes.

21,625. Did you pay another bill of Babbage's the draper's?—Yes.

21,626. That was over 20*l.*?—20*l.* 10*s.*, but I think he settled for 20*l.*

21,627. Did you go back to Allan and have 30*l.* more?—I did.

21,628. Did you then go and pay the landlord of the "Punch Bowl" a bill?—Yes.

21,629. Did you pay a man in Eastover named Webber?—I did.

21,630. Did you take Webber's bill and receipt and the change back to Allan?—I did.

21,631. Did you after that take a number of bills up to Allan's house and get the money for them?—I did.

21,632. How much did you get?—I do not know.

21,633. Can you give the names of the men you paid?—I can give four.

21,634. Who are the four?—William Cater, 20*l.*

21,635. Glanville?—Glanville, 10*l.*

21,636. Was that the same man that went to Mr. Bunter?—He would not go to the poll.

21,637. He had also got 10*l.* from Mr. Bunter?—Yes.

21,638. Did you know that?—Yes.

21,639. And he wanted more?—Yes.

21,640. You gave him another 10*l.*?—Yes.

21,641. And Thomas Scott who was also bribed before?—Yes.

21,642. How much?—10*l.*

21,643. Had he had 10*l.* before?—Yes.

21,644. George Stacey?—Yes.

21,645. How much?—15*l.*

21,646. And there were others?—There were several others.

21,647. How many did you pay altogether?—I think nine or ten.

21,648. (Mr. Coleridge.) What did you pay in all?—I do not know; I never counted any sums, I only took the money and handed it to them.

21,649. Did you give the account to Allan?—I only gave the names.

21,650. Whatever Allan put into your hand you handed over?—I did.

21,651. Had you anything to do with Bagehot's election?—Nothing whatever.

21,652. In no way?—No.

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

H. Jarman.

16 Sept. 1869.

21,653. In the shape of bribing?—In no shape or form. Nor I had not until I had in the shape of these bills. That is what brought me into it.

21,654. (Mr. Price.) Getting you to pay these bills was the first introduction into the business of bribery?—It was.

21,655. I will just ask you for form's sake, had you anything to do with any other election before Bagehot's?—Never.

21,656. Therefore these are the only transactions that you had, these two elections?—Yes.

21,657. Is that all you have to tell us, Mr. Jarman?—Yes, that is all.

21,658. (Mr. Anstey.) Are you the brother of Frederick Jarman?—No.

21,659. What are you to him?—A very distant relation.

21,660. You bribed on the Liberal side, and he on the Conservative?—I should never have bribed but for being asked to pay those bills.

21,661. Still that is the fact?—Yes.

21,662. Did you sign the petition of the 80 to the House of Commons?—No.

21,663. Were you asked?—No, I was not living in Bridgwater then.

21,664. (Mr. Price.) Did you find that those bills of Babbage's were made out to Mr. Henry Bussell?—No, I do not know anything of that.

21,665. They are?—I did not see that.

21,666. How much was the amount, 20*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*?—Yes.

21,667. He took 20*l.*?—He did.

21,668. It is made out to Bussell?—I did not know anything of that.

Mr. W. J. Ford.

Mr. William John Ford recalled.

21,669. (Mr. Price.) We want you to give us an account of that 500*l.* which you got from Bristol?—Yes, sir.

21,670. Well now just tell us about it?—Mr. Barham called on me between 1 and 3. I can't say whether it was between 1 and 2 or between 2 and 3, but I will say it was between 1 and 3, after the nomination at Mr. Bagehot's election, and he asked me whether we had a supply of gold. I said we had not a large supply, because two or three days before I had sent all our surplus coin to Bristol, a thing which we are constantly in the habit of doing.

21,671. To your branch office?—Our head office there. And he said he should require gold, and I said if he did require it I would get it for him.

2,1672. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did he say what for?—He did not say what for.

21,673. You knew?—I knew perfectly. He did not say what it was for, nor did I ask him what it was for, but I candidly admit I was perfectly well aware what it was for. And it was arranged that I should go to Bristol and get down 500*l.* gold, because he said he might possibly require 500*l.* more the next day. He could not tell what he should require. I went to Bristol by the 5 o'clock train, and returned at 9, and that will account to you for my carrying the money out to Mr. Barham's house, because I went straight from the station out there. If I had not gone to Bristol it is very possible that Mr. Barham might have taken it over the counter, but it must account to you why I carried it out to Mr. Barham's house.

21,674. What time?—At 9 o'clock I came back. It was in the summer. And now with your permission it is right I should tell you what occurred at Mr. Barham's, because possibly, I have no doubt whoever has furnished you with information, I doubt whether they have furnished you with correct information, and I should like to give you correct information.

21,675. You may make any statement you like. We trust to you to make a clean breast of it?—Certainly. I got out at Barhams about half-past 9, and to the best of my recollection I met Mr. Barham on his lawn. I did not see anybody else, but I saw him immediately on his arrival. I went into his house and took out the gold which I had in a little bag on my shoulder and put it on the table. It was in a canvass bag, and we talked perhaps five minutes. I cannot tell you now what the conversation was, but I then asked him if he would kindly count the money before I left. He said, "Oh, I don't think there's any necessity for it," and I said, "Yes, I would rather have it counted," and I opened the bag and threw out just one or two hundred sovereigns on the table, just turned them on the table, and Mr. Barham sat down and commenced to count the money. There was a jug of beer on the table, and I poured myself out a glass and drank it. Then I sat down and commenced to assist Mr. Barham in counting out the money, and I remarked, or at least when I say "remarked," I casually observed that he counted it in small packages. I should perhaps have counted, if I had been going to count, in five-and-twenty pounds, and I jokingly said to Mr. Barham (to the best of my recollection I said this; I thought it was in 10*l.* packages; I did not count them, but I believe they were; it appeared to me so), I said jokingly, "Is that to be the size of the cartridges?" I don't think Mr. Barham made any reply to me. I don't remember that he did. If he did I cannot tell what it was, and then I commenced counting the money. I said then. "Well, I never did see a cartridge, I will make one." There was a piece of paper lying on the adjoining table, and I got up and took this piece of paper and tore off a piece, and then and there made up 10*l.* into a cartridge.

21,676. (Mr. Price.) Was Mr. Barham putting his packages of 10*l.* in paper?—No, he simply counted them. I can remember so exactly what occurred, because as I made up this packet of gold I put it on the table and said laughingly to Mr. Barham—I must say to you that I did this innocently; I did not at the time think of doing any harm—I made this remark: "The person who has this will little think who made it up." I do not think that Mr. Barham made any reply, but I perfectly well remember saying those words. There was another piece of paper lying on the table and I rolled up another roll of 10*l.*, and I was in the act I believe to the best of my recollection of tearing off the piece of paper when a knock came at the door, and Mr. Barham then requested me to leave, and I did so immediately; and with regard to his saying that I went out of the window I did so, but I must say for my own sake it is a window that opens on the lawn with folding doors. I mention that because it has been said to me by several persons, "Is "that window very high; did you hurt yourself by "the fall?" I then went straight home, and know nothing more than I have told you.

21,677. Is there anything else that you can tell us about election matters?—Simply the next day he cashed a cheque for 200*l.* again. I am not certain whether it was Mr. Reynolds or I who cashed the cheque.

21,678. At all events you had knowledge of it?—Certainly.

21,679. How did you charge these sums. I do not know whether we have the account?—Yes, and Mr. Barham's account in the ledger; it was a separate account from Mr. Barham's general account, but that is not an uncommon circumstance; he has general private accounts with us.

21,680. You knew what it was for?—Yes, certainly. I do not deny knowing what it was for.

21,681. Do you know of any other transaction at that election?—Nothing whatever.

21,682. (Mr. Coleridge.) Had you anything to do at Mr. Vanderbyl's election?—No.

21,683. And the last election?—Not a thing. I know nothing more about it than I have heard in this court.

21,684. In 1859?—In 1859. I was very young in the bank at that time. I have made a memorandum that I went into the bank first in 1857, and in 1859 I was simply the junior clerk, but a circumstance occurred then which I thought rather a suspicious circumstance. I do not know to the present day whether the money was spent in bribery or not, because I was simply a junior at that time. I did nothing with regard to the cash, but I perfectly well remember Colonel Tynte, the then member, at that time coming into our bank, and he handed to the manager, who was Mr. Ball, a cheque. I do not remember now, nor did I know at the time that I remember what the amount was, but I perfectly remember Mr. Ball paying him money in 10*l.* notes over the counter. After he was gone out of the bank I remember Mr. Ball remarking "That is rather a cool thing for the member to do."

21,685. (Mr. Coleridge.) Was this the day of the election?—I do not think it was.

21,686. (Mr. Anstey.) Was it a lady's cheque, drawn by a lady?—I do not know that I ever saw the cheque. I might have, but the impression on my mind was that it was his father's cheque.

21,687. (Mr. Price.) Had Colonel Tynte an account?—He had, and I have since referred and see just before the election he drew a cheque for 700*l.* payable to Mr. Tynte, but I do not know that that was the cheque.

21,688. Was it the father who drew it?—Yes, the son had no account whatever with us.

21,689. But old Colonel Tynte had?—Yes.

21,690. And you believe that this was a cheque of his father's?—I believe it was, at least I imagine it must have been so, but I do not remember the cheque, and that is the only thing I can remember in any shape or way about it.

21,691. (Mr. Anstey.) Did he appear to receive when he cashed that cheque a great number of 10*l.* notes?—Yes, he did.

21,692. A large number?—A large number, and I may also remark that after the election I remember perfectly well a great number of women coming to the bank and changing 10*l.* notes, and that is why it struck me as a very suspicious circumstance. At the time the cheque was cashed I thought no more of it than of others.

21,693. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you compare the numbers of the notes brought to be cashed with those which were paid out to him?—No, we do not take the numbers when they are paid out. Had not it been that after the election several women came in about every 10 minutes or quarter of an hour to change a 10*l.* note I do not think the circumstance would have occurred to me again.

21,694. (Mr. Anstey.) In order to draw your attention to the impression made upon you at the last day of the inquiry before Mr. Justice Blackburn when Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl were examined upon oath, just recollect what the impression made upon you then by the evidence was as you heard it and if you were there?—Yes, I was, and did hear it.

21,695. Remembering what your impression was will you tell me any fact which being in your know ledge or recollection at the time you heard their evidence contributed to produce that impression on your mind; any fact consistent or inconsistent with what they were swearing?—Well, honestly speaking I felt perfectly certain in my own mind that both Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl must have known that money had been spent. I did say at the time, and I believed it was a gross lie that they swore at the time. I do not hesitate to say so, because it is mock modesty; we all know in the end if money is spent the candidates pay it, and they know it is spent.

21,696. I want rather to draw your attention, if you have such a fact to tell me, to any fact that was in your recollection which came to your mind at that moment which made you say what you did?—No fact, because I did not know to my personal knowledge that money had been spent at that election. I had no personal knowledge whatever.

21,697. But belief?—Belief, undoubtedly. I felt confident.

21,698. What fact was it that had come to your belief?—Well, because I felt positively certain when the Conservatives were something like 240 a head at 12 o'clock, from the knowledge I had of the town such a majority could not be got up in so short a space without money.

21,699 The question is as to the personal innocence and ignorance?—I do not believe in personal innocence at all. I never did.

21,700. Can you give me any fact which would be inconsistent with the innocence to which nevertheless they both deposed?—I cannot give you any fact except that. I have no doubt that at previous elections they must have known money was spent, and must have been aware that no election could have been won without money. That is the only ground I went on. It appears from the evidence which has just come out, that money was not spent so early as from the appearance on the day I had anticipated, therefore I confess that I was deceived. It appears that money was not spent until after 3 o'clock, and from the rapid manner in which the Liberals gained, I felt confident that money must have been spent.

21,701. Have not you been able to gather from conversation, in the town or otherwise, what sort of guarantee or security Mr. Prior had either before or after that transaction of the 500*l.*?—I never heard of that transaction until in this court.

21,702. I know that, but have not you found any clue to it yourself to enable us to find it?"—I have not.

21,703. (Mr. Coleridge.) Should you hand a sum of money over to your best customer without his giving a cheque?—No, certainly not. I could not do so, my own situation would be at stake.

21,704. (Mr. Price.) You have already said so. Assuming that a private banker would do it, you stand in a different position, your responsibility is ten fold?—Certainly; I could not have done so. It is not possible.

Mr. Edgar Haviland sworn.

Mr. E. Haviland.

21,705. (Mr. Price.) What are you?—A solicitor.

21,706. In practice for yourself?—Yes.

21,707. How long have you been in practice?—Nearly six years in Bridgwater, and 11 in Cardiff.

21,708. You did not serve your articles in Bridgwater?—No, in London.

21,709. And then you first settled at Cardiff, and then at Bridgwater?—Yes.

21,710. Were you engaged at all in any way at the last election as agent?—I was.

21,711. Who were you engaged by?—By Mr. Reed and Mr. Lovibond.

21,712. What part were you to take. Did they assign any particular duties to you?—I was to take the committee room at the "Globe" hotel, and check the voters as they were brought in, and I also canvassed with Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl on the 31st of October.

21,713. What did you receive for your services?—There was nothing stipulated. I ought to have sent in my bill after the election.

21,714. Have you done so?—No.

21,715. Why not?—I had Mr. Lovibond's advice, and I have not done so.

21,716. I suppose it would have been the proper charges, so much a day?—I would charge by the day three guineas.

21,717. Therefore it would appear so many days?—Yes.

21,718. Then you were not paid anything for your services?—Not at all.

21,719. How many days were you employed?—I

TWENTY-FIRST DAY.

Mr. E. Haviland.

16 Sept. 1869.

was employed first on the 31st of October, and on the polling day.

21,720. Not in the intervening time ?—Not at all.

21,721. On the 31st of October did you prepare the canvass lists ?—No, I canvassed with Mr. Kinglake and Mr. Vanderbyl.

21,722. And on the polling day you checked the voters ?—Yes.

21,723. Was that all the part you took at the last election ?—That is all.

21,724. You had nothing to do with any of the money part ?—Not the slightest.

21,725. Were you made acquainted with any negotiations going on between Mr. Vanderbyl and the lawyers as to whether he should spend money or not ?—No, not the slightest ; I had no knowledge at all, and never asked for it.

21,726. (Mr. Coleridge.) Probably you would never have got it if you had ?—No.

21,727. (Mr. Price.) You were not in point of fact in their secrets ?—Not at all.

21,728. You were only employed on those particular dates which you have told us of ?—Exactly.

21,729. With regard to the election of 1866, Vanderbyl's ?—Then Mr. Cook on the nomination day asked me to go to Tiverton to see Bottomly. I went down and stayed all night because Bottomly was away from home. Then I brought him up by the half-past 2 train, I think.

21,730. And you paid his fare, I suppose ?—No, he would not let me, and when I came by train I met William Hurman, and he asked me whether I had got my man. I said, "Yes," and he took him away in the omnibus.

21,731. Did you pay him anything ?—No.

21,732. Did you promise him anything ?—Not the slightest.

21,733. Did you say to him that you wanted him to vote ?—Yes.

21,734. Did he express any unwillingness ?—No.

21,735. Did he say that he wanted anything ?—No.

21,736. And you never said a word to the effect that he would have anything ?—No, not at all.

21,737. Did he get anything ?—I do not know only what I have heard.

21,738. Is that all you did at that election ?—That is all I did at that election.

21,739. (Mr. Coleridge.) Were you paid for that ?—I was paid for that.

21,740. Did you send in a bill ?—Yes, within a month.

21,741. That was returned probably among the expenses ?—Yes.

21,742. Now the election before that, Mr. Brogden's election, what did you do ?—I was employed two or three times in canvassing, and also on the polling day I was employed to check off the votes, and help Mr. Walter Long.

21,743. Did you send in any charge for that ?—Yes.

21,744. Was that returned in the expenses ?—Yes.

21,745. And paid ?—And paid.

21,746. Is that all you did at that time ?—That is all I did.

21,747. You did nothing in the way of promising money ?—Not the slightest.

21,748. When you canvassed, did you hold out anything in the way of saying that there would be money or not ?—Not in any way whatever.

21,749. Nothing of the kind ?—Not the slightest.

21,750. Now as to 1865 ?—In 1865 I was retained by Mr. Benjamin Lovibond, and he asked me whether I had any objection to keep the committee room, and act as a kind of secretary, which I did for 12 days at the head committee room in Fore Street.

21,751. (Mr. Coleridge.) Did you send in a bill ?—I did, and got paid for it.

21,752. So much a day ?—Yes.

21,753. (Mr. Price.) Is that all you had to do with that ?—Yes.

21,754. Do you know anything beyond that in 1859 ?—No, I was in Cardiff.

21,755. Is that all you can tell us ; we trust you as a professional man ?—I think on the last day I went over to Eastover, and asked Boucher to come up and vote, I went down twice, I think that is all I did.

21,756. Did you say anything about money to him ?—No.

21,757. Or that if there was money he would get it as well as the others ?—No.

21,758. Nothing of that kind in fact ?—No, no inducement whatever. I asked them to come to the poll as every man was valuable.

21,759. (Mr. Anstey.) Did you hear anything said by any voter about money ?—Nothing at all.

21,760. And had no questions asked as to whether money would be going ?—No.

21,761. (Mr. Price.) Your services were restricted really to what are called the legitimate services as a lawyer ?—Yes, as Mr. Coleridge says I was an outsider.

W. Onion.

WILLIAM ONION sworn.

21,762. (Mr. Price.) Are you foreman to Mr. Knight, the brewer ?—Yes.

21,763. Had you a vote for the first time for the last election in 1868 ?—Yes.

21,764. Who did you vote for ?—Vanderbyl and Kinglake.

21,765. Did you get anything ?—No, I did not.

21,766. Any promise ?—Not in the least. I never had so much as a glass of beer at their expense.

21,767. Did your employers know how you were going to vote ?—Yes.

21,768. Had they asked you ?—They knew well enough I was a "Rad."

21,769. Did they use any pressure on you to induce you to go and vote ?—My employers ; not the least.

21,770. Did you take any important part in the last election besides voting ?—Not the least.

21,771. Are you quite sure of that ?—Yes.

21,772. In 1866 you had no vote, did you live at the brewery ?—Yes. On the last election I took one man to the poll.

21,773. Did you promise him anything ?—No.

21,774. (Mr. Coleridge.) Who was it ?—James Bennett.

21,775. Did he get anything from someone else ?—He did not.

21,176. You are sure of that ?—I am.
